Beginning like that, however, Balzac ended by writing the "Human Comedy"; and when M. le Breton has said all that he possibly can say in disparagement of the "Human Comedy"—which is certainly a very unequal performance, and quite lacking in the unity which is sometimes claimed for it—it remains one of the great literary monuments of the century: a work by no means to have been expected from the pupil of Pigault-Lebrun and Ducray-Duminil. One can only explain the thing by saying that a problem may have any solution when genius is one of the factors. At once a big factor and an unknown factor, it upsets all calculations; and the case of Balzac is the case of a man of genius, brought up in a bad school, building for a long time better than he knows, awaking to self-consciousness at last, and ultimately founding a new and better school. He imitated Pigault-Lebrun and Ducray-Duminil, as youth often imitates a bad model, not with any idea of writing down to an uncultivated public, but because he had been impressed by them in his impressionable years. Trying to do what they did better than they had done it, he repaired their faults without at first perceiving them, and ended by doing something entirely different. He had, of course, his personal limitations. The sentimental, as distinguished from the romantic and tragic side of life, was a closed book to him. The higher the society which he attempted to portray, the greater the ignorance of its manners and tone which he revealed. But it was an instinct with him, rather than a set purpose, to go to life, if not for his plots, at least for his personages—to render men and women as he saw them and believed them to be, instead of plunging his hand into the stock-pot for conventional melodramatic types. He was a born observer and a born psychologist. If his psychology was distorted by cynicism and pessimism, it was at least sincere. His observation, which his worst enemy can hardly discredit, makes it convincing. Bringing observation and psychology to bear upon the stock melodramatic situations, he quickly began to produce something very different from melodrama. At last he recognised what he was doing. Each of his books, taken separately, was, so far as it went, a human comedy. If he grouped them, and wrote more works like them until he had covered all the ground, the "Human Comedy" would result. So he would seem to have argued. Whether he actually achieved all that he thought he was achieving is another question—M. le Breton maintains strongly that he did not. But that, at any rate, was the process of his evolution, now carefully traced for us in an admirable contribution to critical literature.

WILHELM HAUFF

Hauff's Tales. Translated by SYBIL THIESIGER. (Finch, 6s.)

WILHELM HAUFF wrote a historical romance that is as dear to Germans as "Ivanhoe" to Englishmen, and a collection of fairy tales as widely read in Germany as Grimm or the "Arabian Nights." His humorous and satirical novels still amuse his country-folk; and if you ask a German for a good "novelle" or short story he probably brings you "Jud Süß" or "Die Bettlerin vom Pont des Arts." The author of these widely different works was born at Stuttgart in 1802. He was educated for the Church, first at a theological seminary and then at Tübingen. When he left college he took a private tutorship, and it was for his pupils that he wrote his fairy tales. In 1826 he gave up teaching and commenced author in real earnest. From the start he met with full recognition and encouragement; but before he accepted any of the offers made him by various editors and publishers he decided to see a little more of the world. He spent some time in France and Belgium, he went to Berlin and made many friends, he visited Tieck in Dresden. Then he returned to Stuttgart and at the instance of Cotta, the great German publisher, he became editor of a Morgenblatt devoted to Belles Lettres. Early in 1827 he married, and in November of the same year, eight days after the birth of his only child, he died. He had attended the funeral of a friend and contracted a chill from which he never quite recovered. Typhoid intervened and found an easy victim in the brilliant man of letters his country could ill spare.

Hauff's writings inevitably suggest that if he had lived his fruitful youth would have fulfilled its promise. He had lasting qualities of imagination, humour, and expression. He arrived too when the educated public was tired of the sickly vagaries of the Romantic School and was ready for an author who had a sane story to tell and knew how to tell it. Of course, the popular taste was well supplied with the sentimental and the commonplace. These never fail the big audience that supports them. But luckily there is also in every civilised country an educated public glad to welcome good work and able in some measure to control opinion. That is why an author who can both satisfy the educated and interest the uneducated achieves first a literary success and then a popular one.

In a conversation that links two of his fairy tales, Hauff, by the mouth of an eastern sage, throws an interesting light on his ideas about fiction. He points out that the fairy-tale proper does not depend on character but on the supernatural and that it charms us because it introduces us to such strange and out-of-the-way experiences. "In fiction," he says, "everything happens according to natural laws, but in a surprising and unusual manner . . . the chief point of attraction lies in the fact that each one speaks and acts in accordance with his individual character." The "surprising and unusual" manner is not every one's way. We know what some of the great Frenchmen of our time would have said to it. But it was Hauff's way. It is ever the adventurous and romantic way: and when no one survives to pipe while we follow then the world will be a dull one.

In the beginning of the nineteenth century Scott was the great enchanter; and "Lichtenstein" derives directly and confessedly from him. Before Hauff wrote it the German historical novel had been either pseudo-classical or obscurely romantic. Seeking his inspiration in "Waverley" and its successors, he was the first to paint on his canvas the life and manners of bygone ages. The cause of the banished Stuarts has become the cause of a banished Duke of Württemberg, and a great national conflict is the background for two lovers who after adventure and misfortune are happily united. Scott himself could not always make his lovers interesting, and when Hauff takes his pair to a ball we want to know what dances were fashionable in Germany in the sixteenth century, but we are not thrilled by the agitation of Marie when she discovers that her father and her lover are on different sides. Hauff could not help himself. In those days historic romance had to present lovers, and their sufferings were often the tiresome part of the story. "Lichtenstein" was a great success; it still has vitality, and for a young man of twenty-four it was a notable achievement.

The standard edition of Hauff's works comprises four closely-printed volumes, and his literary activity only extended over three years. Some of his short stories became famous at once, and Germans are still amused by his humorous and satirical novels. We must confess to being better amused by the curious history attaching to one of these. In Hauff's time there was some one who, under the pseudonym of "Clauren," wrote novels we find described by a German critic as "watery, sugary and strongly perfumed." They were immensely popular. This is a phenomenon that repeats itself and should be easy to understand. The author was so popular that Hauff, a young beginner, sat down to imitate him. He produced "Der Mann im Mond," and was assured by a friend that it only needed a few touches to be not an imitation but a biting satire. Hauff then published it under the name of Clauren. Clauren brought a law-suit against Hauff and won it; but, as far as reputation goes, Clauren it was that died. Hauff had laughed him out of popular favour, and we wish Hauff were alive to-day.

We have left to the last the "Märchen" of which an admirable translation has just appeared. These tales will live while old and young can transport themselves to a world where, as Hauff says it should, "everything happens in a surprising and unusual manner." It is impossible to begin one of them and refuse to find out what happens next. Hauff's invention never fails him. You cannot imagine how Little Muck will ever get his magic slippers and his money again, but Hauff can. You do not believe, even after reading Peacock, that an orang-outang could pass for a young Englishman even in a little German town, but Hauff's illusion is yours while you read the story. You even forgive him for setting down the foolish things untravelled Germans invent about English manners. He is so good-humoured and so intent on his story that like True Thomas he "harpits" you where he will.

Miss Sybil Thesiger has succeeded in preserving Hauff's own quaint fresh style: in keeping close to the original and yet in producing a translation that reads smoothly. But we wish to recommend the Introduction to her consideration. She will see at once that in the last sentence the printers have made a hash of her grammar. And in our complete edition of Hauff we find that "Lichtenstein" and much of his other work was published before his death.

ENGLAND'S FRIENDS AND ENEMIES

The Friends of England. By the Hon. GEORGE PEEL, Author of "The Enemies of England." (Murray, 12s. net.)

MR. GEORGE PEEL, who is one of the most industrious and painstaking students of public affairs that the new generation has produced, wrote in 1902 an excellent book on England's enemies. He now publishes another, on England's friends. The first book was an inquiry into the course and meaning of England's policy in Europe; his intention being to show that during the last eight centuries various Powers had aspired to dominion over the continent, that all these attempts were rightly understood at home as portending England's downfall, and on that account and no other were resisted by her statesmanship. The Papacy, Spain, and France were named as the aggressors in the past, Russia and Germany as those which we should have to deal with in the future.

The present volume is "an inquiry, on similar lines, into our policy outside Europe." Here again the argument is compulsion. If we have an empire beyond seas, it came into existence through the necessity of defence, and neither by accident nor by deliberate motives of expansion. It is not that, as Sir John Seeley wrote, "we have conquered and peopled half the world in a fit of absence of mind," nor are England's continental critics right when they accuse her greatness of "insatiable avarice," explaining it by an unscrupulous determination to annex any portion of the globe upon which she can lay hands. The truth is (to pursue Mr. Peel's argument) that on the opening up of the continents of Asia, America, Australia, and Africa, we were by no means the first to "grab." Not England but the foremost Powers in Continental Europe "began to appropriate those regions in such a manner that our old world reproduced itself over much of that immense area." Thereupon "our statesmen perceived that the European Powers striving to become dominant in those continents might eventually become dominant in Europe, thanks to the fresh resources thus acquired." Three centuries ago that became an obvious likelihood: three centuries ago, when we were still unused to such enterprises. "In actual fact, we were originally indisposed" to them; and "it was only the alarming growth of Spain in power and resources derived from her world-wide extension that compelled us to quit our attitude of almost complete indifference: we avoided empire as long as possible and we set to work upon it only when we needs must." Of course Mr. Peel does not mean that the Cecil of Elizabeth's time, and that Cromwell at a later day, planned the structure of such an empire as has since been built. But his contention is that "just as we in our day annexed East Africa against Germany and West Africa against France, even so, with equal deliberation and for a similar motive, did Cecil's contemporaries annex America, and Cromwell also a portion of the West Indies, against the power of Spain." And it is by the series of annexations thus begun—annexations determined by considerations of self-defence—that the British Empire has attained its present dimensions.

That, however, is but one of two propositions which Mr. Peel seeks to establish historically. As we have seen, it is that European pressure from without is the cause of the formation of the British Empire. The second proposition is more speculative (by which we do not mean uncertain so much as giving occasion for thought) but more to the purpose; because it applies to the present and extends to the immediate future. It is that the same European pressure from without is the chief cause of the maintenance of the empire. "When that pressure increases the empire tends to be consolidated; when it diminishes the empire correspondingly tends to dissolve." Elsewhere he speaks of the almost scientific precision with which, century after century, the bonds of empire are slackened or confirmed. "The beliefs of the age of Cobden," when commerce was to extinguish war, &c., "and the opposite beliefs of the present age of Imperialism have been alike the product of the ebb and flow of the hostile energies of Europe."

These conclusions being clearly stated in its opening pages, Mr. Peel devotes the rest of his book—a handsome octavo volume—to their establishment, elucidation, illustration. To follow him with tolerable accuracy through these chapters would be to cover four or five columns of this journal at the least; and therefore we shall not attempt what we recommend all our readers who are concerned with the political affairs of the country to accomplish. It will not be found a hard task by any means; for Mr. Peel is no pedant, no formalist, no Dryasdust. Intensely interested in his subject, he writes of it with animation; eager to convince, though not with the sophist's eagerness, he is precise whether right or wrong and at all times clear. Another recommendation we will venture upon. A good way of mastering the purpose and contents of the book is to pause upon its conclusions (as maybe the author intended us to do by stating them so distinctly in his first chapter) and consider for ourselves what makes for them, what makes against them, and what, if both be true, is the prospect for England and the present duty of Englishmen. That done, we may carry with us to the perusal of Mr. Peel's arguments a little budget of opinions, dubitations, questionings, which will serve as points of criticism as we proceed. We might ask ourselves, for example, what difference there was between the over-sea adventure of Spain and France and the English adventure which is described as purely defensive, except this: that the Continental States were ready for the business before we were. We might consider in what measure conquest first for spoil, next for trade, was the main object of all such adventure—Portuguese, Spanish, French, Dutch, English. And again, whether at this day the extension of trade is not by far the greater and more importunate aim than the glory of territorial dominion. We do not say that these considerations will set Mr. Peel's readers at odds with him. Nor is it likely that many of them will dissent from the assertion that "pressure from without is the fundamental bond of empire." Yet the dictum that "when that pressure increases the empire tends to be consolidated, when it diminishes it tends correspondingly to dissolution," provokes to furious thinking. What dilemma is this from which there is no escape, nor any peace?

And now we would call particular attention to Mr. Peel's tenth chapter. It purports to be, and we suppose is, "the case of the Yellow Peril" as presented to him by a highly intelligent, highly educated Chinaman, for a long time resident in the West and familiar with its history and politics. We have here the reflections, the accusations, the prophetic judgment of such a man (such a Chinaman, bien entendu) after listening to Mr. Peel on the cause and character of the British Empire. He begins with: "You assert that Britain is justified in appropriating large areas of the earth's surface because her European enemies are doing the same. That is no justification in the eyes of us, the possessors. You plead your strategic requirements. Why should our farms be turned into your fortresses? Because you play the bloody blind man's buff of Christendom—" and so proceeds in a cold fury of eloquence to the end, which is in these words: "When the day of your eviction comes [the eviction of Europe, to wit] Asia will rejoice from end to end in all her peoples, nations, creeds, and languages." The ACADEMY is not a political journal. We point to this chapter as by far the most forcible in a literary sense, and also as an exposition of view and feeling, in the whole book. As for what politicians should think of it, that they may settle for themselves. We should say, however, that they had better not neglect it—or despise it.

TWO ITALIAN CITIES

The Two First Centuries of Florentine History. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Translated by LINDA VILLARI. (Unwin, 2s. 6d. net.)

The Story of Venice. By THOMAS OKEY. Illustrated by NELLIE ERICKSEN. Mediæval Towns. (Dent, 4s. 6d. net.)

THE hold that Italy has over English minds is very convincingly shown in the number of books written every year on different towns in the peninsula, and the equal number of readers ever ready to possess and study these books. And, indeed, there is food for study in Professor Villari's book, "The Two First Centuries of Florentine History," which deals with the years comprised in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and is drawn from a course of lectures given by the author in Florence. These lectures were "chiefly for the purpose of examining the political situation of the Republic and investigating the various revolutions by which the city was harassed."

Florence forms no exception to the other great cities of Italy as to the obscurity of her origin, and this obscurity is here treated with that depth of learning and diligence of research which cause Professor Villari to rank among the first historians of Italy. We feel that if even he speaks despondingly of the want of light and certainty on this point, there is little hope that we shall ever get beyond the legends and surmises that enwrap the birth of one of the fairest cities on earth. The author traces with care and lucidity the development of the Italian communes—that intricate question which requires most skilful and learned handling for English readers to master, seeing that we have had no such institutions in our land. All through the work the facts of constitutional rights and the political building-up of the Republic are interspersed with the legends and stories which brighten many a page of Florentine history. We have the Buondelmonti tragedy with its fearful consequences; the downfall and death of Count Ugolino and his sons (familiar to most of us through Dante's immortal lines); the untimely fate of Conradin, "the last representative of the Suabian line in Germany, and the last hope of the Ghibellines in Italy"; the fatal May festival of the year 1300; together with a scholarly account of the Guilds, those confraternities of different arts to which Florence owed much of her wealth and prosperity; the description of wars waged between Guelph and Ghibelline; between the rival towns of Tuscany; the battles of Meloria, of Montaperti, and of Campaldino, this latter "rendered all the more celebrated by the fact of Dante Alighieri—then young and unknown—having fought in it." The translation by the author's wife is an admirable piece of work, and shows the perfect command possessed by Signora Villari of her own language and that of her adopted country. The book is well got up and illustrated with some excellent photographs relating to the period under consideration, which have a special interest as being for the most part different from those generally introduced in English works on Florence.

"The Story of Venice" by Thomas Okey is a work that will be acceptable both to travellers and students. As in most of the volumes belonging to this admirable series, the opening chapters are devoted to the history of the town. The fine arts are then considered, and finally the sight-seeing is apportioned in such a way as to economise time and labour either in Venice or in the islands around.

One is never weary of hearing about Venice. Her story, a mixture of mystery and misrepresentation, with a strong dash of Eastern life and colour, has furnished material for novelists, historians, and poets. What memories are conjured up by the mere mention of her Tribunals—the Council of Ten, the Inquisitors of State, with their accompanying attributes of the "Lion's Mouth," the Canal dei Marrani, down which glided in the stillness of the night the victims who had been strangled in the prisons and were now to be consigned with "maimed rites" to the oblivion of a watery grave! All this is put before us well and faithfully in Mr. Okey's pages; and if such scenes as the "Sposalizio del Mare," the Festival "delle Marie," and so forth, are not dwelt on in all their poetry and pageant, other scenes of pathos and tragedy are touchingly described, and arouse our fullest interest and sympathy. For instance, the story of Marino Falieri, the Doge whose guilt or innocence can never be known; the tragedy of the Foscari, the luckless father and perhaps more luckless son; the trial and execution of Carmagnola, whose sentence was prompted we know not whether by justice or jealousy—all these are admirably placed before us, and show how swiftly and surely Venice struck when once her suspicions were aroused. The numerous illustrations in the book are beautiful examples of Miss Ericksen's skill and artistic power and taste.

FIJI FOLK-LORE

Tales from Old Fiji. By LORIMER FISON. (Moring. 7s. 6d. net.)

WE are glad to have another book from Mr. Fison. All that he has previously done, whether in Fiji or Australia, is of an order to show that he is not only a first-class observer but a careful narrator of facts. In the present instance, while we welcome the tales for their intrinsic value, we are warned by Mr. Fison that they were told to him by a chieftain who, even amongst his fellow savages, had the reputation of "making a thing bigger when it came out of his mouth than when it went in at his ears." Illustrations, twenty-two in number, are given, and these form a welcome addition to the book, for they are chiefly from photographs by the Rev. Dr. Brown and afford good evidence of the people from whom the stories were collected.

Mr. Fison also supplies a very useful introduction and notes, giving some details of Fijian customs and social organisation which come with great authority from him. The foundation sacrifice at the building of a house and the other ceremonies connected with the house afford excellent evidence of the inequality of development which may occur in any system of human culture, and Mr. Fison does right to draw attention to the fact that even so ghastly a rite as cannibalism is not necessarily a sign of the lowest savagery. Mr. Fison's evidence that in each clan "all the women were the wives of every man and all the men were the husbands of every woman" is important, bearing as it does upon the researches of his former colleague, Dr. Howitt, into Australian customs and treading on the borders of an extensive and important field of study.

As to the stories themselves, there is the appearance of too much literary finish in the translations, which is to be regretted from the scientific point of view. But Mr. Fison is so frank about his sources of information that we may well afford to trust him in this matter. And they are delightful reading. The first story, "How the Livuka Men came up to windward," tells of tribal disputes and wanderings which remind us of similar tales all over the world, just because man in his early history had a similar experience all over the world. The Lady Langi is not the only human being who is said to have been carried on the back of a great bird to a new land, and the Lord of Nayau is not the only chieftain who, on the incoming of strangers into his territory exclaimed, "Good now is our life. We the men of Lakemba thought we were the only people in the world, but now we find that there is another kingdom down at Ra whose name is Bau. Truly the world is larger than we thought it was."

The story of "How the Tongans came to Fiji" introduces a journey to the Sky-King, which does not seem to be of native origin, and a voyage through the waters on the back of a turtle which is worthy of any collection of folk-tales. Sharks, wind, waves, a dolphin and a great bird, all speak to the hero on his way, trying to induce him to disobey the instructions of the Sky-King and take his hands from before his eyes; but in vain, and so his voyage ends successfully.

"How the Fijians learned to build their canoes" is of the more ordinary type, though it contains a storm or deluge myth of some interest. There is evidence here of contact with civilised thought, as in other of the stories, and "The Beginning of Death" clearly shows the influence of Christianity. Mr. Fison has done well to print the story "What the Tongans say about Napoleon," for it shows to how remarkable an extent the current of modern events has affected native thought. It bids us be careful how we accept traditions which are not most carefully sifted, and once more raises the warning note for anthropologists that the time in which there is any chance of collecting native tradition untouched by Western civilisation is rapidly drawing to a close. This is where the great danger lies in the future, and it behoves all who are able to investigate at first hand the tradition of native people to do so quickly and thoroughly and above all to follow Mr. Fison's example and tell us all the facts connected with their methods of collection.

OLD FURNITURE

Chats on Old Furniture. By ARTHUR HAYDEN. (Fisher Unwin, 5s. net.)

EARLY in the 'eighties of the last century, when the valuable æsthetic movement was extremely young and rather absurd, the late Mr. du Maurier made a drawing for Punch showing one of his charming girls in conversation with a very slight youth in knickerbockers. The lady says of her companion's legs that "perhaps they are a trifle too Chippendale." Like many other little jokes of Mr. Punch this phrase passed into the language of the time and conveyed to the unknowing world that the characteristic leg of Chippendale's work was spindle-shaped. Such a joke and such a confusion between the style of Sheraton or Heppelwhite and that of the Chippendales (for there were certainly three) would be impossible to-day. During the twenty years that have passed since then, the qualities of eighteenth-century furniture have been discussed in many valuable books, and many hundreds of sincere and enthusiastic students of the subject have pursued examples of English cabinet work of the great period to the uttermost ends of the country. With the increased demand, the prices have advanced a thousandfold, and those obliging and skilful forgers who are ever attendant upon a fashionable craze have flooded the market with many imitations, which, as imitations, are excellent.

The latest symptom of the hold which this charming pursuit has taken upon the general public is to be found in the ever-increasing number of reasonably priced books upon the subject. Not long since if one wanted to study the history of, say, French furniture, there were only the de luxe volumes of Lady Dilke or the not inexpensive Jacquemart; while as regards English, the original books of design by Chippendale, Adam, Heppelwhite, Sheraton, and the other great designers were almost unobtainable. But now one need no longer turn to the great volumes of Mr. Heaton or the early masters' drawings; everything is being scientifically reduced into departments of knowledge, and all those esoteric facts, that were once the secrets of the few who had entered upon the quest of eighteenth-century things for their own amusement, are now the commonplaces of Kensington tea-tables and the subjects of innumerable newspaper articles.

Notwithstanding its somewhat unhappy title, "Chats on Old Furniture"—to be chatty is so often to be wearisome—Mr. Arthur Hayden's volume is an admirable compendium of all that has been written on the subject, to which are added many wise saws in regard to the way to select the genuine piece, and modern instances of well-concocted fraud. As with the same author's previous "Chats on China," a book which the present far surpasses in interest, it is intended to be a guide for those collectors who have not already made a lengthy study of furniture and for whom the excellent bibliographical index will contain many unread works upon the subject. This fact may be gathered from many pages of the book, and is emphasised in the glossary of terms used, where Gothic, Bureau, Cassone, Inlay, and such moderately well-known and much-used words are explained to the wondering neophyte. But apart from the somewhat over-wise precaution against the ignorance of possible readers this glance across the furniture of all ages and countries is excellently carried out. The illustrations, many from pieces which are the property of the nation, are all informatory, if not new; they are clearly reproduced, and in many cases marked with their approximate date, which is always of great service to collectors.

Although the English oak period had its victories and many of the pieces here given are excellent examples of our work, very little that is new is said upon the subject; but what is said is accurate. The most agreeable chapters to us are those dealing with Jacobean and Stuart productions.

All interested in this subject have their favourite period; Elizabethan, Cinque-cento, one of the great French fashions; Chippendale, Adam, to whose designs Chippendale often made furniture, William III., or, perhaps, Victorian; but, for the moment the fashion veers towards the Stuart. The leaders of taste already proclaim a Jacobean revival. Unfortunately the champions of an especial period in furniture are like those admirers of Thackeray who find it necessary to belittle Dickens. Those who love the Stuarts cannot do justice to the Hanoverians. For our own part we are warm admirers of the work of Jacobean times and would encourage the collection of the furniture of that period. But it was only produced in small quantities for the great ones of the country and for such palaces as Knole, and the survivals, though fit, are few. Had our furniture remained purely Stuart, as some enthusiasts of the moment have wished, our loss would have been incalculable. If, according to the latest canons of taste on this subject, the style known as Chippendale was decadent, the author of it was, at least, wise in his degeneration. We are the heritors of a far richer variety of admirable work, thanks to the movement which broke away from Jacobean ideals.

A FIFTH-MONARCHY MAN

Thomas Harrison, Regicide and Major-General. By C. H. SIMPKINSON, M.A. (Dent, 7s. 6d.)

THE Bible and the Sword form a combination which has rarely failed to produce interesting results, and if the ideals of the one seldom balance truly the vigour of the other, the fault lies, not with the particular subjects in whom the two opposites are to be found, so much as with the general frailty of mankind. As a rule, it is true, the sword has only been a means to the end and the combination merely fortuitous, but in England it would not be difficult to find, even in the episcopacy itself, as many instances to the contrary; Bishop Compton, for example, was not the only man more fitted, in his Sovereign's words, to be a bombardier than a bishop. In this life of Thomas Harrison there is to be found the history of the leader of the Fifth-Monarchy men and one of the ablest soldiers of the seventeenth century. Roger Williams well described Harrison as "a very gallant, most deserving, heavenly man, but most high-flown for the kingdom of the Saints." He certainly was a man in whom the ideals of religion did not balance with the common sense which he displayed on the field of battle. The notion of the Fifth Monarchy may have "pretended more spirituality than anything else," but the re-establishment of a theocracy through the rule of the Saints was the most unbridled of all the ideals ever cherished by dreamers of Utopia. It was an ideal planted in a time of frequent and passionate religious controversies, and fostered by a series of military victories which appealed with the force of divine manifestations to the minds of men whose belief was rather in the God of battle than in the God of love. It was the ideal of Harrison the dreamer.

No man could have been more zealous than Harrison to do good, but his zeal was not equalled by his patience. He assisted in the expulsion of the Long Parliament, because he was "fully persuaded that they had not a heart to do any more good for the Lord and his people"; he justified the King's execution, in that he had acted according to the best of his understanding, "desiring to make the revealed will of God in His holy scriptures a guide." Mr. Simpkinson's book shows how noble a character this regicide had. Harrison was as brave on the scaffold as he was at Marston Moor or at Appleby Bridge, where his personal bravery saved the army. As a leader of men he may have lacked Cromwell's judgment, but it is not difficult to imagine how thorough was the man who was regarded by the Fifth-Monarchy men as a martyr who would rise again after his execution to command a wing in the battle of Armageddon.

It is difficult to imagine Thomas Harrison as a citizen of the twentieth century; he would be no ordinary revivalist at any rate, and his life would be more than strenuous, but the effect of his zeal cannot be measured by modern standards. That Mr. Simpkinson has helped us so far to understand the complexity of Harrison's life and of his times is of great value. Had the story been written with a clearer style and with fewer digressions it would have been more valuable, but it would seem that these faults are due rather to the origin of the book, which was a course of lectures, than to intention.

SCHOLAR AND MARTYR

The Angel of Syon. By DOM ADAM HAMILTON, O.S.B. (Sands, 8s. 6d. net.)

THE Church of Rome has never lacked scholars or martyrs, even during the darkest days through which she has passed, and Richard Reynolds, the story of whose life and martyrdom has just been told by Dom Adam Hamilton, O.S.B., was both a scholar and a martyr. A son of Cambridge, whose name is associated with both Christ's College and Corpus Christi, he was accredited by no less a humanist than Cardinal Pole with being easily ahead of his fellow English monks, in his knowledge of the humanities, in Hebrew, Greek and Latin; and an Italian of Pole's household described him as a man "with the countenance of an angel and an angelic spirit," a phrase aptly made use of in the title of Dom Hamilton's book. He was of the spirit of More, and could combine a scholar's knowledge of Plato and Seneca with whole-hearted devotion to the old faith: the light of the classical renaissance was for him merely an additional witness to the divinity in man. But he lived in the troublous times that followed Henry VIII.'s assumption of the kingly prerogative in ecclesiastical matters. He, and those who suffered with him, preferred to trust in the ideal in which they had been nurtured: they could not be false to their faith when they felt that the whole Christian world save one kingdom was on their side, and, of that kingdom, only, as it seemed to them, the lesser part was on the king's side for worldly or political reasons. But to oppose the king's will in the matter of the royal supremacy was high treason, and, for that, Richard Reynolds, beatified during the pontificate of Leo XIII., was executed at Tyburn on May 4, 1535. Roper, Sir Thomas More's son-in-law, relates that Sir Thomas was in a cell in the Tower talking to his daughter Margaret, and, "looking out of the window, he chanced to behold one Master Reynolds, a religious, learned and virtuous father of Syon, and three monks of the Charterhouse, for the matter of the supremacy and matrimony going out of the Tower (in their religious habits) to execution: he, as one longing in that journey to have accompanied them, said unto my wife, then standing there beside him: 'Lo, dost thou not see, Meg, that these blessed fathers be now as cheerfully going to their deaths as bridegrooms to their marriage?'"

As Reynolds lived, so did he die, as truly a Christian martyr as any whose blood purpled the streets of Rome, a man against whom none but political enemies had aught to say. Even the jury empanelled to try him refused to find him guilty until Cromwell had threatened them with a like fate to the one demanded for him if they obstinately adhered to what they believed to be just.

There is little known of this Bridgettine monk, but that little is sympathetically told by Dom Hamilton. A few illustrations from paintings and brasses add to the interest of the book, and an appendix gives a sketch of the history of the Bridgettines of Syon, written by Father Robert Parsons, S.J., about the year 1595, edited from a MS: copy at Syon Abbey, Chudleigh.

CLASSICAL ECONOMICS

Études Économiques sur l'antiquité. Par PAUL GUIRAUD, Professeur à la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Paris. (Paris: Hachette, 3f. 50c.)

M. GUIRAUD is well known for his "La propriété foncière en Grèce," which was published some twelve years since, and which at the time was described as "une précieuse contribution aux Études Sociologiques."

The volume now issued derives its chief importance from the chapters devoted to "L'impôt sur le capital," both at Athens and at Rome. There is a preliminary essay upon the need of giving careful attention to economic questions in our study of ancient history; and a paper entitled "L'impérialisme romain," and another called "Histoire d'un financier romain" complete a volume which might with advantage have been considerably extended.

The average student of history finds some difficulty in giving due weight to the economic conditions of ancient times, and he is often oppressed with a sense of incompleteness in the conclusions arrived at by modern writers, while at the same time agreeing with M. Guiraud that "l'état du commerce et de l'industrie, la répartition de la richesse, l'organisation du travail, les systèmes d'impôts, sont des sujets aussi dignes d'intérêt que le récit des batailles et des révolutions politiques."

And the oppression is not altogether removed (one fears it may recur) on reading a very careful and, on the whole, a convincing exposure of an error of Böckh (which was committed about sixty years ago) in attributing the incidence of the eisphora wholly to "land."

In view of our own heavy burden of local and imperial taxation at the present day, it is with a feeling akin to envy that we regard the Athenian and Roman citizen mulcted in a tax which was not only not an annual impost, but which was invariably a war-tax only, an "aide pour la continuation de la guerre" and "affecté exclusivement aux dépenses militaires."

In Athens and in Rome, the efficacy of the system was largely dependent upon the true declaration of his fortune by each taxpayer—the inquisitorial quality of a progressive income-tax in our own day is a constant argument against its adoption, but in Greece the best guarantee for the collection of these dues was intense patriotism—"L'attachement des modernes à la patrie n'est pas comparable à celui des anciens"—and among the Romans,

"dissimuler une fraction de son capital c'était s'infliger une certaine déchéance politique; l'enfler, au contraire, c'était s'élever dans la hiérarchie des citoyens."

There was even a sense of favours to come which our harried income-taxpayer of the present year must sigh for in vain:

"l'homme qui se hâtait de porter son argent à la caisse publique méritait par là un utile certificat de civisme, et s'il avait plus tard quelque méchant procès, il n'oubliait pas de rappeler au juge tel cas où il avait été 'un des premiers' à payer l'eisphora."

The burden of taxation, however, in Athens, where "on vivait en pleine démocratie (et ce régime d'ordinaire est coûteux)" proved in the end destructive of this ardent desire to give money for warlike enterprises. It is not easy to determine the exact line between the taxpaying and non-taxpaying classes—"nous ignorons quelle était la ligne de partage"—though in the second Olynthiac, Demosthenes, speaking of the eisphora, says "all" will have to pay it—but wherever the demarcation may have been it is beyond question that the wealthy classes ultimately became a peace party:

"une faction naquit, dont l'unique souci était de détruire le régime démocratique et de conclure la paix. . . . L'impôt sur le capital, aggravé par les liturgies, avait au Ve Siècle incliné les riches vers la paix et les avait poussés à l'insurrection, à la trahison même. Au IV^e il ne compromettait pas la tranquillité intérieure; mais, en rendant plus sensibles aux contribuables les charges militaires, il inspira aux Athéniens une telle horreur de la guerre qu'ils ne se risquèrent à combattre leur grand ennemi, Philippe de Macédoine, qu'au moment où il était trop tard pour triompher de lui."

In Rome the tax on capital values, the tributum ex censu like the eisphora, was only for war purposes, and was not annual: it appears for the first time with paid military service. "La solde et le tribut apparurent au même moment." Evasion was uncommon among the Romans with their patriotism "ardent et réfléchi," where "le citoyen en effet occupait dans l'État le rang que lui assignait sa fortune constatée au cens. On avait plus ou moins de droit selon qu'on se disait plus ou moins riche"—but in spite of all this the burden must at times have provoked opposition to the aestimatio censoria (l'évaluation des biens) specially under such direction as that of Cato, who in his zeal for simplicity converted the tax into "une véritable peine."

There is little in these pages applicable to our own fiscal question. In Greece "les impôts indirects étaient insignifiants"—the Customs duties were neither protective nor prohibitive, and do not appear in Attica to have exceeded 2 per cent., while Piræus was probably a free port. It is interesting to observe that

"Rome jouait un rôle pareil à celui de Londres ou d'Hambourg avec cette différence, qu'elle ne cessait d'importer sans exporter autre chose que de l'argent."

The industrial question meets with a large amount of attention from M. Guiraud, and there are some interesting computations as to the rate of interest on capital at Athens, which appears to have ranged from 8 per cent. (land) and 12 per cent. to 20 per cent. (personalty and industrial securities), to even 30 per cent. for money lent. The operations of the capitalist were regarded with little favour by the poorer citizens, for labour being supplied by slaves, there was none of the compensating advantage to a free industrial class which is observable in the modern world.

"Comme le travail avait de plus en plus un caractère servile, c'était l'esclave ou plutôt son maître, c'est à dire au fond un capitaliste, qui recueillait tout ce que le capital payait au travail."

M. Guiraud's latest work is full of interest in regard to many matters which must, we fear, remain in obscurity for all time; but it is so written as to command attention, (notwithstanding the absence of foot-notes and cited authorities), and to the vigilant observer of the trend of modern politics, whether in England or on the Continent, the book must provide many useful finger-posts.

ON THE SNAFFLE

The Old English Squire. By JOHN CARELESS, Esq. With 24 coloured plates by one of the Family. The Illustrated Pocket Library of plain and coloured books. (Methuen, 3s. 6d. net.)

THE famous Dr. Syntax who, if we are not mistaken, finished the third and last of his original "Tours" in 1821, is still pretty frequently to be found neatly dressed in "gentlemen's libraries," or in rags and tatters in lumber-rooms and nurseries. But he and his contemporaries (such as Mr. Sponge, Bob Tallyho and Johnny Newcome) are gradually being forgotten, together with their inventors and illustrators, and it was a capital idea on the part of Mr. Methuen to reprint some of these earlier nineteenth-century books in small form, together with facsimile reduced reproductions of the illustrations to which they owed so much of their popularity. In their plain crimson boards, with the white label at the back, these small octavo volumes make a handsome little regiment, and any one who collects them will possess himself at small cost of much of the representative work of Leech and Cruikshank, Alken and Rowlandson, to say nothing of the accompanying letterpress of Pierce Egan and Surtees and William Combe.

The author of "The Old English Squire" can scarcely, perhaps, lay claim to the modesty which led Combe, when at the age of nearly eighty he had completed the vast collection of octosyllables with which, month after month, and year after year, he had tagged Rowlandson's prints, to deprecate his presumption in "still sporting even with my own Dowdy Muse," and to ascribe all the honour to his collaborator. "John Careless, Esq.," sees no reason in the world against his own appearance in print, nor does he lay any special stress upon the merit of the lively drawings with which "a member of the family" has illustrated a jocose and prosperous career. But no doubt his public depended rather upon these for entertainment than upon the complacent doggerel that accompanies them, and they are excellent of their kind, too, following Rowlandson's manner very closely, and showing considerable talent and a (not too refined) humour of their own. Herein Squire Careless is born, is dressed, gets ferruled at school, is crammed at college, learns much in London, and eventually returning with a pair of cockney cousins, is mightily diverted, right onwards to the eve of his wedding, with their misadventures in hunting field and covert. As for the "poem in ten cantos," it may be described as a canter varied by an occasional amble, jog-trot, or stumble. On the whole, however, we are generally safe for a little while at least with the ride-a-cock-horse metre, of which the following description of the ancestral stables may serve as a specimen :

"Near the house was a stable, in true ancient gusto
Made to look like a cottage—in fact it did just so ;
O'er the door of this cottage, or stable, in stone
Was a ham carv'd and sculptur'd, and rampant, alone ;
'Twas a ham, or a bird, or a shield, or a sword,
But which of them was it, we ne'er knew a word,
For with age and hard usage the shapes were near gone,
So 'twas called by the people, a ham, or ham bone ;
From this antiquarians did frequently reckon
That it once had belonged to the fam'd Roger Bacon,
As for hams, chines and bacon, the hall was long fam'd
And the hamlet hard by was hence Baconsfield nam'd."

All this, however, is unusually easygoing. Most often we encounter at every third or fourth line obstacles that only true British courage could negotiate, and which generally result eventually in a few sober octosyllabic couplets just to aid in the recovery of seat and breath. As to poetic influences, a tinkle of Moore, an echo of Scott, a shadowy waft of Coleridge, greet us from time to time as our poet exploits the various modes and methods of Romance. At one point he boldly sandwiches a stanza from Mary Morison into his verse with an honest "Vide Burns' Poems" appended. At another, by way of still greater variety, he introduces an extract (only an extract, since many passages of the original "savoured too much of impiety!") from Addison's "Letters from Italy" in excuse for a droll representation of "St. Anthony preaching to the fishes." This prose extract reminds us that Mr. Careless' own prose preface is by no means to be neglected. His literary philosophy at least is admirable :

"For my own part, being always of an easy and cheerful disposition, when a book does not set me to sleep I am sure to be pleased with it ; and if it should it is the same to me, for I think a good nap does one no harm, especially after dinner."

Let us take leave of him with one delicious couplet culled from a passage criticising his own portrait :

"But with noses how hard it is people to please 'em, Nam non cuique datum est habere nasum."

Habere as a dactyl has possibilities that might well reconcile any schoolboy towards compulsory Latin at least.

CANNING'S "ANTI-JACOBIN"

MR. TEMPERLEY, Fellow of Peterhouse and Lecturer in History in the University of Leeds, publishes a careful, well-written, well-knit Life of Canning. In fifteen chapters, the parentage and up-bringing of that memorable statesman, his political creed, career, conduct, his intellectual and social characteristics, are described for a generation more attuned to sympathy with his aims, perhaps, than any other since his time. In the long-run, however, literature has a livelier interest than politics, and the comparatively few pages that relate to Canning the scholar, poet, wit, humorist, will be read more eagerly in our day than all the rest of Mr. Temperley's animated story. Whether he has anything new to tell us of that short-lived but most famous publication, the Anti-Jacobin, anything to reduce uncertainty as to the authorship of much that is best in it, is the first question that most of our readers would ask. Sorry we are to say, however, that though Mr. Temperley gives the greater part of a chapter to the subject his inquiries add nothing to our knowledge.

With a complete copy of the original publication at hand we are able to say in what guise the thirty-six numbers of the Anti-Jacobin appeared week by week in 1797-98. Published at 169 Piccadilly, opposite Old Bond Street, it was a small eight-page paper in quarto: that is to say, about an inch shorter than this journal but of about the same breadth. The page was in double column, in fair large type of two sizes (unless for foot-notes, quotations, &c.), the first article being usually headed, as others were occasionally. The title-headings were in italic capitals throughout. Like all such productions at that time, it was printed on poor thin paper, not always of the same tint, and each number bore in some corner of its wide margin the red duty-stamp. From this it appears that by repeated additions the duty ran up to threepence-halfpenny, with 16 per cent. discount. Advertisements were not admitted, and the price of the little paper was sixpence.

The Prospectus—a separate publication of four pages, of the size and in the style of the paper itself—was written by Canning. Coming from him, it is a remarkably commonplace production, but businesslike also in the sense of making a clear and unexaggerated statement of what was intended. In short, the general purpose of the paper was named in its first title, the Anti-Jacobin; its particular purpose—this being strongly insisted upon—was expressed in the second title: or Weekly Examiner. For in that "eventful and tremendous time," as in this, the community was "perplexed by the multiplicity of contradictory accounts of almost every material event. It is the constant violation, the disguise, the perversion of the truth whether in narrative or in argument, that will form the principal subject of our weekly examination." Accordingly, the sub-title was set up as over a separate department in every number, the aforesaid examination being conducted under three several heads: Lies, Misrepresentations, Mistakes. Nearly all this work was probably done by the Editor, William Gifford; it certainly carries the mark of his vigorous and never too delicate hand. What news there is, or comment upon news, is almost entirely confined to foreign affairs, and is conveyed in brief, pithy paragraphs under the headings "Paris," "Vienna," "Berlin," and so forth. Domestic affairs, unless in relation to army and navy, are rarely touched upon. Rebellious Ireland, however, supplied one important exception, and national finance, with its enormous difficulties, another. There is no doubt that Pitt wrote most of these finance articles, if not all. The first of them (on a proposal to treble the assessed taxes!) is the leading article of Number 1, and they are always printed in a style of distinction.

For the rest, the paper is made up of that "Poetry of the Anti-Jacobin" which has been so often reprinted since, but more of prose matter in the same spirit and with corresponding cleverness. Ingenious letters, reports of imaginary meetings, parodied speeches—squibs of that character abound. Not all are worthy of praise, of course, but most of them are, while some are transcendently good. Take this sample from the report of an invented "meeting of the Friends of Freedom":

"Mr. Erskine now rose, in consequence of some allusions that had been made to the Trial by Jury. He professed himself to be highly flattered by the encomiums which had been lavished upon him; at the same time he was conscious that he could not, without some degree of reserve, consent to arrogate to himself those qualities which the partiality of his friends had attributed to him. He had on former occasions declared himself to be clothed with the infirmities of man's nature; and he now begged leave, in all humility, to reiterate that confession. He should never cease to consider himself as a feeble, and with regard to the extent of his faculties, in many respects a finite Being. He had ever borne in mind, and he hoped he should ever continue to bear in mind, those words of the inspired penman, 'Thou hast made him less than the angels, to crown him with glory and honour.' These lines were indeed applicable to the state of man in general, but of no man more than himself; . . . and he could wish to wear them in his breast as a sort of amulet against the enchantments of public applause and the witcheries of vanity and self-delusion. Yet if he were indeed possessed of those superhuman powers—all pretensions to which he again begged leave most earnestly to disclaim—if he were endowed with the eloquence of an angel, and with all those other faculties which we attribute to angelic natures, it would be impossible for him to do justice—" &c. &c.

In the speech of "the rising and manly" Macfungus, which follows, we have a delicious parody of another style of rhetoric which also is with us yet. Mr. Macfungus' theme is that of the "Temple of Freedom," which is to be erected on the ruins of "the present degraded and degrading system."

"Cemented with the blood of tyrants and with the tears of the aristocracy, it will rise for the astonishment and veneration of future ages. The Tree of Liberty will be planted in the midst of it and its branches will extend to the ends of the earth, while the Friends of Freedom meet and fraternise and amalgamate under its consoling shade. There our infants shall be taught to lisp in tender accents the Revolutionary Hymn. There with wreaths of myrtle, and oak, and poplar, and vine, and olive, and cypress, and ivy; with violets and roses and daffodils and dandelions in our hands, we will swear respect to childhood and manhood and old age and virginity and womanhood and widowhood, but above all to the Supreme Being. There will we decree and sanction the immortality of the soul. There pillars and arches and obelisks and pyramids will awaken the love of glory and of our country. . . . Then peace and freedom will pervade the whole earth; while the vows of republicanism, the Altar of Patriotism, and the revolutionary Pontiff with the thrilling volcanic sympathies, whether of holy fury or of ardent fraternal civism, uniting and identifying as it were an electric energy."

In prose, however, there is nothing more pungently, insidiously and yet uproariously humorous than the introductions and foot-notes to some of the metrical pieces: above all, to "The Loves of the Triangles" and "The Rovers." It would be pretty safe to say, indeed, that the serio-comic has never been carried farther in our language than by the notes to the first-named production: which is presented as the work of "Mr. Higgins of St. Mary Axe." In the only collection of the poetry of the Anti-Jacobin which we can lay hands on at the moment these notes and introductions are included, and they should be withheld no more than salt from an egg.

The poetry of the Anti-Jacobin is familiar enough, and yet we do not know why that should be said while its joys are unshared by the humblest brother Briton. It is not even certain that ten per cent. of those who quote from "The Progress of Man" (another of Mr. Higgins' contributions), "The Rovers," "The Loves of the Triangles," "The New Morality," are acquainted with more than the famous lines they repeat; and yet there is little that is not strikingly good in these pieces—nothing, perhaps, in the three first named. "The Progress of Man" and "The Loves of the Triangles" we ourselves delight in most, though the general preference seems to be given to "The Rovers" and the overrated "Needy Knife-Grinder." It may be worth mentioning that the stanza which figures last in Rogero's song in "The Rovers"—the stanza, too, which is most often quoted—does not appear in the Anti-Jacobin as originally printed:

"Sun, moon, and thou, vain world, adieu,
That Kings and priests are plotting in;
Here, doomed to starve on water-gruel,
-el, never shall I see the U-
-niversity of Gottingen
-niversity of Gottingen."

So runs this stanza, which—or something to the like effect—seems necessary to the completion of the song; and that is not the only reason for thinking it omitted by accident from the first publication, and not that it was added upon afterthought. Comparison of the later versions with the original shows some variation in other pieces—as in the once-famous passage in "The New Morality" (by Canning) which Pitt is said to have contributed. These lines are thrown into an address to Britain and read as follows in the original:

"So thine own Oak, by some fair streamlet's side
Waves its broad arms and spreads its leafy pride,
Shades the green earth, and, towering to the skies,
In conscious strength the tempest's wrath defies.
The fowls of heaven its ample branches share,
To its cool shade the panting herds repair:—
The limpid current works its noiseless way,
The fibres loosen and the roots decay,
Prostrate the mighty ruin lies, and all
That shared its shelter perish in its fall."

These lines were afterwards rewritten, to their great advantage. The poem in which they appear (the famous quatrain "Give me the avowed, the erect, the manly foe," &c., occurs in it) was the last piece of verse in the Anti-Jacobin. The publication came abruptly to an end—at the instance of Mr. Pitt according to one story. "So alarmed became Mr. Wilberforce and others of the more moderate supporters of Ministers at the boldness of the language employed that Mr. Pitt was induced to interfere;" and with hardly a word of explanation the matchless Anti-Jacobin came to an end.

FREDERICK GREENWOOD.

MARCEL SCHWOB

MARCEL SCHWOB, whose premature loss both England and France deplore, was the happy possessor of two gifts rarely found together. He was a scholar, and he was an artist. Though the past held few secrets from him, though he was as familiar with the life of Villon's Paris as with the manners of ancient Greece, he saw the "backward and abysm of time" through a mist of fancy. He re-created that which had ceased to exist by his imagination, and discovered the essence of truth, even where the formal truth eluded him. In his "Vies Imaginaires," for instance, he has sketched the lives of Petronius, Cyril Tourneur, and many others of whom little is known except their names, and he triumphantly convinces the reader of his sincerity. And, in truth, what better method of criticism is there than to divine a career, veiled by obscurity, in the very shape which that career should have assumed? But, even when Marcel Schwob was dealing with the hard facts of history, his quick fancy came to his help, telling him not merely where to look, but what to look for. During the last years of his life he had devoted himself to the study of Villon, and with characteristic ingenuity he had rebuilt in his mind's eye the Paris of the fifteenth century. He had brought to light the names of Villon's neighbours; he knew what they did and what they suffered; and by following them from house to house, from storey to storey, he was able to explain many allusions which had escaped the most learned of Villon's editors. M. Alfred Croiset, who delivered an oration at his grave, asked whether he was in any sense a specialist. I think he was not; or rather it might be said that every man's subject was Schwob's speciality. Profoundly as he had studied Villon, he was equally familiar with other authors and other periods. He was a classical scholar of rare delicacy and taste, and few knew the literature of the decadence better than he. His catholicity, indeed, is not his least remarkable trait. "I have no repugnances," he might have said with Charles Lamb; "Shaftesbury is not too genteel for me, nor Jonathan Wild too low. I can read anything which I call a book." And he called most things books which are composed of paper, ink, and type. Though he did not disdain the stern beauty of the classics, he loved also the chap-books, almanacks, and livres de colportage, which gave him hints for many a story, and increased his wonderful knowledge of slang. Most astonishing of all was his knowledge of English and English literature. When I first met him he had never crossed the Channel, and he spoke English with a humour and energy which few Englishmen can surpass. Nothing that touched our literature was alien to him, and while he had a perfect knowledge of Meredith, Stevenson, and the moderns, he had studied the works of Shakespeare and his contemporaries with a peculiar zeal. In brief, he was the master utriusque lingue in the old-fashioned sense. He thought, spoke and read in English as in French; and, doubtless, had not his style in French laid an imperative restraint upon him, he might have written in English also. Such were some of his gifts, and they came one and all from the same quality: a swift apprehension. There was nothing which his eager intelligence could not grasp, either in life or letters. He once went to a cricket match, and in less than half an hour he understood the purpose of the game, though he had never seen it played before. With him vision or hearing were the same as understanding. And in men as in books, he could look below the surface, and discover the basis of sympathy and friendship. His predilections may be observed in his works, for he made whatever he read the material of his art. In "Mimes" he gave to a newly discovered form a colour and beauty, of which Herodas never dreamed; his "Croisade des Enfants" is a series of pictures from the Middle Ages; his "Vies Imaginaires" were suggested by a study of Aubrey and Antony à Wood, the two masters of intimate biography. But whatever he wrote he wrote after a keen research for the appropriate style, combining always the assurance of the scholar with the artist's delicacy and refinement. His last book—"Mœurs des Diurnales"—is, in some respects, his masterpiece. Not for many a long year have Lucian and Rabelais been turned to better account, and this amazing treatise on journalism is proof enough that there is still a place for satire in the world of to-day.

Of late years he had turned his attention to the stage and had produced for Madame Sarah Bernhardt the best translation of Hamlet that has yet been made in French. For the same actress he was translating Macbeth, when death overtook him, and I know not whether his rendering will be heard upon the stage. But in all that he attempted he was a true man of letters, devoted to his craft with heart-whole fidelity. Neither sickness nor lassitude interrupted his loyalty, and even when his suffering was at its worst, he could forget it all in the discussion of an old author, or in the admiration of a rare edition. To see him in his library was to witness a perfect harmony between the man and his environing. He delighted to display to his friends the old books which he collected with so keen an enthusiasm, and which, though a real collector, he did not disdain to read. Here, like Montaigne, he devoted the hours to himself and the Muses; and here one had hoped that he would spend many years in the research that was dear to him. But he has left us all too soon, and if his sympathetic interpretation has done much to make the masterpieces of English literature known to France, we in grateful return are not unmindful of the genius and intelligence which has given to Marcel Schwob a distinguished place also on our side the Channel. CHARLES WHIBLEY.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

COLERIDGE

BEFORE me, as I write, there is a very pretty edition of Coleridge issued by Messrs. Blackie and Son. Everything about it is beautiful. It has a tasteful frontispiece, the binding is pleasant as well as good, and the print clear and comfortable. No one could desire a better pocket edition. There is only one point on which criticism rests, and this is the preface by Mrs. Meynell. The practice of publishing editions of standard authors prefaced by an introduction which gives an opinion of a poet that is almost always open to argument, and often weak and doubtful, appears to me pernicious. The number of people suitably equipped for writing such an appreciation is small, and any one who attempts it challenges us to examine their credentials. One would not object to Thomas Carlyle writing on Robert Burns because, although not a versifier, he had all the other qualifications of a great poet, and was, as it were, in a position to take Burns by the hand and talk to him on equal terms. We have the same kind of feeling about Dr. Johnson who, though frequently wrong in his judgment, was so splendidly endowed with vigorous common sense that a difference with him is always an interesting and intelligible difference. The inference seems to be that if an essay be prefixed to a volume of poems, it should be written by some one who is strong, capable and sympathetic.

In laying down these general principles, I hope Mrs. Meynell will not imagine that it is my purpose to say, directly or indirectly, that she is unfitted to write an introductory essay on Coleridge. Were she contributing such a paper to one of the many journals that she adorns with her work, it would be most welcome and interesting; but then the fate of a journal is to be read in the morning and in the evening thrown into the oven, whereas the fate of a pocket Coleridge is to be stuffed into a bag or a pocket and to be taken out whenever the owner feels inclined to do so. Probably on the first occasion he would read the preface with great interest, on the second with less, on the third with indifference, and when he found it on a fourth occasion he would feel inclined either to tear the pages out or gum them together. For when one begins to think of what Mrs. Meynell says it seems to fall in value. Take this sentence as an example: "His work for Christianity, for philosophy, for liberty, for mankind, had been little indeed compared with his hopes and with what we are told of his intellect." But how did Mrs. Meynell measure it? Does she go to her library to seek the books written on this subject, or is she in the position scornfully pictured by Robert Browning:

" Things done,
Which took the eye and had the price,
O'er which from level stand
The low world laid its hand

Found straightway to its mind, could value in a trice."

We have to remember that the work done by Coleridge was for the most part indirect and invisible. It has been written in no book, but during those evenings in Highgate, one of which was so vividly described by Carlyle, all the best of him went out to the most distinguished men of his time. He gave Scott an inspiration for literature, and, to speak of no other, fired the enthusiasm of the unhappy Edward Irving. He drew to the study of philosophy and poetry the most searching and brilliant minds of his time. How is Mrs. Meynell to measure all this, place herself in the judgment-seat and say the result is not commensurate with "what we are told of his intellect"? And the preceding sentence to the effect that his work had been "little indeed compared to his hopes" is about as unwise as anything that could be said. Whoever has had the highest hopes has experienced the bitterest failures, and that Coleridge died full of sadness and disappointment ought certainly to be no reproach to him.

Mrs. Meynell adds, "his achievement in magical poetry is altogether beyond price," and proceeds to draw a singular and, as we think, a paradoxical distinction between Coleridge as an intellectual man and the Coleridge who was "not an intellectual poet."

It has always been an idea with me, though it never seems to have occurred to Mrs. Meynell, that poetry is the last and most consummate flower of the human intellect, and to talk of an unintellectual poet is to speak of an ocean without water. But let us try if we can to follow the argument whereby she defines the difference. "As a poet, as a great poet, at his best he seems to be almost incapable of thought." What a revelation of self-consciousness we have here! The things that are truly seen are the things we know not we are seeing, the things that are truly heard are those of whose hearing we know nothing; or, to put the same thought in the words of a modern philosopher, the healthy man is not conscious of his health, but only the sick. To make what Mrs. Meynell calls "magical poetry," a man's mind must be working at the top of its power and be working unconsciously. When he knows he is thinking, when he is, so to say, watching the wheels go round, then he is not at the top of his strength. This is probably what Mrs. Meynell means when in language that might become a mystic or a transcendentalist she says: "When he addresses himself to thought in his poetry he is a turgid, excited, dull, and flaccid rhetorician seldom reaching even a beautiful eloquence." We pass by the obvious criticism, which a Macaulay would have delighted in when he had a Montgomery to demolish, that a man could scarcely be turgid and excited, dull and flaccid in the same breath, which comes to much the same as saying that the pig was a fat pig and a lean pig at the same moment. We avoid, too, the obvious flight of imagination that would fain picture Mrs. Meynell weighing the intellect of a Coleridge and finding it wanting. It might tempt us into a parable called "the substance and the scales," but the whole thought is shallow, and is based on a complete misunderstanding of the real nature of thought.

To go on with the story, we are informed that Coleridge is essentially the poet of the spiritual senses. "He had an exaltation of the senses, which is the richest of all endowments of the simpler poet." But that really is no more than a somewhat pompous statement of the truism that the poet is a poet because he sees more clearly, and pictures what he sees more vividly, than other people. This will be evident enough from a glance at the illustration which Mrs. Meynell gives:

"The moving Moon went up the sky,
And nowhere did abide:
Softly she was going up,
And a star or two beside."

Mrs. Meynell is surely not unaware, that in the very isolation of this picture there is the exercise of a most uncommon intellect. There is the eye which has seen, and the imagination which can body forth. The lines have the indescribable quality to be found in the most memorable descriptive passages of all the greatest poets. Milton's moon is as living and real as that of Coleridge, and it is presented with exactly the same faculty. Moreover, in spite of what Mrs. Meynell says, this is sensuousness in the true meaning of the term, and if we turn to the finest of all the poems of Coleridge, Kubla Khan, there is as much intellect as ever went to the making of the deepest parable; and surprising though it may be to Mrs. Meynell, it is a deeper wisdom that sees the teaching of a parable than that which deals with metaphysics, logic, and all the learning of the schools. For poetry, as we have said before, is the consummate flower of them all, the deepest truth couched in the most appropriate, and, therefore, the most beautiful words. What more of intellect could we wish than we have in the following passage which, while it stirs thought, also makes an overmastering appeal to the senses:

"It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she played,
Singing of Mount Abora.
Could I revive within me
Her sympathy and song
To such a deep delight 't would win me
That with music loud and long,
I would build that dome in air,
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
And all who heard should see them there,
And all should cry, Beware! Beware!
His flashing eyes, his floating hair!
Weave a circle round him thrice,
And close your eyes with holy dread,
For he on honey-dew hath fed,
And drunk the milk of Paradise."

A.

BEDLAM IN LITERATURE

It was in 1247 that Simon Fitzmary, Alderman and Sheriff of London, made over the whole of his property in the parish of St. Botolph's Without Bishopsgate, to be used as a priory for the Order of St. Mary of Bethlehem. The site of this original Bedlam is now covered by the Broad Street and Liverpool Street railway stations. In 1375 Bethlehem was seized by Edward III., but as the hospital was miserably poor, the Crown could have received as little profit as honour by the transaction. The first record we have of Bethlehem being used as a lunatic asylum is in 1403, when a certain Peter, the porter of the establishment, having succumbed to the wiles of the Evil One, a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the administration of the monastery. The report of the Commission states that there were six lunatics confined there—sex homines mente capti; and an appended inventory of the appliances of the house includes "six chains of iron, with six locks, four pairs of manacles of iron, and two pairs of stocks."

At what date the name of Bethlehem was corrupted into that of Bedlam is uncertain, but Wyclif refers to "Bedleem," and in Tyndal's time Bedlam was already a synonymous term for madness, for in his "Prologue to the Testament" he remarks: "It is bedlam madde to affirme that good is the natural cause of yvell." Skelton, too, in his scathing satire on Wolsey, "Why come ye not to Court," wrote:

"He grines, and he gapes,
As it were Jacke Napes,
Such a mad Bedlam."

Lunatics were, in these early days—and, indeed, down to the beginning of the nineteenth century—treated with the greatest barbarity; men and women were herded together in one ward, manacled, and chained to the walls like wild beasts. Even the most enlightened men were often guilty of gross cruelty to these unhappy wretches. Thus we find Sir Thomas More relating with much complacency how he had ordered a lunatic beggar, whom he found howling in the street, to be soundly flogged at a public whipping-post; and Shakespeare himself, in As You Like It, speaks of "a dark house and a whip" as good for madmen. The verses on the title-page of Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy" are eloquent of the condition of the insane in his day:

"But see the madman rage downright
With furious looks, a ghastly sight!
Naked in chains bound doth he lie
And roars amain, he knows not why."

At this time, and for long afterwards, the harmless lunatics were sent into the streets, with badges on their arms, to beg; and this fact accounts for the numerous references in our literature to the Bedlam beggar, Abram man, or Tom o' Bedlam. Aubrey states that they were round their necks "a great horn of an ox on a string or bawdry, which, when they came to an house for alms, they did wind, and they did put the drink given them into their horn, whereto they did put a stopple." This explains Edgar's strange words to King Lear, "Poor Tom, thy horn is dry." Tom o' Bedlam's mode of begging is described in detail by Dekker in his "English Villanies" (1648): "'Good worship, master! Bestow your reward on a poor man who hath been in Bedlam without Bishopsgate three years, four months, and nine days, and bestow one piece of small silver towards his fees, which he is indebted there of £3 13s. 7½d., and hath not wherewith to pay the same, but by the help of worshipful and well-disposed people, and God to reward them for it.' Then will he dance and sing, and use some other antic and ridiculous gestures, shutting up his counterfeit puppet play with this epilogue or conclusion: 'Good dame, give poor Tom one cup of the best drink. God save the king and his council, and the governor of this place.'" Shakespeare has several references to these Toms o' Bedlam, especially in King Lear, thus:

"The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Stick in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;"

and again in those terrible words which he puts into Edgar's mouth:

"Mice, and rats, and such small deer
Have been Tom's food for seven long year."

On April 21, 1657, Evelyn, who had been dining with Lord Hatton, made the following entry in his diary: "I stepped into Bedlam, where I saw several poor miserable creatures in chains; one of them was mad with making verses"; and six years later Pepys mentioned passing through Bedlam, though he did not record his impressions, which is rather remarkable.

In 1676, the hospital was found too small to allow of other inmates being admitted, and the establishment was accordingly transferred to Moorfields, where a handsome building had already been erected by public subscription and private donations, aided by a government grant. The new Bedlam is said to have been designed on the plan of the Tuileries, and the magnificence of the structure drew a sprightly epigram from Gay:

"Through fam'd Moorfields, extends a spacious seat,
Where mortals of exalted wit retreat;
Where, wrapp'd in contemplation and in straw,
The wiser few from the mad world withdraw;"

not to mention a long didactic poem by Hughes, a fashionable bard of the day, and a number of squibs and witticisms from lesser men. The main entrance of the building seems to have been specially noteworthy, the stone piers supporting the great iron gates being ornamented by two fine sculptures, representing Raving and Melancholy Madness, by Caius Gabriel Cibber. These figures provided Pope with a peg on which to hang a particularly mordant gibe at the expense of the famous sculptor's more famous son, Colley:

"Close to those walls where Folly holds her throne,
And laughs to think Monro would take her down,
Where o'er the gates by his famed father's hand
Great Cibber's brazen, brainless brothers stand."

Three years after the opening of the hospital in Moorfields, the Royal Society proposed to make an experiment of the transfusion of blood "upon some mad person in Bedlam." But fortunately for that institution's reputation, Dr. Thomas Allen, the visiting physician, opposed the motion so strenuously that it fell through. On Allen's retirement from his connection with Bedlam in 1684, Dr. Tyson succeeded to his post. This gentleman had the misfortune to be "damned to everlasting fame" as the Carus of Garth's "Dispensary":

"In his chill veins the sluggish puddle flows,
And loads with lazy fogs his sable brows;
Legions of lunatics about him press,
His province is lost Reason to redress."

The foundation-stone of the present Bedlam was laid in April 1812, and the asylum was opened in August 1815. Even then the patients' bedrooms were never warmed, nor were their windows glazed; no provision was made for lighting at night; and some inmates were still kept in chains. Needless to say, these relics of the barbarities of the Middle Ages have for many years been dispensed with, but the strange thing is that they should have been used so long.

SLANG

A SLANG dictionary may have its uses. Many slang words, creeping into the language from doubtful sources, have found a place in it unsupplied by the expression which they were at once understood to convey. Such a word is "humbug," a slang term which at its first introduction a century and a half ago had not the meaning it has been adopted for. At first it seems to have denoted fussy and absurd alarm. But there were other expressions for that; and by common consent, which often works with a mysterious rapidity and precision of agreement, "humbug" was presently seized upon to carry a budget of cognate meanings which had never been got into two syllables before. Slang or not, then, here was a genuine word—a word of worth more than many others; yet to this day it has never overcome the stigma of its origin. The sound of the word, even the look of it on paper, recalls with undiminished emphasis its birth in slang. In vain has it been admitted into the most respectable dictionaries. Because of its ugliness it remains slang; and innocent as its meanings are of the base suggestion which is the charm of slang to so many of its connoisseurs, it will stand under that condemnation for many a day yet. But it is not to be given up on that account. Careless of the little music in its syllables, the wise lexicographer will show the word "humbug" to its place in the English dictionary with all the ceremony that befits its worth.

But that is not always done. All the dictionaries have this word nowadays, with other slang products of similar merit. And that is well, or would be if the best of them were no longer ticketed as vulgar. Rarely, however, does the lexicographer consider himself at liberty to forget their origin or to omit mentioning it as irregular. After a hundred years of such service in the ranks as no other word could supply, "humbug" cannot be re-entered on the roll without a marginal reminder that it is quite without gentility. And so it is with other words of similar usefulness and similar derivation; which is not as it should be. In dictionary-making the right thing to do is to choose from the number of slang words such as have distinctive significations well marked, and such as have proved their usefulness in long years of service: these to be regimented on the same footing with the best bred words of Saxon or of Latin descent. As for the rest, half of them should be discarded altogether for what they are—fresh from the ditch and smelling of it, or, at the best, without a shade of meaning that isn't nasty even when it is new. The other half may be tolerated as curious or even apt, but not as accepted utterances of the noble English tongue. In most cases, indeed, they are but poor grotesques, words that leer rather than speak; no intention in them, but a sort of clowning with speech—usually for the sake of evoking a sentiment of familiar good-fellowship.

Yet, to deliver ourselves a little more broadly and honestly, slang of even this less harmful kind has no business at all in the dictionaries of any language. Nevertheless the best of our modern lexicons swarm with its progeny. A word should have some promise of stability, some prospect of life, before it is admitted to the sacred register, and of course it should be something more than a casual invention for private use. But one of the commonest characteristics of slang words is that they are but for a season. They are no sooner familiar than they begin to perish, making way for others with the novelty and the sauciness which seem to be their chief recommendation. A little while, and though they may be still remembered, they are as dead as the flowers of the year they came in with; yet there they lie strewed through the leaves of your favourite dictionary of the English language and still pretending to be alive. Who says of an excellent thing nowadays that it is "slap-up"? In what society is "slap-bang" a lingering expression? Who in east or west is so much out of date as to describe "a person or thing of large size" as "a slapper"? And what was there in these words at any time to carry them into the fine great dictionary where they moulder? Other slang words there are which never had any meaning out of some one or other of our many kinds of shop, and have even become obsolete in them. Together with "slap-up," "slap-bang," and their likes, all these should be swept out of every book that pretends to be a treasury of English; any man who chooses to do so being quite at liberty, of course, to lodge them in the mortuary pages of a slang dictionary.

There they would be of use. For meaningless, graceless, lifeless, yet harmless withal, they would serve to divide the noxious matter which is the main component of slang dictionaries, and so accomplish a kind of dilution. Make them more seemly to the casual eye we should rather say, perhaps, for it is not for "slap-up" and "slap-bang" that such lexicons are studied, nor is it the exposition of such terms which gives to slang dictionaries the value which condemns them to be locked up whenever they are not in actual use. However, appearances are something, and the interspersions of innocent vulgarities like "cove," "dibs," "jim-jams," has a softening and refining effect upon the compilation as a whole. That is certainly a grace, if it count not as advantage; for though the idea of a slang dictionary—among those who have never opened one—is a tome which no real student of our language can neglect; a book which, though its contents are often repellent from their coarseness, throws a woful light upon the converse of the degraded and the criminal's habits of thought—there never was a greater mistake. Raking through its columns, it may be possible to find here and there locutions with an etymological, antiquarian, or other guileless interest. But for ninety-nine hundredths of it the slang dictionary is of no good use whatever; neither does it yield any pleasure which a decent man would dare to acknowledge. It is stupid when it is not foul, and only brilliant from the iridescence of obscenity. Even when purged and chastened for open publication these characteristics cannot be got rid of altogether. All the stupidity, all the uselessness remains, with quite enough provocation to disgust. What should save it from the fire but the respectable name of "Dictionary" is not immediately evident.

THE TWO ARROWS

As nectarines upon the wall
From lattices of verdure peep,
And, hardly ripe enough to fall,
Their velvet state as virgins keep,
So is the bosom that I love
Unready for the Bowman's dart:
Not from that throat to-day shall float
More magic than a single note,
For still She wears the songless heart.

'Twas yesterday I chanced to meet
Sir Cupid coming down a lane,
With bramble-scars upon his feet,
And on his mouth a bramble-stain.
He pulled the quiver from his hip,
As if the ancient game to start;
And had begun his piercing fun
But that I proved the mischief done,
And showed an arrow in my heart.

Rogue Love, whose memory was short,
Went whistling round the lane's green bend—
Honey and agony his sport!—
And left me with my wound to tend.
Men say within his quiver sleeps
Each travelled arrow's counterpart;
So, Sweet and Pure, I may endure
If but my broken breast be sure
This arrow's mate shall drink thy heart.

NORMAN GALE.

FICTION

Creatures that once were Men. By MAXIM GORKY. Translated from the Russian by J. K. M. SHIRAZI. With Introduction by G. K. CHESTERTON. (Alston Rivers, 1s. 6d. net.)

THE obvious moment for publishing Gorky, and for talking about him, Mr. Alston Rivers has seized by issuing this translation of "Creatures that once were men," and by getting Mr. G. K. Chesterton to write a preface (this "Introductory") thereto. If good wine needs no bush, it might be thought that Gorky needed no introducer. As a fact a good many of us have probably ere now read this tale in its French dress—Les ex-hommes. It is almost the grimmest of all the pictures which Gorky drew in his earlier and bitterer vein. All the same we do not echo the common cry of "decadence" as applied to this sort of literature, nor in consequence do we echo a good deal of what Mr. Chesterton says in his preface.

"A nation like Norway has a great realistic drama without having ever had a great classical drama or a great romantic drama. A nation like Russia makes us feel its modern fiction when we have never felt its ancient fiction. It has produced its Gissing without ever having produced its Scott. . . . Out of these infant peoples come the oldest voices of the earth."

And then Mr. Chesterton asks why this is, and suggests a variety of answers in a manner which, if we forgot we were listening to a writer who should represent le dernier cri of criticism, would take us back to that of many years ago. It is well also to remind oneself from time to time of Charles II. and the dead fish. The recent excavations in Crete have upset all older theories of the development of Greek art. What they give us is modern and realistic in fashion when set beside the far more recent sculpture of Polycletus or Phidias. And so are the Elizabethan dramatists modern and realistic beside Byron or Victor Hugo. Is Mr. Chesterton sure that there is not a romantic writer in Russian literature? Because we have an opposite impression. And Gogol again; he greatly resembles some of Scott's predecessors, such as Smollett. And, by the way, if we found Smollett floating in space we should certainly class him as more modern than Scott. Then as for decadence! If Ford or Webster were to spring up among us to-day, or if they too were found floating in space, should we not class their choice of themes as decadent of the decadent?

Gorky began writing in a bitter vein—as we know from his adopted nom de guerre. But he is not self-made. He is most obviously of the "school of Tolstoi"; and neither Tolstoi nor in fact Gorky himself is a pessimist at heart. We only think so because a wave of utter unreality—the pseudo-romantic novel—is passing across our fiction; and as for our drama it is too conventional to count. Mr. Chesterton says truly that the Russian anarchy seems often to have the "head of the super-man," but it is mere fancy and fashion that would represent his tale as "the tale of the missing link." For all their squalor and seeming degradation, there is a curious sort of nobility about Gorky's tramps and vagabonds taken as a class. It is never so visible as in his longest story—a novel by its length—"Three men" (des Triis). One feels that Ilya the hero is on the whole a worthy member of the human race, though hardly of "society," seeing that pretty early in the story he commits a deliberate and cold-blooded murder. And Paschka in the same novel (Paschka, the poet, who must have some of the features of his creator), what a strange amalgam he is!—not far removed from a souleneur in one light, capable of a romantic devotion on the other side of him, so to say. Gorky's folk in fact are not so much evil as without law, a sort of Vikings of the slums preying upon an alien civilisation.

It is not fair to judge the Russian novelist by this special story of the Ex-men. (It would have been better to use that as the title.) Story one can hardly call it. It is just one of Gorky's photographs: Aristid Fomich Kuvalda, the ex-captain, now the drunken keeper of a lodging-house for broken men—for the sodden schoolmaster, the hawker, the thief, and his friend the deacon, who had been degraded from his office for drunkenness and immorality—and the others. Then of Kuvalda's attempt to incite the publican Egor Vasilavitch Vaviloff to sue Petunikoff the tradesman (Judas Petunikoff he always is in Kuvalda's mouth) because Petunikoff had built his factory partly on Vaviloff's ground; and how the scheme only ends by a compromise between the two bourgeois, the arrest of the captain and the turning the casuals into the street again. There is one little touch which is in Gorky's bitterest and yet in a sense most observant vein.

"Having satisfied himself with this reflection the worthy captain looked round upon his staff. Every one of them was disappointed, because they knew that something they did not expect had taken place between Petunikoff and Vaviloff, and they all felt they had been insulted" [read rather "degraded"]. "The feeling that one is unable to injure any one is worse than the feeling that one is unable to do good, because to do harm is far easier and simpler."

Yes; there is bitterness there, but not what we should call decadent bitterness. Nor do we detect any of the signs of "antiquity" which Mr. Chesterton finds in the Russian novel. We believe there are sufficient reasons why the trend of all fiction (that has any trend) is towards a certain direct and naïve realism. But it would take more space than is at our disposal to set forth those reasons. We in England are so much out of "the movement" for the immediate moment that what seems natural and inevitable elsewhere is strange to us. It may appear paradoxical to say so, but we doubt that our vigorous political life and our time-honoured party system in politics are among the causes that have kept England so much out of the "running" in modern fiction and drama. In England folk are classed by the opinions they represent, in politics, in theology, in what not. Every boy and every girl here is born "either a little liberal or else a little conservative." So we cannot study our neighbours simply as men and women. But in northern Europe, in Scandinavia, where political partisanship is of yesterday, in Russia, where it has no means of formulating a set of doctrines, such a kind of study is natural and instinctive.

Bloomsbury. By C. F. KEARY. (Nutt, 6s.)

A STRANGE and fatal perversity has brooded over the production of Mr. Keary's new novel "Bloomsbury." Author and publisher seem to have vied with each other in the effort to give it what the newspapers call a bad "send-off." Mr. Keary made it five hundred and fifty pages long, Mr. Nutt turned it out a fat dumpy volume most uncomfortable to hold and teeming with misprints. And to these physical disadvantages Mr. Keary has not scrupled to add others of a purely literary kind, to wit an almost complete absence of plot and of incident, characters keyed down to the dead level of middle-class London life in its least attractive phases, and dialogue from which wit is carefully excluded. And the worst of it is, we know it is all done deliberately and with intention. Nobody can write more brilliant dialogue or draw more whimsical or fantastic or fascinating character than Mr. Keary when he chooses. In "Bloomsbury" he does not choose. His theory of dialogue in fiction evidently is that it should reproduce as closely as possible the irrelevance and the level monotony of actual everyday conversation. The characters in "Bloomsbury," like the characters in "The Journalist," pass from one subject to another, break off in the middle of a sentence, are dull or fatuous or merely nil, just like their prototypes of the ordinary London of to-day. They talk neither better nor worse than the people we are accustomed to listen to, or rather the people whose remarks we might hear without listening if we were standing idly in a modern drawing-room or club. And out of this very ordinary kind of dialogue with a dozen or more of almost equally ordinary characters sketched in carefully but without emotion, Mr. Keary has set himself to produce a novel, nay, has produced one. For though we think his method a mistaken one, requiring a prodigious number of words and pages to paint a very small picture we are bound to admit the success, or at least the partial success of his book. The characters in it, Quorn the little dwarfish doctor, Miriam his highly strung, self-conscious wife, Joyce Freeling with her romantic friendships, Hale the Assyriologist and the rest, are well conceived and cleverly drawn, though the reader has to piece together their personalities out of disjointed scraps of dialogue, hints and indications, instead of getting them in direct fashion from the author. And though we are quite certain that with his narrative power and constructive ability Mr. Keary could have produced a much more vivid impression of modern Bloomsbury if he had made greater concessions to the "average reader," yet we will not deny that with his perverse method he has succeeded in producing one that is very fairly vivid. Only we lament that the method he has selected for so doing should seem to us perilously near being dull.

THE BOOKSHELF

Twenty-one Poems written by Lionel Johnson. Selected by WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS. (The Dun Emer Press, Dundrum. 10s. 6d. net.)

A charming edition of twenty-one poems by Lionel Johnson, selected by Mr. W. B. Yeats, has been printed by Miss Yeats at the Dun Emer Press, Dundrum, on Irish paper, light, strong, and pleasant to handle, but a little too transparent to be perfect. The press-work is good, and the appearance of the book in every way distinguished and free from eccentricity. The selection, too, is so good that even those who already possess "Poems" and "Ireland and other Poems," may like to acquire this little handful of choice things. They will find in it the purest gold of Johnson's poetry, and need not fear that more than a reasonable space is devoted to Irish subjects. The book opens with "Mystic and Cavalier;" it contains, among other fine things, "Glories," "To Morfydd," "Sertorius," the lines on the statue of King Charles, and two splendid Latin poems "Jesu Cor" and "Satanas" (with a sad misprint in the former). There is no Wykehamical poem, but even those who most fully recognise the sincerity of his affection for Winchester and the inspiration he derived from her grey walls, her meads and streams, may admit that Johnson's panegyrics of the venerable College were sometimes pious exercises in a somewhat laboured strain. We would give them all for "The Dark Angel," the sad and haunting expression of a spiritual conflict, with which the volume closes.

THE DRAMA

"AGATHA" AT HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE

MR. TREE has taken the first step towards forming his "Répertoire Theatre," by giving a spare Monday evening to Agatha, by Mrs. Humphry Ward and Louis N. Parker. The greatest difficulty to be met by the founders of the several Répertoire Theatres that are now in the air is the fact that they have to find or make their répertoire; and Agatha, we are afraid, will not go far to helping Mr. Tree towards his. If a répertoire is to be of any use, every item in it must represent some phase of dramatic development, some distinct point in the process of thought, some marked moment in the history of form. It must be representative of something; Agatha is representative of nothing.

A play gives Mrs. Humphry Ward no chance. Her ability lies all in the direction of "pressing out," as some one said of Sainte-Beuve, the characters of her men and women through the deliberate processes of the novel. A play, which needs what is by contrast, sharp and decisive treatment, offers her no room to move. This or that episode is over and done with before she has realised that it has begun. Mr. Louis N. Parker has proved himself over and over again an able, practical maker of plays rather than the possessor of original ideas. The collaboration between the thinker and the man of practice ought, perhaps, to have been fruitful; for some reason, it has failed to be so. Agatha is, after all, but a rechauffé of a number of old ideas; and old ideas, though a novelist may work them out at leisure into new being, are a heavy weight for any playwright to carry unless he treats them frankly in the old style. They will make a good farce, a good melodrama, a good "strong play" of situations and effects; they will not make a good play of the kind which depends on its ideas for its interest. Agatha fails because the idea in it is not worthy of the treatment. The authors have taken commonplace, and tried to invest it with meaning; and the commonplace has kicked off the vestment to reveal its nakedness.

For commonplace it is, the old commonplace of the theatre. The girl who is forced into accepting a suitor to save her father's pocket and her mother's honour is a commonplace; the secret that has been kept for twenty years, only to be blurted out in Act I., is another; the drunken, brutal father and the graceful, suffering mother are two more, and the list is complete with the suitor, the lady with a past, and the extinct monsters in the shape of artists who adore the heroine, and get in the way of the other characters. Not one of them was worth the trouble and the art which have been devoted to them; and the dash of originality which makes the girl love instead of hate her suitor, and refuse him because her delicacy of mind forbids her sully-ing his name, is really, when you look at it, the greatest commonplace of all. The charming picture of the first love of an innocent girl, with all its shrinking and tremor, the subtle presentment of her initiation into the shames and troubles of life, never touch the mind or the heart as they should, because the authors have put a real girl into unreal circumstances. And the result is that a play which has very many good points—including a literary quality far above the average—creates nothing like the effect which an equally well-written play, starting from a better place, could not fail to produce.

The difficulty of the name-part of Agatha is the difficulty of Juliet—that an actress with experience enough to play it would be far too old to play it. Miss Viola Tree produces, at any rate, that impression of fresh youth and simplicity which is, perhaps, the most important point in Agatha. She was fortunate in finding in Mr. Dawson Millward a lover of the necessary inches. Mr. Herbert Waring, as Agatha's supposed father, appeared to realise that the character had strayed out of melodrama, and played it accordingly; and the rest—Mr. Henry Neville as the real father, Miss Lillah McCarthy as the mother, and Mr. Robert Hammond and Mr. Julian l'Estrange as the unnecessary artists—did all they could with their parts.

FINE ART

MINIATURES ANCIENT AND MODERN

CONNOISSEURS will have been glad of the opportunity of seeing the principal part of M. Albert Jaffe's collection of miniatures at the Fine Art Society, for the few days that they were on show. These miniatures are to suffer the fate of most private collections and to be disposed of by auction at Cologne at the end of the month. Many of the names in M. Jaffe's catalogue are such as to excite the interest and curiosity of the collector, but we fancy there are few of the miniatures that on close examination will stimulate his acquisitiveness to the point of extravagance.

As might have been expected, the foreign schools occupied the place of importance in respect to numbers.

These included a very few of the seventeenth-century masters; and a small pendant miniature by Petitot of Charles II. was a conspicuously delicate example of this master's work on vellum. The eighteenth-century French miniaturists were more adequately represented. There were several very dainty heads by François Dumont and Antoine Vestier, one or two less fortunate specimens by the better known Rosalba Carriera and Adolphe Hall, but the majority of the miniatures of this school were merely reminiscent of the best qualities that we have learnt to look for in the art of this period. To expect the more serious motives of portraiture in the school which flourished during the reign of Madame de Pompadour, is to lack appreciation of its essential characteristics.

The prevailing fashion for snuff-boxes and bonbonnières, with their daintily painted confections set in bejewelled goldsmith's work, reflected the pervading sentiments of the Belles Dames and Chevaliers of the time. This sentiment of frivolity expressed itself not only in the fanciful subjects of the small pictures which adorned this "bric-à-brac," but also in the treatment that inspired the miniaturists in painting the numerous "boîtes à portrait," given as diplomatic presents by the King. In these portraits the artist hardly felt the obligation to make a likeness, so much as a pretty and piquant ensemble. They were creations in an altogether lighter vein, and they succeed in charming us by the skilful finesse with which the details of colour and drawing are touched in. There is a playful inspiration shown by these French painters in their use of pretty colour, and in their almost universal good taste we may see a temperamental characteristic of the race. In spite of a certain flippancy of feeling they retain a facile power of balance throughout the whole scheme which gives distinction to an otherwise somewhat small manner of work. Their use of the "gouache" method of painting on ivory, which by the way has never obtained a vogue amongst English painters, is justified by the skill with which it is used. The transparency of the flesh tints is enhanced by the juxtaposition of an opaque manner of painting the accessories. These accessories are handled with a lightness and delicacy that preclude all suggestion of heaviness of tone, with the result that we have freedom and finish without laborious effort. Such use of "gouache" no doubt simplified the more tentative methods otherwise inevitable.

The eighteenth-century school of French miniaturists is as alien to the traditions created by the Clouets in the sixteenth century as our own Cosway school is alien to that of Holbein. The earlier masters felt the true dignity appertaining to the art of portraiture. Within the small compass of their miniatures they contrived to combine an amount of force, character, and largeness of treatment with a certain archaic decorative simplicity that at once betrayed their Flemish origin and their close affiliation to the illuminated manuscripts. By their truth and realism they are ensured a place beside greater masterpieces in the archives of historic art. In our own schools these nobler traditions were faithfully upheld, and gradually matured until they finally culminated in the work of Samuel Cooper and his contemporaries in the seventeenth century. It was not until the revival of miniature painting in the late eighteenth century with the Cosway school that we see in England a complete breakdown of tradition and the creation of a style as effervescent as the state of society that inspired it. Yet the most severe critic must admit that the Cosway school possesses style and distinction in spite of its limitations and lack of truth. Like a well-phrased epigram, it captures our attention and holds our admiration more by reason of its facility than its sincerity. Its brilliant mastery of the essentials of a shallow convention gives it a title to our praise. This being so, it is equally true that such qualities are quite impossible of translation into the thoughts and feelings of another age and another condition of society. Modern miniature painters have refused to recognise this fact, and the brilliant effervescent qualities of this school have been the stumbling-block of a host of imitators. It is impossible to fit this eighteenth-century convention to modern requirements, even if the technical skill is not wanting. To paraphrase a vulgarism, people are not content with the beautiful shadow, they must have the prosaic substance also. In trying to realise both, the miniaturist, who depends for his inspiration on Cosway, is led into an anachronism, and loses all balance in his result. Let it be remembered that Cosway himself studied greater masters and greater styles, grafting something of their spirit on to his own manner; moreover, he was a master of technique and an extraordinarily direct and facile draughtsman. Without these qualities his convention would have been powerless to charm; yet they are by no means the qualities that his would-be imitators try to seize.

A modern school of miniature painting can never regain the lost prestige of this delightful art by enslaving itself to the fetish worship of a popular idol. It must build up for itself a truer and nobler manner upon earlier and greater traditions. There are to be seen at the Dowdeswell Galleries a collection of eyes, painted by Cosway, Engleheart, and others. These dainty curios have a certain interest for the student, as well as the connoisseur, inasmuch as they help to emphasise the fact that these painters had a very real power of drawing. Mr. Alyn Williams also shows some miniatures of his own painting that exemplify the difference between the technical methods that obtain to-day and those of the eighteenth century.

SCIENCE

ON ATOMIC ARCHITECTURE

LAST Friday evening's Royal Institution lecture by Professor J. J. Thomson, of Cambridge, on the "Structure of the Atom," was one of the most interesting and important that the famous theatre has heard for many a day. That therein it but fulfilled expectation was attested by the remarkable assemblage of the leading physicists of this country, from Lord Kelvin, the "modern Democritus," downwards.

It is eight years since Professor Thomson showed cause, in the same place, for belief in the existence of minute particles or corpuscles, as he likes to term them, of which it would take about a thousand to equal the weight of the lightest atom known, which is that of hydrogen. In the intervening period he has accomplished the most remarkable piece of work that physical inquiry has known for many years—work which the discovery of radium has confirmed and accelerated.

These corpuscles or electrons, each of which is a literal atom of negative electricity, are now known to be the constituent parts of the familiar so-called atom of the chemist. They are all absolutely identical in mass and other properties, whether they form part of an atom of hydrogen or gold or any other "element." Given, then, that the electron is the unit of matter, in what fashion is it combined with its fellows so as to form the atoms, some eighty different kinds of which are now known to the chemist?

As every one knows, "like electricities" repel one another; and if none but negative electrons composed an atom it would not hold together for a moment. We must therefore conceive, with Lord Kelvin—foremost mind of the time, though in its ninth decade—that there exists, as the core of the atom, a charge of positive electricity. The problem of atomic architecture is to balance the common attraction of this core, or ion, for the electrons, against their mutual repulsion. How, then, is an atom built up?

Professor Thomson has approached this question in inextinguishable fashion by a combination of mathematical theory with actual experiment. The same results are reached by both methods: and we shall see how complete his solution is when we observe its compatibility with, and explanation of, other facts long familiar.

The a priori or mathematical method indicates the theoretic position of the electrons within the atom according as we conceive the atoms to contain one, two or more electrons. Professor Thomson has calculated out the theoretical structure of such atoms up to a large figure. But the a priori method alone satisfies no man of science to-day. It is true that by its means you can always frame a self-consistent theory: and that was all that our ancestors asked during many centuries. Nowadays, however, we ask that a theory be consistent not only with itself, but also with the facts: and so we must employ the a posteriori or experimental method as well. In the case under discussion this is easily done. In your ion, or positive atomic core, provide an electro-magnet. For the electrons, supply a number of magnetised needles and float them in water, free to move where they please, whilst the electro-magnet hovers over them, its positive pole downwards, and their negative poles, of course, upwards. Thus they are all attracted by it, whilst repelling one another. It is found that the needles arrange themselves, according to their numbers, in just such fashion as theory indicates: and seldom have I seen more conclusive and pretty experiments than those in this sense of last Friday. The needles can move only in two planes, of course, whereas in the atom the electrons can move in three; but the case is analogous.

So far, excellent. Now let us see whether Thomson's theory of atomic structures consorts with older chemical theory. The veriest amateur is familiar with the periodic law of Mendeleef, the great chemist of St. Petersburg, who has arranged the elements in related groups. Make a list of the elements in order of atomic weight. No. 1 and No. 2 are dissimilar: but No. 1 resembles Nos. 9 and 16 and 23—let us say: whilst No. 2 resembles Nos. 11, 18 and 25. Thus we have groups, such as lithium, sodium, potassium: phosphorus, arsenic, and antimony, and so forth. The chemist finds that these resemble one another, and the physician that their actions on the human body are related. Sometimes gaps occur in the table: thus Mendeleef predicted the discovery and described the characters of two unknown elements, which should fill these gaps, and when scandium and germanium were found, he was justified. There is no doubt about the periodic law, nor about its inference, that the elements are not elemental but related.

Now Thomson's theory fits in to a nicety with the atomic law. The hypothetical atom with twenty electrons has them arranged in an outer circle of twelve, an inner of seven, and a central one, hard up against the low or atomic core which holds all together. Throw in another electron and the arrangement is completely altered: but when you add let us say another dozen, you find the old arrangement restored, with the addition of an outer circle of the extra twelve. Plainly the first atom is the analogue of sodium and the second of potassium, and their similarity, and their unlikeness to the elements of intervening weight, are alike explained. I wonder whether the reader can appreciate the pleasure with which the student of science, now and again, meets a theory which co-ordinates and illumines whole series of facts, as does this revelation of Thomson's, or gravitation, or natural selection, or the association of ideas, or the circulation of the blood, or many another.

Then, again, if we look at a list of the elements, we find that they vary in their electric properties. No. 1 is what is called electro-positive, No. 8 is somewhat more so, but No. 9 is very electro-negative and so on. There is not a steady rise and fall in this property: but sudden interruptions. The new theory explains this fact completely. An atom with a certain number of electrons has, say, ten in the inner circle and fifteen in the outer. Now, according to mathematical theory, ten is the minimum number for the inner ring that will retain fifteen in the outer. The atom is electrically unstable or electro-positive. Add another electron and the atom becomes very unstable or electro-positive; and so on until a totally new arrangement is reached and the atom becomes very stable or electro-negative again. Here is an entire series of facts which the new theory illuminates.

But atoms often combine with one another to form the myriads of chemical compounds: and each has its own peculiarities. One atom of carbon, for instance, will take four of hydrogen, forming marsh gas, CH_4 , and is said to be "four-handed"; whilst one of oxygen takes only two of hydrogen, forming water, H_2O , and is said to be "two-handed." Here the theory calls in aid the astronomers—science being the natural home of the freest Free Trade—and considerations derived from the study of Saturn and his rings are brought in to explain the relations between an atom of carbon and its four satellite atoms of hydrogen. In the astronomical case, the meteorites of which Saturn's rings are composed attract one another besides being alike attracted by the planet; but in the case of marsh gas the hydrogen atoms, if conceived as negatively electrified in accordance with the electric theory, repel one another. Yet the analogy can be made to explain the reason why carbon will hold four hydrogen atoms, but not five.

Lastly, as to atomic evolution. It was curious that the day after Mr. Frederic Harrison, on delivering the first Herbert Spencer lecture before the University of Oxford, commented on the inapplicability of evolution to the realm of physics, Professor Thomson should show how completely the conception of evolution holds in this realm, where none but the eye of faith of the mind of a great generaliser could have guessed its operation forty years ago. For the theory of Thomson shows that many more kinds of atoms are possible than those we know. But these atoms vary in stability according to the number of their electrons and the possibility of their coming to a stable mutual arrangement within the atom. Hence the atoms of "elements" we know are those that have survived. Others have doubtless existed, but have had relatively brief lives and have broken down into forms better adapted for survival. Radium, I fancy, is a typical instance of an unstable atom which is rapidly evolving into less unstable forms.

Had Professor Thomson had time, he might have made an interesting historical comment on his diagram, representing natural selection amongst atomic species. Speaking in the presence of the modern Democritus, whose most distinguished pupil he is, he might have referred to the founder of the atomic theory, the original Democritus, and to his pupil Empedocles. Some people are still claiming priority for Darwin or Wallace or Spencer or Wells or some other in the conception of the survival of the fittest. But ages before our time Empedocles suggested that, of his master's atoms, only the fittest would survive. And now Lord Kelvin's follower has verified that guess.

Last, as to the course of evolution as a whole. It seems that our ignorance of the properties of positive electricity—as to whether it is compressible or not—leaves it uncertain whether "the Universe began as a simple collection of homogeneous atoms and is evolving into a complex thing which will ultimately become one huge atom" (I quote as well as I can the lecturer's words), or whether it began as a complex "huge atom" and is now breaking down into simpler, smaller, and similar atoms. This inquiry immensely tickled the audience (not the front row)—but I do not pretend to know why. The question in brief is whether the process now seen is evolution or dissolution. But before we are prepared to hear Professor Thomson further on this subject, we must ask him by what right he assumes any "beginning." If he were a psychologist as well as one of the greatest of living physicists, he would ask himself whether he is quite sure that he can even conceive that the Universe ever "began." But they still read Paley at Cambridge, and perhaps Professor Thomson has remembered him too well. If the Universe is a big watch, it is well to inquire, certainly, whether it is running down, or being wound up.

C. W. SALEEBY.

MUSIC

THE "SYMPHONIA DOMESTICA"—ANOTHER VIEW

"MINE ear is full of the murmur of rocking cradles," says Carmen Sylva in one of those exquisite Roumanian songs dealing with primitive life among a still primitive people; and here, in the midst of our complex civilisation, above the roar of scientific machinery, this sentiment is echoed by the world-worn voice of the twentieth century.

The child has been prominent of late in art and in fiction; he has painters, singers, playwrights, chroniclers in Bouguereau, Barrie, Mme. Lisa Lehmann, and the delightful German Elizabeth; but it was reserved for Herr Richard Strauss to make him the central figure of an important instrumental tone-poem.

The "Symphonia Domestica," given for the first time in England on February 25, under the admirable conductorship of Mr. Henry Wood at the Queen's Hall, is a series of more or less successful structural experiments in the development of three main themes with their sub-themes—theme or themes of the husband, of the wife, and of the child; but it is the child's which is subtly insistent throughout. The work itself, which, though divided into four distinct sections—Introduction, Scherzo, Adagio, and Finale—continues without a break to the end, is supposed to narrate in music a day in the composer's life.

How far music lends itself to the description of homely existence hour by hour in a middle-class family, even presuming the thought uppermost in its creator's mind to be the idealisation of the sanctities of the hearth, is a point on which most audiences will disagree. A great French writer tells us that all art is nature seen through a temperament, and Wagner boasted that independently of words or scenery his musical phrases conveyed to the listener's mind the different phases of nature or sentiment he intended them to represent. Nevertheless, this was not always the case, as the following little anecdote, related by Paderewski, will show.

A Frenchman to whom Wagner's works were unfamiliar once consented to have his eyes bandaged for ten minutes during the performance of Tristan und Isolde, in order to guess from descriptive sounds at the text he might not see. The orchestra began harmoniously in a sweet, subdued strain; and with a smile he said, "Il fait beau!" Presently, weird dissonances crept in, the music grew wilder: "Décidément," sighed the neophyte, "le temps se gâte!" All at once came an upheaval as of Titanic forces; instruments crashed together; cries and booming filled the air. "Ha!" cried the Frenchman, "what terrific storm is here? This means disaster and universal cataclysm!" His friends laughingly took off the bandages and invited him to read the true account of the situation in his libretto. It was briefly summed up in two words, "Isolde soupire!"

Here is nature seen through a temperament indeed; but its presentment is based on strong human emotion. Mr. Strauss applies the same volcanic expression with the same exuberance to subjects which are not of their nature dramatic; hence for the performance of the "Symphonia Domestica" on February 25 an extra number of performers had to be engaged, and several instruments, notably the four saxophones and the oboe d'amore, were specially manufactured in Brussels and Paris.

As the scene opens we make acquaintance with the husband first, in themes given out sonorously on 'cellos, horn and bassoon. Emphatically he means to be master in his own house, and a weird little figure of five notes marked "Mürrisch"—sulky—which recurs at intervals, is typical of his displeasure when trivial everyday matters are permitted to intrude on the trend of his lofty thoughts.

Later, in the third section, we find a long passage also consecrated to him, and entitled, "Schaffen und Schauen"—creating and contemplating—in which, as the strains are "moderately slow and very quiet" throughout, we hope that genius is at last able to soar into the tranquil atmosphere congenial to abstract thought.

That even genius cannot be entirely oblivious of sub-lunary things, however, is evident from the themes of the wife, which flit into the first section on the flute, oboe and first violins, with extreme vivacity, accentuated by fluttering chromatic runs and little clinking sounds suggestive of some slight flurry in the preparation of the creator's and contemplator's morning coffee. Probably during one of the "mürrisch" passages he has let her know his tastes in the matter.

Here, Strauss allows his humour free play in the inter-weaving of these subjects for some time before a trembling and thrilling of the strings, given pianissimo, preludes the advent of the child; but with the child theme stealing in mysteriously on the oboe d'amore the whole spirit of the music deepens, and the real tenderness of the composer's main idea suddenly makes the hearts of his audience vibrate.

This glimpse of emotion is very quickly concealed in a series of wild and, to an untutored brain, apparently discordant passages, during which any one who cared to repeat the Frenchman's experiment and guess with bandaged eyes at their meaning, might make surmises equally wide of the mark. The whole of the immense orchestra is called into movement. Trumpets blare, the wood-wind screams, mad scales rush up and down the strings—pictures are called into being of a stormy night on some witches' heath, where infuriated demons struggle for the possession of a human soul. Let us take off the bandages; in other words, let us read the explanatory notes in our programme. We are told it means "the energetic protest of a child when first brought into contact with the alien element of cold water." In point of fact it is "Baby's Bath." Nature viewed through a temperament again.

The limits of this article forbid us to follow the whole symphony in detail. Little tumbling prancing feet dance us sweetly through the Scherzo which opens the second section, and some joyous and thrilling passages invite our sympathy with the "Parents' Happiness" and the "Child at Play." A double fugue follows, descriptive of amicable dispute between husband and wife; then comes what is known in the nursery as "sleepy-time." Herr Strauss's sand-man apparently pelts the orchestral child with stones, slates and other large and spiky things of the same nature. This drastic treatment has, however, a happily soporific effect, for a charming lullaby tells us that the frisky juvenile will soon fall asleep, which he does just as seven o'clock strikes on the glockenspiel.

The third section gives us the "Schaffen und Schauen" episode, and a "Love scene" bringing in the wife prominently, and ending with passages entitled "Dreams and Cares," in which the child theme appears again. The glockenspiel repeats the hour—seven A.M. this time—and the fourth and final section introduces a double fugue entitled "Waking and Merry Dispute," after which comes the "Joyful Conclusion."

CORRESPONDENCE

2 Hawkwood Villas, Chingford,

March 13, 1905.

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY.

DEAR SIR,—In Dr. C. W. Saleeby's interesting article on "The Limits of Human Knowledge," in last week's ACADEMY (March 11) he writes in the last paragraph but one: "For if the Mystic and Realist can agree that Reality is one, so certainly will the Idealist; and he too will regard It as Uncreated and Eternal, though he may not go so far with the Athanasian Creed as to admit that It is Incomprehensible." To avoid a frequent misunderstanding, it may be desirable to mention that the word translated "incomprehensible" in the Athanasian Creed is in the original Latin "immensus," meaning infinite rather than inconceivable, a term, therefore, which is quite consistent with the belief that Reality is intelligible as well as Intelligent.—Yours faithfully, R. BRUCE BOSWELL.

54 Drayton Park, Highbury, N.

March 11, 1904.

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY.

DEAR SIR,—The small 4to volume noticed in the ACADEMY as by John Carion, is catalogued in the British Museum under "Johann," it being from the German, and has several points of interest. Its author, Johann Carion, was born in 1499, and died in 1537; his Chronica appeared first at Wittenberg in 1532, and is strongly Protestant: an edition, printed in France, having additions by Melanchthon, Luther's colleague and reviser.

The English version, in three books, is unequally divided; book one, treating of primitive times, is restricted to twelve pages; book two extends to the 87th folio, and book three ends at folio 279; with a chronological index defining events from 1532 to 1550, the date of issue: "never afore prynted in Englysh"; and it is dedicated to King Edward VI., who died in 1553; it would not circulate under Philip and Mary, except by stealth, nor has it ever been re-issued in English.

In 1532 Sir Thomas More resigned his office on the question of King Henry's divorce; and, taken in connection with Shakespeare, the strong religious bearing of the "Chronicles" reminds us that the poet's father remained a Catholic through life; while the son's true sentiments on religion form a subject of controversy, being non-committal. Hereon be it noted that the Wriothesleys were Catholics; the second Earl of Southampton having suffered severely on that account; and his widow was concerned in aiding and secreting certain priests, so involving the poet's friend, Henry, third Earl, in suspicion.

The writing ascribed to Shakespeare will be scanned with great interest; and, it is to be hoped, will be issued in facsimile.

In the "Sonnets" we find references to interchange of books between poet and patron.—Yours, &c. A. HALL.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

WITH the current issue of the ACADEMY a change is made in the form of this page. The awarding of weekly prizes is abandoned, and it is hoped that this may assist in the raising of the standard of the Queries and Answers submitted by correspondents. Space will readily be found for really interesting notes, questions and answers, but queries and quotations which may easily be looked up in any reference library will be excluded. Trite questions on etymology and debatable emendations or elucidations of Shakespeare are also undesirable. It is hoped that by this change greater interest may be found by the general reader, and more service rendered to the student and scholar.

ELDER.—The Life of Judas in MS. Harl. 2277, as printed by Dr. Furnivall, merely asserts that Judas hanged himself "upon a tree," i.e., a tree; but in the fourteenth century it was settled that it was an elder-tree, as mentioned in Piers Plowman, B-text, l. 68; on which see my note. Of course, the tree existed in Palestine; for that veracious person, Sir John Mandeville, in his "Voyage," chap. viii., expressly says that even in his own time the very tree in question still existed, and was to be seen near the pool of Siloam!—Walter W. Skeat.

M. AND N. TEMP. EDWARD VI.—The omission of M and N is a common form of abbreviation in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It is usually indicated by a tilde (~), which was originally a small "n" over the preceding letter. In printing the tilde is sometimes simplified into a straight line. Abbreviations of this kind are frequent in inscriptions and epitaphs, where the masons have evidently found the line too long for the width of the stone—either the letter itself is squeezed in above the line, or a sign is put to represent it. Examples:

"Off yo charite py for . . . 8 who soull ihū have mcy."
(Sixteenth century brass, Friston, Sussex.)

"Well couth he nūbers and well mesur'd land,
Thus doth he now that groūd whereon you stand."

(Cloisters, Westminster, 1621.)
"Hur Stroks are deadly com they soon or late."
(Stratford-on-Avon, 1699.)

The inscriptions never seem to have been spaced out beforehand, but to have been worked at in the most haphazard manner. In printing, abbreviation may have been a question of economy.—Sheila Jamieson (Cheltenham).

MURTI.—The right book to consult, for Anglo-Indian terms, is Colonel Yule's "Hobson Jobson," the second edition of which has lately appeared. A mufti is, properly, an expounder of the Mahometan law; whence, by some obscure transition, arose the phrase in mufti for "in plain clothes." Probably a mere joke, for, of course, a true mufti could never appear in military attire.—Walter W. Skeat.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

Peacock, Netta. Little Books on Art. Millet. Methuen, 2s. 6d. net.
Old Houses in Edinburgh. Drawn by Bruce J. Home. Part II. 1s. net.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

Bartholomew Sastrou, being the Memoirs of a German Burgomaster. Translated by Albert D. Vandam. Introduction by Herbert A. L. Fisher, M.A. Constable, 2s. 6d. net.
 Marzials, Sir Frederick. Browning. Bell, 1s. net.

BIOGRAPHY.

Hamilton, Dom Adam. The Angel of Syon. The Life and Martyrdom of Blessed Richard Reynolds, Bridgetine Monk of Syon, Martyred at Tyburn, May 4, 1535. Sands, 3s. 6d. net. (See p. 273.)
 Sichel, Edith. Catherine de' Medici and the French Reformation. Constable, 15s. net.

CLASSICAL.

Cope, Alfred Davies. On a Recently Discovered Fragment of Juvenal. Blackwell, 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

Landelle, De la. Une Haine à bord. Edited by R. E. A. Chessex. (Oxford Modern French Series.) Clarendon Press, 3s.
 Anastassiou, Nicolaos. (Greek Modern Self-taught) with phonetic pronunciation (Thimm's System) containing Vocabularies—Idiomatic Phrases and Dialogues—Elementary Grammar—Commercial, Trading, Archaeological and Religious Terms—Travel Talk—Photography—Amusements, &c., &c. Marlborough, 2s.

FICTION.

Farjeon, B. L. The Clairvoyante. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Wilson, Harry Leon. The Seeker. Heinemann, 6s.
 Colvill, Helen Hester ("Katharine Wyld"). The Stepping Stone. Constable, 6s.
 Cleeve, Lucas. Mademoiselle Nellie. Long, 6s.
 Sergeant, Adeline. Beneath the Veil. Long, 6d.
 Dawson, A. J. The Fortunes of Farthings. Harper, 6s.
 Crawshaw, Arthur. My Turkish Bride. Harper, 6s.
 Pease, Mrs. H. H. The Unequal Yoke: A Study in Temperaments. Rivers, 6s.
 Tolstoy, Count Leo N. War and Peace. Vols. V. to VIII. of the Complete Works of Count Tolstoy. Translated from the original Russian, and edited by Leo Wiener. Dent, 3s. 6d. net. each.
 Wintle, Gilbert. Strange Partners. Ward, Lock, 6s.
 Wilson-Barrett, Alfred. The Silver Pin. Ward, Lock, 6s.
 Anteros. Gwen. Drane, 3s. 6d.
 Sergeant, Adeline. The Sixth Sense. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Marshall, Edward. The Middle Wall. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Keary, C. F. Bloomsbury. Nutt, 6s. (See p. 281.)
 Champion de Crespigny, Mrs. Philip. The Rose Brocade. Nash, 6s.

HISTORICAL.

Müller, Kurt F. Der Leichenwagen Alexanders des Grossen. Beiträge zur Kunstgeschichte xxxi. (Leipzig.) Seemann, 2 m. 50 pf.
 Richmond, W. R. The Story of Somersetshire. Wake & Dean, 2s. 6d.
 Bradley, A. G. The Fight with France for North America. Constable, 3s. 6d. net.
The Kohl Collection (now in the Library of Congress) of Maps Relating to America, by Justin Winsor, with Index by Philip Lee Phillips. Government Printing Office, Washington.
List of the Vernon-Wagner Manuscripts in the Library of Congress, compiled under the direction of Worthington Chauncey Ford. Government Printing Office, Washington.
List of References on the United States Consular Service, with Appendix on Consular systems in Foreign Countries, compiled under the direction of Appelon Prentiss Clark Griffin. Government Printing Office, Washington.
 Jaggard, William. Liverpool Literature. A descriptive Bibliography of old Deeds, Codices, Maps, &c., tending to illustrate the History and Antiquities of Liverpool, &c., Liverpool: The Shakespeare Press.

HISTORY.

Eliot, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., late H.M. Commissioner for the Protectorate. The East Africa Protectorate. Arnold, 15s. net.
 MacLagan, Robert Craig. The Perth Incident of 1396 from a Folk-lore Point of View. Blackwood, 5s. net.

IMPERIALISM.

Reich, Emil. Imperialism, its Prices; its Vocation. Hutchinson. (Introduction—Principles obtained from the Study of General History—Application of Principles to British Imperialism.)

LITERATURE.

Paterson, William Romaine. (Benjamin Swift.) Life's Questionings. A book of experience. Methuen, 3s. 6d. net. (See p. .)
Publications of the Modern Language Association of America. Edited by Charles H. Grandgent. Vol. XX. No. 1. New Series, Vol. XIII. No. 1. March, 1905.
 Brunot, Ferdinand. Histoire de la Langue Française. Tome I. De l'époque latine à la Renaissance. Paris: Colin, 15 fr.

LITERARY.

Helm, W. H. Aspects of Balzac. Nash, 3s. 6d. net. (See p. 268.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

Hayden, Eleanor G. Travels Round our Village. Constable, 3s. 6d. net.

MYTHOLOGY.

Bloomfield, Maurice. Cerberus, the Dog of Hades. The History of an Idea. Chicago: The Open Court Publishing Co. London: Kegan Paul.

NATURAL HISTORY.

The Fauna of British India, including Ceylon and Burma. Published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council. Edited by W. T. Blandford. Butterflies. Vol. I. by Lieut.-Colonel C. T. Bingham. Taylor & Francis.
 Westell, W. Percival. British Bird Life, being popular sketches of every species of bird now regularly nesting in the British Isles, with an Introduction by the Rt. Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell. Unwin, 5s.
 Beddard, Frank E. Natural History in Zoological Gardens, being some account of vertebrated animals, with special reference to those usually to be seen in the Zoological Society's Gardens in London and similar Institutions. Constable, 6s. net.

NAVAL.

Cowie, Archibald Greig. The Sea Services of the Empire as Fields for Employment, with Forewords by Frederick, first Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, and Vice-Admiral D. H. Bosanquet, R.N. Treherne, 3s. 6d. net.

PAMPHLETS.

The Pekin Syndicate: Showing its Present Position and Prospects. Mathieson, 6d.
 Kempster, John. The Perversion of Justice by the Criminal Department of the State, as disclosed by the Beck Inquiry. "Police Review" Office.

POETRY.

Les Sonnets Portugais d'Elisabeth Barrett Browning, traduits en sonnets français avec notice, texte anglais, commentaire et notes par Fernand Henry. Librairie Orientale et Américaine. Paris: Guilmoto.
 Chevenet, Gabriel. Douleur et Volupté. Paris: Sansot, 3 fr.
The Works of Heinrich Heine. Vol. XI. Germany: Romancero, Books I. and II. translated by Margaret Armour. Heinemann, 5s.
 Kirby, Margaret. From East and West. Tokyo: Kyo Bun Kwan.
 Gibson, Elizabeth. Love's Fugitives. Elkin Mathews (Vigo Cabinet Series), 1s.

POLITICAL.

Peel, the Hon. George. The Friends of England. Murray, 12s. (See p. 270.)

REPRINTS AND NEW EDITIONS.

Methuen's Standard Library, edited by Sidney Lee.
 The English Works of Francis Bacon, Vol. I. The Essays or Counsels Civil and Moral, and The New Atlantis of Francis Lord Verulam, Viscount St. Alban. 6d. net.
 The Works of Jane Austen, Vol. I. Sense and Sensibility. 6d. net.
 Gibbon, Edward. The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. Vol. I. Methuen, 1s. net.
 The Works of William Shakespeare, Vol. I. The Tempest, The Two Gentlemen of Verona, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Measure for Measure, The Comedy of Errors. 1s. net.
The Meditations of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, translated by R. Graves, M.A. 1s. net.
 Bunyan, John. The Pilgrim's Progress. 1s. net.
 Gissing, George. By the Ionian Sea. New and cheaper edition. Chapman & Hall, 6s.
 Marshall, Emma. Penshurst Castle. Seeley, 6d.
Early Poems of Tennyson, with an Introduction by Arthur Waugh. Heinemann, Favourite Classics, 6d. net.
 Tennyson. The Princess, with an Introduction by Arthur Waugh. Heinemann, Favourite Classics, 6d. net.
 Wright, John. The Home Mechanic, or how to put things right oneself. Murray, 6s. net.
 Hobbes, John Oliver. Some Emotions and a Moral, and the Sinner's Comedy. Unwin, 1s. net.
 Eve, H. W. The Teaching of Modern Languages. Nutt. (Reprinted from "National Education—a Symposium.")
 Salt, Henry S. Animals' Rights considered in relation to Social Progress. Fifield, 6d. net.
 Carpenter, Edward. Towards Democracy; complete edition in four parts. Swan, Sonnenschein, 3s. 6d. net.
 Bird, Isabella L. (Mrs. Bishop). The Hawaiian Archipelago: Six Months amongst the Palm Groves, Coral Reefs, and Volcanoes of the Sandwich Islands. Murray, Popular edition, 2s. 6d. net.
 Hamley, Gen. Sir Edward. The War in the Crimea. Cheap edition. Seeley, 6d. net.

SCIENCE.

McCleary, G. F. Infantile Mortality and Infants' Milk Depôts. King, 6s. net.

SOCIOLOGY.

Kennedy, Bart. Slavery: Pictures from the Depths. Treherne, 6s.
 Sheard, Robert Harborough. The Child-Slaves of Britain. Hurst & Blackett, 6s.

THEOLOGY.

Byles, John. Spring Blossoms and Summer Fruit, or Sunday Morning Talks with the Children. Alston Rivers, 1s. 6d. net.
 Douglas, James. The Man in the Pulpit. Methuen, 2s. 6d. net.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

Forrest, G. W. Cities of India, Past and Present. Constable, 5s. net.
 Steuart, Mary E. Everyday Life on a Ceylon Cocoa Estate. Drane, 6s.

WORKS OF REFERENCE

Indispensable alike in the Counting House, the Library, and the Study.

The Survey Gazetteer of the British Isles.

Edited by J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.S.E. With numerous Statistical Appendices and 64 Special Maps in Chromo-Lithography. Imperial 8vo, Cloth, 17s. 6d. net; half-morocco, 21s. net. The present work is based on the Census and the Ordnance Survey. It incorporates the substance of all the principal works on British Topography, Statistics, and Commerce; it deals with nearly 50,000 different places, and is the only up-to-date and complete Gazetteer of the British Isles. The series of new maps is quite an atlas in itself.

TEACHER'S TIMES.—"Teachers of Geography will find it of the utmost value."

RAPID REVIEW.—"An uncommonly good Gazetteer."

The 20th Century Citizen's Atlas.

Containing 136 Maps and Plans, Index, &c. &c. Price, 21s. net, cloth; or 25s. net, bound in half-morocco.

*° For a Complete Library Atlas this is the cheapest in England.

The International Student's Atlas.

Containing 105 Maps, with Index, &c. &c. Price, 6s. net. The most comprehensive Educational Atlas in this country.

The Handy Shilling Atlas of the World.

Containing 120 pages of Fully Coloured Maps, by J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, and a Gazetteer with 10,000 entries. Size 6 ins. by 4 ins., cloth, 1s. net.

The Handy Atlas of the British Empire.

By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.S.E. A series of 120 Maps and Plans illustrating the Geography of the Colonies, with Statistical Notes and Tables. Cloth, 1s. net; limp lambskin, 2s. net.

The Handy Touring Atlas of the British Isles.

By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. Being the Ordnance Survey of Great Britain and Ireland in miniature, contained in 120 Coloured Maps. Reduced by permission from the Ordnance Survey. Size, 6 ins. by 4 ins. Cloth, 1s. net; limp lambskin, 2s. net.

NEWNES' THIN PAPER CLASSICS.

Limp Lambskin, 3s. 6d. net; Limp Cloth, 3s. net per volume.

Volumes small enough for the pocket (6½ ins. by 4 ins. and ¾ ins. thick) yet large enough for the bookshelf. Printed in large type on thin but thoroughly opaque paper, and in a dainty binding.

Mrs. Browning's Poems. 2 vols.
Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson. 2 vols.
Hawthorn's New England Romances.
Walter Savage Landor's Shorter Works.
Horace Walpole's Letters.
Rossetti's Early Italian Poets.
Swift's Journal to Stella.
Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini.
Milton's Poems.
Coleridge's Poems.
Shelley's Poems.
Tennyson's Poems.
Don Quixote.
Evelyn's Diary.
The Vision of Dante.
Bacon's Works.
Marco Polo's Travels.
Shakespeare. 3 vols.

Chapman's Homer's Iliads.
Chapman's Homer's Odysseys.
Burns' Poems.
Poems of Wordsworth.
Keats' Poems.
Pepys' Diary.
Poe's Tales.
Lamb's Works.
Peacock's Novels.
Ingoldsby Legends.
Captain Cook's Voyages.
Ben Jonson's Plays and Poems. [Shortly].
Miscellaneous Works of Oliver Goldsmith.
Mungo Park's Travels.
Herrick's Poems.
The Novels of Lawrence Sterne.
Plays and Poems of Christopher Marlowe.
The Fairie Queen, by Edmund Spenser. 2 vols.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"The 'Thin Paper Classics' is keeping well ahead of everything else we know of in its own particular line. The selection of works for it has never yet descended in standard from the highest; and yet it is as various and comprehensive as any reasonable mind could wish."

NEWNES' ART LIBRARY.

Each Volume contains about sixty-four full pages in monochrome, and a Frontispiece in photogravure. These are in many cases made from works which have not previously been reproduced. Each volume also contains a list of the Principal works of the Artist. 3s. 6d. net.

Botticelli.

By RICHARD DAVEY.

Sir Joshua Reynolds.

By A. L. BALDRY.

Constable's Sketches

By Sir JAMES D. LINTON, R.I.

Velasquez.

By A. L. BALDRY.

Gozzoli.

By HUGH STOKES.

Raphael.

By EDGUMBE STALEY.

Van Dyck.

By HUGH STOKES.

G. F. Watts.

By Dr. R. PANTINI.

Tintoretto.

By Mrs. ARTHUR BELL.

Paola Veronese.

By Mrs. ARTHUR BELL.

Burne-Jones.

By MALCOLM BELL.

Puvis de Chavannes.

By ARSÈNE ALEXANDRE. [Shortly].

Titian.

By MALCOLM BELL. [Shortly].

Filippino Lippi.

By P. J. KONODY. [Shortly].

Rossetti.

By ERNEST RADFORD. [Shortly].

STUDIO.—"Messrs. Newnes' now celebrated series devoted to the Great Masters . . . excellently reproduced, and apparently considerable trouble has been taken to secure reproductions of some of the less known and least accessible of the painter's chief works."

THE WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER - Improved No. 2.Special Advantages.

VISIBLE WRITING.	The WILLIAMS was the Pioneer in Visible Writing, and is still the leader and best exponent of this important feature. The idea once ridiculed and argued is now recognised as of great value; there can be no argument against it - 'Seeing is believing.'
BEAUTY OF WORK.	This feature sells hundreds of machines to people who are dissatisfied with smudgy ribbon work after seeing the clean-cut typing of the Williams.
COLOUR TYPING. RULING.	Letters, words or lines in Red, Blue, Green, etc. Vertical or horizontal lines can be ruled in different colours.
WRITING ON LINES.	The platen revolves freely and may be adjusted by the platen knob for typing on ruled lines or any part of the paper.
DUPLICATE COPIES.	Carbon and Stencil Duplicating require no more effort than ordinary typing. Originals for lithographic fac-similes of Hektograph copies may be typed with Williams Special Inks.
LIGHT RUNNING.	Ball bearings at all points ensure light running carriage. There are no slow keys and no heavy ones.
LIGHT TOUCH.	The touch is light, uniform and elastic, adapted for high speed and all day work.
KEYBOARD.	Models 2 and 3 Williams Typewriters have 28 keys with double shift, writing 84 characters, and can be fitted with accents for foreign languages. Keyboard plans on application.
CARRIAGE LOCKS.	Easily adjusted screw bolts at either end of carriage lock all moveable parts, so that the machine may be safely shipped.
GUARANTEE.	These machines are guaranteed against mechanical imperfections and will be carefully looked after by our Branches and Agents.
POPULAR PRICE.	The improved No. 2 Williams embraces all these advantages and is a high grade machine in every respect. We claim that it is the best double shift key machine irrespective of price. We are now offering it in the United Kingdom under the name of 'ACADEMY MODEL' at the following prices:— No. 2 F'cap size formerly sold at £21 now £12 12 0 cash No. 3 Brief „ „ „ „ 23 „ 14 14 0 „
12/6 PER MONTH.	We also offer these machines by deferred payments— 25/- on delivery and 12/6 per month until the machine is paid for. This figures 5d. a day covering a period of about two years. Apply at any of our Depots for full details, or write for catalogue.

WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER COMPANY.WILLIAMS No. 2*ACADEMY MODEL.*LONDON

- -

57 Holborn Viaduct

ABERDEEN - 115 Union Street	EXETER - 31 Queen Street	MANCHESTER - 267 Deansgate
BELFAST - 71 Ann Street	GLASGOW - 89 Bothwell St.	MIDDLESBROUGH - Royal Exchange
BIRMINGHAM - 28 High Street	LEEDS - 3 Park Lane	NEWCASTLE - 21 Collingwood St.
BURNLEY - 9 Grimshaw Street	LEICESTER - 60-64 Halford St.	NOTTINGHAM - Prudential Bldgs.
CARDIFF - 8 St. John's Square	LEIGH - 64 Bond Street	PORTSMOUTH - 154 Queen Street
DUBLIN - 5 Upper Ormond Quay	LIVERPOOL -	SHEFFIELD - 72 Queen Street
EDINBURGH - 19 Shandwick Place		SOUTHAMPTON - 12 Portland Street

SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

THROUGH ISLE AND EMPIRE

By VICOMTE R. D'HUMIÈRES

With a Prefatory Letter by RUDYARD KIPLING 6s.

"We do not hesitate to pronounce this book one of the most notable that has appeared in the past quarter of a century. . . . It should find a place in every Englishman's library."—Daily Telegraph.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF HEINRICH HEINE

Vol. III. Germany—Romancero (BOOKS I. & II.) 5s.

Translated by MARGARET ARMOUR

Already Published

Vol. I. The Book of Songs.

Vol. II. New Poems and Atta Troll.

A BELLE OF THE FIFTIES

Memoirs of Mrs. Clay, of Alabama, covering social and political life in Washington and the South 1853-66

Edited by ADA STERLING

With many Contemporary Portraits. 10s. 6d. net

THE COUNTRY DAY BY DAY

By E. KAY ROBINSON

With 24 Illustrations. 6s.

"The best of writers on Nature."—Athenæum.

"An exquisite calendar of Nature."—Daily Mail.

FRENCH PROFILES

Studies in the Literature of France

By EDMUND GOSSE

Buckram, 7s. 6d. Second Impression

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A New Novel by MARIE VAN VORST
AMANDA OF THE MILL

This story deals with the conditions under which mill girls work. The authoress knows her subject thoroughly, and has written a most interesting and powerful book.

A New Novel by M. HAMILTON
CUT LAURELS

The story of a wife's devotion to her husband, who returns to her after eighteen years' captivity, broken in spirit and an outcast.

THE PRODIGAL SON	Hall Caine
AN ACT IN A BACKWATER	E. F. Benson
NANCY STAIR	Elinor M. Lane
THE CLANSMAN	Thomas Dixon, Jr.
THE SEEKER	H. Leon Wilson

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, W.C.

Smith, Elder and Co.'s List

MRS. WARD'S NEW NOVEL SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A superb book, full of colour and stimulus, noble in its elevation, sweeping in its current of narrative, vibrating with all that the heart cares for—an achievement possible only to the resource and concentration of the most brilliant powers."

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE

By MRS. HUMPHRY WARD

With Illustrations by ALBERT STERNER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"The idea is admirably conceived and well worked out. . . . It is a pleasure in these days of rapid and slovenly writing to come across a book which is so able and conscientious in its workmanship, so well planned and so carefully thought out."

ACADEMY.—"The story is one of the best that Mrs. Humphry Ward has written. . . . Her study of the girl is acute and in every way excellent. She has laid bare the feminine mind with a precision that is almost scientific."

ON MARCH 22

With 20 Full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE STORY OF AN INDIAN UPLAND.

By F. B. BRADLEY-BIRT, F.R.G.S., I.C.S.

With an Introduction by the Hon. H. H. RISLEY, C.S.I., C.I.E.,
Home Secretary to the Government of India.

ON MARCH 28

With a Portrait Frontispiece. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

TRACKS OF A ROLLING STONE.

By the Honble. HENRY J. COKE.

Author of "A Ride Over the Rocky Mountains," "Creeds of the Day," &c.

SPRING IN A SHROPSHIRE ABBEY! By Lady CATHERINE

MILNES GASKELL, Author of "The New Cinderella," and "Old Shropshire Life." [Shortly.]

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations. Small demy 8vo, 9s. net.

TO LHASSA AT LAST. By POWELL MILLINGTON, Author of

"In Cantonments," &c. SECOND EDITION. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.—"Major Millington has accomplished a difficult task with much success. . . . He has aimed at producing a light-hearted, slangy chronicle of the road. His jokes are nearly always good, and they are very numerous."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF TWO POPULAR BOOKS.

SHORTLY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE "KOROSKO." By A. CONAN

DOYLE. With 40 Full-page Illustrations.

DAILY NEWS.—"A fine story, the interest of which arrests the reader's attention at the start, and holds it to the close."

THE GREEN FLAG, and Other Stories of War and Sport:

By A. CONAN DOYLE. With a Frontispiece.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The battle picture is perfect of its kind. Altogether the volume is admirable."

A VAGRANT ENGLISHWOMAN. By CATHERINE I. DODD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[On March 22.]

THE MARQUIS'S EYE. By G. F. BRADBURY, Author of

"Joshua Newings, or the Love Bacillus." Crown 8vo, 6s.

[In the Press.]

PETER'S MOTHER.

By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE.

FOURTH IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

WORLD.—"Mrs. Henry de la Pasture goes up still higher on the roll of women writers worth reading in virtue of her latest work. 'PETER'S MOTHER' is a really fine book as fiction and as literature."

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

The "Country Life" Library

PREPARING FOR PUBLICATION

To be issued in Two Volumes, PRICE THREE GUINEAS Net the Two Volumes. A sumptuous work, handsomely bound in cloth, containing about 300 plates

Being a Series of Illustrations from Photographs of the most Famous Examples of

THE GARDENS OF ITALY

BY

CHARLES LATHAM

Descriptive Text by E. March Phillips

Dedicated by Special Permission to his MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY

GEORGE NEWNES, LIMITED

New and Forthcoming Books. Spring 1905

Country Life Library.

THE GARDENS OF ITALY. By C. LATHAM. 2 Vols., £3 3s. net.

Country Life Library of Sport.

BIG GAME SHOOTING. 2 Vols. 25s. net.

POLO. 12s. 6d. net.

Newnes' Library of the Applied Arts. 7s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH EMBROIDERY. A. F. KENDRICK.

SHEFFIELD PLATE B. WYLLIE.

ENGLISH TABLE GLASS. PERCY BATE.

FRENCH POTTERY AND PORCELAIN. HENRI FRANTZ

ENGLISH PEWTER. MALCOLM BELL.

Drawings of Great Masters. 7s. 6d. net.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. T. MARTIN WOOD.

REMBRANDT. MALCOLM BELL.

DAVID COX. T. MARTIN WOOD.

In preparation, uniform with the above :

DRAWINGS BY SIR E. J. POYNTER, P.R.A.

LATER PEEPS AT PARLIAMENT. H. W. LUCY. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

C. B. FRY'S MAGAZINE, Vol. 2, Oct. 1904-March 1905. 6s. net.

IMPERIAL JAPAN. GEORGE WILLIAM KNOX. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE RETURN OF SHERLOCK HOLMES. A. CONAN DOYLE. Crown 8vo. Illustrated. 6s.

WIDE WORLD MAGAZINE, Vol. 14. Oct. 1904-March 1905. 6s. 6d.

THE OUTDOOR HANDY BOOK ("Library of Recreations"). 6s. net.

CAPTAIN, Vol. 12. Oct. 1904-March 1905. 6s.

Our Empire Series. 3s. 6d. net.

CANADIAN LIFE IN TOWN AND COUNTRY. H. J. MORGAN.

AUSTRALIAN LIFE IN TOWN AND COUNTRY. E. C. BULEY.

NEW ZEALAND LIFE IN TOWN AND COUNTRY. R. A. LONGHNAN.

Newnes' Art Library. 3s. 6d. net.

THE EARLY WORK OF TITIAN. MALCOLM BELL.

FILIPPINO LIPPI. P. J. KONODY.

PUVIS DE CHAVANNES. ARSÈNE ALEXANDRE.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. ERNEST RADFORD.

FRA ANGELICO. EDGCUMBE STALEY.

THE SPORTSMAN'S YEAR-BOOK. Edited by A. WALLIS MYERS. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Newnes' Thin Paper Classics. Leather, 3s. 6d. net; cloth, 3s. net.

MUNGO PARK'S TRAVELS.

PLAYS AND POEMS OF CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE.

MISCELLANEOUS WORKS OF OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

THE FAERIE QUEEN. By EDMUND SPENSER. 2 vols.

THE NOVELS OF LAURENCE STERNE.

HERRICK'S POEMS.

Newnes' Pocket Classics. Leather, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

THE POEMS OF THOMAS GRAY AND WILLIAM COLLINS.

SONGS FROM THE DRAMATISTS.

POEMS OF MICHAEL DRAYTON.

A New Series of Religious Classics.

NEWNES' LIBRARY OF DEVOTION.

Uniform with Newnes' Pocket Classics. 2s. 6d. net, leather; 2s. net, cloth. Two Volumes will be published before Easter.

LYRA GERMANICA.

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST. By THOMAS À KEMPIS.

HOW WE RECOVERED THE ASHES. P. F. WARNER. With an Introduction by C. B. FRY. Cheap Edition. 1s. net.

REPTILE LIFE. W. P. PYCRAFT ("Library of Useful Stories"). 1s.

Newnes' Sixpenny Copyright Novels (Illustrated).

THE GOD AND THE CZAR. J. E. MUDDOCK. 6d.

THE LADY PARAMOUNT. HENRY HARLAND. 6d.

THE DEAL WITH THE DEVIL. EDEN PHILLPOTTS. 6d.

THE WORLDLINGS. LEONARD MERRICK. 6d.

THE SOWERS. H. S. MERRIMAN. 6d.

ELEANOR. Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD. 6d.

The "Country Life" Library

Roses for English Gardens.

By GERTRUDE JEKYLL and EDWARD MAWLEY, Hon.
Secretary of the National Rose Society. Illustrated with 190 full-page Plates. 12s. 6d. net.

Daily Chronicle.—"All the roses of England, blossoming in a counterfeit summer of black and white, seem to be gathered together into Miss JEKYLL's charming book. The pictures are really pleasant to look at; near or far, a rose photographs quite as well as a beautiful face, and carries with it its own individual look. No one can fail to be captured by Miss JEKYLL's enthusiasm and fine discrimination."

Lilies for English Gardens.

Written and compiled by GERTRUDE JEKYLL. 8s. 6d. net.

Westminster Gazette.—"LILIES FOR ENGLISH GARDENS" is a volume in the 'Country Life' Library, and it is almost sufficiently high commendation to say that the book is worthy of the journal. Miss JEKYLL's aim has been to write and compile a book on Lilies which shall tell amateurs, in the plainest and simplest possible way, how most easily and successfully to grow the Lily—which, considering its great beauty, is not grown nearly so much as might be expected. We certainly think that in the future there will be less neglect of this flower, for after looking at some of the illustrations (all admirable and admirably produced), there will not be many garden owners who will be content to be Lilyless."

Wall and Water Gardens.

By GERTRUDE JEKYLL, Author of "Wood and Garden."

Containing instructions and hints on the Cultivation of suitable plants on Dry Walls, Rock Walls, in Streams, Marshpools, Lakes, Ponds, Tanks and Water Margins. With 133 full-page illustrations. Large 8vo, 186 pp., Buckram, 12s. 6d. net.

Times.—"WALL AND WATER GARDENS."—He who will consent to follow Miss JEKYLL aright will find that under her guidance the old walls, the stone steps, the rockeries, the ponds or streamlets of his garden will presently blossom with all kinds of flowers undreamed of, and become marvels of varied foliage. More than a hundred photographs help to enforce Miss JEKYLL's admirable lessons."

The Century Book of Gardening.

(SECOND EDITION)

Edited by E. T. COOK. A comprehensive Work for every Lover of the Garden. 624 pages, with about 600 illustrations.
21s. net.

Times.—"No department of gardening is neglected, and the illustrations of famous and beautiful gardens and of the many winsome achievements of the gardener's art are so numerous and attractive as to make the veriest cockney yearn to turn gardener."

Gardening for Beginners.

(THIRD EDITION)

A Handbook to the Garden. By E. T. COOK. 12s. 6d. net.

So great has been the success of this gardening book for beginners, that a third edition has been called for and is now ready. This work is for those who are about to begin gardening, nothing that will help the beginner over first difficulties being omitted.

About 100 diagrams will explain certain practical operations better than mere descriptions. There are also nearly 200 illustrations, prepared in the best style, of flowers, fruit, vegetables, and trees and shrubs.

Spectator.—"Full of information about both the useful and the ornamental, and as far as we have been able to test it, eminently practical. The beginner, by the way, will have gone a long way before he has assimilated the contents of this stout volume of nearly five hundred pages; but then also also cure, and the wider the choice that is offered by a volume of this kind the better."

Trees and Shrubs for English Gardens.

By E. T. COOK, Editor of "The Garden." 12s. 6d. net.

Gardener's Chronicle.—"A good book on trees and shrubs is a real want. Few books are more often inquired for, and until now we have had a difficulty in replying to our correspondents who have asked for information on the point. In the days of trashy gardening books, it is a pleasure to come across one which bears the stamp of original observation, judicious inference, and industrious research."

VOLS. I. AND II. NOW READY

Gardens Old and New.

(The Country House and its Garden Environment.) Over 450
Superb Illustrations in each volume, printed on treble thick Art Paper, portraying in a manner never before attempted the greatest and most interesting Gardens and Homes in England.
£2 2s. net each.

Birmingham Daily Post.—"One could not, if one would, overpraise the charm of this beautiful book. As an example of the beautiful in books, it is a long time since we chanced on anything so noteworthy as 'GARDENS OLD AND NEW.'"

The Fruit Garden.

By GEORGE BUNYARD and OWEN THOMAS. Price
21s. net. Now Ready. 507 Pages. Size 10½ by 7½ in.

"THE FRUIT GARDEN" gives full instructions for the culture of every fruit that is worth growing in Britain, either out-of-doors or under glass, and, in addition, contains chapters upon the Value of Fruit Trees as Flowering Trees, Whole Fruit Preservation, Tropical Fruits and How to Grow Them, the Construction of Fruit Houses, Fruit Trees in Pots, Injurious Diseases and Insects, Fruit Culture in America, France, and the Channel Islands, etc.

Review of "The Fruit Garden," from the R.H.S. Journal for May 1904.—"Without any doubt the best book of the sort yet published. There is a separate chapter for every kind of fruit, and each chapter is a book in itself—there is, in fact, everything that any one can need or wish for in order to succeed in fruit growing. The book simply teems with illustrations, diagrams, and outlines. The diagrams on pruning are particularly admirable; we cannot speak too highly of them, and from them any one should be able to teach himself to be an expert pruner. The book winds up with 100 pages of outline drawings, which should be a wonderful aid to identification."

The Field, February 27, 1904.—"Written by Experts . . . In all thirty chapters, and these contain practically all that is really essential for the reader to know as to the modern methods employed in the selection, culture, protection, and increase of trees, and the harvesting, storing and preserving of fruit as grown in the garden or fruit farms of to-day."

Sweet Violets and Pansies. and Violets from Mountain and Plain.

Written by several authorities, and Edited by E. T. COOK, Editor of "The Garden," Author of "Trees and Shrubs," etc. Price
3s. 6d. net.

The Book of British Ferns.

By CHAS. T. DRUERY, F.L.S., V.M.H., President of the British Fern Society. Price 3s. 6d. net.

St. James's Gazette.—"Has been most carefully done; no fewer than 700 choice varieties are described. The book is well and lucidly written and arranged; it is altogether beautifully got up. Mr. DRUERY has long been recognised as an authority on the subject."

WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY

Carnations and Pinks.

Written by Experts and Edited by E. T. COOK. Price 3s. 6d.
net.

SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS

MARCH 18, 1905.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN

- Carter (R. Radcliffe). The Pictures at Haughton Hall, Tarporley. With 26 Illustrations in Photogravure. cr. folio, net 84/0
- Wilcox (Dora). Verses from Maoriland . . . fcap. 8vo, net 2/6
- Euripides: The Trojan Women and The Electra. Translated into English Rhyming Verse by Prof. Gilbert Murray. . . . cr. 8vo, each net 2/0
- Foster (A. E. Manning). The Sensitive and other Essays fcap. 8vo, net 6/0
- Selous (Edmund). Bird-Life Glimpses . . . cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Ruskin Reprints for the Pocket. Giotto and his works in Padua; The Bible References; The Stones of Venice, Vols. I., II., and III.; The Poetry of Architecture 2/6, net 3/6 net 4/6
- The Library Edition of Ruskin. Edited by E. T. Cook and Alexander Wedderburn. Modern Painters, Vol. V., 1860; Unto this Last, Time and Tide, Munera Pulveris, and the Unpublished Dialogue on Gold, with other Writings on Political Economy; Sesame and Lilies, The Ethics of the Dust, and the Crown of Wild Olive . . . each vol., net 25/0

MR. H. R. ALLENSON

- Tauler's Life and Sermons. Translated by Miss Winkworth, with Charles Kingsley's Preface. . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
- Dole (Charles F.). The Religion of a Gentleman. . . cr. 8vo 3/6
- Millard (Benjamin A.). The Quest of the Infinite: or the Place of Reason and Mystery in Religious Experience cr. 8vo 3/6
- Thompson (W. Halliday), LL.D. Professor Huxley and Religion. (Gresham Lectures, Michaelmas Term, 1904) . . . cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- A Daily Message from Many Minds: Thoughts for the Quiet Hour from Fénelon, Jeremy Taylor, Wordsworth, Robertson, Phillips Brooks, Hawthorne, etc. 32mo, net 2/6
- Warschauer (J.), M.A., D.Phil. Jesus Saith: Studies in some "New Sayings" of Christ . . . cr. 8vo 2/6
- Humberstone (W. J.). The Cure of Care . . . cr. 8vo, net 1/6
- Atkin (F. W.). Bright and Brief Talks to Men: A series of twenty-one addresses . . . cr. 8vo 1/6
- Richards (Laura E.). The Golden Windows. Presentation Edition . . . cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Momerie (Alfred W.) M.A., D.Sc., LL.D. Immortality. New Edition. . . . cr. 8vo 3/6
- Carlyle. Heroes and Hero Worship. New Edition demy 32mo, net 2/0 net 1/6
- HEART AND LIFE SERIES (An entirely new series of artistic booklets):
- Robertson (F. W.) The Loneliness of Christ. fcap. 8vo, net 1/6
- Brooks (Bishop Phillips). An Easter Sermon fcap. 8vo, net 1/6
- Brooks (Bishop Phillips). The Purpose and Use of Comfort . . . fcap. 8vo, net 1/6
- Selection from Faber's Hymns . . . fcap. 8vo, net 1/6
- IXPENNY SERIES (Additional Volumes):
- Robertson (F. W.). Eleven Sermons: completing 1st series. . . . demy 8vo
- Carlyle. Heroes and Hero Worship . . . demy 8vo
- Robertson (F. W.). Ten Sermons. (New Edition) Momerie (A. W.) Belief in God. (New Edition)
- Child (Thomas). Root-Principles in Rational and Spiritual Things . . . demy 8vo 1/6

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD

- Eliot (Sir Charles), K.C.M.G. The East Africa Protectorate. With Illustrations and Map. . . demy 8vo, net 15/-
- Dent (Edward J.). Alessandro Scarlatti: His Life and Works. With Portrait . . . royal 8vo, net 12/6
- Candler (Edmund). The Unveiling of Lhasa. With Illustrations and Map . . . demy 8vo, net 15/-
- Durham (M. Edith). The Burden of the Balkans. With Illustrations and Map. . . demy 8vo net 14/-
- Gibbs (Philip). Facts and Ideas . . . cr. 8vo 3/6

Kenney-Herbert (Colonel). Commonsense Cookery

- Large cr. 8vo 7/6
- Weismann (Dr. August). The Evolution Theory. Translated by J. Arthur Thomson and Margaret Thomson. With many Illustrations. . . . two vols., royal 8vo net 32/-
- Birmingham (George A.). The Seething Pot. . . . cr. 8vo 6/-
- Wadia (P.A.). The Philosophers and the French Revolution . . . cr. 8vo 2/6
- Harvey (Charles H.). The Biology of British Politics cr. 8vo 2/6
- Sedgwick (Adam), M.A. The Student's Text-Book of Zoology. . . . demy 8vo 18/0
- Frances Power Cobbe's Autobiography. New Edition cr. 8vo 7/6

FICTION

- Wilson (M. F.). When the World Went Wry . . . 6/0
- St. Clair (William). Bendish . . . 6/0
- Tighe (Harry). A Queen of Unrest. . . . 6/0

MESSRS. BELL

- Bryan's Dictionary of Painters and Engravers. A new Edition, Revised and Enlarged Under the Supervision of George C. Williamson, Litt.D. With about 450 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates. In five vols. Vol. V. . . . net 21/0 and net 31/6
- Graves (Algernon), F.S.A. The Royal Academy of Arts. A Complete Dictionary of Contributors and their Work from its Foundation in 1769 to 1904. In seven volumes. Vol. I. . . . net 42/0
- The Wantage Collection. A Catalogue of Pictures in the Collection formed by Lord and Lady Wantage at 2 Onslow Gardens, London; Lockinge House, Berks; and at Overstone Park. . . . net 105/0 and net 210/0
- Way (T.R.) and Dennis (G. R.). The Art of James McNeill Whistler. An Appreciation. Third Edition. Illustrated . . . 8vo, net 6/0
- Berenson (Bernhard). Lorenzo Lotto. An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism. New and Cheaper Re-issue. Illustrated . . . small 4to, net 7/6
- Parnell (Colonel the Hon. Arthur) R.E. The War of the Succession in Spain During the Reign of Queen Anne, 1702-1711. New and Cheaper Re-issue demy 8vo, net 7/6
- Tod (A. H.), M.A. Charterhouse. Illustrated. Second Edition, Revised . . . net 3/6
- Dunbar (A. B. C.). A Dictionary of Saintly Women. In 2 Vols. Vol. I. . . . royal 8vo, net 12/6
- HISTORICAL LIBRARY:
- Carlyle's French Revolution. Edited by J. Holland Rose, Litt.D., three volumes. . . . each 5/0
- BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY:
- Swift's Prose Works. Edited by Temple Scott. Vol. VII. Historical and Political Tracts (Irish). With Portraits and Facsimiles of Title-pages. Vol. XI. Literary Essays, &c., including the Polite Conversation, Directions to Servants, &c. With Portrait and Facsimiles of Title-pages each 5/0
- Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare. With 24 Illustrations by Byam Shaw. . . . 3/6
- The Diary of Samuel Pepys. Transcribed from the Short-hand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. Mynors Bright, M.A. Edited, With Additions, by Henry B. Wheatley, F.S.A. In eight volumes . . . post 8vo, each net 5/0
- The Works of Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher. Variorum Edition. Edited by A. H. Bullen. In twelve volumes. Vols. I. and II. . . . 8vo, each net 10/6
- THE YORK LIBRARY:
- Coleridge's Table Talk and Omniana. Arranged and edited by T. Ashe, B.A. . . . net 2/0 and net 3/0
- Draper's History of the Intellectual Development of Europe. Two volumes . . . each net 2/0 and net 3/0
- Emerson's Works. A new edition in five volumes, with the Text edited and collated by George Sampson. . . . each net 2/0 and net 3/0

- Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, the Thoughts of. Translated by George Long, M.A. With an Essay on Marcus Aurelius by Matthew Arnold. net 2/0 and net 3/0
- Goethe's Faust. Translated by Anna Swanwick, LL.D. net 2/0 and net 3/0
- Jameson's Shakespeare's Heroines. Characteristics of Women: Moral, Poetical, and Historical. net 2/0 and net 3/0
- Pascal's Thoughts. Translated from the Text of M. Auguste Molinier by C. Kegan Paul. Third edition net 2/0 and net 3/0
- More's Utopia. With the Life of Sir Thomas More, by William Roper, and his Letters to Margaret Roper and others. Edited by George Sampson. net 2/0 and net 3/0
- MINIATURE SERIES OF GREAT WRITERS:
- Dennis (John). Johnson net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Marzials (Sir F. T.), C.B. Browning net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Wherry (A.). Defoe net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Williamson (Dr.). Milton net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Garnett (Dr.), C.B. Macaulay net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Buckland (E. Lang). Goldsmith net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Laing (Dr.). Scott net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Jerrold (Walter). Lamb net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Tuckwell (Rev. W.). Horace net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Marchant, (E. C.), M.A. Xenophon net 1/0 and net 2/0
- MINIATURE SERIES OF MUSICIANS:
- Antcliffe (Herbert). Brahms net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Oldmeadow (E. J.). Chopin net 1/0 and net 2/0
- Oldmeadow (E. J.). Schumann net 1/0 and net 2/0
- HANDBOOKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE:
- Snell (F. J.), M.A. The Age of Transition (Chaucer to Spenser). With an Introduction by Professor Hales, 2 volumes each net 3/6
- Luce (Morton). A Handbook to Shakespeare net 3/6
- CAMBRIDGE MATHEMATICAL SERIES:
- Tuckey (C. O.), M.A. Examples in Arithmetic cr. 8vo
- Stern (H. A.), M.A., and Topham (W. H.). The Elements of Practical Mathematics and Physical Measurements. 7/6
- Lodge (Alfred), M.A. Integral Calculus for Beginners A Key to Pendlebury's New School Arithmetic. Part II. cr. 8vo, net 7/6
- A Key to Borchardt and Perrott's new Trigonometry for Schools cr. 8vo
- A Key to Baker and Bourne's Elementary Algebra. In two parts cr. 8vo
- NEW EDITIONS
- Munro (H. A. J.), M.A. Criticisms and Elucidations of Catullus.
- Corpus Poetarum Latinorum, a se aliisque denuo recognitionem et brevi lectionum varietate instructorum, edidit Johannes Percival Postgate. Part V. Containing Martial, edited by J. D. Duff; Juvenal, by A. E. Housman; Nemesianus, by J. P. Postgate and Heinrich Schenkl net 9/0
- MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK
- Landor (A. Henry Savage). Tibet and Nepal. Containing 75 full-page illustrations (50 in colour) square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Goff (Col. and Mrs. R. C.). Florence and Some Tuscan Cities. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Rome. Painted by Alberto Pisa. Text by M. A. R. Tucker and Hope Malleon. Containing 70 full-page illustrations in colour square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Menpes (Mortimer), R.I., R.E., and Dorothy. Brittany. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Walker (Francis S.) R.H.A. and Mathew (Frank). Ireland. Containing 80 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Jungman (Nico and Beatrix). Norway. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Wyllie (W. L., A.R.A., and Mrs.) London to the North. Containing 60 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo (Edition de Luxe), net 42/0, net 20/0
- Marshall (Herbert M.) R.W.S. and Mitton (G. E.). The Scenery of London. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Fowler (Robert) R.I., and Thomas (Edward). Beautiful Wales. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Forrest (A. S.) and Henderson (John). The West Indies. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Cooper (A. Heaton) and Palmer (William T.). The English Lakes. Containing 75 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 20/0
- Menpes (Mortimer). Rembrandt demy 4to, net 12/6
- Smith (William) Junr., and Crockett (Rev. W. S.) Abbotford. Containing 20 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 7/6
- Bell (Arthur George and Mrs.). Nuremberg. Containing 20 full-page illustrations in colour. square demy 8vo, net 7/6
- (Earl W.) Hodgson. Trout Fishing. With a frontispiece by W. H. Rolfe, and a facsimile in colours of a model book of flies cr. 8vo, net 7/6
- Read (Carverth). The Metaphysics of Nature. demy 8vo, net 7/6
- Kitton (F. G.). The Dickens Country. Containing 50 full-page illustrations, mostly from photographs by T. W. Tyrrell. large cr. 8vo 6/0
- Melville (Lewis). The Thackeray Country. Containing 50 full-page illustrations from photographs specially taken for the book by C. W. Barnes Ward, and a map. large cr. 8vo 6/0
- Del Mar (Walter). Around the World through Japan. Containing 50 full-page illustrations. demy 8vo, net 1 2/6
- Lankester (E. Ray), M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. A Treatise on Zoology. Part V. "Mollusca." demy 8vo, net 15s. and net 12/6
- Ingram (John K.) LL.D. The Final Transition. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Peyton (William Wynne). The Three Greatest Forces in the World; and the Making of Western Civilisation. cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Raleigh (The late Alexander), D.D. Quiet Resting Places, and Other Sermons. New cheap edition cr. 8vo 1/6
- Harnack (Adolf). Christianity and History. Translated with the Author's sanction, by Thomas Bailey Saunders.
- Harnack (Adolf). The Apostles' Creed. Translated by the Rev. Stewart Means. Revised and edited by Thomas Bailey Saunders.
- Saunders (Thomas Bailey). Schopenhauer. Thoughts of a Free Thinker. In crown 8vo, /6 each
- THE SOHO EDITION OF DICKENS, SCOTT, THACKERAY; The Newcomes; The Virginians; Quentin Durward; St. Ronan's Well; Red Gauntlet; The Betrothed; The Talisman; Woodstock. Crown 8vo, 2/6 and 3/6 each.
- Crowther (F. Philpot). Liong-San, or the Mysterious Mountain. cr. 8vo, 1/6
- The "Council" Arithmetic for Schools. Scheme B.
- Finnemore (John). The Story of the English People. Illustrated small crown 8vo, 1/4
- A Biographical History Reader: Being selected Lives from the "History in Biography" Series. By B. A. Lees. Fully illustrated small cr. 8vo 2/6
- Mitton (G. E.) The "Council" History Readers: The Glory of London. Profusely illustrated in colour and black and white small cr. 8vo 1/6
- Finnemore (John). The "Council" Literary Readers. small cr. 8vo
- Kirkman (F. B.), B.A. (Oxon). Première Année de Français 2/0
- Nicklin (Rev. T.) M.A., Assistant Master at Rossall School. Old Testament History. Part III. From the death of Jehoshaphat. With maps and illustrations. small cr. 8vo 3/0
- MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS
- O. The Yellow War. cr. 8vo 6/-
- Lamb (Robert), M.A. Saints and Savages: The Story of Five Years in the New Hebrides. With Illustrations by Julian R. Ashton, Sydney, N.S.W. post 8vo 6/-
- James (Lieut.-Col. Walter). The Development of Tactics from 1740 to the Present Day. demy 8vo
- Callwell (Lieut.-Col. Charles E.), R.G.A. Military Operations and Maritime Preponderance. demy 8vo
- Micklethwait (St. John G.), M.A., B.C.L. The Licensing Act, 1904. net 2/6
- Strong (Archibald T.), M.A. Sonnets and Songs. cr. 8vo, net 5/-

- Dr. Momerie: His Life and Work. A Religious Biography.
By his Wife.....demy 8vo, net 12/6
- The Letters of Warren Hastings to his Wife. Edited by Sydney C. Grier.
- Flint (Robert), D.D. Studies on Theological, Biblical, and other Subjects.....cr. 8vo, net 7/6
- MODERN ENGLISH WRITERS SERIES:
- Browning, by Professor Herfordcr. 8vo 2/6
- Cross (J. W.) The Rake's Progress in Finance. cr. 8vo, net 2/-
- MacLagan (R. C.), M.D. The Perth Incident of 1396, from a folk-lore point of view.....demy 8vo, net 5/-
- Pitcairn (Constance). The History of the Five Pitcairns, with Transcripts from Old Charters.demy 8vo, net 42/-
- Synge (M. B.). The Story of the World. With Illustrations by E. M. Synge, A.R.E., and Maps. Two volumes.....each, net 3/6
- Synge (M. B.) The World's Childhood. In two books.
each 1/0
- Rankine (Rev. W. H.), B.D. The Heart of China. The Story of the China Mission of the Church of Scotland.
cr. 8vo 6/-

FICTION

- Uniform Edition of Neil Munro's Novels: John Splendid;
Children of Tempest; Shoes of Fortune; The Lost
Pibroch; Doom Castle; Gilian the Dreamer.each 3/6
- Miln (Louise Jordan). A Woman and her Talent....cr. 8vo 6/-
- Green (E. M.) Elizabeth Grey.....cr. 8vo 6/-

REPRINTS

- Burton (John Hill). History of Scotland, in eight volumes.....each, net 2/6
- Eliot (George). Scenes of Clerical Life. Pocket edition,
net 1/-
- The Forester: A practical treatise on the planting and tending of forest trees and the general management of woodlands. Rewritten and enlarged by John Nisbet, D.Cec.
- Stormonth's Dictionary of the English Language. New edition*net* 5/-

MESSRS. S. C. BROWN, LANGHAM & CO., LTD.

- de Laurennais (Félicité). Words of a Believer. Translated with an Introduction, by W. C. Hutchison.
1/6 and 1/0
- Garbett (Rev. C. F.) Can We Believe?.....2/6
- Payton (Rev. J. Watson). The Communion: An Altar
Manual on New Lines.....2/0
- Collett (Rev. E.) Narrow Windows; or, Little Glimpses of Heavenly Light. A Lenten Manual1/6
- Tugman (Rev. E.) Addresses to Women. As a Sister—
—a Sweetheart—a Spouse—a Mother—a Saint2/6
- Bourdillon (Rev. F.). Titus in Crete; or, Things which become Sound Doctrine. A Practical Exposition of some of the Relative Duties of Life, as taught by St.
Paul to Titus2/6
- Headlam (Rev. Stewart). Laws of Eternal Life. Faith and Freedom Series1/6
- Caulfield (Miss Sophia). The Voice of the Fathers. Introduction by Lord Viscount Halifax3/6
- Biggs (Rev. C. R. Davey), D.D. Lay Hold on Eternal Life. A Series of Addresses given to Children during a Parochial Mission1/6

FICTION

- Haslam (James). Handloom Weaver's Daughter.....6/0
- Dawe (Carlton). Lammas Grove.....6/0
- Wyndham (Horace). The King's Scarlet.....6/0
- Lucas (St. John). Aubrey Ellison.....6/0
- Bryant (Marguerite). Adventures of Lopis Dural6/0
- Swan (Myra). Ground Ivy.....6/0
- Arnold (Edwin Lester). Lieut. Gulliver Jones6/0
- Giberne (Agnes). Pride o' the Morning6/0
- Noble (E.). The Lady Navigators6/0
- Hueffer (Ford Maddox). The Benefactor6/0

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Twelve photogravure facsimiles of rare fifteenth century books printed in England and now in the University Library, Cambridge. Geoffrey Chaucer's Anelida and Arcite, from the unique copy of the Westminster edition of William Caxton (1477-8). 10/0 net. Augustini Dacti Scribe sup. Tullianis elegancijis et verbis exoticis in sua facundissima Rethorica incipit ornate libellus,

- from the unique copy printed at St. Albans (about 1479-80) by "The Schoolmaster Printer." 15/0 net.
- The Temple of glas, by John Lydgate, from the unique copy of the Westminster edition of William Caxton (1477-8). 12/6 net. Thomas Betson's Ryght Profitable treatyse (from St. Jerome, St. Bernard, Gerson, &c.) (1500), from the copy printed by Wynkyn de Worde in Caxton's House.
- The Jataka. Translated from the Pali by various hands.
Royal 8vo.
- Vol. V. Translated by H. T. Francis, M.A.net 12/6
- Vol. VI. Translated by E. B. Cowell, M.A., and
W. H. D. Rouse, Litt. D.net 12/6
- Arnold (E. Vernon), Litt. D. Vedic Metre in its Historical Development.
- Studia Sinaitica. No. 12. Forty facsimiles of dated Arabic MSS. Edited by Agnes Smith Lewis and Margaret Dunlop Gibson.
- St. John's Gospel. The Revised Version for Schools.
Edited by the Rev. Arthur Carr, M.A.
- Ottley (Rev. R. L.), M.A. History of the Religion of the Hebrews.
- An Eighth-Century Latin-Anglo-Saxon Glossary preserved in the Library of the University of Leiden (MS. Voss.
Lat. 4° 69). Edited by J. H. Ressler, M.A.
- Aristophanes. The Acharnians. Edited by C. E. Graves,
M.A.
- M. Tulli Ciceronis Tusculanarum Disputationum Libri
Quinque. A Revised Text with Introduction and Commentary and a Collation of numerous MSS.
Vol. I. by Thomas Wilson Dougan, M.A.
- Ridgeway (William), M.A. The Early Age of Greece.
Demy 8vo. Vol. II.
- An Introduction to Greek Epigraphy. Vol. II. The Inscriptions of Attica and Peloponnesus. Edited by E. S. Roberts, M.A., and E. A. Gardner, M.A.
- Sandys (Dr. J. E.). Harvard Lectures on the Revival of Learning.
- De Republica Anglorum. The maner of Governement or policie of the Realme of England, compiled by the Honorable Sir Thomas Smyth Knight, Doctor of both the lawes, and one of the principal Secretaries unto the two most worthy Princes, King Edward the sixt, and Queene Elizabeth, 1584. Edited by F. W.
Maitland, LL.D.
- Select Cases in Real Property Law. Edited by W. J.
Whittaker, M.A.
- Guide to the Preservation of Antiquities. Translated from the German of Dr. Rathgan by Dr. C. A. Auden.
- Metchnikoff (Elie). Immunity in Infectious Diseases.
Authorised English Translation by F. G. Binnie.
With Illustrations. Royal 8vo.
- The Fauna and Geography of the Maldive and Laccadive Archipelagoes. Being the Account of the Work carried on and of the Collections made by an Expedition during the years 1899 and 1900. Edited by J. Stanley Gardiner, M.A. Supplement I.
- Simpson (Dr. J. W.). The Plague.
- CAMBRIDGE BIOLOGICAL SERIES:
- Ridgeway (W.), M.A. The Origin and Influence of the Thorough-bred Horse.
- Seward (A. C.), M.A., F.R.S. Fossil Plants. A Manual for Students of Botany and Geology. Demy 8vo.
Vol. II.
- Willis (J. C.), M.A. The Morphology of Plants.
- Ward (H. Marshall), Sc.D., F.R.S. Trees. Vol. III.,
Inflorescences and Flowers*net* 4 6
- CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES:
- Le Strange (Guy). The Lands of the Eastern Caliphate.
- PITT PRESS SERIES:
- Caldos. Trafalgar. Edited by F. A. Kirkpatrick, M.A.
- Thucydides. Book VI. Edited by A. W. Spratt, M.A.
- CAMBRIDGE TYPE SERIES:
- Thomas Dekker's The Seven Deadly Sinnes of London
net 21 0
- CAMBRIDGE ENGLISH CLASSICS:
- Bunyan's Holy War and Mr. Badman. The text edited by the Rev. J. Brown, D.D.net 4 6
- George Crabbe's Early Poems. Edited by A. W. Ward, Litt. D., Master of Peterhouse.....net 4 6
- MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.
- MacDonnell (John de Courcy). King Leopold II. His Rule in Belgium and the Congo. With 48 Full-page Plates*net* 21 0

- Fraser (John Foster). Canada as it Is. With about 40 Full-Page Illustrations 6/0
- Auscher (E. S.). French Porcelain. Translated and Edited by William Burton. 24 Plates in Colours, and 48 in Black and White.....royal 8vo, net 30/0
- Treves (Sir Frederick), Bart. The Other Side of the Lantern. Illustratedmedium 8vo, net 12/0
- The Book of Photography: Practical, Theoretic, and Applied*. Edited by Paul N. Hasluck. With numerous Illustrations and Working Drawings 10/6
- Tuckwell (Rev. W.), M.A. Reminiscences of a Radical Parson. With Photogravure Portrait net 9/0
- Cassell's History of the Russo-Japanese War. With numerous Illustrations. Vol. I. net 15/0
- Great Pictures in Private Galleries. A Selection of the Most Famous Modern Pictures reproduced in Colours. Vol. I., containing 48 Pictures.... 12/0 and 15/0
- Cassell's Popular Gardening. Edited by Walter P. Wright. With 24 Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations. Two volumes.....the set, net 30/0
- The British Isles*. Depicted by Pen and Camera. Vol. III. cr. 4to, net 21/0
- Wright (Walter P.) and Dallimore (Wm.). Pictorial Practical Tree and Shrub Culture. With numerous Illustrations..... net 1/0 and net 1/6
- CASSELL'S NATIONAL LIBRARY:
- Silas Marner.
- Browning's Poems (Selection).
- A Christmas Carol and The Chimes.
- The Vicar of Wakefield.
- The Four Georges.
- Tennyson's Poems (Selection).
- Burns' Poems (Selection).
- Southey's Life of Nelson.
- The Cricket on the Hearth.
- The Complete Angler.
- Carlyle's Sartor Resartus.
- Essays of Elia.
- Each, net 1/0 and net 1/6
- Cassell's Cabinet Cyclopædia. Illustrated.. royal 8vo, net 12/6
- NEW MECHANICS' MANUALS (Edited by Paul N. Hasluck):
- Measuring Builders' Work. Estimating for Builders' Workeach, net 1/6
- NEW "WORK" HANDBOOKS (Edited by Paul N. Hasluck):
- Knotting and Splicing Ropes and Cordage. Beehives and Bee Keepers' Appliances. Electro-plating. With numerous Illustrationseach, net 1/0
- The Blue Adventure Book. Edited by A. T. Quiller-Couch 5/0
- The Brown Adventure Book. Edited by A. T. Quiller-Couch 5/0
- Favourite Characters from Dickens. Rembrandt Photogravures of Frederick Barnard's Character Sketches from Dickens Two Series.....each, net 1/0
- CASSELL'S STANDARD LIBRARY:
- Guy Mannering. The Last Days of Palmyra. Sense and Sensibilityeach, net 1/0
- CASSELL'S SIXPENNY EDITIONS:
- The Adventures of Harry Revel, by A. T. Quiller-Couch; Under the White Cockade, by Halliwell Sutcliffe; The Rogue's March, by E. W. Hornung.
- Britain's Sea-Kings and Sea-Fights. Illustrated from Original Drawings 7/6
- Burton-Fanning (F. W.), M.D. The Open-Air Treatment of Pulmonary Tuberculosis 5/0
- FICTION
- Gerard (Morce). The Adventures of an Equerry 6/0
- Freeman (Richard Austin). The Golden Pool. The Story of a Forgotten Mine 6/0
- Hill (Headon). The One Who Saw 6/0
- REPRINTS
- Ambulance Work and Nursing 6/0
- Spence (Very Rev. H. D. M.), D.D. The Church of England. A History for the People. Four volumes. each 6/0
- Cassell's Guide to London. New and Revised Edition for 1905. With numerous Illustrationsroyal 16mo, 6/ and 1/0
- Wallace (Sir Donald Mackenzie), K.C.I.E., K.C.V.O. Russia. Two volumes. With Maps...medium 8vo net 24/0
- Shepherd-Walwyn (W. H.). Nature's Riddles; or, The Battle of the Beasts. Cheap Edition..... 3/6

- Heritage (Lizzie). Cookery Recipes for School and Home 2
- Milton's Paradise Lost. With 50 Illustrations by Gustave Doré..... net 16/0
- Kearton (R.), F.Z.S. *The Adventures of Cock Robin and His Mate*cr. 8vo 6/0

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL

- Wells (H. G.). A Modern Utopia. With numerous Illustrations by E. J. Sullivan.....large cr. 8vo, net 7/6
- Gray (J. W.). Shakespeare's Marriage and Departure from Stratford. With reproductions of Shakespearean Manuscript and other documentsdemy 8vo, net 10/6
- Cuthell (Edith F.). Wilhelmina, Margravine of Bayreuth. With numerous Portraitsdemy 8vo, net 16/0
- Whelpley (J. D.). The Problem of the Immigrant. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Perris (G. H.). Russia on the Eve of Revolution. Illustrated.....demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Reid (G. Archdall). The Principles of Heredity. demy 8vo, net 12/6
- Wildman (W. B.), M.A. *St. Ealdhelm: Founder of Sherborne*cr. 8vo net 2/6, net 10/6
- Tebbs (Louisa A.). The New Lace Embroidery (Punto Tagliato). With 34 Illustrations4to, net 2/6
- McSpadden (J. Walker). Synopses of Dickens's Novels 12mo net 2/6
- Gissing (George). By the Ionian Sea.....cr. 8vo, net 5/0

FICTION

- Furniss (Harry). Poverty Bay; A Nondescript Novel. Copiously Illustrated from Drawings by the Author 6/0
- Syrett (Netta). The Day's Journey 6/0
- Bramah (Ernest). The Mirror of Kong Ho 6/0
- Blissett (Nellie K.). The Silver Key..... 6/0
- Cullum (Ridgwell). The Brooding Wild: A Mountain Tragedy 6/0
- Ready (Oliver G.). Chun' Kwang: A Tale of Chinese Love and Tragedy. With 12 Illustrations by a Chinese artist of repute 6/0
- Thurston (E. Temple). The Apple of Eden.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Askew (Alice and Claude). Eve—And the Law...cr. 8vo 6/0

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS

FICTION

- Hornung (E. W.). Stingaree.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Healy (Chris). Heirs of Reuben.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Bennett (Arnold). Tales of the Five Towns....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Campbell (A. Godric). *Fleur-de-Camp: a Daughter of France*cr. 8vo 6/0
- Marsh (Richard). A Spoiler of Men.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Warden (Florence). The Youngest Miss Brown...cr. 8vo 6/0
- Barrett (Frank). The Error of her Ways.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Sergeant (Adeline). The Missing Elizabeth.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Gissing (Algernon). Baliol Garth.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Richardson (Frank). There and Back.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Horniman (Roy). Bellamy the Magnificent.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Mackenzie (W. A.). The Drexel Dream.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Bindloss (Harold). Davenport's Daughter.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Twells (Julia H.). *Et tu, Sejane! A Story of Capri in the Days of Tiberius*cr. 8vo 6/0
- Harkins (E. F.). The Schemers: a Story of To-day. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Westall (William). *A Very Queer Business, and other Stories*cr. 8vo 6/0
- Hoffmann (Professor). King Koko: the Pretty Princess and the Lucky Lover. A Conjuring Entertainment in the form of a Fairy Tale, with Practical Instructions. Illustratedcr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Phil May's Sketch-Book, containing 54 Humorous Cartoons.....cr. folio 2/6
- Sims (George R.). Among my Autographs. With 70 Facsimiles.....square 8vo 3/6
- Stoddard (C. Warren). The Island of Tranquil Delights. Illustrated.....cr. 8vo, net 6/0
- Adams (W. Davenport). A Dictionary of the Drama. Vol. I. (A to G).....demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Johnstone (Arthur). Recollections of Robert Louis Stevenson in the Pacific. With Portrait and Facsimile Letter.....cr. 8vo, net 6/0
- Gaulot (Paul). A Conspiracy under the Terror. Translated by C. Laroche, M.A. Illustratedcr. 8vo 6/0
- Vizetelly (Ernest A.). The Wild Marquis: Life and Adventures of Armand Guerry de Maubreuil...cr. 8vo 6/0

- Fitzgerald (Percy), F.S.A. The Life of Charles Dickens, as revealed in his Writings. Two volumes. demy 8vo, net 21/0
- Webber (Byron). James Orrock, Painter, Connoisseur, Collector. With 97 Photogravure and 90 Half-tone Plates. Two volumes. large 4to, net 210/0
- Sims (George R.). Li Ting of London. fcap. 8vo, 1/0 & 1/6
- Herbert Fry's Royal Guide to the London Charities, 1905. Edited by John Lane. cr. 8vo 1/6
- McCarthy (Justin). A History of Our Own Times, Vol. VI. From the Diamond Jubilee, 1897, to the Accession of King Edward VII. demy 8vo 12/0

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY:

- Macaulay's History of England (five volumes); Justin McCarthy's The Reign of Queen Anne (one volume); A History of the Four Georges and of William IV. (two volumes); A History of Our Own Times, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to 1880 (three vols.) . . . pott 8vo, each, net 2/0 & net 3/0

REPRINTS AND NEW EDITIONS

- Humours of Cycling.* By Jerome K. Jerome, H. G. Wells, Barry Pain, Clarence Rook, W. Pett Ridge, J. F. Sullivan, and others. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Reade (Charles). The Cloister and the Hearth. Edition de Luxe. With 16 Photogravure and 84 Half-tone Illustrations by Matt B. Hewerdine. . . small 4to, net 6/0
- WORKS OF RICHARD A. PROCTOR:
- Easy Star Lessons.* With Star Maps for every Night in the Year. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Flowers of the Sky.* With 55 Illustrations. . . cr. 8vo 3/6
- Familiar Science Studies.* cr. 8vo 3/6
- Mysteries of Time and Space.* With 24 Illustrations. . . cr. 8vo 3/6
- The Universe of Suns.* With 11 Illustrations. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Saturn and its System.* With 13 Plates. . demy 8vo 6/0
- Wages and Wants of Science Workers.* . . . cr. 8vo 1/6
- The Decameron of Boccaccio.* . . . fcap. 8vo, net 2/0, net 3/0
- Donovan (Dick). The Man-hunter. . . . cr. 8vo 2/0
- "Ouida." A Rainy June. A New Edition. . . cr. 8vo 3/6
- NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS:
- The Massarenes*, by "Ouida"; The Lady of Lynn, by Sir Walter Besant; The Alabaster Box, by Sir Walter Besant; The Clyffards of Clyffe, by James Payn; A Queen of Curds and Cream, by Dorothea Gerard; As Luck Would Have It, by William Westall; A Prince of Good Fellows, by Robert Barr; Haviland's Chum, by Bertram Mitford; The Bag of Diamonds, by G. Manville Fenn; The Shadow of the Rope, by E. W. Hornung; Rosebury, by L. T. Meade; This Troublesome World, by L. T. Meade.

POPULAR BOOKS:

- Eliza's Husband*, by Barry Pain; The Adventures of Jones, by Hayden Carruth (Illustrated); Harry Fludyer at Cambridge, &c., by R. C. Lehmann; Young Mrs. Caudle, by George R. Sims; The Life We Live, by George R. Sims; The Foolish Virgins, by Alfred Sutro. . . fcap. 8vo, each 1/0 & 1/6

THE CLARENDON PRESS

THEOLOGY: TEXTS: CHURCH HISTORY, &c.

- Sanday (W.), D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Lectures on the Fourth Gospel.
- The Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites of the Armenian Church, together with the Greek Rites of Baptism and Epiphany.* Edited from the oldest MSS. by F. C. Conybeare. The East Syrian Epiphany Rites. Translated by the Rev. A. J. MacLean, D.D.
- Samaritan Liturgies.* Edited by A. Cowley, M.A.
- Schiaparelli's Astronomy in the Old Testament.* Authorised English Translation, with additions, by the Author.
- An Italian Version of the lost Apocryphal Gospel of Barnabas, with Arabic Glosses.* Edited, with Introduction, Translation and Notes, by Canon Ragg, from the unique MS. in the Imperial Library, Vienna.
- Carlyle (A. J.), M.A., and others. Early Patristic Quotations from the New Testament.
- Redpath (H. A.), M.A. Concordance of Proper Names in the Septuagint, Part II.
- Eusebii Chronicorum Liber.* Reproduced in Collotype, with Introduction by J. K. Fotheringham, M.A.

Chapman (A. E.) Ma premiere visite a Paris.

OXFORD MODERN FRENCH SERIES:

- Taine's Voyage aux Pyrénées.* Edited by W. Robertson.
- Balzac's Une Ténébreuse Affaire.* Edited by Marie A. Péchinot.

OXFORD CLASSICAL TEXTS

- Platonis Opera, Vol. IV.* (completion). Editor, J. Burnet.
- Plauti Comoediae, Vol. II.* Editor, W. M. Lindsay.
- Ciceronis Orationes in Catilinam, &c.* Editor, A. C. Clark.
- Statius, Silvae.* Editor, J. S. Phillimore.

ORIENTAL

- A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by E. Robinson.* Edited by Francis Brown, D.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D. Part XII.
- Cobb (William H.). A Criticism of Systems of Hebrew Metres: an Elementary Treatise.
- Pope (G. U.), D.D. A Catechism of Tamil Grammar.
- Pope (G. U.), D.D. Tamil-English Dictionary.
- Cook (Albert S.), Ph.D. The Dream of the Rood. Edited from MSS., with Introduction and Notes, &c. extra fcap. 8vo
- Specimens of the Elizabethan Drama from Lyly to Shirley, A.D. 1580—A.D. 1642.* Edited by W. H. Williams, M.A.
- Johnson's Lives of the Poets.* Edited, in three volumes medium octavo, by the late G. Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L.
- The Letters of Horace Walpole.* Edited by Mrs. Paget Toynbee. Vols. XIII-XVI.
- The Lyrical Poems of Blake.* Edited by John Sampson, M.A. 8vo
- The Plays and Poems of Robert Greene.* Edited by J. Churton Collins, M.A. Two volumes. 8vo
- The Minor Caroline Poets.* Edited by George Saintsbury, M.A. Two volumes. 8vo. Vol. I.
- Madan (Falconer), M.A. A Summary Catalogue of Western MSS. in the Bodleian Library not hitherto Catalogued in the Quarto Series. Nos. 24331-30525.
- A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society.* Edited by Dr. J. A. H. Murray. Further portion of Vol. VI. (M), by Dr. Bradley (L completed); further portion of Vol. VII. (P), by Dr. Murray (O completed); further portion of Vol. VIII. (R), by Mr. Craigie (Q completed).
- A Concordance of Dante's Italian Prose Works, and of the Canzoniere.* Edited by E. S. Sheldon, Ph.D. royal 8vo

LAW

- Corps de Droit Ottoman: un Recueil des Lois, Règlements, Ordonnances et Actes les plus importants du Droit Intérieur, et d'Etudes sur le Droit Coutumier de l'Empire Ottoman sous le régime établi par S. M. I. Abdul Hamid II., par George Young, 2^m Secrétaire de l'Ambassade d'Angleterre.* Seven volumes. . . 8vo

HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY, &c.

- Origines Islandicæ: comprising Landnámaboc and the earliest prose Sagas of the Old Northern Tongue.* Edited and translated by Gudbrand Vigfússon, M.A., and Frederick York Powell, M.A. Two volumes. . 8vo
- Documents relating to the French Revolution (May 1789-September 1791).* Edited by L. G. Wickham Legg, M.A. Two volumes. cr. 8vo
- Annandale (Nelson). The Faroes and Iceland. Illustrated. cr. 8vo

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, &c.

- Index Kewensis Plantarum Phanerogamarum. Supplementum secundum, nomina et synonyma omnium generum et specierum ab initio anni 1896 ad finem anni 1900 complectens.* Pars I, Fasc II. 4to
- Goebel's Organography of Plants.* Authorised English translation, by I. Bayley Balfour, M.A., F.R.S. Vol. II. Special Organography. royal 8vo
- Knuth's Flower Pollination.* Authorised English Translation by J. R. Ainsworth Davis, M.A.
- Solereder's Anatomical Characters of the Dicotyledonous Orders.* Authorised Translation, by L. A. Boodle.
- The English Dialect Dictionary.* Edited by Joseph Wright, M.A., Ph.D. Dialect Grammar, with Title-page and Preface to Vol. IV. (completing the work).

- Boughton-Leigh (Rev. Bridgeman), M.A. Memorials of a Warwickshire Family. With Prefatory Note by Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid, LL.D., D.L.
Reay (Lord). The Proceedings of the British Academy. Presidential Address.
An Outline Dictionary, intended as an aid in the Study of the Languages of the Bantu (African) and other uncivilised races. Edited by A. C. Madan, M.A.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.

- Marie Corelli. Free opinions freely expressed on certain Phases of Modern Social Life and Conduct...cr. 8vo 6/0
Greener (William). A Secret Agent in Port Arthur. With Maps, Plans, &c.....cr. 8vo 6/0
Asakawa (K.), Ph.D. The Russo-Japanese Conflict: its Causes and Issues. With an Introduction by Frederick Wells Williams. Ten full-page Illustrations and Map.....large cr. 8vo, net 7/6
Scott (Eva). The King in Exile, 1646-1664...demy 8vo, net 15/0
Sichel (Edith). Catherine De Medici and the French Revolution. With 12 Illustrations....demy 8vo, net 15/0
Lee (Captain R. E.) Recollections and Letters of General Robert E. Lee. Illustrated with Portraits. demy 8vo, net 12/6
Terry (C. Sanford), M.A. John Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, 1648-1689. Illustrated. demy 8vo, net 12/6
Burroughs (John). Far and Near.....cr. 8vo, net 5/0
Davis (Rebecca Harding). Bits of Gossip...fcap. 8vo, net 5/0
Seton (Ernest Thompson). Monarch, The Big Bear. With many drawings by the Author.....net 5/0
Seton (Ernest Thompson). Two Little Savages. Being the Adventures of Two Boys who Lived as Indians and what they Learned. With over 300 drawings. post 8vo, net 6/0
Beddard (Frank E.), M.A. Oxon., F.R.S., F.Z.S., &c. Natural History in Zoological Gardens. Illustrated by Gambier Bolton and Winifred Austen. extra cr. 8vo, net 6/0
THE INGERSOLL LECTURES :
Royce (Josiah), Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. The Conception of Immortality. 16mo 2/6
Osler (William), M.D., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford University. Science and Immortality.....2/6
James (William), Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. Human Immortality.....2/6
Butler (H. E.). Sexti Properti Opera Omnia. With a Commentary.....extra cr. 8vo, net 7/6
Bradley (A. G.). The Fight with France for North America. Illustrated.....demy 8vo, net 3/6
Weech (William Nassau), M.A. Urban VIII...cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Oldham (Brigade-Surgeon C. F.). The Sun and the Serpent. A Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. With 33 full-page Illustrations.....net 10/6
Wallace (Mrs. Willoughby). Woman's Kingdom. Illustrated by Mrs. Herbert Davis.....cr. 8vo 3/6

VERSE

- Binyon (Laurence). Pentheseilea. A Poem...cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Scott (Mary). A Robin's Song and other Poems. cr. 8vo, net 2/6

NEW EDITIONS

- Disraeli (Benjamin) (Lord Beaconsfield). Lord George Bentinck. A Political Biography. New Edition, with a Preface by Charles Whibley.....demy 8vo, net 6/0
Wicksteed (Philip H.), M.A. The Chronicle of Villani. New Edition, with a Frontispiece.....cr. 8vo, net 5/0
Gardner (E. G.). Dante's Ten Heavens. Cheaper edition, Revised.....demy 8vo, net 5/0
CONSTABLE'S STANDARD SERIES :
Bartholomew Sastrow. The Memoirs of a German Burgomaster. Translated by Albert Vandam, with an Introduction by Herbert Fisher, M.A. Illustrated.....extra cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Martin Conway (Sir William). The Alps from End to End. With a Chapter on the Western and Central Alps by the Rev. W. A. B. Coolidge, and Illustrations by A. D. McCormick. extra cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Townsend (Meredith). Asia and Europe...cr. 8vo, net 5/0
Bradley (A. G.). Canada in the Twentieth Century. demy 8vo, net 5/0

- Nansen (Fridtjof). Farthest North. Illustrated with a Portrait of Nansen, two Maps, and about 20 full-page plates.....demy 8vo 6 0
Forrest (G. W.), C.I.E. Cities of India. With 30 Illustrations.....demy 8vo, net 5 0
Hayden (Eleanor G.). Travels Round Our Village. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke.....extra cr. 8vo, net 3 6
Hutton (Rev. W. H.). By Thames and Cotswold. With many Illustrations.....demy 8vo, net 5 0

FICTION

- Gissing (George). Will Warburton.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Chambers (Robert W.). In Search of the Unknown...cr. 8vo 6 0
Merejkowski. A New Novel.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Silberrad (Una L.). The Wedding of the Lady of Lovel, and other Matches of Tobiah's Making.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Glanville (Ernest). A Rough Reformer.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Fox (John). Crittenden.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Rawson (Mrs. Stepney). Tales of Rye Town.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Carr (Mrs. Comyns). John Fletcher's Madonna...cr. 8vo 6 0
Frensen (Gustav). Jörn Uhl. Translated from the German.....cr. 8vo 6 0
Colvill (Helen Hester). The Stepping Stone.....cr. 8vo 6 0
National Engineering and Trade Lectures. Edited by Ben. J. Morgan. Vol. I., British Progress in Municipal Engineering, by William H. Maxwell, Assoc.M. Inst.C.E. Vol. II., British Progress in Pumps and Pumping Engines, by Philip R. Björling. Vol. III., British Progress in Gas Works Plant and Machinery, by C. B. Brackenbury, C.B.....each, net 6 0
Maude (Aylmer). A Peculiar People (The Dourkhobors). Illustrated.....net 6 0
HALF-CROWN SERIES OF STANDARD FICTION :
Tolstoy (Leo). Resurrection. Authorised Translation by Louise Maude. With 33 Illustrations by Pasternak.....net 2 6
Tolstoy (Leo). Sevastopol. Translated by Louise and Aylmer Maude. With a Frontispiece...net 2 6
Angell (James Rowland). Psychology: an Introductory Study of the Structure and Function of Human Consciousness.....net 6 0
Okakura (Y.) The Japanese Spirit.....cr. 8vo, net 3 6

THE DE LA MORE PRESS

FOLIOS :

- The Percy Folio of Old English Ballads and Romances; Vol. I.
Spenser's Minor Poems, to be issued in successive volumes, according to the original quartos :--
I. The Four Hymns.

QUARTOS :

- Gay's Beggar's Opera.....net 7 6

KING'S CLASSICS :

- Mediæval Lore from Bartholomew Anglicus, selected by Robert Steele, with preface by the late William Morris.....net 1 6
Dekker's Gull's Hornbook, reprinted from the first edition, edited by R. B. McKerrow.....net 1 0
Piers Plowman, rendered into modern English by Prof. Skeat, Litt. D.....net 1 6
Memoirs of Robert Cary.....net 1 6
Vita Nuova, translated by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, English and Italian on opposite pages, edited by H. Oelsner, Ph.D.....net 2/6, English only, net 1 6
Nun's Rule, or Convent Life in the XIIIth century, edited by the Right Rev. Abbot Gasquet.....net 3 6
Coleridge's Table Talk, edited by Ida Samuel. In two volumes.....each net 2 6
Cicero on Friendship and Old Age, and Scipio's Dream, from early translations. Edited by Dr. Rouse.
King's Letters. Part III. Letters of the Tudors, edited by Robert Steele.....net 2 6
KING'S NOVELS :
Silas Marner.
Household of Sir Thomas More.
Vicar of Wakefield.
Cranford.
CENTENARY EDITION OF LORD BEACONSFIELD'S WORKS :
Vol. III. The Young Duke.
Vol. IV. Contarini Fleming.
Vol. V. Alroy and the Rise of Iskander....each net 3 6
LIBRARY OF LITURGOLOGY AND ECCLESIOLOGY :
Ordo Romanus Primus. Translated and edited by E. G. Cuthbert Atchley.....net 7 6

- Costume as Illustrated on Monumental Brasses. By Herbert Druitt. Illustrated demy 8vo, net 7/6
- The Unpublished Works of Roger Bacon. Part I. Metaphysica Fratris Rogeri, Ordinis Fratrum Minorum. "De Viciis Contractis in Studio Theologie." net 4/6
- Thought Transference. By N. W. Thomas, with Introduction by Sir Oliver Lodge.
- Historic Bookbindings in the University of Cambridge. Catalogued and Described by Hugh Morriston Davies and Noel Barwell of Trinity College.
- Facsimile Reproduction of the First Folio of Chaucer, 1532. Edited with Introduction by the Rev. Prof. Skeat, Litt.D. net 105/0 and net 126/0

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.

- Bronte (C. A. & E.) New Illustrated Edition of the Novels of Charlotte, Anne, and Emily Bronte. 10 volumes. Illustrated by Edmund Dulac. Jane Eyre, two volumes; Shirley, two volumes; Villette, two volumes; Professor, one volume; Wuthering Heights, one volume; Wildfell Hall and Agnes Grey, two volumes fcap. 8vo, per vol. net 2/6
- Butcher (Dean). The Oriflamme in Egypt. A Novel dealing with the Twelfth Century Crusades. cr. 8vo, net 4/6
- Carpenter (W. Boyd), D.D., D.C.L., Lord Bishop of Ripon. The Christ Child and The Three Ages of Man. With Frontispiece. net 1/6, and net 1/0
- English Idylls. Illustrated by C. E. Brock fcap. 8vo, net 5/0, and per set net 25/0
- Fitzgerald (Augustin). In the Track of the Moors. With numerous Coloured Illustrations by the Author. large medium 8vo, net 21/0
- Français, Les Classiques. Edited by Daniel S. O'Connor. Atala, René, et Le Dernier Abencérage par Chateaubriand; Contes Choisis de Balzac; Paul et Virginie, Par Bernardin de St. Pierre; Colomba, Par Prosper Mérimée; Le Roman D'un Jeune Homme Pauvre, Par Octave Feuillet; La Princesse de Clèves, Par Mme. de la Fayette; La Mare au Diable, Par George Sand; Profilis Anglais, Par C. A. Sainte-Beuve post 8vo, net 1/6, and net 2/6
- Hallé (Martin). Queen Mary of Modena: Her Life and Letters. Illustrated medium 8vo, net 15/0
- Harrison (Mary). The Skilful Cook. A practical manual of modern experience cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Home (Gordon). The Evolution of a Town: Being a History of Pickering. Written and Illustrated in line and colour by the Author small cr. 4to, net 7/6
- Master Musicians. Edited by F. J. Crowest; Schubert, by E. Duncan fcap. 8vo, net 3/6
- Mediæval Towns. Venice, by Thomas Okey. Illustrated by Nellie Ericksen. Brussels, by E. Gilliat-Smith. Illustrated by Katharine Kimball. fcap. 8vo, net 4/6, and net 5/6
- Morgan (G. S.). The Chronicle of Matarazzo. Translated from the Italian cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Palgrave (Sir Reginald), F.D., K.C.B. The Chairman's Handbook net 1/6, and net 2/6
- Queen's Prime Ministers (The). With photogravure frontispieces. Viscount Palmerston, by the Marquis of Lorne; Lord Melbourne, by Henry Dunckley, LL.D.; The Earl of Aberdeen, by Sir Arthur Gordon; The Earl of Derby, by George Saintsbury; Sir Robert Peel, by Justin McCarthy, M.P.; Lord John Russell, by Stuart J. Reid; Earl of Beaconsfield, by J. A. Froude; W. E. Gladstone, by G. W. E. Russell; Marquis of Salisbury, by H. D. Traill, D.C.L. cr. 8vo, each net 2/6
- Ross (Janet). Old Florence and Modern Tuscany. Illustrated by Nelly Ericksen and Adelaide Marchi large cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Royde-Smith (N. G.). Una and the Red Cross Knight, and other Stories from Spenser's Faerie Queene. Illustrated by T. H. Robinson. large crown 8vo, net 5/0
- Scudder (Miss Van). Letters of St. Catharine of Siena. Translated, with Introduction by Miss Van Scudder. small demy 8vo
- Selincourt (B. De). Homes of First Franciscans in Umbria. Illustrated cr. 8vo, net 4/6
- Shakespeare's Plays Retold for Children. By Alice Hoffman. As You Like it, Illustrated by Dora Curtis; King Henry V., Illustrated by Dora Curtis. square crown 8vo, net 1/0 and net 1/6
- Temple Biographies (The). Major General Harrison. By the Rev. C. H. Simpkinson. Illustrated. cr. 8vo, net 4/6
- Temple Series of Bible Handbooks (The). Pre-Exilic

- Prophets. By the Rev. W. Fairweather, M.A. Peter. By John Davidson, M.A. sq. cr. 16mo, each net 1/9
- Temple Classics (The). Hazlitt: Characters of Shakespeare's Plays pott 8vo, net 1/6 and net 2/0
- Temple Dramatists (The). The Return from Parnassus. The Prometheus Bound of Aeschylus. Translated by Janet Case, with Greek text opposite sq. cr. 16mo, net 1/0 and net 1/6
- Temple Primers (The). With Frontispieces. English Constitution, by Leonard Courtney; English Patent Law, by W. Martin; Government of Greater Britain, by W. F. Trotter pott 8vo, per volume net 1/0
- Temple Topographies (The). Illustrated by E. H. New. Selborne, by H. W. Tompkins. long fcap. 8vo, per volume net 1/6
- Tolstoy (Leo). The Works of. Translated by Prof. Leo Wiener, twenty-four volumes. Childhood, Boyhood, Youth; The Cossacks, Sevastopol, &c.; The Snowstorm, Domestic Happiness, &c.; Pedagogical Articles, Linen Measurer; War and Peace, four volumes; Anna Karénin, three volumes; Fables for Children, Stories for Children, Moral Tales; My Confession, Critique of Dogmatic Theology; The Four Gospels Harmonised and Translated, two volumes; My Religion, On Life; What shall we do then? Dramatic Works, Kreutzer Sonata; The Kingdom of God is within you; Resurrection, two vols. and Miscellanies Later Works; Bibliography, Biography and Critical Résumé, Thought-Index. large cr. 8vo, each net 3/6 and net 10/6
- Waterfield (Margaret). Garden Colour. With 50 coloured Illustrations by the Author square cr. 4to, net 21/0
- Whiting (Mary Bradford). The Torchbearers. A Novel. cr. 8vo, net 4/6
- Young (Mrs.). Bimbo. A Children's Story, with Illustrations by Alice B. Woodward.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & CO.

- Meade (L. T.). Virginia 6/0
- Dean (Ellis). A Raw Probationer 6/0
- Appleton (G. W.). The Luck of Bella Barton. Illustrated 6/0
- Forestier-Walker (C.). The Doll's Dance 6/0
- Tytler (Sarah). Favours from France 6/0
- Hume (Fergus). The Mandarin's Fan 6/0
- Cay (Nowell). A Foe in the Family 6/0
- Harcourt (F. C. Vernon). Bolts and Bars. In demy 8vo. Illustrated by A. Pearse 6/0
- Sergeant (Adeline). Celia's Fortune 6/0
- Russell (Dora). Hester Wray 6/0
- Middlemass (Jean). The Falkners of Greenhurst 6/0
- Speight (T. W.). The Celestial Ruby 6/0
- Warden (Gertrude). The Game of Love 6/0
- Cleeve (Lucas). Our Lady of Beauty 6/0
- A Slum Heroine. By "Alien." 6/0
- Grant (Sadi). A Japanese House-Party 6/0
- Finnemore (Emily Pearson). Fate's Handicaps 6/0
- Upward (Allen). The Yellow Hand 6/0
- Sergeant (Adeline). The Sin of Laban Routh 6/0
- Meadows (Alice Maude). I Charge you Both 6/0
- Gorst (Mrs. Harold). Speculum Vulgi 6/0
- Macquoid (Katherine S.). A Village Chronicle 6/0
- Smith (Ellen Ada). First in the Field 6/0

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH & CO.

- Strong (the late S. Arthur). Critical Studies and Fragments. With Memoir by Lord Balcarras. 24 Illustrations royal 8vo net 16/0
- Rolfe (W. J.), Litt. D. A Life of William Shakespeare. 8 Illustrations demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Kropotkin (Prince). Ideals and Realities in Russian Literature demy 8vo, net 7/6
- Maxwell (Dr. Joseph). Metapsychical Phenomena. With Prefaces by Sir Oliver Lodge and Professor Ch. Richet. Translated by Mrs. Finch. large cr. 8vo, net 10/-
- Mauclair (Camille). Auguste Rodin. With 40 plates. cr. 4to, net 10/6
- Moore (T. Sturge). Albert Durer. With 4 copper plates and 50 half-tone Illustrations pott 4to, net 7/6
- Selincourt (Basil de). Giotto. With 45 Illustrations. pott 4to, net 7/6
- Hill (G. F.). Pisanello. With 50 Illustrations. pott 4to, net 7/6
- Bréal (Auguste). Velasquez. With 45 Illustrations. net 2/0 and net 2/6

- Everett (William). The Italian Poets since Dante. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
 Fairless (Michael). The Grey Brethren. fcp. 8vo, net 2/6 and net 3/6
A Modern Mystic's Way. Uniform with "The Road-mender" net 2/6
 Glyn (Elinor). The Vicissitudes of Evangeline. With Coloured Frontispiece cr. 8vo 6/0
 Brown (Vincent). The Disciple's Wife. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Graham (R. B. Cunningham). Progress. cr. 8vo 6/0
 McLaren (Amy). The House of Barnkirk cr. 8vo 6/0
 Swift (Benjamin). Gossip. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Michaëlis (Karin). The Child. cr. 8vo 3/6
 Jefferies (Richard.) After London. New Edition .. cr. 8vo 6/0

MESSRS. J. FINCH & CO

- Milnes (Alfred), M.A. From Gild to Factory. A First Short Course of Economic History net 2/0
 Neville Figgis (Rev. J.), M.A. Christianity and History. net 2/0
 Horsburgh (E. L. S.), B.A. Britain and her American Colonies net 2/0
 Gaskoin (C. J. B.), M.A. The Development of Modern Warfare net 2/0
 Temperley (H. W. V.), B.A. George Canning. demy 8vo, net 7/6
The Ipsissima Verba Library. General Editor: Dr. Emil Reich. Philosophy, Dr. Emil Reich. Economics, Alfred Milnes, M.A. Natural Science, Prof. Ray Lankester, LL.D., F.R.S. Theology, Rev. Dr. Biggs, D.D. per volume, net 10/6

MR. H. J. GLAISHER

- Froussard (Dr.), Mucomembranous Entercolitis. Edited by Edward Blake, M.D. net 2/6
The Westminster Hospital Reports, 1903-1904. Vol. 14. Edited by E. Percy Paton and Purves Stewart .. net 6/0
 Blake (Edward), M.D. The Intestinal Catarrhs net 5/0
 Cowen (R. J.). X-Rays, their Employment in Cancer and other Diseases net 2/6
 Cowen (R. J.). X-Ray Charts net 1/0
 Williams (Chas.). A Short Essay on Insanity net 1/0
"Summer Spring." Backwards and Forwards, or From Socialism to Freedom net 3/6
 Bell (Robert), M.D. The Cancer Problem in a Nutshell. net 1/0 de Prenderville (A.), M.R.C.S. Ethyl Chloride in Surgical and Dental Practice net 1/0
 Herschell (George), M.D. Indigestion, its Nature, Diagnosis, and Treatment. Third edition, entirely rewritten net 3/6
 Kingscote (Ernest), M.B. Asthma. New edition
 Stocker (R. Dimsdale). Graphology Made Easy. New Edition net 1/6

MESSRS. GREENING & CO., LTD.

- The Royal Standard of God's United Kingdom.* cr. 8vo, cloth 3/6
 Crosland (T. W. H.). Indictments. net 5/0

FICTION

- Orczy (Baroness). The Scarlet Pimpernel. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Marlow (Louis). The Puppets' Dallying. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Marigold. A story by the author of "Jewel Sowers." cr. 8vo 6/0
 Baring (Max). A Doctor in Corduroy. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Phillips (J. Gastrell). Tales from Spain. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Turner (Reginald). King Philip the Gay. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Houmas (Mount). A Dreamer's Harvest. cr. 8vo 6/0
 Flaubert. Madame Bovary. Done into English by Henry Blanchamp fcap. 8vo, 1/6, and 2/0
 POPULAR SIXPENNIES: Orczy (Baroness). The Emperor's Candlesticks.
 Ranger-Gull (C.). The Hypocrite.
 Warden (Gertrude). Compromised.
 Fitz-Gerald (S. J. Adair). Fame the Fiddler.
 Turner (Reginald). The Steeple.
 McMillan (Mrs. Alec). The Weird Well.
 Daudet (Alphonse). Sapho.
 Ranger-Gull (C.). The Cigarette Smoker.
 Nisbet (Hume). Paths of the Dead.

THE GRESHAM PUBLISHING COMPANY

- Moncrieff (A. R. Hope). The World of To-day. A Survey of the Lands and Peoples of the Globe as seen in Travel and Commerce. Published quarterly in six vols. Vol. I. imperial 8vo, net 8/0
Encyclopædia Biblica. A Dictionary of the Bible. Edited by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D., and J. Sutherland Black, M.A., LL.D. A new edition. Complete in four volumes. net 80/0, net 100/0
 Simmonds (W. H.), F.J.I. The Practical Grocer. A Manual and Guide for the Grocer, the Provision Merchant, and Allied Trades. With contributions by Specialists, Trade Experts, and Members of the Trades. Illustrated. Complete in four volumes super-royal 8vo, each net 7/6
 Davis (J. R. Ainsworth), M.A. The Natural History of Animals. The Animal Life of the World in its various Aspects and Relations. Illustrated. In eight half-volumes each net 7/0
 Also in four volumes net 63/0
Modern Electric Practice. Prepared under the editorship of Magnus MacLean, M.A., D.Sc., Professor of Electrical Engineering in the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College, assisted by over thirty Specialists. Copiously illustrated with drawings and Diagrams. Vol. VI. and last. super-royal 8vo, net 9/0

MESSRS. CHARLES GRIFFIN & CO.

- Cain (John Cannell), D.Sc., and Thorpe (Jocelyn Field), Ph.D. The Synthetic Dyestuffs. Illustrated. large 8vo
 Carter (Herbert R.). The Spinning and Twisting of Long Vegetable Fibres. Illustrated. medium 8vo, net 16/0
The Investigation of Mine Air. Being Translations by Sir Clement Le Neve Foster, D.Sc., F.R.S., of Important Papers by Dr. Otto Brunck and Leon Poussigie, with an Original Monograph by J. Scott Haldane, M.D., F.R.S. Illustrated. large cr. 8vo, net 6/0
 Farnsworth (A. W.), A.M.Inst., M.E. Constructional Steelwork. With Illustrations medium 8vo, net 10/6
 Atherton (William H.). An Introduction to the Design of Beams, Girders, and Columns, in Machines and Structures, with Examples in Graphic Statics. With Illustrations large cr. 8vo
 Nicholson (Wm.). Smoke Abatement. Illustrated. large cr. 8vo

NEW EDITIONS.

- Redgrave (Gilbert R.), A.I.C.E., and Spackman (Charles), F.C.S. Calcareous Cements. Revised Edition. Illustrated large 8vo, net 15/0
 Brough (Bennett H.), F.G.S. Mine Surveying. Eleventh Edition. Revised and Enlarged. With Diagrams 7/6
 Burns (D.), M.E. Electrical Practice in Collieries. Second Edition. Revised and Greatly Enlarged. With Illustrations.
 Davey (Henry). The Principles and Construction of Pumping Machinery. Second Edition. Revised and Greatly Enlarged. With Practical Illustrations of Engines and Pumps.
 Harbord (F. W.), Assoc.R.S.M., F.I.C. The Metallurgy of Steel. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. With Important Appendix. With Illustrations, and a Section on the Mechanical Treatment of Steel, by J. W. Hall net 25/0
 Donkin (Bryan). Gas, Oil, and Air Engines. Fourth Edition. Revised and Enlarged large 8vo
 Jamieson (Andrew), M.Inst.C.E., &c. A Text-Book of Applied Mechanics and Mechanical Engineering. Fourth Edition. Illustrated 12/6
 Wells (Sidney H.). A Text-Book of Engineering Drawing and Design. Fourth Edition. Enlarged. Two volumes. each 4/6
 Hurst (Charles). Valves and Valve-Gearing. Fourth Edition. Revised and Enlarged 10/6
 Munro (John). C.E., and Jamieson (Prof.), M.Inst.C.E. A Pocket-Book of Electrical Rules and Tables. Seventeenth Edition. Revised. Pocket Size 8/6
 Seaton (A. E.), M.I.C.E., and Rounthwaite (H. M.), M.I.Mech.E. A Pocket-Book of Marine Engineering Rules and Tables. Eighth Edition. Revised. Pocket Size 8/6
 Walton (Thomas). Know Your Own Ship. Eighth Edition. Illustrated cr. 8vo 7/6

- Poynting (J. H.), Sc.D., and Thomson (J. J.), M.A. Properties of Matter. (Volume I. of "A Text-Book of Physics.") Third Edition. Revised. Illustrated .. 10/6
Sound. Companion Volume (Volume II. of Series). Third Edition 8/6
Heat. Volume III. Very Fully Illustrated 15/0

MESSRS. HARPER & BROTHERS

- Vacaresco (Hélène). Songs of the Valiant Voivode; Roumanian Folk-Songs and Legends, collected from the Peasants and rendered in English small 4to, 10/6
Chesterton (Gilbert K.). The Club of Queer Trades. Illustrated by the Author cr. 8vo, price 6/0
Wilson-Wilson (Theodora). Langbarrow Hall 6/0
Dawson (A. J.). The Fortunes of Farthings 6/0
Crawshay (Arthur). My Turkish Bride 6/0
Twain (Mark). A Dog's Tale large cr. 8vo, net 2/0

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN

- Serao (Matilde). The Country of Jesus. Illustrated cr. 8vo, net 7/6
Maugham (W. Somerset). The Land of the Blessed Virgin. Impressions and Sketches in Andalusia. With Photogravure Frontispiece. pott 4to, net 6/0
Brandes (Dr. George), Ph.D. Naturalism in England. Forming Vol. IV. of Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature 8vo
Gosse (Edmund). French Profiles: Studies in the Literature of France cr. 8vo 7/6
The Poetical Works of Heinrich Heine, in four Volumes. Completing the edition of Heine's Works. Vol. I. The Book of Songs, Translated by the late Thomas Brooksbank; Vol. II. New Poems and Atta Troll, Translated by Margaret Armour; Vol. IV. Germany and Last Poems. Translated by Margaret Armour small cr. 8vo, each 5/0
Hope (Laurence). Last Poems 8vo, net 5/0
D'Humières (Vicomte R.). Through Isle and Empire. Translated by A. Teixeira de Mattos. With an Introduction by Rudyard Kipling cr. 8vo 6/0
Robinson (E. Kay). The Country Day by Day. With 24 full-page Illustrations from the Author's Photographs cr. 8vo 6/0
Pinero (Arthur W.). A Wife Without A Smile: A Comedy in Disguise in Three Acts, 1/6 and 2/6
Recollections of Sarah Bernhardt. In Two Volumes, with many Portraits and Illustrations demy 8vo
French Lady (A.). L'Entente Cordiale en Cuisine. I. Practical Lessons in Cookery for Small Households. fcap. 8vo, 1/0 and 2/0
CONTEMPORARY MEN OF LETTERS SERIES:
William B. Yeats. By Horatio S. Krams.
Bret Harte. By Henry W. Boynton.
Small cr. 8vo each net 1/6.
Jonson (G. C. Ashton). A Handbook to Chopin's Works 8vo 6/0

FAVOURITE CLASSICS:

- Selected Poems of Alfred Lord Tennyson: Early Poems. Maud. In Memoriam. Idylls of the King (Two Vols.) English Idylls. The Princess. With Introductions by Arthur Waugh. Seven Vols.
Selected Essays of Joseph Addison. With Introduction by Austin Dobson. One Vol.
The Plays of R. B. Sheridan: The School for Scandal. The Rivals. The Critic. With Introductions by Edmund Gosse. Three Vols.
Selected Poems of Edgar Allen Poe. With Introduction by Arthur Symons. One Vol.
Selected Poems of Matthew Arnold. With Introduction by Arthur Waugh. One Vol.
Pippa Passes. By Robert Browning. With introduction by Arthur Symons. One Vol.
Omar Khayyam. Translated from the Persian by Edward FitzGerald. With Introduction by Clement Shorter. One Vol.
Poems of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Copyright Edition. With unpublished additions. With introduction by E. H. Coleridge. One Vol.
Selected Essays of Charles Lamb. With an Introduction by Arthur Waugh. Two Vols. each 6d. net. and 1s. net.

FICTION

- Robins (Elizabeth). The Medicine Man 6/0
Hamilton (Cosmo). Duke's Son 6/0

- Brooke (Emma). Susan Woo'd and Susan Won 6/0
Benson (E. F.). An Act in A Backwater 6/0
Sykes (Jessica, Lady). The Macdonnells. With an Introduction by Lord Charles Beresford 6/0
Dudeney (Mrs. Henry). The Wise Woods 6/0
Hamilton (M.). Cut Laurels 6/0
Van Vorst (Marie). Amanda of the Mill 6/0
Lane (Elinor M.). Nancy Stair 6/0
Herbertson (Jessie Lockie). The Stigma 6/0
An Ambitious Mother 6/0
Orcutt (William Dana). Robert Cavelier. With Illustrations in colour by Charlotte Weber 6/0
Wilson (Harry Leon). The Seeker 6/0
Brown (Katharine H.). Diane 6/0
Dixon (Thomas), Jr. The Clansman 6/0

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON

- LITERARY LIVES (Edited by W. Robertson Nicoll):
Gosse (Edmund). Coventry Patmore cr. 8vo 3/6
Shorter (Clement K.). Charlotte Brontë cr. 8vo 3/6
Barry (William). Renan cr. 8vo 3/6
Lewis (G. King). Critical Times in Turkey and England's Responsibility cr. 8vo 3/6
Schofield (A. T.) M.D. Nerves in Order or the Maintenance of Health cr. 8vo 3/6
White (Stewart Edward). The Mountains. With 16 Illustrations 8vo 7/6
Wallace (Dillon). The Lure of the Labrador Wild: A Story of the Exploring Expedition conducted by Leonidas Hubbard, Junr. With Illustrations and Maps cr. 8vo 7/6
Seton (Ernest Thompson). Wood Myth and Fable. With Illustrations cr. 8vo 6 0
Macpherson (Hector). Scotland's Struggle for Religious Liberty and Spiritual Independence cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Duncan (Robert Kennedy). The New Knowledge: A simple explanation of the New Physics and the New Chemistry in their relation to the New Theory of Matter. With Illustrations 8vo, net 7/6
McCarthy (Michael J. F.) B.A., T.C.D. The Coming Power: A Contemporary History of the Far East, from 1898 to 1905 cr. 8vo 6/0
Henry (James) M.E., and Hora (Karel J.) M.Sc. Modern Electricity: A Manual of Theories, Principles and Applications. Illustrated cr. 8vo, net 5/0
The Practical Photographer's Annual for 1904. F. C. Lambert, M.A. net 1s. and net 1/6
Maclaren (Rev. Alexander) D.D. Lit.D. Expositions of Holy Scripture. Complete in about thirty volumes. To be published also by subscription, six volumes in a series, price 24s. net per series. The Prophecies of Isaiah. Two Volumes. Vol. I. 8vo, each 7/6
Ross (Rev. J. M. E.) M.A. William Ross of Cowcaddens: A Memoir. With Portrait cr. 8vo 6/0
Do we Believe: With an Introduction by W. L. Courtney, M.A., LL.D. cr. 8vo 3/6
Dawson (Rev. W. J.). The Evangelistic Note cr. 8vo 6/0
Bacon (Benjamin W.) D.D. The Story of St. Paul: A Comparison of Acts and Epistles cr. 8vo 6/0
Van Dyke (Henry), D.D., LL.D. Sermons to Young Men. cr. 8vo 5/0
Works by the Rev. Alexander Maclaren, D.D., Litt.D. Seven New Volumes: The Beatitudes and other Sermons; The Wearied Christ and other Sermons; The God of the Amen, and other Sermons; Christ's Musts, and other Sermons; Paul's Prayers, and other Sermons; The Unchanging Christ, and other Sermons; The Holy of Holies, a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel of St. John. cr. 8vo, each 5/0
Spurgeon (Charles Haddon). The Treasury of David. Complete in Seven Volumes. the set net 21/0
Macran (Rev. F. W.), M.A., B.D. English Apologetic Theology cr. 8vo 6/0
Wood (Irving F.), Ph.D. The Spirit of God in Biblical Literature: A Study in the History of Religion. With an Introduction by Professor Porter, of Yale University cr. 8vo 6/0
In Full and Glad Surrender. The Life and Work of Martin J. Hall (C.M.S. Missionary in Uganda). By His Sister. With a preface by the Lord Bishop of Durham. With Illustrations cr. 8vo 6/0
Windross (Rev. Herbert). The Life Victorious, or Christian Character and Conduct cr. 8vo 3/6
Mott (John R.) M.A., F.R.G.S. The Ministry and Modern Missions: A Plea for Leadership in World Evangelisation cr. 8vo 3/6

- Fox (Rev. Prebendary H. E.), M.A. What did our Lord Jesus Christ think of the Old Testament? . . . cr. 8vo 2/6
 Newton (Rev. Joseph). The Problem of Personality. . . cr. 8vo 5/0
 Dargan (Edwin Charles), D.D., LL.D. A History of Preaching: From the Apostolic Fathers to the Great Reformers, A.D. 70-1572 . . . cr. 8vo 7/6
 Duncan (Norman). Dr. Grenfell's Parish: The Deep Sea Fishermen. With Illustrations . . . cr. 8vo 5/0
 Kent (Charles Foster), Ph.D. The Students' Old Testament. Logically and chronologically arranged. To be completed in Six Volumes. . . 50/0 the set, each net 12/0
THE ART AND LIFE LIBRARY:
 Women Painters of the World: From the time of Caterina Vigri, 1413-1463, to Rosa Bonheur and the Present Day. Edited by Walter Shaw Sparrow. . . net 5/0, net 7/6, net 10/6, and net 21/0
 Art and Life Monographs. Edited by Walter Shaw Sparrow. Etchings by Van Dyck: 24 plates reproduced in Rembrandt Photogravure the full size of the Inestimable First States. With an introduction by Professor Hans W. Singer. . . net 18/0, and net 63/0
 Ingres—Master of Pure Draughtsmanship. 24 large Rembrandt Photogravures with an introduction by Arsène Alexandre . . . net 6/0, net 9/0, net 12/0, and net 21/0
 Art of the Present Day Series. Edited by Walter Shaw Sparrow. Vol. I. The Spirit of the Present Day. The Work of Frank Brangwyn, A.R.A. Four reproductions in colour; four original Lithographs; twelve Rembrandt Photogravures . . . net 6/0, net 9/0, net 12/0, and net 21/0
 Vol. II. In the Open Country. The Work of Lucy E. Kemp-Welch. 20 Studies of Animals and Birds. Reproduced partly in Colour, partly in Rembrandt photogravure . . . net 6/0, net 9/0, net 12/0, and net 21/0
 Parsons (J. Herbert), B.S., D.Sc. (Lond.), F.R.C.S. (Eng.) The Pathology of the Eye. In 4 vols. Vol. I. . . royal 8vo, net 15/0
 Hanke (Dr. Victor). The Treatment of Diseases of the Eye. Translated by J. Herbert Parsons, B.S., D.Sc. (Lond.), F.R.C.S. (Eng.), and George Coats, M.D. F.R.C.S. (Eng.) . . . cr. 8vo, net 3/6
 Boldt (Dr. J.) Trachoma. Translated by J. Herbert Parsons, B.S., D.Sc. (Lond.), F.R.C.S. (Eng.), and Thomas Snowball, M.B., C.M. With an introductory chapter by E. Treacher Collins, F.R.C.S. . . royal 8vo, net 7/6
 Parsons (J. Herbert), B.S., D.Sc. (Lond.), F.R.C.S. (Eng.) With 2 colour plates and 22 Illustrations. . . demy 8vo, net 2/6
 Fisher (J. Herbert), M.B., B.S. (Lond.), F.R.C.S. (Eng.) Ophthalmological Anatomy. With numerous Illustrations . . . royal 8vo 7/6

FICTION

- Crockett (S. R.). May Margaret. Illustrated . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Quiller-Couch (A. T.). Shining Ferry . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Rice (Alice Hegan). Sandy. Illustrated . . . cr. 8vo 5/0
 McCutcheon (George Barr). Beverley of Graustark. Illustrated . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Pemberton (Max). Mid the Thick Arrows. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Le Queux (Wm.). Who Giveth this Woman? . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Shorter (Dora Sigerson). The Country House Party. . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Swan (Annie S.). Christian's Cross. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo 3/6
 Phelps (Elizabeth Stuart). Trixy . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Martin (Helen R.). Tillie; A Mennonite Maid. A Humorous Story of the Pennsylvania Dutch. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Cahan (Abraham). The White Terror and the Red. A Novel of Revolutionary Russia. . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Stewart (Charles D.) The Fugitive Blacksmith. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Keith (Marian). Duncan Polite. The Watchman of Glenoro . . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 Conrad (Stephen). The Second Mrs. Jim. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo 5/0
 Kelly (Myra). Little Citizens. Illustrated . . . cr. 8vo 6/0

NEW EDITIONS

- Fowler (Ellen Thorneycroft). Fuel of Fire. Illustrated. /6
 Le Queux (William). The Unnamed, A Romance of Modern Italy. Illustrated . . . /6

MR. JOHN HOGG

ARTISTIC CRAFTS SERIES:

- Whall (C. W.). Stained Glass Work. With Diagrams and Reproductions. . . net 5/0
 Johnston (E.). Writing, Illuminating and Lettering. Diagrams and Illustrations.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.

- Johnston (Sir Harry), G.C.M.G., K.C.B., &c. Liberia: the Negro Republic in West Africa. Illustrated. In two volumes. . . super royal 8vo, net 42/0
 Cunningham (J. F.), F.R.G.S., F.Z.S. Uganda and its Peoples. Notes on the Protectorate of Uganda, especially the Anthropology and Ethnology of the indigenous Races. With an introduction by Sir Harry Johnston, G.C.M.G., K.C.B. Illustrated. . . cr. 4to, net 24/0
 Partridge (Charles), M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., &c. Cross-River Natives. Being notes on the Primitive Pagans of Obubura Hill District, Southern Nigeria, including a description of the circles of upright sculptured stones on the left bank of the Aweyong River. Illustrated. . . demy 8vo, net 12/6
 Vitelleschi (The Marchesa). The Romance of Savoy. Victor Amadeus II. and his Stuart Bride. In two volumes. Illustrated. . . demy 8vo, net 24/0
 Haggard (Lieut.-Colonel Andrew C. P.), D.S.O. The Regent of the Roués. Illustrated. . . demy 8vo, net 16/0
 Hughes (Rupert). The Real New York. Illustrated. square cr. 8vo, net 7/6
 Reich (Dr. Emil). Imperialism. . . cr. 8vo, net 3/6
 Thirlmere (Rowland). Letters from Catalonia and other parts of Spain. Two volumes. Illustrated. demy 8vo, net 24/0
 Sanborn (Alvan Francis). Paris and the Social Revolution. A Study of the Revolutionary Element in the Various Classes of Parisian Life. Illustrated.
 Rosadi (Giovanni). The Trial of Jesus. Edited, with Explanatory Notes and with an Introduction by Dr. Emil Reich. . . large cr. 8vo, net 6/0
 Sanford (Frank G.). The Art Crafts for Beginners. Illustrated
 The Year's Art, 1905. Compiled by A. C. R. Carter. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo, net 3/6
THE WOMAN'S HOME LIBRARY:
 Coolidge (Emelyn L.), M.D. The Mother's Manual, a Month-by-Month Guide for Young Mothers.
 Walker (Emma E.), M.D. Beauty through Hygiene. Common-sense Ways to Health for Girls. With Illustrations.
 Small cr. 8vo, 2/6 and 1/6 each.
 Chapin (Anna A.) Makers of Song. . . cr. 8vo 5/0
 De Brémont (Anna, Comtesse). The World of Music. The Great Composers; the Great Singers; the Great Virtuosi. Illustrated. . . small cr. 8vo, each 3/6
 Stevens (Frank). Adventures in Pondland. Illustrated. cr. 8vo 5/0

FICTION

- Castaigne (André). Fata Morgana. A Novel of Student Art Life in Paris. Illustrated. . . cr. 8vo 6/0
 The Truth about Man. By a Spinster. . . cr. 8vo 5/0
 "Allen Raine." Hearts of Wales. An Old Romance. . . 6/0
 Moore (Frankfort). The White Causeway. Illustrated. 6/0
 Le Queux (Wm.) A New Novel. . . 6/0
 Dawe (Carlton). The Grand Duke. . . 6/0
 Garvice (Charles). Linked by Fate. . . 6/0
 "Iota." Patricia: a Mother. . . 6/0
 Farjeon (the late B. L.). The Clairvoyante. . . 6/0
 Burgin (G. B.). The Marble City. . . 6/0
 Gerard (Dorothea). The Three Essentials. . . 6/0
 Green (E. Everett). The Secret of Wold Hall. . . 6/0
 Steuart (J. A.). The Rebel Wooing. . . 6/0
 Sergeant (Adeline). The Sixth Sense. . . 6/0
 Altscheler (Joseph A.). Guthrie of the "Times". . . 6/0
 Fellows (Charles). Mr. Chippendale of Port Welcome. . . 6/0
 Hayes (F. W.). A Prima Donna's Romance. . . 6/0
 Gallon (Tom). Aunt Phipps. . . 6/0
 Marshall (Edward). The Middle Wall. Illustrated. . . 6/0
 Braddon (M. E.). The Rose of Life. . . 6/0
 "Rita." Queer Lady Judas. . . 6/0

SELECT NOVELS:

- On the Wings of the Wind (Allen Raine); The Yellow Van (Richard Whiteing); Paul Kelver (Jerome K. Jerome); A Welsh Witch (Allen Raine); In High Places (M. E. Braddon). . . cr. 8vo, each 3/6

NEW EDITIONS

- Cave (Henry W.), M.A., F.R.G.S. The Ruined Cities of Ceylon. Being a description of Anuradhapura and Polonnaruwa, with chapters on Aluwihari, Dambulla, Sigiri and Mihintale. Illustrated. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Johnston (Sir Harry), G.C.M.G. The Uganda Protectorate. Two large volumes. Illustrated. cr. 4to, net 24/0
- Parker (Joseph), D.D. Every Morning: First Thoughts for First Hours. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Chapin (Anna A.) Masters of Music: Their Lives and Work. With Portraits. cr. 8vo 5/0
- The Confessions of Jean Jacques Rousseau. Illustrated. Four volumes.* fcap. 8vo, the set, net 10/0
- The Novels of Laurence Sterne. A Sentimental Journey through France and Italy, one volume. The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, Gentleman, two volumes. Illustrated.* fcap. 8vo, per volume, net 2/6
- The Living Races of Mankind* per part 1/7
- Memoirs of Emma Lady Hamilton, with Anecdotes of her Friends and Contemporaries. Edited and annotated by W. H. Long. Illustrated.* cr. 8vo 5/0
- Boaden (James). Memoirs of Mrs. Siddons. cr. 8vo 5/0
- The Story of Nell Gwyn and the Sayings of Charles II. Related and collected by Peter Cunningham, F.S.A. Edited by Henry B. Wheatley, F.S.A. Illustrated.* cr. 8vo 5/0
- Twenty-six Ideal Stories for Girls by Twenty-six Popular Authors. Illustrated.* cr. 8vo 5/0

MESSRS. ISBISTER & CO.

- Ward (J. J.). Peeps into Nature's Ways. Illustrated by upwards of 150 Photographs and Photomicrographs taken by the Author. small demy 8vo 7/6
- Laughlin (Clara E.). Stories of Authors' Loves. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Knight-Adkin (J. H.), B.A. The Woman Stealers. cr. 8vo 3/6

FICTION

- Taylor (M. Imlay). The Rebellion of the Princess. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Gillie (E. A.). Jehanne: A Romance of Modern Normandy. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Benson (A. C.). The Hill of Trouble. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Benson (A. C.). The Isles of Sunset cr. 8vo 6/0

NEW EDITIONS

- Wedmore (Frederick). To Nancy post 8vo, net 1/0
- Wedmore, (Frederick). Dream of Provence. post 8vo, net 1/0
- Wagner (Charles). The Simple Life. cr. 8vo, net 3/6 & net 1/0
- Benson (Robert Hugh), M.A. By What Authority? 6/0
- Benson (Robert Hugh), M.A. A Book of the Love of Jesus net 3/6
- Benson (Robert Hugh), M.A. The Light Invisible. cr. 8vo 3/6

MR. JOHN LANE

- The Life and Letters of Robert Stephen Hawker, sometime Vicar of Morwenstow. Compiled by his son-in-law, C. E. Byles, from hitherto unpublished manuscripts.* demy 8vo, net 21/0
- Von Wertheimer (Edward). The Duke of Reichstadt. With numerous Illustrations demy 8vo, net 16/0
- The Life of Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky, 1840-1893. By his brother, Modeste Tchaikovsky. Translated, Edited, and Arranged from the Russian Edition by Rosa Newmarch* net 16/0
- Glasfurd (Captain A. I. R.). Rifle and Romance in the Indian Jungle. Being the Record of Thirteen Years of Indian Jungle Life demy 8vo, net 16/0
- Memoirs of a Royal Chaplain, 1729-1763. The Correspondence of Edmund Pyle, D.D., with Samuel Kerrich, D.D., Vicar of Dersingham and Rector of Wolferton and West Newton. Edited and Annotated by Albert Hartshorne* demy 8vo, net 16/0
- Khan (Hadji), M.R.A.S., Special Correspondent of the "Morning Post," and Sparrow (Wilfrid). With the Pilgrims to Mecca. The Great Pilgrimage A.H. 1318; A.D. 1902. With an Introduction by Prof. Vambery. demy 8vo, net 12/6
- Browning (Oscar). Napoleon: The First Phase. Some Chapters on the Boyhood and Youth of Bonaparte, 1769-1793 demy 8vo, net 10/6
- T. Lectures on "Garden Design" delivered before the*

- Royal Institute of British Architects and other architectural societies. Illustrated. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- The Poems of William Watson. Edited and Arranged by J. A. Spender. With Portrait. Two volumes.* cr. 8vo net 9/0
- Firangcon-Davies (D.). The Singing of the Future. With an Introduction by Sir Edward Elgar. demy 8vo net 6/0
- Cuthell (E. H.). My Garden in the City of Gardens. With Illustrations. cr. 8vo 7/6
- Cooper (Edward H.). The Twentieth-Century Child cr. 8vo 6/0
- The Collected Poems of Ernest Dowson. Illustrations and a Cover-Design by Aubrey Beardsley, and a Portrait, net* 5/0
- Chesterton (Gilbert K.). Heretics cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Nevinson (H. W.). Books and Personalities. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Kent (Armine Thomas). Otia cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Newman (Ernest). Musical Studies cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Benson (Arthur Christopher). New Poems. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- The Creed of Christ* cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Gilman (Lawrence). Phases of Modern Music. Strauss, MacDowell, Elgar, Loeffler, Mascagni, Grieg, Cornelius Wagner. Parsifal and its Significance. small 8vo, net 4/6
- Calvert (Albert F.). The Life of Cervantes. net 3/6
- Holmes (Edmond). What is Philosophy? An Essay. net 2/6
- Rose (Mary). The Women of Shakespeare's Family 16mo, net 1/0 and net 1/6
- Lane (Mrs. John), author of "Kitwyk." The Forbidden Fruit, or, The Shaddock or The Grape Fruit. How to Serve and How to Eat It fcap. 8vo 1/6
- PRACTITIONER'S HANDBOOKS (Edited by Harry Roberts):*
Symes (J. O.), M.D. (Lond.). The Rheumatic Diseases. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Clarke (J. Michell), M.A., M.D., &c. Hysteria and Neurasthenia cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Trevor (R. Salisbury), M.A., M.B. The Post-Mortem Handbook cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Collier (J. S.), M.D., M.R.C.P. Forms of Paralysis. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Walter (A. E.). Capt. I.M.S. X Rays in General Practice cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Latham (Arthur), M.A., M.D. Tubercular Disease. cr. 8vo, net 5/0

THE CROWN LIBRARY:

- Memoirs of Lady Fanshawe, wife of the Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Fanshawe, Bart., Ambassador from Charles II. to the Court of Madrid in 1665. Written by Herself. With Extracts from the Correspondence of Sir Richard Fanshawe.* cr. 8vo net 5/0

- Maitland (Samuel Roffey). The Reformation in England. Edited, with an Introduction, by the Rev. A. W. Hutton, M.A. cr. 8vo, net 5/0

THE COUNTRY HANDBOOKS:

- Dale (T. F.). The Stable Handbook fcap. 8vo, net 3/0 and net 4/0
- The Little Farm. By "Home Counties"* fcap. 8vo net 3/0 and net 4/0

HANDBOOKS OF PRACTICAL GARDENING:

- Goldring (W.). The Book of the Lily cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Curtis (Charles H.) and Gibson (W.). The Book of Topiary cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Wythes (George), V.M.H., and Roberts (Harry). The Book of Rarer Vegetables cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Lynch (Irwin), A.L.S. The Book of the Iris. cr. 8vo net 2/6
- Burbidge (F. W.). The Book of the Scented Garden. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Thonger (Charles). The Book of Garden Design. cr. 8vo, net 2/6

LIVING MASTERS OF MUSIC (Edited by Rosa Newmarch):

- Richard Strauss, by A. Kalisch; Paderewski, by Edward A. Baughan; Alfred Bruneau, by Arthur Hervey; Joachim, by J. A. Fuller Maitland; Grieg, by Lawrence Gilman; Theodore Leschetitzky, by Annette Hullah cr. 8vo, each net 2/6

THE LOVER'S LIBRARY (Edited by Frederic Chapman):

- Vol. XVI. The Song of Songs which is Solomon's. 5½ x 3 inches net 1/6, net 2/0, and net 3/0

THE NEW POCKET LIBRARY:

- Euphranor, by Edward Fitzferald; Wild Wales, by George Borrow; Tancred, Venetia, Contarini Fleming, by the Earl of Beaconsfield. pott 8vo, each net 1/6 and net 2/0

FLOWERS OF PARNASSUS:

- Isabella; or, The Pot of Basil, by John Keats; Hymn on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, by John

- Hare (Francis), M.D. A Common Humoral Factor of Disease, and its Bearing on the Practice of Medicine. Two vols.medium 8vo
- Howarth (Sir Henry H.), K.C.I.E., &c. Ice or Water: another Appeal to Induction from the Scholastic Methods of Modern Geology. Three vols.
- Perkin (F. Mollwo), Ph.D. Practical Methods of Electro-Chemistry.....8vo, net 6/0
- Hubbard (Arthur John), M.D. and Hubbard (George), F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A. Neolithic Dew-Ponds and Cattle-Waysroyal 8vo, net 3/6
- Metcalfe (H.W.), Engineer Commander, R.N. Elementary Steam Engineering.
- Norris (H. L.). Rice Papers: Stories and Sketches of Life in China 6/0
- Trevelyan (R. C.). The Birth of Parsival. fcap. 8vo, net 3/6
- Sherston (Major J.), D.S.O., and Shadwell (Major L. J.), P.S.C. Tactics Applied to Schemes, with Numerous Solutions to Tactical Schemes, and 14 Maps. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, by Major Shadwell. Two volumes8vo
- Seebohm (Frederic), LL.D. (Edin.), Litt. D. (Camb.). The Tribal System in Wales: being Part of an Inquiry into the Structure and Methods of Tribal Society. Second Edition. With 3 Maps.. 8vo 12/6
- Gilkes (A. H.). A Day at Dulwichfcap. 8vo, net 1/0
- Drawbridge (Rev. C. L.), M.A. The Training of the Twig: an Essay on the Religious Education of the Young.....cr. 8vo, net 3/0
- Alston (Leonard), M.A. Modern Constitutions in Outline: an Introductory Study in Political Science.....cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Hussey (Eyre). Miss Badsworth, M.F.H.: a Novel cr. 8vo 6/0
- Nesbit (E.). The Rainbow and the Rose: Poems cr. 8vo
- Burns (Cecil L.). Teacher's Handbook of Colour Drawing and Design for Schools.....cr. 8vo /6
- Longmans' Charts of Colour Drawing and Design. By Cecil L. Burns, Principal, School of Art, Bombay. Elementary Series. Intermediate Series. Advanced Series.
- Longmans' Latin Course—Elementary Unseens. cr. 8vo 1/6
- Blondlot (R.). 'N' Rays. Translated by J. Garcin. With Diagrams.....cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Wordsworth (John), D.D., Bishop of Salisbury. The Power of the Bishops to license Laymen to Preach and Read Prayers8vo, net 1/0
- Brent (Right Rev. C. H.), D.D., Bishop of the Philippine Islands. The Splendour of the Human Body. A Reparation and an Appeal. 16mo, net 2/6
- Robinson (J. Armitage), D.D., Dean of Westminster. Some Thoughts on the Athanasian Creed. cr. 8vo, net /6, net 1/0
- Bennett (Sir William), K.C.V.O., F.R.C.S. Recurrent Effusion into the Knee-joint after Injury. With 11 Illustrations8vo 3/6
- Transactions of the Clinical Society of London. Vol. 37. October 1903 to May 1904. With 7 Plates and 15 Illustrations in the Text ..8vo, net 12/6
- An Inquiry into the Phenomena attending Death by Drowning and the Means of Promoting Resuscitation in the Apparently Drowned. With 2 Diagrams and 26 folding-out Plates.....8vo, net 5/0
- Morris (William). The Earthly Paradise. Parts III. and IV.cr. 8vo, each part net 1/0
- Matthay (Tobias). The Principles of Pianoforte Playing.....cr. 8vo 2/6
- BRITISH MUSEUM PUBLICATIONS:
- Douglas (Sir Robert Kennaway). Catalogue of Japanese Printed Books and Manuscripts in the British Museum acquired during the years 1899-19034to 10/0
- Grafton (Right Rev. Charles C.), S.T.D., Bishop of Fond du Lac. Christian and Catholic.....cr. 8vo, net 10/6
- Henson (H. Hensley), B.D., Canon of Westminster. Moral Discipline in the Christian Churchcr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Robinson (J. Armitage), D.D., Dean of Westminster. Some Thoughts on the Incarnation. cr. 8vo, net /6 and net 1/0
- Radcliffe (Lionel Guy), F.C.S., with the assistance of Sinnatt (Frank Sturdy), F.C.S. A Systematic Course of Practical Organic Chemistry8vo
- Crichton (E.). Household Cookery, Practical Recipes
- Skrine (Francis Henry), F.S.S. The Life of Sir William Wilson Hunter. With 6 Portraits and other Illustrations. Cheap Re-issue.....8vo, net 6/0
- MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO., LTD.
- The Autobiography of Andrew D. White, formerly United States Ambassador at Berlin and St. Petersburg. With numerous Photogravure Portraits. Two volumes. 8vo
- Bury (Prof. J. B.) The Life of St. Patrick, and His Place in History8vo
- Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of J. Henry Short-house. Edited by His Wife. Illustrated. Two volumes.....extra cr. 8vo
- Rathbone (Eleanor). William Rathbone. A Memoir. Illustratedextra cr. 8vo, net 7/6
- The Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay (1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, Charlotte Barrett. New Edition, with Preface and Notes by Austin Dobson. With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations. Vols. III., IV., and V.8vo, each, net 10/6
- Benson (Arthur C.). Edward FitzGerald. English Men of Letters. New Series.....cr. 8vo, net 2/0
- Bradley (A. G.). Captain John Smith. English Men of Action8vo 2/6
- Paul (Herbert). A History of Modern England. Vols. III. and IV.
- The Statesman's Year Book, 1905. Edited by J. Scott Keltie and I. P. A. Renwickcr. 8vo, net 10/6
- Acton (The late Lord). Lectures on the French Revolution and on General Modern History. Two volumes. 8vo
- Fortescue (Hon. J. W.). The British Army, 1783-1802. 8vo, net 4/6
- Ainger (The late Rev. Alfred), M.A., D.D. Lectures and Essays. Two volumes.....cr. 8vo
- Ouida. Helianthus.....cr. 8vo 6/0
- Boldrewood (Rolf). The Last Chance. A Tale of the Golden Westcr. 8vo 6/0
- Broughton (Rhoda). A Waif's Progresscr. 8vo 6/0
- Hewlett (Maurice). Fond Adventures. Tales of the Youth of the Worldcr. 8vo 6/0
- Sheringham (Hugh T.). An Angler's Hours.extra cr. 8vo
- Firth (J. B.). Highways and Byways Series. Derbyshire. With Illustrations by Nelly Erichsen.cr. 8vo 6/0
- The Diary of Samuel Pepys. The Globe Library. With Introduction and Notes by G. Gregory Smith. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Pigou (A. C.), M.A., F.S.S. Principles and Methods of Industrial Peacecr. 8vo
- Rowntree (B. Seebohm). Betting and Gambling.cr. 8vo
- Compatriots' Club Lectures. Edited by L. J. Maxse 8vo
- Avebury (Lord). The Life History of British Flowering Plants8vo
- Dacey (A. V.). Law and Public Opinion in England. 8vo
- Leage (R. W.) B.C.L. Lectures on Roman Private Law cr. 8vo
- Allbutt (T. Clifford), M.D. The Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery
- Skeat (W. W.). Tribes of the Malay Peninsula. With numerous Illustrations. Two volumes8vo
- Roscoe (Sir H. E.), F.R.S., and Schorlemmer (C.), F.R.S. A Treatise on Chemistry. New and Revised Edition. Vol. I. The Non-Metallic Elements. Revised by Dr. H. G. Colman and Dr. A. Harden8vo
- Lockyer (Sir Norman), K.C.B., F.R.S. Stonehenge Astronomically Consideredmedium 8vo
- Schnabel (Carl). A Handbook of Metallurgy. Translated and Edited by Prof. H. Louis. Illustrated. New Edition. Two volumesmedium 8vo
- Curry (Dr. Charles E.). The Elector-Magnetic Theory of Light8vo
- Hadley (H. E.). Magnetism and Electricity for Students globe 8vo
- Herodotus. Books VII.-IX. With Introduction and Notes by R. W. Macan, M.A.....8vo
- Rutherford (Rev. W. G.), LL.D. Scholia Aristophanica. Vol. III.....8vo
- Hort (The late F. J. A.), D.D. Village Sermons. Second Seriescr. 8vo
- Jay (W. M. L.). Christ the Life and Light. Lenten Readings Selected from the Writings of Bishop Phillips Brooks.
- Whitby (Charles J.). Logic of Human Character.cr. 8vo
- Sidgwick (The late Prof. H.). Lectures on the Philosophy of Kant, and other Lectures and Essays..... 8vo

Ritchie (D. G.). Philosophical Studies. Edited by Prof. R. Latta 8vo
Gardner (Prof. Percy). A Grammar of Greek Art. (Handbooks of Archæology and Antiquities).....extra cr. 8vo

SIXPENNY SERIES:

A Disciple. The Faith of a Christian.
Wilson (The Ven. Archdeacon). The Gospel of the Atonement.
Wood (Mrs. Henry). Lord Oakburn's Daughters.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS

Masefield (John). A Mainsail Haul. With a Frontispiece by Jack B. Yeats.
Sackville (Lady Margaret). A Hymn to Dionysus and other Poems.
Firbank (Arthur A. R.). Odette D'Autreverses.
Dillon (Arthur). The Greek Kalends; a Comedy mainly in Verse.
Gibson (Elizabeth). Love's Fugitives.
Maddock (Alice). An Autumn Romance.
Wicksteed (Philip), M.A. Dante: Six Sermons. Sixth Edition.
Newbolt (Henry). Admirals All, and other Verses. Twenty-second Edition.

MR. ANDREW MELROSE

Stewart (A. Morris), M.A. Nativity and Youth of Jesus 6/0
Wright (Rev. T. H.). The Shrine of Faith. Studies in the Human Experience of Our Lord net 3/6
Macmillan (D.), M.A. John Knox..... net 3/6
Meller (Edward), M.A. John Knox: A Biographical Sketch..... 1/0
Knox's "History of the Reformation of Religion in Scotland," with the "Confession" and the "Book of Discipline." Edited and Revised by Cuthbert Lennox royal 4to, net 4/6
Archibald (G. Hamilton). The Power of Play: A Study of the Place and Power of Play in Child Training.... 3/6 de Gasparin (Mme.). The Heavenly Horizons. New edition..... net 2/0
Metcalfe (Cranstoun). Shod with Wool. A Novel 6/
Morgan (J. B.) and Freeman (J. R.). The Spurs of Gold. A Romance of Lollard Days. Illustrated 5/0

MESSRS. METHUEN

Mr. William Shakespear's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. The Third Folio. Reproduced by Photography from Perfect Copies.
Each, net 73/6, net 84/0, and the set net 252/0
Redfern (W. B.). Royal and Historic Gloves and Ancient Shoes 4to, net 42/0
Paston (George). Social Caricatures of the Eighteenth Century..... imperial 4to, net 52/6
Maskell (A.). Ivories..... wide royal 8vo, net 25/0
Heath (Dudley). Miniatures wide royal 8vo, net 25/0
Lucas (E. V.) The Life of Charles Lamb. Two volumes. demy 8vo, net 21/0
The Works of Charles and Mary Lamb. Edited by E. V. Lucas. In seven volumes. Vols. vi. and vii., The Letters..... demy 8vo, each 7/6
Hall (R. N.). Great Zimbabwe..... royal 8vo, net 21/0
William Bodham Donne and His Friends. Edited by Mrs. Barham Johnson demy 8vo, net 10/6
Edwards (M. E. Betham). Home Life in France demy 8vo, net 7/6
Alderson (J. P.). Mr. Asquith demy 8vo, net 7/6
Freer (A. Goodrich). In a Syrian Saddle..... demy 8vo, net 7/6
THE ANTIQUARY'S BOOKS:
Archæology and False Antiquities. By R. Munro, LL.D. demy 8vo, net 7/6
Wall (J. C.). Shrines of British Saints..... demy 8vo, net 7/6
Wrong (George M.). The Earl of Elgin..... demy 8vo, net 7/6
The Poems of John Keats. With an Introduction and Notes by E. de Selincourt, M.A. With a Portrait in Photogravure..... demy 8vo, net 7/6
Lorimer (G. H.). Old Gorgon Graham..... cr. 8vo 6/0
Baring-Gould (S.). A Book of South Wales..... cr. 8vo 6/0
Sladen (Douglas). Sicily cr. 8vo 6/0
Fraser (David). The Far Eastern War cr. 8vo 6/0
Petrie (W. M. Flinders), D.C.L., LL.D. A History of Egypt from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. Fully Illustrated. In six volumes. Vol. III.: Dynasties xix.-xxx..... cr. 8vo 6/0

Atkinson (C. M.). Jeremy Bentham demy 8vo 6/0
Wilde (Oscar). De Profundis cr. 8vo, net, 5s. net. 21/0
Dickinson (Emily). Poems. First Series ... cr. 8vo, net 4/6
Batten (Rev. Loring W.), Ph.D. The Hebrew Prophet. net 3/6
Paterson (W. R.) (Benjamin Swift). Life's Questionings. cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Settle (J. H.), Edited by. Anecdotes of British Soldiers. cr. 8vo, net 3/6
Scott (A. M.). Winston Spencer Churchill cr. 8vo 3/6
TEXTBOOKS OF TECHNOLOGY::
Horth (A. C.). Metal Work (Repoussé)..... cr. 8vo 3/6
LITTLE GUIDES::
Heath (Frank R.). Dorset. Gallican (W. M.) Cheshire. Illustrated by E. Hartley. small pott 8vo, each, net 2s. 6d., net 3/6
LITTLE BOOKS ON ART::
Dryhurst (A. R.). Raphael.
Skipton (H. P. K.). Hoppner.
Peacock (Miss N.). Millet.
Bradley (J. W.); Illuminated MSS.

demy 16mo, each net 2/6
Tileston (Mary W.). Daily Strength for Daily Needs. fcap. 8vo, net 2/6
Shipley (Mary E.). An English Church History for Children. Part I. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
BOOKS ON BUSINESS::
Moran (Clarence G.). The Business of Advertising. Drage (G.). Trade Unions.
Fidler (T. Claxton), M.Inst. C.E. Civil Engineering. Aves (Ernest). The Coal Industry.
Baker (Julian L.), F.I.C., F.C.S. The Brewing Industry. cr. 8vo, each 2/6
Gregory (R.A.). The Vault of Heaven. A Popular Introduction to Astronomy cr. 8vo, 2/6
Zimmern (Antonia), B.Sc. What do we Know concerning Electricity? cr. 8vo, net 1/6

REPRINTS

The Acts of the Apostles. Edited by R. B. Rackham, M.A. Revised and Cheaper Edition demy 8vo 10/6
Dutt (W. A.). The Norfolk Broads. Assisted by numerous Contributors. With Coloured and other Illustrations by Frank Southgate. Revised and Cheaper Edition. cr. 8vo 6/0
Norway (A. H.). Naples. With 25 Coloured Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen cr. 8vo 6/0
Southey (Robert). English Seamen. Vol. II.: Richard Hawkins, Grenville, Essex, and Raleigh..... cr. 8vo 6/0
THE ILLUSTRATED POCKET LIBRARY::
Careless (John). The Old English Squire: A Poem. With 20 Coloured Plates after the style of T. Rowlandson fcap. 8vo, net 3/6
By a Naval Officer. The Adventures of a Post Captain. With 24 Coloured plates by Mr. Williams. fcap. 8vo, net 3/6
Gamonia: or, The Art of Preserving Game; explained and Illustrated by Lawrence Rawstorne, Esq. With 15 Coloured drawings by T. Rawlings fcap. 8vo, net 3/6
Gambado (Geoffrey). An Academy for Grown Horsemen. Illustrated with 27 Coloured plates, and adorned with a Portrait of the Author. fcap. 8vo, net 3/6
THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE::
The Merchant of Venice. Timon of Athens. A Midsummer Night's Dream demy 8vo, each net 2/6
HALF-CROWN LIBRARY::
Collingwood (W. G.), M.A. The Life of John Ruskin. With portraits.
Henley (W. E.). English Lyrics.
The Golden Pomp. A Procession of English Lyrics. Arranged by A. T. Quiller Couch.
Robertson (Sir G. S.), K.C.S.I. Chitral: The Story of a Minor Siege.
Baring-Gould (S.). Strange Survivals and Superstitions.
Baring-Gould (S.). Yorkshire Oddities and Strange Events.
Baring-Gould (S.). An Old English Home.
Ditchfield (P. H.), M.A., F.S.A. English Villages. crown 8vo, each, net 2/6
Dickinson (G. Lowes). The Greek View of Life... cr. 8vo, 2/6
Price (L. L.), M.A. A History of English Political Economy cr. 8vo, 2/6
Dixon (W. M.), M.A. English Poetry from Blake to Browning cr. 8vo 2/6

The Little Quarto Shakespeare. Edited with Introductions and Notes by W. J. Craig. Julius Caesar; Richard III.; Troilus and Cressida; Timon of Athens; Macbeth; Hamlet; King Lear; Othello; Antony and Cleopatra; Cymbeline; Pericles; Venus and Adonis, etc.; Rape of Lucrece, etc.; Sonnets. pott 16mo, each volume net 2/0

METHUEN'S UNIVERSAL LIBRARY::

The Works of William Shakespeare. Ten volumes. Vol. I.—The Tempest; The Two Gentlemen of Verona; The Merry Wives of Windsor; Measure for Measure; The Comedy of Errors. Vol. II.—Much Ado About Nothing; Love's Labour's Lost; A Midsummer Night's Dream; The Merchant of Venice; As You Like It. Vol. III.—The Taming of the Shrew; All's Well that Ends Well; Twelfth Night; The Winter's Tale.

The Pilgrim's Progress. By John Bunyan.

The Novels of Jane Austen. Five volumes. Vol. I.—Sense and Sensibility.

The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius. Translated by R. Graves.

The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. Seven double volumes. The Notes have been revised by J. B. Bury, Litt. D.

The Poems of John Milton. Two volumes. Vol. I.—Paradise Lost. Vol. II.—Miscellaneous Poems and Paradise Regained.

The Prose Works of John Milton. Vol. I.—Eikonoklastes and The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

The English Works of Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam. Vol. I.—Essays and Counsels and the New Atlantis.

The Poems and Plays of Oliver Goldsmith.

Select Works of Edmund Burke. Vol. I.—Reflections on the French Revolution. Vol. II.—Speeches on America.

On The Imitation of Christ. By Thomas à Kempis.

The Works of Ben Jonson. Twelve volumes. Vol. I. The Case is Altered; Every Man in His Humour; Every Man Out of His Humour. The text has been collated by H. C. Hart.

The Works of Henry Fielding. Vol. I. Tom Jones. (Double volume.) Vol. II. Amelia. (Double volume.)

The Poems of Thomas Chatterton. Two volumes. Vol. I. Miscellaneous Poems. Vol. II. The Rowley Poems.

The Plays of Christopher Marlowe. Vol. I. Tamburlane the Great; The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus. Vol. II. The Jew of Malta; Edward the Second; The Massacre at Paris; The Tragedy of Dido.

The Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne. By Gilbert White.

The Complete Angler. Two volumes. Vol. I. By Izaak Walton. Vol. II. Part 2 by Cotton, and Part 3 by Venables.

The Poems of Percy Bysshe Shelley. Four volumes. Vol. I. Alastor; The Daemon of the World; The Revolt of Islam, &c. The text has been revised by C. D. Locock.

The Works of Sir Thomas Browne. Six volumes. Vol. I. Religio Medici and Urn Burial. The text has been collated by A. R. Waller.

Humphrey Clinker. By T. G. Smollett.

Select Works of Sir Thomas More. Vol. I. Utopia and Poems.

The Analogy of Religion, Natural and Revealed. By Joseph Butler, D.D.

On Human Understanding. By John Locke. Three volumes.

The Poems of John Keats. Two volumes. The text has been revised by E. de Selincourt.

The Divine Comedy of Dante. The Italian text edited by Paget Toynbee, M.A., D. Litt. (A double volume.)

EDUCATIONAL BOOKS

Sturch (F.). Solutions to the City and Guilds Questions in Manual Instruction Drawing.....imp. 4to 2/0

METHUEN'S JUNIOR SCHOOL BOOKS::

Clough (W. T.), A.R.G.S. (Lond.). A Junior Magnetism and Electricity.

Dunstan (A. E.), B.Sc. Elementary Experimental Chemistry.

Baron (R. R. N.), M.A. Junior French Prose.

The Gospel According to St. Luke. With an Introduction and Notes by William Williamson, B.A. cr. 8vo, each 1 6

THE BEGINNER'S BOOKS::

Blouet (Henri). Easy French Rhymes.

Wilmot-Buxton (E. M.). Easy Stories from English History.....each fcap. 8vo 1 0

FICTION

James (Henry). The Golden Bowl.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Phillpotts (Eden). The Secret Woman.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Williamson (Mrs. C. N.). The Castle of the Shadows. cr. 8vo 6 0

Oxenham (John). The Gate of the Desert.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Pickthall (M.). Brendle.....cr. 8vo 6 0

White (Percy). The System.....cr. 8vo 6 0

M'Carthy (Justin Huntly). The Dryad.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Croker (Mrs. B. M.). A Volume of Stories.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Norris (W. E.). Barham of Beltana.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Albanesi (E. Maria). Peter a Parasite. A New Edition. cr. 8vo 6 0

Ridge (W. Pett). Mrs. Galer's Business.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Russell (W. Clark). His Island Princess.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Robertson (Frances Forbes). The Taming of the Brute. cr. 8vo 6 0

Le Queux (William). The Valley of the Shadow .cr. 8vo 6 0

Meredith (Ellis). Heart of my Heart.....cr. 8vo 6 0

Keays (H. A. Mitchell). He that Eateth Bread with Me. cr. 8vo 6 0

Barr (Robert). The Tempestuous Petticoatcr. 8vo 6 0

Cotterell (Constance). The Virgin and the Scales.cr. 8vo 6 0

Fitzpatrick (K.). The Weans at Rowallancr. 8vo 6 0

Sergeant (Adeline). The Mystery of the Moat....cr. 8vo 6 0

Long (J. Luther). Madame Butterfly.....cr. 8vo 3 6

METHUEN'S SHILLING NOVELS:

Baring-Gould (S.). Mrs. Curgenven of Curgenven. Barlow (Jane). From the East Unto the West.

Besant (Sir Walter). A Five Years' Tryst.

Waineman (Paul). A Heroine from Finland.

Lawless (Hon. Emily). Maelcho.

Swan (Annie). Love Grown Cold.

Francis (M. E.). Miss Erin.

Sutherland (Duchess of). One Hour and the Next.

Burton (J. Bloundelle). Across the Salt Seas.

Oliphant (Mrs.). The Prodigals.

Balfour (Andrew). Vengeance is Mine.

Barr (Robert). The Victors.

Penny (Mrs. F. A.). A Mixed Marriage.

Hamilton (Lord Ernest). Mary Hamilton.

Glanville (Ernest). The Lost Regiment.

Benson (E. F.). The Capsina.

Goss (C. F.). The Redemption of David Corson.

Findlater (J. H.). A Daughter of Strife.

Phillpotts (Eden). Fancy Free.

Sergeant (Adeline). A Great Lady.

Marsh (Richard). Marvels and Mysteries.

Gallon (Tom). Rickerby's Folly.

Marriott-Watson (H. B.). The Skirts of Happy Chance.

METHUEN'S SIXPENNY NOVELS::

Russell (W. Clark). Abandoned.

Sergeant (Adeline). The Yellow Diamond.

Mann (M. E.). A Lost Estate.

Mathers (Helen). Griff.

Norris (W. E.). Lord Leonard.

Gissing (George). The Crown of Life.

Clifford (Mrs. W. K.). Mrs. Keith's Crime.

THE NOVELS OF ALEXANDRE DUMAS::

Sylvandire; The Convict's Son; The Chevalier d'Harmental.....demy 8vo, each 6

The Castle of Eppstein. Illustrated in Colour by Stewart Orr.

The Vicomte de Bragelonne. Two volumes. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams.

Acte. Illustrated in Colour by Gordon Browne.

Crop-Eared Jacquot; Jane; &c. Illustrated in Colour by Gordon Browne.

Cecile; or, The Wedding Gown. Illustrated in Colour by D. Murray Smith.

The Adventures of Captain Pamphile. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams.

medium 8vo, each, 2/0 to 3/6.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUES

Oman (C. W.), M.A. A History of the Art of War.

Vol. II.: The Middle Ages, from the Fourth to the Fourteenth Century.....demy 8vo, net 10 6

- Hobhouse (L. T.). The Theory of Knowledge. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- The Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes by John Burnet, M.A. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Baring Gould (S.). The Tragedy of the Caesars. royal 8vo, net 10/6
- Hosie (Alexander). Manchuria demy 8vo, net 7/6
- Innes (A. D.), M.A. A Short History of the British in India cr. 8vo 6/0
- Firth (C. H.), M.A. Cromwell's Army: A History of the English Soldier during the Civil Wars, the Commonwealth, and the Protectorate cr. 8vo 6/0
- Durham (Earl of). A Report on Canada demy 8vo, net 4/6
- Lee (Captain Melville). A History of the Police in England cr. 8vo, net 4/6
- George (H. B.), M.A. Battles of English History. cr. 8vo 3/6

MR. MURRAY

- Lyll (Sir Alfred), P.C., K.C.B., D.C.L. The Life of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. With Portraits, &c. two vols. demy 8vo, net 36/0
- Essays by Robert, Marquess of Salisbury. Contributed to the Quarterly Review. Vol. I.—Biographical. Vol. II.—Foreign Affairs. two vols., large cr. 8vo, net 12/0
- Verner (Colonel Willoughby), and Parker (Captain Erasmus Darwin). The Military Life of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. Written under the Authority of the late Duke from Documents in His own Possession. With Portraits medium 8vo 12/0
- Hodgson (The late J. E.), R.A., and Eaton (F. A.), M.A., Secretary of the Royal Academy. The Royal Academy and Its Members. A History from 1768-1820. With Portraits large demy 8vo, net 21/0
- Waddell (Lieut.-Colonel L. A.), C.B., &c. Lhasa and Its Mysteries. An Account of the British Mission to Lhasa, 1903-1904. With Illustrations from special Photographs demy 8vo, net 21/0
- Peel (Hon. George). The Friends of England. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Smith (R. Bosworth). Bird Life and Bird Lore. With Illustrations square demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Tucker (Miss M. A.). England Among the Nations. A Concise History from Early Times to the Accession of Edward VII. With Coloured Maps and Plans. cr. 8vo 2/6
- Grant (Mrs. Colquhoun). A Mother of Czars. A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, Wife of Paul II. and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. demy 8vo, net 12/0
- Oswald (Dr. Eugene), M.A. The Legend of Helen. As Treated by Homer, Goethe and Others cr. 8vo
- Cadogan (Hon. Edward). Makers of Modern History. Napoleon III. Cavour. Bismarck demy 8vo, net 8/0
- Okakura-Kakuzo. The Awakening of Japan. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Innes (Lieut.-General J. J. McLeod), R.E., V.C. The Life and Times of Lieut.-General Sir James Browne, R.E., K.C.B., K.C.S.I. ("Buster Browne"). demy 8vo, net 18/0
- Harris (Rev. Charles), M.A. Pro Fide large cr. 8vo
- The Balkan Question. A Series of Studies of the Present Condition of the Balkans and of European Responsibilities. By Various Writers. Edited by Luigi Villari. With a Map demy 8vo, net 10/6
- The German Official Account of the War in South Africa. Prepared in the Historical Section of the Great General Staff, Berlin. Part II.—The Advance to Pretoria, the Upper Tugela Campaign, &c. &c. With Maps and Plans demy 8vo, net 15/0
- Browne (Mary). The Diary of a Girl in France in 1821. Illustrated by Herself square demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Meyrick (Rev. Frederick), M.A. Memories of Life at Oxford, on the Continent, in Greece, and Elsewhere. demy 8vo
- Scott (Rev. Joseph John). The Life of Christ. A Continuous Narrative in the Words of the Authorised Version of the Four Gospels, with Introduction, Commentary, and Notes. With Map. large cr. 8vo
- Ward (John), F.S.A. Our Sudan: Its Pyramids and Progress. 720 Illustrations cr. 4to, net 21/0
- The Confessions of Lord Byron: A Collection of His Private Opinions of Men and of Matters, Taken from the New and Enlarged Edition of his "Letters and Journals." Arranged by W. A. Lewis Bettany. With Portrait square demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Stratton-Porter (Gene). Freckles large cr. 8vo 6/0

- Wollaston (Arthur N.), C.I.E. Islam: Its History and Adherents. With Illustrations square demy 8vo
- Carman (Bliss). Songs from a Northern Garden. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Carman (Bliss). The Friendship of Art. With Portrait. large cr. 8vo 6/0
- Carman (Bliss). Poems. Limited edition on hand-made paper two vols. folio
- Walters (Henry B.), M.A. A History of Ancient Pottery. Greek, Etruscan and Roman. Based on Samuel Birch's Famous Work. With numerous Illustrations two vols. medium 8vo, net 63/0
- The Hatzfeldt Letters. Letters of Count Paul Hatzfeldt to His Wife, Written from the Headquarters of the King of Prussia, 1870-1871. Translated from the French by J. L. Bashford, M.A. With Illustrations. demy 8vo, net 15/0
- Coggin (Frederick Ernest), M.A. Man's Estate: An Interpretation of Genesis iv. 4-iv. end.
- Merzbacher (Dr. Gottfried). An Expedition Into the Central Tian Shan. Carried Out in the Years 1902-1903. With Illustrations demy 8vo
- Hall (A. D.). An Account of the Rothamsted Experiments. Issued with the Authority of the Lawes Agricultural Trust Committee.
- Duff (Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant), G.C.S.I., F.R.S. Notes from a Diary, 1896-Jan. 23 1901. Seventh Series two vols. cr. 8vo 18/0
- Gomperz (Professor Theodor). The Greek Thinkers. A History of Ancient Philosophy. Vols. II. and III.—Socrates, the Socratics and Plato. Translated by G. G. Berry, M.A. demy 8vo, each net 14/0
- Gore (Charles), D.D., D.C.L. The Permanent Creed and the Christian Idea of Sin. Two Sermons Preached before the University of Oxford large cr. 8vo, net 1/6
- Hutchinson (G. T.). Experiences in South Africa. With many Illustrations square demy 8vo
- Brindle (E.). With Russian and Chunchuse. Experiences of a Newspaper Correspondent in the Russo-Japanese War. With a Map large cr. 8vo
- Bickersteth (Rev. Samuel). Life and Letters of Edward Bickersteth, Late Bishop of South Tokyo. cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Malcolm (Rev. Napier). Five Years in a Persian Town. With Illustrations by Mirza Abri'l Quasimi Yazdi. square demy 8vo
- THE ORIENT PRESS WISDOM OF THE EAST SERIES: pott 16mo, price 1/0 each net, in cloth limp
- The Instructions of Ptah-Hotep. From the Egyptian. Translated with Introduction by Battiscombe G. Gunn.
- Women and Wisdom of Japan. With Introduction by S. Takaishi.
- The Rose Garden of Sa'di. Selected and Rendered from the Persian with Introduction by L. Cranmer-Byng.
- The Parables of Babylon. From the Aramaic. Translated with Introduction by Edwin Collins.
- Idylls from the Bible. With Introduction by Sir George Birdwood, M.D., K.C.I.E., LL.D.
- The Veda of the Hindoos. With Introduction and Selected Extracts by A. R. Kapadia.
- Chamberlin (Thomas C.), and Salisbury (Rollin D.). Geology: Processes and their Results. With Maps, Plans, and numerous other Illustrations. demy 8vo, net 21/0
- Jones (Miss Constance). A Primer of Logic fcap. 8vo 1/0
- Consterdine (A.), and Barnes (A.). The Rudiments of Practical Mathematics. With many Diagrams. fcap. 8vo
- Bickersteth (The late Edward), D.D. Our Heritage in the Church. Papers Written for Divinity Students in Japan large cr. 8vo
- Smith (I. Gregory), M.A. What is Truth? An Attempt to Elucidate First Principles in Belief.
- Consterdine (A.), M.A., and Andrew (S. O.), M.A. Practical Arithmetic. An Introduction to Elementary Mathematics. fcap. 8vo, complete 2/0, or in two parts each 1/0. Edition with Answers (for Teachers only) 2/6
- Tylor (Professor Edward Burnett), D.C.L., F.R.S. Growth and Spread of Culture. With Illustrations. demy 8vo

FICTION

- Hecht (Isobel Fitzroy). A Quixotic Woman large cr. 8vo 6/0
- Tarkington (Booth). In the Arena 6/0
- Vachell (Horace A.). The Hill. Illustrated 6/0
- Deane (Mary). The Little Neighbour 6/0

NEW EDITIONS

- Robinson (W.). The Vegetable Garden. medium 8vo, net 15/0
A Dictionary of Hymnology. Revised, with Additions, by John Julian, D.D. medium 8vo, net 16/0
Rouse (W. H. D.), Litt.D., &c. School Edition of Matthew Arnold's Lectures on Translating Homer.
cr. 8vo
Trotter (Captain Lionel J.). The Life of John Nicholson, Soldier and Administrator. A cheap edition. With Portrait and 3 Maps large cr. 8vo, net 2/6
New Edition of Samuel Smiles' Self-Help Series. Self-
Help. Character. Duty. Thrift each 3/6
Wright (John). The Home Mechanic. medium 8vo, net 6/0
Hall (Theophilus D.), M.A. A School Manual of English Grammar. With Copious Exercises. Revised.
large cr. 8vo
Turnbull (Monica Peveril). A Short Day's Work.
Original Verses, Translations from Heine, and Prose Essays. cr. 8vo
Bishop (Mrs.) (Isabella L. Bird). Hawaiian Archipelago :
The Palm Groves, Coral Reefs and Volcanoes of the Sandwich Islands. With Illustrations,
large cr. 8vo, net 2/6
Bishop (Mrs.) (Isabella L. Bird). Unbeaten Tracks in Japan. Travels in the Interior, Including Visits to Aborigines of Yezo and the Shrine of Nikho. With Illustrations large cr. 8vo, net 2/6
Darwin (Charles). The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. With Illustrations. Two vols.
large cr. 8vo, net 5/0
Elphinstone (Hon. Mountstuart). The History of India. The Hindu and Mahometan Periods. With Notes and Additions by E. B. Cowell, M.A.
demy 8vo, net 15/0
Deutsch (Leo). Sixteen Years in Siberia. The Experiences of a Russian Revolutionist. Translated and Edited by Helen Chisholm. demy 8vo, net 6/0
A Popular Edition of Samuel Smiles' Works. Self-Help Series. Men of Invention and Industry. The Life of a Scottish Naturalist, Thos. Edward. James Nasmyth, Engineer. An Autobiography. Life of Robert Dick : Baker, Geologist, and Botanist. large cr. 8vo, each 3/6
Jose (A. W.). The Growth of the Empire. A Handbook to the History of Greater Britain. With 31 Maps.
cr. 8vo 4/6
Drinkwater (John). A History of the Siege of Gibraltar, 1779-1783. With a Description and Account of that Garrison from the Earliest Times. large cr. 8vo, net 2/6
Stanley (the late Dean). Sinai and Palestine in Connection with their History. With Maps. demy 8vo, net 5/0
Russell (J. B.), B.Sc. (Lond.), F.C.S. Notes on Volumetric Analysis.
Revised and Cheaper Edition of Initia Græca. Part I.
cr. 8vo 2/6

MR. EVELEIGH NASH

- Hume (Martin). The Wives of Henry VIII.
demy 8vo, net 21/0
Wellesley (Colonel the Hon. F. A.). With the Russians in Peace and War. Recollections of a Military Attaché.
demy 8vo 12/6
Hume (Martin). Spanish Influence on English Literature large cr. 8vo 7/6
Joubert (Carl). The Truth about the Tsar. demy 8vo 7/6
Jephson (Lady). Letters to a Débutante . . small cr. 8vo 3/6
Helm (W. J.). Aspects of Balzac cr. 8vo 5/0

FICTION

- Leaf (A.). A Maid at Large. 6/0
Tynan (Katharine). A Daughter of Kings 6/0
Cobb (Thomas). Sophy Bunce 6/0
De Crespigny (Mrs. Philip Champion). The Rose Brocade Roberts (Morley). Captain Balaam of the Cormorant.
cr. 8vo 3/6

GEORGE NEWNES, LTD.

- Warner (P. F.). How We Recovered the Ashes. With an Introduction by C. B. Fry. Cheap Edition net 1/0
The Gardens of Italy. Two Volumes net 63/0
Myers (A. Wallis). The Sportsman's Year Book 3/6
Modern Master Draughtsmen. Drawings of Sir E. J.
Poynter, Bart., P.R.A. By Malcolm Bell. Drawings of David Cox. By T. Martin Wood. large 4to, net 7/6

NEWNES' ART LIBRARY:

- Konody (P. J.). Filippino Lippi 4to, net 3/6
Newnes' Library of Devotion. "The Imitation of Christ," by Thomas à Kempis; and "Lyra Germanica."
net 2/0 and 2/6
Lucy (Henry W.). "Toby, M.P." of "Punch." Later
Peeps at Parliament. Illustrated by F. C. Gould.
demy 8vo, net 7/6
NEWNES' LIBRARY OF THE APPLIED ARTS:
Kendrick (A. F.) English Embroidery.
medium 8vo, net 7/6
NEWNES' LIBRARY OF USEFUL STORIES:
Pycraft (W. P.). The Story of Reptile Life. post 8vo 1/0
NEWNES' COPYRIGHT SIXPENNY NOVELS:
Merrick (Leonard). The Worldlings. Illustrated by
C. E. Brock.
The Technological and Scientific Dictionary. Parts 1 to 8, each, net 1/0

MESSRS. NISBET & CO., LTD.

THE CHURCH PULPIT LIBRARY:

- Durham (the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of). My Brethren and Companions.
Rochester (the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of). Sermons at Southwark.
Derry (the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of). The Intellect and the Heart.
Burnley (the Right Rev. the Bishop of). The Mission of Elijah.
Cr. 8vo, each, net 3/6
Torrey (R. A.). Real Salvation. And Whole-Hearted
Service. large cr. 8vo 3/6
Bourdillon (Rev. Francis), M.A. Our Possessions. Second
Series. cr. 8vo, net 2/0
Harper (Rev. F.). The Year of our Lord. Readings for Every Day in the Year large cr. 8vo
Da Costa (James). Near Communion with Our Heavenly
Father cr. 8vo 2/0
Kennedy (Rev. M. Le B.). John the Baptist. A Volume of Sacred Verse. cr. 8vo, net 3/6
D'Arcy-Irvine (Rev. G. A.). A Volume of Verse. Illustrated. cr. 8vo, net 2/0

FICTION

- Jones (Constance Evan). Caprice. A Study in Emotions.
extra cr. 8vo 6/0
Darlington (H. A.). The Chaunceys. cr. 8vo 2/6
The Golfer's Year Book for 1904-5. Edited by John L.
Low and Bernard Darwin. cr. 8vo, net 3/0

MR. NU'IT

- Keary (C. F.). Bloomsbury. A Story of Modern London.
cr. 8vo 6/0
Rowland (H. C.). To Windward. cr. 8vo 6/0 Alarcon (Pedro). The Three-Cornered Hat (El Sombrero de los Picos). Translated from the Spanish by Lady Goodenough. 3/6
Henry (Arthur). The House in the Woods . . . cr. 8vo, net 4/0
McCracken (Laura). Gubbio: History, Legend, and Archæology. Maps, Plans, and numerous Illustrations.
cr. 8vo 6/0
Medlycott (Right Rev. A. E.). India and the Apostle Thomas. With Map and numerous Illustrations.
demy 8vo 15/0
The English and Scottish Popular Ballads. Edited by Francis James Child. With Introduction by G. L.
Kittredge. demy 8vo, net 1 26
Canfield (H. S.). Fergy the Guide. With Illustrations.
square 8vo, net 6/0
Seymour (Geraldine). Mister Dormouse and other Poems for Children. Printed in red and black at the Ballantine Press. square demy 8vo
Moore (E. Hamilton). Etain and Otinel. A Romance.
Printed at the Ballantyne Press. small 4to Smart (W. S.). James Macpherson. An Episode in Literary History cr. 8vo

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER

- Whyte (Rev. Alexander), D.D. The Walk, Conversation and Character of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 6/0
Butler (Rev. D.), M.A. Eternal Elements in the Christian Faith. post 8vo, net 2/6
Oakley (Rev. E. S.). Holy Himalaya. The Religion, Traditions, and Scenery of the Provinces of Kumaun and Garhwal. Illustrated. large cr. 8vo, net 5/0

- Jerdan (Rev. Charles), M.A., LL.B. Gospel Milk and Honey. Seventy Short Sermons to Young People. large cr. 8vo 5/0
- Wilson (Professor S. Law), M.A., D.D. Helpful Words for Daily Life. large cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Leask (W. Keith), M.A. Dr. Thomas M'Lauchlan. net 5/0
- Carnegie (Andrew), LL.D. James Watt. post 8vo, net 1/6 & net 2/0
- Mitchell (J. Murray), M.A., LL.D. The Great Religions of India. With Map. large cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- MacCulloch (J. A.). The Misty Isle of Skye: Its Scenery, Its People, Its Story. Illustrated. (To Subscribers, net 3/6). net 4/0
- McCarthy (Michael J. F.), B.A. Catholic Ireland and Protestant Scotland: a Contrast. With Portrait. post 8vo, net 0/6 & net 1/0
- Mackie (J. B.), F.S.J. Margaret, Queen and Saint. Illustrated. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Coombs (Jessie). Christ's Ministry of Good Cheer. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Macphail (James M.), M.A., M.D. (Glasg.). Kenneth S. Macdonald, M.A., D.D., Missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, Calcutta. large cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Innes (A. Taylor). John Knox. post 8vo, net 1/0
- Brown (P. Hume), M.A., LL.D. John Knox and his Times. Illustrated. New edition. cr. 8vo, net 1/9
- Guthrie (Charles J.), K.C. John Knox and his House. Illustrated. post 8vo, net 1/0 & net 2/0
- Robson (John), D.D. Hinduism and Christianity. Third edition, revised. cr. 8vo, net 3/6
- Du Plessis (J.), B.A., B.D. A Thousand Miles in the Heart of Africa. A Record of a Visit to the Mission Field of the Boer Church in Central Africa. Illustrated. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Smeaton (Annie). Gordon Ogilvy. large cr. 8vo 6/0
- Horton (Rev. R. F.), M.A., D.D. The Bible a Missionary Book. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Gilmour (Rev. Robert). Samuel Rutherford: a Study, Biographical and somewhat Critical, in the History of the Scottish Covenant. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Jeffrey (James), D.D. The Way of Life: Illustrations of the Book of Proverbs for the Young. post 8vo, net 3/6
- Morrison (Rev. George H.), M.A. Life's Nobler Penalties. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- The Finest Baby in the World. Being Letters from a Man to Himself about his Child. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- The Children of the Forest. A Story of Indian Love. Illustrated. large cr. 8vo 3/6
- Kelman (John), Jun., M.A. The Faith of Robert Louis Stevenson. Fourth Thousand. demy 8vo, net 6/0
- Gray (James M.), D.D. Synthetic Bible Studies; or, Through the Bible in the Year. royal 8vo, net 6/0
- Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. New and Condensed Edition. cr. 8vo, net 1/0 & net 2/0
- Lansdale (Maria Horner). Scotland, Historic and Romantic. With Portraits and Maps. large cr. 8vo, net 7/6
- Stoddart (Jane T.). In Cheviot's Glens. A Border Story. New Edition. 2/6
- NEW EDITION OF ADELINE SERGEANT'S BOOKS:
- No Ambition. 3/6
- Seventy Times Seven. 2/6
- The Luck of the House. 3/6
- MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS
- Noussanne (Henri de). The Kaiser as He Is; or, The Real William II. (Le Véritable Guillaume II.) Translated into English by Walter Littlefield. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Leroy (James A.). The Philippines and the Filipinos. Fully Illustrated. cr. 8vo 5/0
- Merriman (Charles Eustace). A Self-Made Man's Wife. Her Letters to Her Son. Illustrated. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Hancock (H. Irving). The Case for Physical Culture. With full-page Illustrations from Life. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Wack (Henry Wellington). The Romance of Victor Hugo and Juliet Drouet. Illustrated. 8vo
- Moore (Isabel). Talks in a Library, with Laurence Hutton. cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Jerome (William T.). The Liquor Law of New York State. cr. 8vo 3/0
- Carson (Thos. G.). Man's Responsibility, or How and Why the Almighty Introduced Evil upon the Earth. 8vo 3/0
- Wack (Henry Wellington). The Story of the Congo Free State. Fully Illustrated. 8vo, net 15/0
- Trow (Charles E.). The Old Shipmasters of Salem, Mass. Fully Illustrated. 8vo
- Libbey (Prof. Wm.) and Hoskins (Rev. Franklin E.). The Jordan Valley and Petra. Fully Illustrated. 8vo
- Cantlie (James), F.R.C.S. Physical Regeneration. Illustrated. cr. 8vo
- Andrews (Samuel J.). Man and The Incarnation. 8vo
- American Political History, 1763 to 1876. Edited by Prof. James A. Woodburn. 8vo
- "HEROES OF THE REFORMATION" SERIES:
- Pollard (Albert Frederick), M.A., F.R.H.S. Thomas Cranmer and the English Reformation, 1489-1556. Fully Illustrated. cr. 8vo 6 0
- Davis (John P.). Corporations. Two volumes. 8vo
- Teall (F. Horace). The Compounding of English Words. cr. 8vo
- The Trees of North-Eastern America. With Introduction by Nath. L. Britton, A.M., and The Shrubs of North-Eastern America. Charles S. Newhall. New Edition. Two volumes in one. With 232 Illustrations. 8vo
- Dellenbaugh (Frederick S.). Breaking the Wilderness. 8vo
- Goodnow (Frank J.). The Administrative Law of the United States. 8vo
- Kellor (Frances A.). Out of Work. cr. 8vo
- Symonds (Brandreth), M.D. Life Insurance Examinations. 8vo, net 21 0
- Clark (Captain Arthur H.). The History of Yachting. 8vo, net 21 0
- Chancellor (William Estabrook) and Hewes (Fletcher Willis). The United States, 1607-1904. With numerous Illustrations and Maps. In ten volumes. 8vo, per volume, net 15/0
- Dawson (Thomas C.). The South American Republics. Two volumes. Fully Illustrated. cr. 8vo, each 6 0
- Valk (Francis), M.D. Strabismus, or Squint. Latent and Fixed. 8vo, net 7 6
- Steindorff (Georg), Ph.D. The Religion of the Early Egyptians. cr. 8vo 6 0
- Cary (Elizabeth Luther). Ralph Waldo Emerson—Poet and Thinker. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, net 15 0
- Sparks (Prof. Edwin Erle), Ph.D. The United States. Two volumes. cr. 8vo, each 6 0
- Reese (Albert Moore, Ph.D. An Introduction to Vertebrate Embryology Based on the Study of the Frog and the Chick. With 84 Illustrations. cr. 8vo
- Bacon (Edgar Mayhew). Narragansett Bay. Its Historic and Romantic Associations and Picturesque Setting. Illustrated. large 8vo
- RIVERS OF NORTH AMERICA SERIES—Illustrated:
- Hulbert (Archer B.). The Ohio River. 8vo
- Browne (George Waldo). The St. Lawrence River. 8vo, net 18 0
- Bacon (Edwin Monroe). The Connecticut River. 8vo, net 18 0
- Abbott (Katharine M.). Old Paths and Legends of New England. Volume II. Illustrated. 8vo, net 15 0
- Champney (Elizabeth W.). Romance of the French Abbeys. Illustrated. 8vo, net 15 0
- Wheeler (Everett P.). Daniel Webster. The Expounder of the Constitution. 8vo
- Grey (Barton). The Heart's Quest. A Book of Verses. cr. 8vo, net 5 0
- Carryl (Guy Wetmore). The Garden of Years and other Poems. With Frontispiece in colour. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Hubbell (George Allen). Up through Childhood. cr. 8vo, net 6 0
- Steedman (Charles J.). Bucking the Sagebrush. Illustrated. cr. 8vo, net 7 6
- The Constitutional Decisions of John Marshall. Edited by Joseph P. Cotton, jun. Two volumes. 8vo
- Newton (B. Gwernydd). The Ideal Mother. cr. 8vo
- A History of the Parish of Trinity Church in the City of New York. Compiled in large part from original documents, by the order of the Corporation of Trinity Church, and edited by Morgan Dix, S.T.D., D.C.L. (Ninth Rector). To be completed in four volumes, with Portraits and Views. Limited Edition of 750 copies printed from type. large 8vo, cloth, per volume, net 21 0
- Cleveland (Grover). Presidential Problems. 8vo, net 7 6
- Gates (Eleanor). The Biography of a Prairie Girl. cr. 8vo 6 0
- Citations from the Writings of the Fathers. Edited by Prof. L. B. Evans. 8vo
- FICTION
- Driscoll (Clara). The Girl of La Gloria. Illustrated. cr. 8vo 6 0
- Parrish (Randall). My Lady of the North. The Story of a Gray-Jacket. cr. 8vo 6 0
- Dale (Alan). "Wanted a Cook" cr. 8vo 6 0

- Yeats (W. B.). Representative Irish Stories. Two volumes. Illustrated 32mo, net 5/0
Fuller (Anna). A Bookful of Girls. Illustrated ..cr. 8vo 6/0

REPRINTS

- Robinson (Charles Mulford). Modern Civic Art, or the City Made Beautiful. New Edition. With 30 Illustrations 8vo, net 12/6
The Works of Benjamin Franklin. Edited by John Bigelow. In twelve volumes. 8vo, per set, net 252/0
Lamb (Charles). Essays of Elia. Two volumes. Illustrated 32mo, net 5/0
Irving (Washington). The Sketch Book. Two volumes. Illustrated 32mo, net 5/0
Dock (L. L.). Materia Medica for Nursescr. 8vo, net 3/6
Kennan (George). Tent Life in Siberia. With Map. 12mo 5/0
Our Best Societycr. 8vo 6/0
Swift (Jonathan). Gulliver's Travels. Two volumes. Illustrated 32mo, net 5/0
Stetson (Charlotte Perkins). Women and Economics. cr. 8vo 6/0
Scripture (E. W.). Thinking, Feeling, Doing. Illustrated. 8vo
Shelley (Henry C.). The Ayrshire Homes and Haunts of Burns. Illustrated by the author 16mo, net 3/6
Foulke (William D.). Slav or Saxon.cr. 8vo 5/0
Reid (W. Max). The Mohawk Valley. Illustrated. 8vo, net 10/6
Putnam (George Palmer). Tabular Views of Universal History 8vo, net 7/6
"Badsworth." The Laws and Principles of Bridge. 16mo, net 3/6
"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES:
Morris (W. O'Connor). Wellington.
Firth (J. B.). Constantine the Great.
Margoliouth (D. S.). Mahomet and the Rise of Islam.
Harrison (Prof. James A.). George Washington.
Illustrated. Cr. 8vo, 5/- and 6/-
French Classics for English Readers. Edited by Prof. Adolphe Cohn, LL.B., M.A., and Curtis Hidden Page, Ph.D. Rabelais, one volume; Montaigne, one volume; Molière, two volumes; Beaumarchais, one volume; George Sand, one volume 8vo, each, net 7/6
ARIEL BOOKLETS:
Irving (Washington). Rip Van Winkle.
Johnson (Samuel). Rasselas.
Ferguson (Samuel). Father Tom and the Pope.
Winthrop (Theodore). Love and Skates.
32mo. Each, net, 1/6

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY

- Nichols (Rev. John Broadhurst). The Advance of Romanism in England: A Statement and an Appeal. The Anti-Papal Library No. 5cr. 8vo 2/6
The Silent Preacher Scripture Roll 1/6
The Bible and Its Contents. A Diagram Card, per dozen Bible Books Diagrams. Illustrating the Old and New Testaments.per pair, 2/0 and 1/0

TRACTS

- The Torrey-Alexander Mission. Will it Mean a Revival? By Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A.per 100 2/6
The Torrey-Alexander Mission. What will it do for you? By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.per 100 2/6
What do We Believe? By Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, B.D.per 100 3/0
Why do I Believe? By Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, B.D.per 100 3/0
All. By Rev. W. Bryan Brown, M.A. Illustrated. Per 100 2/0
Maria's Sunday Out. By Lena Tyack. Illustrated. Per 100 4/0
Old Emma; or the Empty Canister. By Lucy A. Bennett. Illustratedper 100 2/0
If I had more money and more ease I should be more contented. Illustrated.per 100 1/0
Don't, Lad, Don't. Illustratedper 100 8/8
How Do You Know? By M. C. France. Illustrated. per 100 8/8
Never Really Unhappy. By Matthew Grant. Illustrated. Per 100 8/8
The Difference; What Made It? By Rev. A. Hardy. Illustratedper 100 8/8

- Bullen (Frank T.), F.R.G.S. Creatures of the Sea, being the Life Stories of some Sea Birds, Beasts and Fishes. With Forty Illustrations by Theo. Carreras. demy 8vo 7/6

NEW EDITIONS

- Robertson (Mrs.) Christie Redfern's Troubles. The Girl's Library, No. 15large cr. 8vo 2/0
Giberne (Agnes). Gwendoline. The Girl's Library, No. 16large cr. 8vo 2/0
Lovett (Richard), M.A. James Chalmers; His Autobiography and Letters.large cr. 8vo, net 3/6 and net 6/6
Stretton (Hesba). No Place Like Home. Shilling Story Book Series, No. 40cr. 8vo 1/0
Palgrave (Mary E.). How Dick Found His Sea-Legs. Enlarged Shilling Series, No. 40cr. 8vo 1/0
Hellis (Nellie). Higher Up. Enlarged Shilling Series, No. 41cr. 8vo 1/0
Palgrave (Mary E.). Between Two Opinions. Bright Books for Family Reading, No. 9cr. 8vo 1/6
Thorn (Margaret). The Bond of Love. Illustrated. Home and Fireside Series, No. 6cr. 8vo 1/0

THE FLEMING H. REVELL CO.

- Lorenz (Daniel E.). The Mediterranean Traveller. A Practical up-to-date Guide-Book. Illustrations and Maps. net 7/6
Gulick (Sidney L.), D.D. The White Peril in the Far East. A Study of the ethical and international significance of the Russo-Japanese War.net 3/6
Grenfell (Wilfred T.), M.D. The Harvest of the Sea. A Tale of both sides of the Atlantic. Illustrated.net 3/6
Brain (Belle M.) All about Japan. A Young People's History of Japan.net 2/6
Sheldon (Charles M.). The Heart of the World. A Story of Christian Socialism.net 3/6
Sell (H. T.), D.D. Studies in the Life of the Christian. His Faith and His Service.net 1/6
Wood (Lydia C.). For a Free Conscience. A Story of the Seventeenth Century.net 4/6
Lawrance (Marion). How to Conduct a Sunday School. net 3/6
Talling (Marshall P.). Inter-Communion with God. An exploration of Spiritual Power, as manifested in intercourse and co-operation between God and man.net 3/6
Gunsaulus (F. W.), D.D. Paths to Power.net 3/6
Moorehead (Prof. William G.). Outline Studies in the New Testament—Philippians to Hebrews.net 3/6
Brown (Arthur J.), D.D. New Forces in Old China. Illustrated.net 5/-
What Frances Willard Said. Edited by Anna A. Gordon. net 2/6
McClure (J. C. K.), D.D. Loyalty: The Soul of Religion. net 3/6

NEW EDITIONS

- Davis (Rev. J. D.), D.D. A Maker of New Japan. The Life of Joseph Hardy Neesima, LL.D., President of Doshisha University, Kyoto. Third edition.net 3/-
Morgan (G. Campbell). Hidden Years in Nazareth.net -/9

MESSRS. GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS

- Pepys' Diary. With Notes by Lord Braybrooke; a verbatim reprint of the edition of 1848-9, with copious Index 5/0
Evelyn's Diary and Correspondence. Edited by William Bray 5/0
Hamilton (Anthony). Memoirs of Gramont. With Etchings 5/0
Stepniak. The Russian Peasantry: their Agrarian Condition, Social Life, and Religion. A new edition at a popular price.
DICTIONARIES:
Glossary of Words, Phrases, Names and Allusions. By Archdeacon Nares. Edited by O. J. Halliwell and T. Wright.net 7/6
Halliwell (J. O.). Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words, Obsolete, Phrases, &c. New edition*net* 7/6
Shakespearean Quotations, with Parallel Passages and Indication of Common Misquotations.net 1/0
Phrases and Proverbial Sayings*net* 1/0
Pseudonyms and Nicknames: A Miniature Dictionary net 1/0
Bower (Prof.). Economic Terms: A Miniature Dictionary.net 1/0
Miniature Dictionary of Prose Quotations*net* 1/0

FICTION

- Boccaccio's Decameron. Translated by J. M. Rigg, with J. Addington Symonds's Essay on "Boccaccio as Man and Author" net 5/0
- Marguerite of Navarre. The Heptameron: or, Tales and Novels. Translated by Arthur Machen. The complete text, including the Verse (rendered into English verse)..... net 5/0
- Behn (Mrs. Aphra). Oroonoko, The Wandering Beauty, with other Novels and Novelettes net 5/0
- Brooke (Henry). The Fool of Quality. With Charles Kingsley's Introduction and a Life of Brooke, by E. A. Baker, M.A..... net 5/0
- Several Additional Volumes in the "Half-Forgotten Books" Series. Edited by E. A. Baker
- Magnus (L. A.). A Japanese Utopia..... 1/0
- Bull (A. E.). A Martyr to the Law..... 1/0

POETRY

- THE MUSES' LIBRARY:
- Rossetti (D. G.). Early Italian Poets.
Blake's Poetical Works. Edited by W. B. Yeats.
Poetical Works of Coventry Patmore. With an Introduction by Alice Meynell.
Procter (Adelaide Ann). Legends and Lyrics.
Hall (Joseph). Satires. Edited by S. W. Singer. With the Illustrations of Thomas Warton, and a Glossarial Index.
James Thomson's Poetical Works. With Introduction by Edmund Gosse.
Poetical Works of Johnson, Goldsmith, Gray and Collins. With Introduction and Notes by Colonel F. M. Ward.
Crayshaw's Poetical Works. Introduction by Canon Beeching; Notes &c. by J. R. Tutin.
net 1/0 each and 2/0 each.
- Poets and Poetry of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by J. H. Miles, twelve vols.: Kingsley to Thomson; William Morris to Buchanan; Robert Bridges with other Contemporary Writers; Humorous Poets and Poetry; Joanna Baillie to Jean Ingelow; Christina Rossetti to Katharine Tynan; James Montgomery to Charles Bell; A. L. Waring to the End each net 1/6 and net 2/6

JUVENILE BOOKS

- ONE-SYLLABLE BOOKS:
- Pilgrim's Progress.
Tales from Andersen & Grimm.
Æsop's Fables.
Life of Christ.
Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes and Tales.
1/6 each.
- Ballantyne (R. M.). The Coral Island. Illustrated by F. C. Tilney 2/6
- SPORTS AND PASTIMES:
- Sapte (W.). Jun. History of the Test Matches between Australia and England /6
- Hoffmann (Prof.). Every Boy's Book of Sport and Pastime. Revised Edition 5/0
- Whitley (Mrs. Mary). Every Girl's Book of Sport, Occupation and Pastime. Revised Edition. Illustrated 5/0
- Blanchard (C. T.). Classified Chess Games. 4 vols. Vol. II. each 1/0

SCIENCE

- White (G.). Practical Course of Instruction in Personal Magnetism, Telepathy, and Hypnotism..... net 3/6
- Clive (Holland). How to Use a Camera. With 16 Full-page Plates 1/0
- Scharlieb (Dr. Mary), M.D. A Woman's Word to Women 1/0
- Scharlieb (Dr. Mary), M.D. The Young Mother's Guide to the Health and Management of her Children..... 1/0

PHILOSOPHY

- Bacon's Complete Philosophical Works, with the "Essays," "New Atlantis," and other works. Reprinted from the Texts and Translations, with the Notes and Prefaces of Spedding and Ellis. Re-edited by J. M. Robertson 5/0
- Hallevi (Abul-Hazan Judah). Al Khazari. Translated, with an Introduction, from the Arabic by H. Hirschfeld about 6/0

- Biese (Professor). Development of the Feeling for Nature in the Middle Ages about 6/0

PHILOLOGY

- Trench's English, Past and Present. Edited by the Rev. Dr. Smythe Palmer..... 2/6
- Trench's Proverbs and their Lessons. Edited by the Rev. Dr. Smythe Palmer..... 2/6

ART BOOKS

- THE PHOTOGRAVURE SERIES:
- Milton's Paradise Lost. With 12 Photogravures after William Strang.
- Blair's Grave. With 12 Photogravures after William Blake.
- Aucassin and Nicolette. Translated by Andrew Lang. With 12 Photogravures after Gilbert James.
- Ruth and Esther. With 12 Photogravures after Gilbert James.

Each net 3/6.

NEW UNIVERSAL LIBRARY:

- Matthew Arnold's On Translating Homer, with F. W. Newman's "Homeric Translation in Theory and Practice," and Arnold's reply thereto.
- George Brimley's Essays. Edited by W. G. Clark, M.A.
- Coleridge's Aids to Reflection. Edited by Thomas Fenby.
- The Spectator. Edited by G. A. Aitken. Six volumes.
- Mill (J. S.). Dissertations and Discussions. Series I.
- Mill (J. S.). Utilitarianism. With an Index (now first added).
- Morris (Sir Lewis). Poems. Authorised Selection.
- Goldsmith's Citizen of the World.
- Victor Hugo's William Shakespeare.
- Jeffrey's Essays from the "Edinburgh Review"—(1) English Poets and Poetry.
- Lessing's Laocoon. Translated, with Notes by Sir Robert Phillimore, Bart.
- Froude's Essays. Vol. I. Subsequently included in his Short Studies on Great Subjects.
- Mrs. Gaskell's Cranford; Life of Charlotte Bronte.
- A. J. & J. C. Hare's Guesses at Truth.
- Holmes's Autocrat of the Breakfast Table; Poet at the Breakfast Table; Professor at the Breakfast Table; Elsie Venner.
- Tom Hughes's Tom Brown at Oxford; Tom Brown's Schooldays.
- Hume's Essays.
- The Ingoldsby Legends.
- Johnson's Rasselas.
- Lamb's Essays of Elia.
- Leopardi's Dialogues. Translated by the late James Thomson and edited by Bertram Dobell.
- Peacock's Novels (two volumes). Vol. I.: Headlong Hall, Melincourt, Nightmare Abbey, and Maid Marian.
- Butler's Sermons.
- Carlyle's Heroes and Hero-Worship; Sartor Resartus.
- Cowley's Essays.
- Mrs. Henry Wood's The Channings.
- And Works by the Brontë Sisters, Defoe, Swift, Hazlitt, Pope, Burke, George Eliot, Hume, Kingsley, Thackeray, Edward FitzGerald, and many others.

Each net 1/0 and net 2/0.

MESSRS. SANDS & CO., LTD.

- Spillman (Joseph). Valiant and True. Illustrated. cr. 8vo 6/0
- Binstead (Arthur) ("Pitcher"). Mopfair. Some elegant extracts from the private correspondence of Lady Viola Drumcree, the fatherless daughter of Feodorovna, Countess of Chertsey..... cr. 8vo 3/6
- Mediaeval Stories. Translated from the Swedish of Professor Schück by W. F. Harvey. Illustrated. A new edition. cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Doyle (Mina) (Mrs. Chas. W. Young). The Little Colonel. A new edition..... 3/6
- Pugh (Edwin) and Burchett (Godfrey). The Heritage. A new edition. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Price (Richard Lloyd). Dog Tales. A new edition. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- THE BANK EDITION OF POPULAR POETS:
- The Poetical Works of Robert Burns; the Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott; the Poetical Works of Milton; the Poetical Works of Thomas Moore; the

Poetical Works of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow ; the Poetical Works of Lord Byron.....each, net 1/6

EDUCATIONAL

De Pothonier (H. M. Sligo). "Qu'est-ce que cela veut dire?"net 3/6

HISTORICAL WORKS

Maxwell-Scott (Hon. Mrs.). The Tragedy of Fotheringay.
A new edition.....cr. 8vo net 3/6

The Chronicle of the English Augustinian Canonesses of St. Monica's at Louvain (now St. Augustine's Priory at Newton Abbot in Devon), 1548-1625. Edited, with Notes and additions, by Dom Adam Hamilton, O.S.B.
Illustrated.....demy 8vo, net 10/6

The Angel of Syon. The Life and Martyrdom of Blessed Richard Reynolds, Bridgettine Monk of Syon. Edited by Dom Adam Hamilton, O.S.B. Illustrated.
cr. 8vo, net 3/6

Hamilton (C. J.). Notable Irishwomen. Illustrated.
cr. 8vo, net 3/6

The First Seven Centuries of Scottish Christianity. A Plea for Re-union with our Forefathers. Based on Original Documents: Patrician, Columban, and Conciliar. By the Rev. M. Power, S.J.

RELIGIOUS WORKS

Lucas (Herbert), S.J. In the Morning of Life...cr. 8vo, net 3/6

Instaurare Omnia in Deo. A Sermon preached on the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, December 8,
1904, by the Rev. Joseph Bampton, S.J. net 1/3

Harting (J. H.). Catholic London Missions. From the Reformation to the year 1850. Illustrated. A new edition.demy 8vo 5/0

Steele (F. M.). The Convents of Great Britain. Illustrated. A cheaper edition.demy 8vo 5/0

Gray (John). Ad Matrem.....net 1/0 & net 1/6

Pesch (Tillman), S.J. The Catholic's Manual. net 2/6 & net 3/6

MESSRS. SEELEY & CO., LTD.

Weldon (Right Rev. J. E. C.), late Bishop of Calcutta.
The Hope of Immortality. Cheap Edition ...cr. 8vo 3/6

Stevenson (R. L.). Edinburgh. Pocket Edition. With
Frontispiece.....fcap. 8vo, net 2/- and net 3/0

Church (Rev. A. J.). The Story of the Iliad. With Illustrations after Flaxman. Cheap Edition.....cr. 8vo 1/0

Church (Rev. A. J.). The Story of the Odyssey.
With Illustrations after Flaxman. Cheap Edition
cr. 8vo, 1/0

ILLUSTRATED POCKET LIBRARY:

Russell (W. Clark) and others. The British Seas.
Illustrated.

Lang (Andrew). Oxford. Illustrated by A. Brunet
Debaines and H. Toussaint.

Cr. 8vo, 2/- net and 3/- net.

SIXPENNY SERIES:

Marshall (Emma). Penshurst Castle, in the days of Sir Philip Sidney.

Marshall (Emma). Life's Aftermath.

Church (A. J.). The Story of the Iliad.

Church (A. J.). The Story of the Odyssey.

THE OLIVE LIBRARY:

Charlesworth (Miss). England's Yeomen. extra cr. 8vo 2/6

THE PINK LIBRARY:

Seeley (Mary). The World Before the Flood. Illustrated.....cr. 8vo 1/6

MESSRS. SKEFFINGTON & SON

Mortimer (Rev. Dr. A. G.). The Last Discourses of Our Lord, in Forty Addresses or Readings for the Forty Days of Lent.....cr. 8vo, net 5/0

Purchase (Rev. Edward J.), M.A. The Pathway of the Tempted. A Series of Lent Addresses and Instructions upon phases of Christian Life and Duty...cr. 8vo 3/6

Porritt (Norman), M.R.C.S. Religion and Health: their Mutual Relationship and Influence.....cr. 8vo 3/6

Young (Rev. Philip), M.A. In the Light of His Coming.
net 5/0

Anderson-Morhead (A. E. M.). A Pioneer and Founder.
Reminiscences of some who knew Robert Gray, D.D.,
First Bishop of Cape Town.....net 5/0

May (Rev. G. Lacey). Our Father. A Simple Explanation of the Lord's Prayer.....net 1/0

Bliss (Rev. W. H.), M.A. Consistent Profession. A Part of our Christian Duty. Being three New Sermons on the Lord's Day ; Public Worship ; Holy Communion.
net 1/0

Burnside (Rev. Frederick). Village Sermons...cr. 8vo, net 2/6

Galloway (Late Rev. J. F.). The Rest and the Feast. A Series of Twelve Sermons 2/0

Fenwick (Elizabeth). Victor the Chorister. A Story of the Days of St. Ambrose.....cr. 8vo 2/6

Legge (Rev. Hugh). From Plunkett's Pavilion to Plettenberg Bay 2/6

Meyrick (Lloyd). Vicar Denior 3/6

Gurney (The late Rev. Alfred). Essays and Addresses .. 2/6

Johnston (Rev. R. E.) Catechising Notes net 2/0

Hardern (Dr. T. B.). Manual of the Collects 3/6

Wilmot-Buxton (Rev. H. J.). A new volume..... 5/0

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & CO.

Coke (Hon. Henry J.). Tracks of a Rolling Stone.
sm. demy 8vo, net 10/6

West (Rt. Hon. Sir Algernon), K.C.B. Memoir of Sir Henry Keppel, G.C.B., Admiral of the Fleet.
demy 8vo

Bradley-Birt (F. B.), B.A. The Story of an Indian Upland. With 20 full-page Illustrationsdemy 8vo.

Garnett (Richard), C.B., LL.D. A Memoir of William Johnson Foxdemy 8vo

Millington (Powell). To Lhasa at Lastcr. 8vo, net 3/6

Gaskell (Lady Catherine Milnes). Spring in a Shropshire
Abbey. With 16 full-page Illustrations...sm. demy 8vo

Atlay (J. B.). The Victorian Chancellors. Volume I.
With portraits.....demy 8vo

Crowe (Major J. H. V.). R.A. Military Problems in Manœuvre Tactics, with Solutions, for Officers of all Arms. After the German of Major Hoppenstedt.
With Maps and a Sketchsm. demy 8vo, net 6/0

Dodd (Catherine I.). A Vagrant Englishwoman...cr. 8vo, 6/0

The Poetical Works of Robert Bridges. Vol. 6. Poems
&c.sm. cr. 8vo 6/0

Doyle (A. Conan) The Tragedy of the "Korosko."
cr. 8vo 3/6

Doyle (A. Conan). The Green Flagcr. 8vo 3/6

Waddington (Mary King). Italian Letters of a Diplomat's
Wife. With 24 Portraits, Views, &c.....8vo, net 10/6

Furley (Sir John). In Peace and War. Autobiographical
Sketches. With a Portraitdemy 8vo, net 10/6

Mayo (Walter H.). Trinity House, London, Past and Present. With a Frontispiece and other Illustrations crown 8vo, net 5/0

de la Pasture (Mrs. Henry). Peter's Mothercr. 8vo 6/0

Ward (Mrs. Humphry). The Marriage of William Ashe.
cr. 8vo 6/0

Bradby (G. F.) The Marquis's Eyecr. 8vo 6/0

Castle (Agnes and Egerton). Rose of the World...cr. 8vo 6 0

S. P. C. K.

The Official Year-Book of the Church of England for 1905.....demy 8vo, 3/0 and 4/0

Christian Missions in the Far East. Addresses on the subject delivered by the Right Rev. H. H. Montgomery, D.D., and Eugene Stock, Esq.
small post 8vo /6

Holy Week in Jerusalem in the Fourth Century. Being a translation of the portion of the Perigrinatio Etheriæ (Silviæ) printed in Msgr. Duchesne's
"Christian Worship"demy 8vo /4

Materialism. Part of an Address given to the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh. By Sir James
Crichton-Browne, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. small post 8vo /2

Work in the Vineyard. A series of Papers for the Newly Confirmed. Edited by Rev. W. J. Ferrar, M.A. small post 8vo, /6 and 1/0

Preparation for Confirmation. Rev. A. Fairbanks, M.A.
Small post 8vo /1

John Bunyan and the "Pilgrim's Progress." By the Rev. C. E. Bolam. With a Preface by the Very Rev.
E. C. Wickham, D.D.small post 8vo /6

"Nothing to Pay." And other Health Lectures. By
M. E. Curtissmall post 8vo, /6 and 1/0

Poverty ; A Social Disease. By the Rev. W. E. Chadwick, M.A., B.Sc.small post 8vo /2

Memento. Ad. Clerum. A Solemn Reminder. By E. A. C. royal 32mo /6

Portfolio of English Cathedrals. With Historical and

- Architectural Notes by Arnold Fairbairns. No. 4, St. Albans 1/0
- An Old-Catholic View of Confession. Being the pamphlet "Compulsory Auricular Confession as practised in the Church of Rome a human invention," by Eduard Herzog, D.D., Bishop of the Christian-Catholic Church of Switzerland, translated, with the author's permission, by G. C. Richards, M.A. demy 8vo /6
- The Law of the Concordat. (Loi du Germinal, an. x.) (April 8, 1802). Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by L. G. Wickham Legg, M.A. small post 8vo /4
- Binandle. Grammar and Dictionary 4to 10/6
- Jolah. Vocabulary fcp. 8vo 1/0
- Swahili. Geography of Africa fcap. 8vo /9
- Wedau. Portions of the Book of Common Prayer, fcap. 8vo, /3; Reading Book fcap. 8vo /4
- Biblical Criticism. By the late Right Rev. William Stubbs, D.D. small post 8vo /6
- The Example of His Patience. Holy Week Addresses on the Collect for Palm Sunday. By the Ven. Archdeacon G. R. Wynne, D.D. small post 8vo 1/6
- The Holy Land, and how a Knowledge of it helps to confirm our Faith. An Address by General Sir Charles Warren, R.E., F.R.S. small post 8vo 2
- John Wesley and the Anglo-Catholic Revival. By G. W. Taylor. small post 8vo /2

NEW EDITIONS

- The Will of God. And other Devotional Works. The late Deaconess Madeleine Worsley. small post 8vo 1/6
- Religion in Japan. Shintoism, Buddhism, and Christianity. By the Rev. G. A. Corbold, B.A. With several Illustrations. New Edition. small post 8vo 1/6
- Daily Service for Christian Households. By the late Rev. H. Stobart, M.A. imp. 32mo. 1/0
- Malagasy. Portions of the Book of Common Prayer. Revised Edition. For use in the Diocese of Madagascar fcp. 8vo 1/4
- Mukawa. Portions of the Book of Common Prayer, fcp. 8vo, 2/0; Psalm and Hymn Book, fcap. 8vo, /8; Preparation for Holy Communion, fcap. 8vo, /3; Catechism Book fcp. 8vo, /6
- Nupe. Reading Book. Revised Edition. fcap. 8vo /6

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

- Bryson (Mrs.), of Tientsin. The Land of the Pigtail. Illustrated 2/0

MESSRS. SWAN, SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.

- Wundt (Prof. W.). The Principles of Physiological Psychology. A Translation of the Fifth and wholly Rewritten (1902-3) German Edition by Prof. E. B. Titchener, M.A. In three Vols. Vol. I. Illustrated. demy 8vo 12/0
- Vinogradoff (Prof. P.). The Growth of the English Manor. demy 8vo 10/6
- Clapperton (J. H.). A Vision of the Future. cr. 8vo 3/6
- Pitt-Lewis (George), K.C., Ex-M.P. The Shakespeare Story. cr. 8vo, net 1/6
- Nicholson (J. S.), M.A., D.Sc. The History of the English Corn Laws. cr. 8vo 2/6
- Frances Power Cobbe's Autobiography, New edition. crown 8vo 7/6
- Sedgwick (Adam), M.A. The Student's Text-book of Zoology demy 8vo 18/0

MESSRS. W. THACKER & CO.

- James (Capt. S. P.), M.B. (Lond.), and Liston (Capt. W. Glen), I.M.S. A Monograph of the Anopheles Mosquitoes of India. With 15 Full-page Coloured Plates, 64 Illustrations in half-tone (on 15 Plates), a Map, and 30 Diagrams and Illustrations in the Text. 4to, net 24/0
- Buck (E. J.). Simla: Past and Present net 18/0
- Sandberg (Graham), B.A. The Exploration of Thibet. The History and Particulars from 1623 to 1904. With Maps of Thibet and Plan of the Sacred City of Lhasa. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Shadwell (Major L. J.), P.S.C., and Ewbank (Major W.) R.E. Fortification as Applied to Schemes. demy 8vo, net 9/0
- Shadwell (Major L. J.), P.S.C. Notes, Questions, and Answers on Military Law, Manual of Military Law and Indian Articles of War. Specially prepared for Promotion Examinations demy 8vo, net 8/6

- The Naval Pocket-Book, 1905. Edited by Sir W. Laird Clowes. Tenth year of issue 16mo, net 7/6
- The Indian Directory, 1905 royal 8vo, net 36/0
- A Directory of the Chief Industries of India and Ceylon, 1905. royal 8vo, net 9/0

NEW EDITIONS

- Le Messurier (Col. A.), C.I.E., F.Z.S., F.G.S. The Game Shore and Water Birds of India. With additional references to their allied species in other parts of the world. Illustrated. Fourth edition. royal 8vo, net 21/0
- Cameron (J.), F.L.S. Firminger's Manual of Gardening for Bengal, Upper and Southern India. Revised. Imp. 16mo, net 15/0
- Cowell (Herbert), Barrister-at-Law. The History and Constitution of the Courts and Legislative Authorities in India demy 8vo Rs.6
- O'Donoghue (Mrs. Power). Riding for Ladies. With Hints on the Stable. With 68 Illustrations by A. Chantrey Corbould imperial 16mo, net 8/6

MESSRS. A. TREHERNE & CO., LTD.

- Kennedy (Bart). Slavery cr. 8vo 6/0
- Coleridge (Hon. Gilbert). An Instinctive Criminal. 6/0
- Killick (Miss Hallie). Life's Orchestra. Second Edition cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Leith (E. S.). The Book of the Country Cottage. Illustrated cr. 8vo, net 1/0 and net 1/6
- Archer (Ethel). The Book of Plain Cooking. cr. 8vo, net 1/0
- Burn (Rev. J. H.). Children's Answers. cr. 8vo, net 2/0
- Coleman (John). Charles Reade as I knew Him. Popular Edition net 6/0
- Cowie (Archibald). The Sea Services of the Empire as Fields for Employment. demy 8vo, net 10/6
- THE VAGABOND'S LIBRARY:
Carpenter. The Simplification of Life. net 1/6 and net 2/6
- THE POETS OF THE RENAISSANCE:
Surrey, Wyatt, and Sackville; Spenser; Marlowe and Greene. net 1/6 and net 2/6
- The Waistcoat-Pocket Shakespeare. Julius Caesar; Twelfth Night; Taming of the Shrew; Richard II.; Two Gentlemen of Verona; Love's Labour Lost. per volume, net 1/0

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN

- Holyoake (George Jacob). Bygones Worth Remembering. Two vols. demy 8vo 21/0
- Cobden as a Citizen. A Chapter in Manchester History. Being a facsimile of Cobden's pamphlet, "Incorporate Your Borough!", with an Introduction and a complete Cobden Bibliography, by William E. A. Axon.
- Wilkinson (Kosmo). The Personal Story of the Upper House demy 8vo 16/0
- Jusserand (J. J.). A Literary History of the English People. Vol. II. demy 8vo, net 12/6
- Birch (Walter de Gray), LL.D., F.S.A. History of Scottish Seals, from the Eleventh to the Seventeenth Century. With many Illustrations. Vol. I. The Royal Seals of Scotland cr. 4to, net 12/6
- Also an Edition on large paper net 21/0
- Fitzgerald (Percy), F.S.A. Lady Jean: The Romance of the Great Douglas Cause. With Illustrations. demy 8vo, net 12/0
- Brooks (Geraldine). Dames and Daughters of the French Court. With Illustrations. large cr. 8vo, net 8/6
- Macphail (Andrew). Essays in Puritanism cr. 8vo 6/0
- Mitchell (S. Weir). The Youth of Washington: Told in the Form of an Autobiography. cr. 8vo 6/0
- STORY OF THE NATIONS SERIES:
Jane (L. Cecil). The Coming of Parliament. (England from 1350 to 1660.) large cr. 8vo, 5/0
- Shuckburgh (E. S.), Litt.D. The Story of Greece from the Earliest Times to A.D. 14. large cr. 8vo, 5/0
- Zimmern (Alice). Old Tales from Rome. cr. 8vo, 5/0
- Rowbotham (F. Jameson). Tales from Plutarch. cr. 8vo, 5/0
- "LIVES WORTH LIVING" SERIES:
Pike (G. Holden). Wesley and His Preachers: Their Conquest of Britain. cr. 8vo, 3/6
- Jusserand (J. J.). English Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages (XIVth Century). large cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- Villari (Professor Pasquale). The History of Florence (for the First Two Centuries). large cr. 8vo, net 2/6
- WELSH LIBRARY:
Edwards (Owen M.). A Short History of Wales. 2/0, and 1/0

- Harvie-Brown (J. A.), F.R.S.E., F.Z.S. Travels of a Naturalist in Northern Europe. 4 Maps and many Illustrations. Two vols.royal 8vo, on subscription, net 42/0, on publication 63/0
- Turner (Samuel). Siberia: A Record of Travel, Exploration, and Climbing. With 100 Illustrations and 2 Maps.demy 8vo, net 21/0
- Villari (Luigi). Russia Under the Great Shadow. With Illustrations.demy 8vo, net 10/6
- Loeb (Jacques). Studies in General Physiology. With numerous Illustrations. Two vols.royal 8vo, net 31/6
- Sollas (W. J.), LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S. The Age of the Earth, and other Geological Studies. Illustrated.demy 8vo 10/6
- Flammarion (Camille). Astronomy for Amateurs. With 84 Illustrations. Authorised Translation by Frances A. Welby.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Westell (W. Percival), M.B.O.U., F.R.H.S., &c. British Bird Life. With over 50 Illustrations. With an Introduction by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart.large cr. 8vo 5/0
- Snell (F. C.). The Camera in the Fields. A Practical Guide to Nature Photography. With 80 Illustrations.cr. 8vo 5/0
- Beavan (Arthur H.). Birds I Have Known.cr. 8vo 5/0
- "BRIGHTWEN" SERIES:
Walpole-Bond (J. A.). Bird Life in Wild Wales. With 60 Illustrations from Photographs by Oliver G. Pike. Cheap edition.cloth, cr. 8vo 2/0

FICTION

- THE FIRST NOVEL LIBRARY:
Clyde (Constance). A Pagan's Love.cr. 8vo 6/0
- RED CLOTH LIBRARY:
Montgomery (K. L.). Major Weir.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Hobbes (John Oliver). The Flute of Pan.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Russell (W. Clark). The Yarn of Old Harbour Town, A Sea Romance.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Roosevelt (Florence). The Siren's Net.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Barr (Amelia E.). A Song of a single Note.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Corkran (Henriette). Lucie and I: An Imaginary Autobiography.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Cleeve (Lucas). Stolen Waters.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Fletcher (J. S.). Grand Relations.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Becke (Louis). Tom Gerrard.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Ystridde (G.). Three Dukes.cr. 8vo 6/0
- GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY:
Barlow (Jane). By Beach and Bogland.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Yeigh (Kate Westlake). A Specimen Spinster.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Warden (Florence). The House by the River.cr. 8vo 6/0
- Sheehan (The Very Rev. P. A.), D.D. A Spoiled Priest and Other Stories. Illustrated.cr. 8vo 5/0
- Pain (Barry). The Memoirs of Constantine Dix.cr. 8vo 3/6
- SHILLING REPRINTS OF STANDARD NOVELS:
Gorky (Maxim). Three of Them.
- Schreiner (Olive). Trooper Peter Halket of Mashonaland.
- Hobbes (John Oliver). Love and the Soul Hunters
- Hobbes (John Oliver). Some Emotions and a Moral, and the Sinner's Comedy.
- Hobbes (John Oliver). A Study in Temptations, and A Bundle of Life.
- Crockett (S. R.). The Stickit Minister.
- Schreiner (Olive). Dreams.
- Falconer (Lanoe). Mademoiselle Ixe, and the Hotel d'Angleterre.
- Mark Rutherford's Works: The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford. Mark Rutherford's Deliverance. The Revolution in Tanner's Lane. Miriam's Schooling. Catharine Furze.
- CHILDREN'S LIBRARY:
Collodi (C.). The Story of a Puppet; or, The Adventures of Pinocchio. New edition.1/0
- Beckman (Ernest). Pax and Carlino.1/0
- The Brown Owl. By Ford H. Hueffer. Irish Fairy Tales. By W. B. Yeats. Finn and His companions. By Standish O'Grady. The China Cup. By Felix Volkovskiy. An Enchanted Garden. By Mrs. Molesworth. La Belle Niver-naise. By Alphonse Daudet. Stories from Fairy-land.each 1/0
- THE REFORMER'S BOOKSHELF:
Howell (George). Labour Legislation, Labour Movements, and Labour Leaders. New and Cheaper edition. Two vols.large cr. 8vo 7/0

- Macy (Jesse). Party Organisation and Machinery in the United States.cr. 8vo, net 6/0
- The Burden of Armaments. A Protest of the Cobden Club.cr. 8vo 3/6
- Bowles (Thomas Gibson), M.P. National Finance: An Imminent Peril.1/6
- Taylor (Austin), M.P. Side-Lights on Protection. The History of a Vanished Industry.0/6
- Smith (F. E.), B.C.L., and Sibley (N. W.), LL.M. International Law and the North Sea Crisis. royal 8vo, net 21/0
- American Business Methods. Lectures on Commerce, delivered before the College of Commerce and Administration of the University of Chicago. Edited by Henry Rand Hatfield. First Series.large cr. 8vo, net 6/0
- Harper (William Rainy), D.D., LL.D. Religion and the Higher Life.large cr. 8vo, net 6/0
- Hayden (Arthur). Chats on Old Furniture. Fully Illustrated.large cr. 8vo, net 5/0
- Masterman (C. F. G.). In Peril of Change. Essays written in Time of Tranquility.cr. 8vo, net 6/0
- Fitzgerald (Percy), F.S.A. The Westminster Cathedral: A Criticism. With 3 Plates.cr. folio, net 5/0
- Pink (Alfred). Gardening for the Million.large cr. 8vo 2/6
- Meakin (Budgett). Model Factories and Industrial Villages. Illustrated.large cr. 8vo 6/0
- The Best Plays of George Farquhar. Edited, with an Introduction, by William Archer.small cr. 8vo net 2/6 and net 3/6
- L'Avocat Patelin. A French Play of the XIVth Century. Translated by Samuel F. G. Whitaker.cr. 8vo, net 3/6

MESSRS. F. WARNE & CO.

- Hardy Bulbous Plants (Florilegium Harlemense). Descriptions and Life-size Figures in Colours of 148 Varieties. Produced under the auspices of the "General Association of Bulb Cultivists of Haarlem." Edited by Edward Step, F.L.S. Illustrated with 60 Superb Plates.imperial 4to, net 84/0
- Geoffroy (Gustave). The National Gallery. With an Historical Introduction by Sir W. Armstrong. Illustrated with 57 Full-page Plates in Photogravure, and 155 smaller half-tone Illustrations interspersed in the Text.demy 4to, net 25/0
- McDonald (Donald), Associate of Royal Horticultural Society. Fragrant Flowers and Leaves.cr. 8vo, net 2/6

FICTION

- Walkey (S.). Kidnapped by Pirates. Illustrated by Paul Hardy.cr. 8vo 3/6
- Pickering (Edgar). With the "Beggars of the Sea."cr. 8vo 3/6

NEW EDITIONS

- Armatage (George), M.R.C.V.S. The Cattle Doctor. Eighth Edition. Illustrated.demy 8vo 21/0
- Step (Edward), F.L.S. Wayside and Woodland Blossoms. A Pocket Guide to British Wild Flowers. First Series. With Plates. (Size 6½ by 4½ ins.)net 6/0
- Step (Edward), F.L.S. Wayside and Woodland Trees. A Pocket Guide to the British Sylva. (Size 6½ by 4½ ins.)6/0
- Sanderson (Rev. Edgar), M.A. History of England and the British Empire.demy 8vo, net 5/0
- Burnett (Mrs. F. H.). Little Lord Fauntleroy. medium 8vo net 4/0
- The Legends of King Arthur and His Knights. Compiled and Arranged by Sir James Knowles, K.C.V.O.large cr. 8vo 3/6
- Inman (H. E.). "Honour Bright" (David Chester's Motto). A Boy's Adventures at School and Sea. Illustrated.large cr. 8vo 3/6
- Hocking (Silas K.). Reedyford.medium 8vo 3/6
- The Boy's Modern Playmate. A Book of Sports, Games, and Pastimes. Illustrated.square demy 8vo 3/6
- The Girl's Home Companion. A Book of Pastimes in Work and Play. Edited by Mrs. Valentine. Illustrated.square demy 8vo 3/6
- Pan Pipes. A Book of Old Songs, newly arranged, and with Accompaniments by Theo. Marzials, and set to Pictures by Walter Crane.large oblong 4to 3/6
- Browning (Robert). The Pied Piper of Hamelin. With 35 Illustrations in Colour by Kate Greenaway.post 4to, net 3/6

Mother Goose, or the Old Nursery Rhymes. With 48 Illustrations by Kate Greenaway. (Size 6½ by 4½ ins.) net 1/6

LESLIE BROOKE'S CHILDREN'S BOOKS:

The Story of the Three Little Pigs. Tom Thumb. Illustrated. (Size 10 by 8) net 2/6
Soldier and Sailor Songs. Complete in one volume. 1/0
Voynich (Mrs.). The Gadfly. /6
Burnett (Mrs. F. H.). Through One Administration /6
Frederic (Harold). Illumination /6
Stevenson (Robert Louis). The Ebb Tide /6
Swedenborg (Emanuel). Heaven and Hell. Things Heard and Seen medium 8vo /6
Swendenborg (Emanuel). God, Creation, Man... medium 8vo /6
Aunt Louisa's History of England. Illustrated.. post 4to 3/6 and 2/0

WARNE'S FAVOURITE INSTRUCTION BOOKS:

Aunt Louisa's Book of Easy Poetry. Containing many of the Old Favourite Poems of Childhood. Illustrated post 4to 1/0 and 2/0
Easy Painting Books. Four Kinds. No. 1, Flags; No. 2, Flowers; No. 3, Objects; No. 4, Country Objects. small cr. 8vo, per packet of 12 3/0

MR. PHILIP WELLBY

The Garden Lover's Series Vol. III. A Garden of Pleasant Flowers. Being a description of the most familiar of our English garden flowers from the famous collection of John Parkinson. Chosen and arranged by Alfred H. Hyatt royal 18mo, net 3/6
The Music of the Masters. Edited by Wakeling Dry. Volume III. Beethoven, by Ernest Walker, Mus. Doc. net 2/6
The Aldwych series of Booklets, Vol. I. Cupid's Posies—Mottoes for Rings and other Pleasant Things; Vol. II. Lyric Love Letters. Selections from Spenser to Keats; Vol. III. Jacula Prudentum; or Outlandish Proverbs by George Herbert each net 2/6
Gran. A Story of A Revival 6/0

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & CO.

FICTION

Winter (John Strange). Just as it Was. 6/0
Mitford (Bertram). A Frontier Mystery. 6/0
Roberts (Morley). Lady Penelope 6/0
Tracy (Louis). The Sirdar's Sabre 6/0
Griffith (George). A Mayfair Magician 6/0
Griffiths (Major Arthur). Winnifred's Way 6/0
Gull (C. Ranger). A Story of the Stage 6/0
Aubyn (Alan St.). A Coronation Necklace 6/0
Le Queux (William). Sins of the City 6/0
Donovan (Dick). A Knight of Evil 6/0
Graham (Winifred). Wickedness in High Places 6/0
Savage (Richard Henry). Monte Christo in Khaki 6/0
Thorne (Guy). The Cash Crusaders 6/0
Muddock (J. E. Preston). A Sunless City 6/0
Whishaw (Fred). The Little Widow 6/0
Hume (Fergus). The Green Powder 6/0
Meade (Mrs. L. T.). A New Novel 6/0
Nisbet (Hume). A Colonial King 6/0
Riddell (Mrs. J. H.). A Love Match 6/0
Fenn (G. Manville). Trapper Dan 6/0
Kernahan (Mrs. Coulson). The Whisperers 6/0
Tynan (Katharine). Fortune's Favourite 6/0
Boothby (Guy). A Brighton Tragedy 5/0
Winter (John Strange). The Peacemakers /6
Griffith (George). The Lake of Gold /6
Warden (Florence). A Spoilt Girl /6
Le Queux (William). The Idol of the Town /6
Hume (Fergus). The Guilty House /6
Boothby (Guy). A Consummate Scoundrel /6
Winter (John Strange). Everybody's Favourite /6

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE

Münsterberg (Hugo). The Americans. Translated by Edwin V. Holt, Ph.D., Instructor of Harvard University royal 8vo, net 12/6
Harnack (Dr. Adolf). The Expansion of Christianity in the First Three Centuries. Vol. 2, completing the work, issued in the Theological Translation Library. demy 8vo 10/6
Perrin (R. J.) The Evolution of Knowledge, A Review of Philosophy large cr. 8vo
A Rabbinic Commentary on the Book of Job Contained in an Unique Manuscript at Cambridge. Edited by, with translation and commentary, by W. Aldis Wright, LL.D.
Sorensen (late Dr. S.). An Index to the Names in the Mahabharata. With Explanations and a Concordance of the Bombay and Calcutta Editions, and P. C. Roy's Translation. Part 2. To be completed in twelve parts, which are not sold separately. royal 4to, each, net 7/6
Pfleiderer (Otto), D.D. The Early Christian Conception of Christ, Its Value and Significance in the History of Religion cr. 8vo 3/6
Lodge (Sir Oliver), LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S. School Teaching and School Reform. cr. 8vo 3/0
Spencer (Herbert). Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical. Popular Reissue 2/6
Bergmann, M.D., and Bruns. Prof. P. Von, M.D., and Mikulicz, Prof. J. Von, M.D. A System of Practical Surgery. In five volumes, royal 8vo, with a number of coloured plates and other illustrations. Translated and edited by William T. Bull, M.D. net 126/0, net 147/0, net 168/0
Reports of the Trypanosomiasis Expedition to the Congo, 1903-1904, of the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine and Medical Parasitology. By Everett Dutton, M.B., John L. Tod, M.D., Cuthbert Christie, M.B., With a comparison of the Trypanosomes to Uganda and the Congo Free State demy 4to
Stephens (J. W.), M.D. (Cantab.), and Christopher (S. R.), M. D. The Practical Study of Malaria and Other Blood Parasites. New edition demy 8vo, net 12/6
Johnstone, Jas. British Fisheries Industries, Administration of, &c. One volume demy 8vo
Church (A. H.), M.A., D.Sc. On the Relation of Phylotaxis to Mechanical Laws. Part 3, Secondary Growth Phenomena, with 34 Illustrations. 5/0. The work complete, three parts bound in one, cloth 15/0
Ray (Dr.), P. C. The History of Hindu Chemistry from the Earliest Times to the Middle of the Sixteenth Century, A.D.. Volume 2.
Drawings by Old Masters of the Dutch and Flemish Schools in the Royal Collection of Prints at Amsterdam. With 100 Facsimile large Reproductions. Introduction by Lionel Cust, M.A., F.S.A. In ten parts. Parts III., IV., and V. ready net 34/0
Drawings by Swiss Masters of the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth Centuries. Edited on Behalf of the Special Art Commission of the Government, with the assistance of Professor Dr. Burckhardt and H. A. Schmidt, by Dr. Paul Ganz. Twelve parts quarterly. Parts I. and II. each, net 10/0
Meyer's Grosses Konversationslexikon. Encyclopædia Germanica. With over 11,000 Illustrations and 1,400 Plates and Maps. In twelve vols. Vol. IX. net 10/0
Jastrow (Morris) (jun.). The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria. (In German). Entirely revised and enlarged edition, the only one to be issued. Vol. I... 10/6
Rodriguez (Prof. Dr. J. B.). Sertum, Palmarum Brasiliensium. Two volumes, folio, with 174 plates in colours and numerous engravings in the text. Only 300 copies printed 600/0
Sopher Zohar. Le Livre de la Splendeur. Doctrine esoterique des Israelites. For the first time translated from the Chaldaic into French, with critical and explanatory words by Dr. Jean de Pauly. Six vols. Vol. I. subscription price 100/0

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1716

MARCH 25, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

EDUCATION ACTS, 1870 to 1903.

THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the following appointments in the Education Department.

Four Divisional Inspectors, who will have the general superintendence of large districts and give special attention to the co-ordination of education within their areas. Their chief duties will be to inspect pupil teachers' centres, secondary schools, training colleges, science and commercial centres, polytechnics, and all institutions for higher education aided by the Council. Candidates will be required to possess special qualifications in one of the following subjects:—(1) English language and literature. (2) Modern languages. (3) Mathematics and science. (4) Technology (including mechanical and electrical engineering). The salary will be in each case £600 a year, rising by annual increments of £25 to a maximum salary of £800 a year.

One Art Inspector, whose chief duties will be to inspect the art teaching in elementary and secondary schools, art schools, and polytechnics. The salary will be £400 a year, rising by annual increments of £20 to a maximum salary of £500 a year.

One Inspector of Wood and Metal Work, whose chief duties will be to inspect the teaching in wood and metal work in manual training centres and elementary and secondary schools. He will also be required to inspect certain classes at polytechnics. The salary will be £400 a year, rising by annual increments of £20 to a maximum salary of £500 a year.

One Inspector of Women's Technical Classes, whose chief duties will be to inspect technical classes for women (including upholstery, flower making, needlework, millinery, dressmaking, and dress-cutting), in evening schools, girls' clubs, and polytechnics. The salary will be £300 a year, rising by annual increments of £20 to a maximum salary of £400 a year.

The persons appointed will be under the control of the Chief Inspector, and will be required to give their whole time to the duties of the office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service, particulars of which are given in the form of application.

In connection with the appointments there is no restriction with regard to sex.

Applications should be made on the official form, to be obtained from the Clerk of the London County Council, at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W., or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. The applications must be sent in not later than 10 A.M. on Saturday, the 1st day of April, 1905, addressed to the Education Offices as above, and accompanied by copies of not more than three recent testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME,
Clerk of the London County Council.

Spring Gardens, S.W.
2nd March, 1905.

WALSALL EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

School of Art. Applications are invited for the post of HEAD MASTER of the WALSALL SCHOOL OF ART. Salary £250, rising by £25 per annum for meritorious service to £300. Applications to be received not later than APRIL 7, 1905.—Further particulars and prescribed Form of Application can be obtained from the DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION, Education Offices, Walsall.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING

COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

ILLUSTRATION.—To Authors, Publishers, &c. Books, Periodicals, Articles illustrated. Refined, realistic, original. Moderate terms. Specimens submitted.—W. FREUND, 13 Norland Square, Kensington, W.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss FOOT, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L., 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

BOOKS FOR SALE.—A Gentleman has a number of rare books for sale, including Gregory's Decretalia, Coburger, 1482; Dolce's Transformationi, 1553; Las Casa's Tratado Comprobatorio, 1553; Calvin's In Librum Psalmorum Commentarius, 1557; Herrera's edition of Garcillasso de la Vega, 1580; Fulke's Defense and Confession, 1583; Sidney and Golding; De Mornay, 1587; Speight's Chaucer, 1598 and 1602 editions; Daniel's Vision of the Twelve Goddesses, 1623; Bunting's Travels of the Holy Patriarchs, 1636; Thomas Nabbes' the Bride, 1640; Ogilby's Homer, 2 vols., 1669; Dryden and Lee: The Duke of Guise (with music) 1683; Charles Davenant's Circe, 1685; Aphra Behn's Miscellany, 1685; De Hondt's Dutch Edition of Dampier, 1698–1704; the German English Prayer Book printed by Grooke in Dublin, 1710; Woodes Rogers' Cruising Voyage, 1718; the Baskerville Milton, 1758; Walpole's Works, 5 vols., 1798; Wordsworth's White Doe, 1815; Dickens' Our Mutual Friend (monthly parts), 1864; Curzon's Persia, 1892; Underdowne's Heliodorus, 1895; Ricci's Correggio (Japanese vellum), 1896. Kindly address offers to ACADEMY, Claremont, Shaldon, Teignmouth.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF

G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings, Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from

FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

WILDE, PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY.

ELEGANT EDITION. 10s. 6d.

J. JACOB, 149 Edgware Road, London, W.

LEIGHTON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS. Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s. JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.—J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 139.

Containing a special article, entitled:
"SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS."

By Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact bibliography of their publications and a double plate of their portraits.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

THOMAS THORP,
Secondhand Bookseller,
100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND
4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (postfree) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29–30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

FIRST Editions of Modern Authors, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

TYPEWRITING (Smith Premier).—Scientific, Legal MSS., Plays, Translations, Duplicates, Novels, 9d. 1000.—Miss HANDLEY, Berkhamsted, Herts.

TYPEWRITING promptly and accurately done, 10d. per 1000 words. Specimens and references.—Address, Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS opened at any date for THREE, SIX and TWELVE Months. Town Subscriptions, 21s. Yearly. Books of past Seasons, 10s. 6d. Yearly.

Terms for Country, Suburbs; and Parcel Post, sent on application to MUDIE & CO., 30-34 New Oxford St., London.

"Our greatest Foreign Minister."—Lord Acton.

GEORGE CANNING.

By H. W. V. TEMPERLEY,
LECTURER IN HISTORY AT LEEDS UNIVERSITY.
7s. 6d. net.

"The best life we have of our most distinguished Statesman."—Spectator.
"Careful, well written, well knit."—Mr. Frederick Greenwood in the Academy.

The Tales of Wilhelm Hauff.

Translated by Sybil Thesiger. Illustrated by Dorothy Morris.
2s. net.

"An alluring sample of the 'Hampstead Library.'"—Sheffield Telegraph.
"An admirable translation."—Academy.
"Miss Morris's striking illustrations add to the attractiveness of this volume."—Glasgow Herald.

JAMES FINCH & Co., LTD., 33 PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

Advertisements of Books (not Current Literature), Fine Art Publications, and Musical Compositions, WANTED, FOR SALE, and in EXCHANGE, are inserted, if PREPAID, at the rate of 8d. for every 8 words.

* * * Advertisers are requested to state clearly on their Advertisement Copy whether "Wanted" or "For Sale," and also to write distinctly.

Wanted

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.—"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookfinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1809; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

GIRLS' REALM, November 1901. Autocar, April 16, 1904. No. 443, Vol. 12.—W. E. Clegg, 30 Market Place and Peter Street, Oldham.

CHILDREN'S and CHAP-BOOKS, illustrated by Cruikshank and others. Lever, Ainsworth, Lytton, good cheap first editions.—The Chaucer Book Co., 37 St. Martin's Court, W.C.

THE "CENTURY" CYCLOPEDIA OF NAMES, 4to, cloth or bound. Engraved Portraits of Bishop and Archbishop Synges.—A. Iredale, The Strand, Torquay.

WORKS by Wilde, O.; Whistler; Beardsley; books in large and small quantities purchased.—J. Jacob, 149 Edgware Road, Hyde Park.

THIBAUT, Purity in Musical Composition; Vaughan, Sermons to Children; Wilde, Picture of Dorian Gray; Wilde, Salome with Beardsley's Illustrations; Cuyler, The Empty Crib; Malan, The Baptized Family.—A. & R. Milne, Aberdeen.

MINIATURE BOOKS under 4 in.; Serafino d'Aquila Circa 1530; Street's Gothic Arch. in Spain; Uphranor, Vernon Lee.—H. H. Peach, 37 Belvoir Street, Leicester.

For Sale

THE WALLACE COLLECTION. Goupil; Holmes Victoria. Goupil.—John D. Baillie, 12 Abbey Churchyard, and 17 Cheap Street, Bath.

FIRST Editions. Pickwick, cloth, uncut, 25s., Oliver Twist, 3 vols, half roan, 21s., Bleak House, half calf, 10s., Nicholas Nickleby, half calf, 10s., Cricket, cloth, 6s., Battle of Life, cloth, 5s.—David Cadney, Cambridge.

ENGLISH Revolution of Twentieth Century, dealing with Taxation, Housing, Land, Drink, Education and Woman Questions, 488 pages, art linen, gilt, 2s. only, post free.—Joseph Edwards, Reformer's Year Book Office, Kirkintilloch, Glasgow.

ANDREA MANTEGNA, by Paul Kristeller. English Edition by S. Arthur Strong. With 26 Plates and 162 Text Illustrations. Published 70s. net and offered for 21s., new copy. Galloway and Porter, Booksellers, Cambridge.

VANITY FAIR.—20 vols. from 1872-86. Mrs. Highmore, Worcester Park, Surrey.

MORRIS' COUNTY SEATS, including autographs. Seven volumes. Very best edition, in splendid condition. Published £10 10s.—Send best offers to Lloyd & Townsend, 13 Dillwyn Street, Swansea.

THE CHAMELEON, 1894. Only one No. issued (100 copies). Articles by Oscar Wilde, Lord Alfred Douglas, &c. Clean, perfect, £5 or offers. M., 56 High Street, Oxford.

"STUDIO" SUPPLEMENT. "Genius of Turner." Cloth.—Miss Pollard, Haynford Hall, Norwich.

BLACKIE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA, 14 vols., 1894, new, £2; Irving Shakespeare, 1892, 8 vols., do., £2; Picturesque Yorkshire, L.P., 18 parts, £1; Gould's Lives of the Saints, 16 vols., new, £3.—C. A. Streicher, York.

For Sale

MUSK HASHISH and Blood. By Hector France, Walpole Press, 1900. Subscriber's edition, 15s. Balzac's Droll Stories, with 425 Designs by Dore, 11s.—J. W. Thompson, 45 Pasture Street, Grimsby.

WHISTLER'S portrait of His Mother. Lithograph by T. Way. £2. Rochelle Thomas Medallion, Portrait of Tennyson, handsomely and elaborately framed. £1 10s.—X., 1 Regent Terrace, Cambridge.

FAUSTUS, His Life, Death, &c., 1825
Felix on the Bat (Cricket), 4to, 1845
Fergusson (Sir J.), Tree and Serpent Worship, 1868
Fielding (H.), Works, 12 vols., 12mo, 1824
Amelia, 4 vols., or 1, 2, 3, uncut, 1752
Fitzgerald's Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, 1859
Second Edition, 1868
Third Edition, 1879
Flaubert (G.), Hérodis, triple set plates, 8vo, 1892
Flatman (T.), Poems and Songs, 8vo, 1674
Flinders' Terra Australis, 2 vols. and atlas, 1815
Flora et Zephyr, Ballet Mythologique, par Theophile Wagstaff (8 large plates), 1836
Fly Leaves, by C. S. C., 1879
Folk Lore Society's Publications, 1878-93
Fonblanque, Annals House of Percy, privately printed, 2 vols., 8vo, 1887
Forbes and Hanley's History of British Mollusca and their Shells, 4 vols., 1853
Forbes (J. D.), Alps of Savoy, 1843 or 1845
Norway, and its Glaciers, 1853
Fortunate Mistress; Life of Mlle. de Belevue, 1724
Fortunes of Torlogh O'Brien, 1847, or any odd parts
Foster's Pedigrees of Yorkshire, folio, 1874
Four Kings of Canada, 12mo, London, 1710
Fox's Speeches, 6 vols., 1815
Frank (R.), Northern Memoirs, 8vo, 1694
Frank Fairleigh, in monthly parts or cloth, 1850, or any odd parts
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

PRINCIPLES of Western Civilisation. By B. Kidd, 15s. net for 10s. Sylvana's Letters to an Unknown Friend, by E. V. B., 8s. 6d. net for 6s.—Young's Library, 179 Kensington High Street, W.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper

THE DAILY CHRONICLE

10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—

The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes.
Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events.

Science and Art Specially dealt with

Fuller Reports of All Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE

10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily.

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books
Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

THE SPHERE

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week.

Also List of Books Received.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS

The Morning Newspaper for Aberdeen

AND THE

Northern Half of Scotland.

Reviews of books appear on Mondays and Thursdays, and on other days as required.

Book Advertisements are inserted on Literary Page!

NEW BOOKS ARE PROMPTLY REVIEWED.

LONDON OFFICE: 149 FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE WESTERN MORNING NEWS

Is the most widely circulating paper in the four Western Counties.

LONDON PRIVATE WIRE OFFICE:

47 FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telegraphic Address: "PLYMOUTHISM, LONDON."

Telephone No.: 165 HOLBORN.

Applications for above spaces should be made to Messrs. Crossley & Co., 57A Coleman Street, London, E.C. Special Rates for a Series will be quoted.

"THE ACADEMY" is POSTED FREE (52 issues at 3d.) to every ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER in the United Kingdom prepaying 13s. FOREIGN SUBSCRIBERS by a PREPAYMENT of 17s. 6d. will secure it being sent Post Free to any address throughout the World for a uniform 1d. postage, though the postage payable varies from 1d. minimum to 23d. per copy. Orders may be sent through any Bookseller or Newsvendor, or direct to the Publisher, 5-7 Southampton Street, Strand, W.C.

The "Country Life" Library

PREPARING FOR PUBLICATION

To be issued in Two Volumes, PRICE THREE GUINEAS Net the Two Volumes. A sumptuous work, handsomely bound in cloth, containing about 300 plates

Being a Series of Illustrations from Photographs of the most Famous Examples of

THE GARDENS OF ITALY

BY

CHARLES LATHAM

Descriptive Text by E. March Phillips

Dedicated by Special Permission to his MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY

Smith, Elder & Co.'s New Books

MRS. WARD'S NEW NOVEL

MR. CLEMENT K. SHORTER, in the SPHERE.—"I consider that in 'The Marriage of William Ashe' Mrs. Humphry Ward has achieved a real triumph."

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE

COUNTRY LIFE.
—"A wonderful story of a very exceptional and fine temperament."

SECOND IMPRESSION

By MRS. HUMPHRY WARD

With Illustrations by ALBERT STERNER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Times.—"Mrs. Ward's latest novel is of unfailing interest. To begin it is to be forced to continue it to the end. . . . She is a storyteller to the core, with an interest in life such as few novelists have surpassed, an outlook upon it that extends very far, and—what is perhaps her dearest possession—a very penetrating knowledge of and sympathy with young men."

ON MARCH 28

With a Portrait Frontispiece. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

TRACKS OF A ROLLING STONE.

By the Honble. HENRY J. COKE.

Author of "A Ride Over the Rocky Mountains," "Creeds of the Day," &c.

NOW READY

With 20 Full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE STORY OF AN INDIAN UPLAND.

By F. B. BRADLEY-BIRT, F.R.G.S., I.C.S.

With an Introduction by the Hon. H. H. RISLEY, C.S.I., C.I.E.,
Home Secretary to the Government of India.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15 WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

In Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, 7s. 6d. net.

THE COLLECTOR'S ANNUAL FOR 1904.

Edited by GEORGE E. EAST. "The Collector's Annual" is a Guide and Book of Reference for Connoisseurs, Collectors, and others, of the Prices which Pictures (Oil and Water-colour), Engravings (Mezzotint and Colour Prints), Old China (English and Foreign), Antique Furniture, Antique Silver and Plate, Medals and Decorations, Miniatures and Objects of Art, have realised at Auction during the Season of 1903-4. Full details are given of each item, with the Catalogue Numbers, Date of Sale, and from whose Collection the object is taken.

"A handy guide to the chief sales of the year. It serves the same purpose to the collector of pictures and art objects generally as 'Book Prices Current' does to the bookman. The information is admirably grouped and easy of reference."—Full Mail Gazette.

NEW NOVELS.

In Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE SCHOOL OF LIFE. A Study in the Discipline of Circumstance. By SIBYL M. ILES.

"The story is an excellent piece of work; the interest is sustained from the first page to the last, and when the end is reached the reader feels the better for having read it."—Leicester Mercury.

In Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, 6s.

THE PAINS OF HAPPINESS. A Novel. By RASSAC TORRIANI.

In Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, 6s.

LIFE'S PHASES. A Domestic Study. By MARY ADAMS COLLINGS.

"Vividly written and full of human interest."—Record.
"There is some excellent character; the incidents are well described, and the interest is maintained to the conclusion."—Leicester Mercury.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In Crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 1s. 6d.

VERSES CHIEFLY ABOUT NATURE. By G. E. M.

In Crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 1s. 6d. net.

THE TREASURES OF DARKNESS AND OTHER VERSES. By M. B. W.

In Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

CRUMBS OF FANCY. By LOTTE.

"A modest little volume of verses of more than average merit."—The Lady.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62 PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

MESSRS, CONSTABLE'S LIST.

NEW SIX SHILLING NOVELS.

CRITTENDEN. By JOHN FOX. Author of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

IN SEARCH OF THE UNKNOWN. By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS. Author of "The Maids of Paradise," "Cardigan," &c.

THE WEDDING OF THE LADY OF LOVELL. By UNA L. SILBERRAD. Author of "Petronilla Heroven," &c.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA. By Mrs. COMYNS CARR. Author of "Cottage Folk," &c.

TALES OF RYE TOWN. By MAUD STEPNEY RAWSON. Author of "A Lady of the Regency," &c.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By ERNEST GLANVILLE. Author of "The Kloof Bride," &c.

NOTICE.—Orders should now be booked for MISS MARIE CORELLI'S new book,

"FREE OPINIONS Freely Expressed."

Crown 8vo. 6s.

CATHERINE DE MEDICI AND THE FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of "Women and Men of the French Renaissance," "The Household of the Lafayette," &c. With 12 Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 15s. net.

THE KING IN EXILE (CHARLES II.). By EVA SCOTT. Author of "Rupert Prince Palatine." Demy 8vo, Illustrated. 15s. net.

JOHN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT OF DUNDEE, 1648-1689. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

THE SUN AND THE SERPENT. A Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo. With 33 Full-page Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

THE INGERSOLL LECTURES

THE CONCEPTION OF IMMORTALITY. By JOSIAH ROYCE, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. 16mo. 2s. 6d.

"Last year we had Professor William James's masterly and inspiring little brochure; this year we have Professor Royce's not less admirable treatment of the same subject . . . his lecture is stimulating and helpful that we have no hesitation in recommending it to the thoughtful reader."—Westminster Gazette.

HUMAN IMMORTALITY. Two Supposed Objections to the Doctrine, by WILLIAM JAMES, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d.

"Professor James is well known as one of the most suggestive and original writers, and as certainly the most brilliant psychologist living. Whatever, therefore, he has to say on this subject is worth listening to, for he thinks freely, and he knows all that the scientist knows."—Spectator.

SCIENCE AND IMMORTALITY. By WILLIAM OSLER, M.D., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford University. 2s. 6d.

"We can recommend the volume not only for its literary charm, but also for the thoughtful and suggestive discussion of the comforting conception of immortality from the standpoint of the scientific physician rather than from that of the philosopher or theologian."—Lancet.

POCKET EDITION OF THE WORKS OF GEORGE MEREDITH

IN 17 VOLUMES.

Printed on thin opaque paper, specially manufactured for this Edition, bound in red cloth, gilt lettered on back and side, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net per volume, or 3s. 6d. net in full leather per vol.

MISS MARY JOHNSTON'S NOVELS

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

Sir Mortimer. Illustrated by Audrey. With Illustrations by F. C. YOHAN.

By Order of the Company. The Old Dominion.

Please write for Complete Catalogue and Announcement List and Prospectus of all New Books.

A. CONSTABLE & Co. LTD., 100, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C. 4.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	321	Fiction	335
Literature :		The Bookshelf	337
Portraits and Memories	324	The Drama : "Du Barri" at
The Platonic Myth	325	the Savoy Theatre	338
John Keats	326	Fine Art : The Historic Pictures
Social Germany in Luther's Time	328	of Velasquez	339
A Battle Long Ago	328	Science : The Life of the Uni-
Mecca Unveiled	329	verse	342
Samuel Rowlands	329	Music :
A Forgotten War	330	The "Symphonia Domestica"
A Scholar's Jest	331	—another View. II.	342
Fanny Burney at Court	331	Dr. Elgar's Oratorio "The Angling and Allegory	332	Apostles" at the Albert Hall
Apophthegms	332	The Failure of Opera	343
American Rhodes Scholars	333	Correspondence	345
A Literary Causerie : Robert		Queries and Answers	346
Herrick	334	Books Received	346
A Song at Sunset	335

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

THERE is considerable interest beyond that of an historic first folio in the "Turbutt Shakespeare." As we have already noted, this copy was originally in the possession of the Bodleian Library at Oxford, having been presented by the Stationers' Company on its publication in 1624. It is probable that it passed out of the hands of Bodley's Librarian soon after the publication of the Second Folio Edition in 1632. From that time forward it has been in private hands, and unknown, even as a first folio, to Shakespearean authorities and collectors. Thus its only period of active use was during the ten years or so after its first publication, and it is interesting therefore to trace the respective popularity of Shakespeare's plays during that period, by the wear and tear of the pages. Of all the plays Romeo and Juliet was the most popular by this computation, for the pages are more thumb-marked than in other parts of the book, and in some places quite worn through. The first few pages of the play have been much read, then come some less marked, but with the Balcony Scene interest again revives, and the page at this point is worked into holes by constant usage. Thus from the evidence of this first folio, the Balcony Scene seems to have been the favourite passage in the plays during the early part of the seventeenth century, at least amongst Oxford readers. It would be interesting to know what passage of Shakespeare is now the most currently popular, but these simple seventeenth-century evidences are useless in an age which can produce an excellent edition of the plays for two shillings.

The London Institution, the amalgamation of which with the Society of Arts was recently foreshadowed in the Times, has had a long and honoured career. Nearly a century ago it was established at No. 8 Old Jewry, formerly the house of Sheriff Sir Robert Clayton, with whom Evelyn dined in great state. He describes the house in his diary, and was especially impressed with the cedar dining-room, "painted with the history of the Giants' War, incomparably done by Mr. Streeter." In this house Porson, the first librarian of the Institution, had rooms, and here he died—just in time, it is said, to save him from being ignominiously ejected; for the "proprietors" complained that the only evidence they had of his services was his signature in receipt of his salary of £200 a year. "Of Devil Dick," says a contemporary letter-writer, "you say nothing; I see by the newspapers that they have given him a post. Porter and cyder, I trust, are among the etceteras." Apparently the "etceteras" were not wanting, for Porson's conduct as librarian justified Byron's bitter comment that he "hiccuped Greek like a helot."

It was at the London Institution that Hazlitt met Porson for the first and last time. The meeting enabled him to put on record a portrait which is probably only too faithful. "He was dressed in an old rusty black coat, with cobwebs hanging to the skirts of it, and with a large patch of coarse brown paper covering the whole length of his nose, looking for all the world like a drunken carpenter, and talking to one of the proprietors with an air of suavity approaching to condescension." The passage is from the essay on coffee-house politicians. A few years after Porson's death, the institution moved to a house in King's Arms Yard, off Coleman Street, and in 1819 to the house in Finsbury Circus, where it has been ever since.

It is well known that the late Professor York Powell was a most omnivorous reader, but the catalogue of his library shows a width of reading that is almost uncanny. With Charles Lamb he could well say "I have no repugnances. Shaftesbury is not too genteel for me, nor Jonathan Wild too low. I can read anything which I call a book." The second part of the catalogue published by Messrs. Blackwell, of Oxford, includes the New Testament in Eskimo, a Roumanian grammar, a Swahili dictionary, a Polish grammar, a book on the outlines of the Vei language, works in Persian, Pali, Sanscrit, Hebrew, Tamil, Syriac, and other strange languages, in addition to the more civilised tongues of the twentieth century, which, in the case of the late Professor, included Scandinavian.

School-boys' answers are a form of humour which is apt to pall; but we need make no apology for the publication of the following, which occur among a number sent us direct from an instructor of youth, and have never before been printed. The gem is unquestionably a translation of "Le goût des livres est vraiment un goût louable:" a praise-worthy sentiment, which had better have remained in the decent obscurity of a foreign tongue than received this interpretation: "The taste from the lips is truly a lushous (sic) taste." "Que d'angoisses"—"What about the snakes?" is, perhaps, an argument for the total abolition of the classics; but it is not only foreign languages that prove stumbling-blocks. What can be said of the author of this sentence—"This shows that as long as no one ever reaches our shores we are safe from invasion"—but that his Christian name must be Patrick or Michael? And the same deduction is forced upon us with regard to the historian who reported a victory in which a commander "inflicted a severe defeat on the enemy at slight loss to himself and still less to them." He was not such a poor philosopher as might appear, who, on being asked to give a short account of the character of Henry VIII., replied—shortly indeed—that "Henry VIII. was a very fat man."

The collection of Lord Salisbury's "Quarterly" essays just published is not complete. There are many other old articles which it was, for one reason or another, considered undesirable to re-issue; though very few people except Lord Robert Cecil and those who have access to the books of the house of Murray are in a position to identify them. There does, however, exist one complete set of the essays in two volumes. The articles were cut out of old copies of the "Quarterly" for the purpose and bound together with a specially printed frontispiece, and the earliest and latest procurable portraits of the author. The owner of this unique work is Lord Selborne.

From the Report of the Committee of Management of the Society of Authors, just circulated, we see how difficult it is to induce legislators to attend to questions of copyright. The Committee "considered that, owing to the state of politics in this country, any attempt to bring the matter forward during the last session would have been unsuccessful." The fate of the Musical Copyright Bill seems to show that they were right. It passed the second reading in the Commons, was referred to the Standing Committee on Law and printed as amended, but "got no further in spite of a vigorous protest from a meeting held in Queen's Hall, when the representatives of all those interested in copyright, including the Society, were present."

The Report records, however, one new adhesion to the Berne Convention—that of Sweden. It was thought that the adhesion of Roumania might also be obtained, and the Foreign Office was induced to take the matter in hand. After correspondence it appeared, however, that the Roumanian Government was not in a position, owing to the character of its domestic legislation, to accept the Berne terms.

Mr. John Hay, who will shortly arrive in Europe to recuperate from the labours of the State Department in Washington, is an interesting literary figure. He seems to be doomed to go down to posterity as the author of the famous Pike County ballads, which include "Little Breeches" and "Jim Bludso," of which he is himself perhaps just a little bit ashamed. It is, we believe, a fact that he wrote these rather G. R. Sims-like performances, with their deft appeal to popular domestic sentiment, as genial skits on the dialect poems then current in America, and was immensely astonished to find the public took to them with enthusiasm and wept over them copiously! Jim Bludso, it may be remembered, the engineer of the river steamer Prairie Belle, wouldn't let his boat be beaten by a newer craft, and "With a nigger squat on her safety-valve

And her furnace crammed with rosin and pine,"

she naturally took fire,

"And Bludso's ghost went up alone
In the smoke of the Prairie Belle."

Whereupon the poet observes:

"He were n't no saint—but at jedgment
I'd run my chance with Jim,
'Longside of some pious gentlemen
That would n't shook hands with him.
He seen his duty, a dead-sure thing—
And went for it thar and then;
And Christ ain't a going to be too hard
On a man that died for men."

We quote these lines for the sake of quoting also the delightful parody of them that was inflicted on Mr. Hay when he was entertained by the Theta Delta Chi on the eve of his departure to be Ambassador to the Court of St. James's:

"They ain't no saints—they 'Bassadors
Is pretty much alike,
With eyes askance they watch their chance
Then boldly out they strike;
A modest man in his talk is Hay,
And a careful man with his pen,
But he never writes and he never speaks
Till he has thunk his thought again."

Mr. Hay would rather be judged as a writer by his monumental "Life of Abraham Lincoln," written in collaboration with John G. Nicolay, and his altogether charming volume "Castilian Days," in which is reflected the singular fascination which Spain seems to have always exercised over the finest minds of America, Washington Irving, for instance, and Motley.

What is "Literaturitis, a Modern Disease"? It is explained by Mr. Albert Schinz in the American Bookman as the habit of dropping into poetry, to which Mr. Silas Wegg was addicted. After mentioning several distinguished sufferers, Mr. Schinz tells us of a French tramp arrested for begging who answered all the magistrate's questions in verse. Asked why he did not employ his talent in writing, he threw the blame upon the editors:

"de terribles gens
Qui se montrent pour nous assez peu complaisants.
Quand vous serez célèbre, ont-ils dit, mon cher maître,
Nous nous occuperons de vous faire connaître."

The disease, however, is not modern. It is recorded that the utterances of Mrs. Siddons often fell into blank verse, as when she addressed a servant:

"I asked for water, and you gave me beer."

But here is a still earlier example. A highway robber, taken and condemned to death in Charles I.'s reign, asked pardon of the King in verse, and, what is more, obtained it:

"I that have robbed so oft am now bid stand;
Death and the law assault me and demand
My life and means; I never us'd men so,
But having ta'en their money, let them go," and so on. The robber's muse, it must be admitted, is as faulty as his logic; perhaps he owed his life less to either than to the fact that he was "a gentleman, a knight's eldest son."

"The National Trust for places of historic interest or natural beauty," on behalf of whose proposed purchase of Gowbarrow Fell, by Ullswater, Miss Octavia Hill has been pleading at Cambridge and in London, has a particular claim upon lovers of literature, since a part of its business is to take over, when desired, the monuments of famous men of letters. It is a great thing that such memorials should be assured of perpetual care. A case in point is Falkland's monument on the battle-field of Newbury. Falkland wrote books, though he is more famous as the friend of authors than as an author himself, and more memorable still for the nobility of his character. The Trust has also taken charge of the Ruskin Memorial on Friars' Crag, Derwentwater. The proposed "Ruskin Park," by the way, on Denmark Hill, will be fitly named, since Ruskin's parents lived in the neighbourhood for nearly thirty years, and their house was constantly his home.

Mr. Tree's matinée performance of Hamlet on Friday the 24th instant is another instance of his desire to be recognised as a patron of literature as well as a purveyor of art. The popularity of Shakespeare amongst His Majesty's playgoers is generally attributed to the gorgeous scenic effects for which His Majesty's Theatre is notorious. At this special matinée performance Mr. Tree will dispense with the services of the scenic artist in order to make a direct appeal to his Shakespearean public. The celebrated tragedy is to be presented without scenery, with merely a curtain as a background. But Friday's production is only the half of what may prove to be an instructive experiment, for on Monday evening Mr. Tree will give a performance of Hamlet in which the scenic setting will be such as we are accustomed to expect with plays produced under his management. It is to be hoped that the opportunity afforded by Mr. Tree for such a fair comparison of Hamlet similarly interpreted under different conditions will be fruitful of results sufficiently encouraging to stimulate the output of drama with literary merit.

A notable gift has lately been made to the London Library, namely the whole of the original issue of Conte Pompeo Litta's "Famiglie Celebri Italiane" (Milan 1819-58), in eight volumes, royal folio, bound in olive tooled morocco by Clarke. An autograph inscription in the first volume reads:—"Presented to the London Library by Henry Yates Thompson in appreciation of the energy and skill of Mr. C. T. Hagberg Wright, Secretary and Librarian, in the compilation of the Catalogue of 1903—the best of known catalogues." Those who do not know Litta's monumental work can form no idea of its interest and importance. Not only does it contain pedigrees of all the noblest families of Italy, including of course many connected with English houses, such as the Giustiniani, but it is illustrated with thousands of fine portraits all coloured by hand, as well as tombs, statues, medals, and coats-of-arms emblazoned in colours. In the presence of this book one feels that "bibliomaniac" is a foolish term of abuse, and that the people to whom it is commonly applied are not only sane but the possessors of the highest wisdom. Litta's volumes have of course always been a necessity to the historian of Italy, the genealogist, and the student of costume; now, thanks to Mr. Yates Thompson's gift, they will be enjoyed by many people of taste who are not specialists, while the graceful compliment to Mr. Hagberg Wright will add to the pleasure of the members of the London Library in their new possession.

A translation of Book I. of the "Aethiopica" of Heliodorus by Mr. Franklin Richards has lately made a modest appearance, printed for private circulation only. Mr. Richards was for many years fellow and tutor of Trinity College, Oxford, but this fruit of his leisure is of interest to many beside his old pupils and his attached friends. The story of the loves of Theagenes and Chariclea, written by the genial Bishop of Tricca about the end of the fourth century, is acknowledged to be the best of the later Greek romances. He can tell a story much better than Longus or Achilles Tatius, and his style is easy and flowing. Mr. Richards has long had the idea that the "Aethiopica" might take the place of that dismally manufactured novel, Becker's "Charicles," and be a much pleasanter means of obtaining an insight into the social life and the manners and customs of the Greeks. He has carried out this idea admirably in the short notes with which he has illustrated his translation; he hopes also to complete the scheme in a number of essays for which he has already collected much material. The translation, when finished, will also be of great service to all who are interested in the historical development of the modern novel.

Mr. Ford Madox Hueffer's volume of London impressions which was first announced under the title of "The Book of London" has been finally named "The Soul of London." It will be issued at an early date by Messrs. Alston Rivers. Mr. Hueffer, who will also be represented during the spring by a new novel, "The Benefactor" (to be published by Messrs. Brown, Langham and Co.), is engaged upon a book on the subject of Holbein and his art for Messrs. Duckworth, but this is scarcely likely to be ready before the autumn.

Messrs. Archibald Constable and Co. are to publish in April a Bibliography of Bibliographies, drawn up in the form of a dictionary of subjects. The work, which will be issued in two volumes, demy octavo, consists of five hundred and sixty double-columned pages, to which must be added a three-columned index of over seventy pages. The main entries are about three thousand five hundred in number, and many of the more important articles, such as America, France, Germany, Shakespeare, are extensively sub-divided. The labour of collecting the materials was begun about twenty years ago, and for the last five years it has occupied the whole time of the compiler, Mr. W. P. Courtney, joint author of the "Bibliotheca Cornubiensis," who has been assisted in his researches by several coadjutors. The foreign part is based upon the well-known Bibliography by Henri Stein.

In the first March instalment of Det ny Aarhundrede, a Danish fortnightly magazine, Georg Brandes discourses of his "second prolonged sojourn abroad." He tells of the immediate and lasting friendship that sprang up between himself and Taine, in spite of their disparity in age. Taine, usually so reserved and undemonstrative, would pace the garden at Châtenay with his arm round Brandes. "He became fond of me, and would give me advice like a father or elder brother, and smile at my imprudences—as once when I had nearly killed myself with too strong a sleeping draught—vous êtes imprudent, c'est de votre âge. At times he reproached me for not daily jotting down, as he did, everything that struck me on my travels; he talked to me about his work, about a projected 'Essay on Schiller,' which, owing to the war, came to nothing, about his 'Notes sur l'Angleterre,' which he wrote in a little secluded summerhouse, where there was nothing but the mere four white-washed walls, a small table and a chair. Later he incorporated in this book some minor traits which I related to him as having noticed during my stay in England."

Brandes found that Renan was "difficult to approach, and when at home would persistently deny himself. However, if one was expected, he would give up several hours of his valuable time at a stretch. He lived on a modest scale. On one wall of his study hung two Chinese water-colours and a photograph of Gérôme's Cleopatra Before Caesar; opposite was a fine photograph of an undoubtedly Italian Last Judgment. That was the entire decoration. Pocket editions of Vergil and Horace were invariably lying on his table, and for a time also a French translation of Walter Scott." . . . At the beginning of spring Renan went to live at his country house near Sèvres. "This world-wide celebrity, then already a man of forty-seven, was so simply human that he would often accompany me from his house to the station, and walk up and down with me until the train came."

We spoke last week of the Société des Gens de Lettres. That Society has just held its annual dinner, which derived a special interest from the hale age of its chairman—M. Fertiault, who was born as long ago as 1815 and began to write as long ago as 1835. Since 1856 he has been a confidential clerk in the Bank of M. Raphael Bischoffsheim, and he still writes. Now, in his ninety-first year, he announces a new work, entitled "Galanterie et Esprit du seizième siècle en Italie." He claims to be the "doyen" not only of Parisian men of letters, but also of Parisian tenants, having lived in the same house for 65 years.

A coming event of no less literary than dramatic interest is the adaptation for the stage of Flaubert's "Madame Bovary." M. William Busnach, the adapter, who has been interviewed on the subject, says: "It is a long time since Dr. Groult, who married Mlle. Commanville, Flaubert's niece and heiress, pressed me to make a play of the novel. In making a play of 'L'Assommoir' in the face of opposition—they predicted a run of three nights and it ran for six hundred—I originated the true naturalistic drama. It was thought that I might be equally successful with Flaubert's masterpiece. I agreed, but was deterred by one obstacle. I could not find the right actress for the heroine. Réjane is not a Bovary—still less is Madame Bernhardt. But, the other day, I went to the Gymnase, and saw Madame Le Bargy for the first time. I found her delightful. I said to myself: 'She would make a perfect Bovary.' I proposed the part to her, and she accepted." It should be remarked, however, that this is not the first time that the attempt to dramatise the novel has been made. A version, unauthorised by the executors, was produced by M. Taylor at the Théâtre Indépendant in 1889: but after three productions it was injunctioned.

While we are speaking of the subject, it may be worth while to mention that the story of "Madame Bovary" is a true story, and that all its leading characters are photographically copied from living originals. The original Charles Bovary was a wooden-headed youth whom Flaubert's father helped to pass his medical examinations. The original Emma was a Delphine D—, the belle of certain assembly room balls in Normandy, and a great reader of novels from the circulating libraries. Her dramatic death occurred, exactly as Flaubert describes it, on March 8, 1848. There remains of her grave only a fragment of stone overgrown with moss, on which her name can with difficulty be read and the inscription: "Priez Dieu pour le repos de son âme."

One wonders whether the inauguration of "Les Charmettes" as a place of pilgrimage—an event to which we referred last week—will revive the trade in Jean-Jacques relics. They used at one time to be in great demand and to fetch high prices. One of the philosopher's old waistcoats was once sold for £38, while a cheap watch belonging to him fetched £20. The "last walking-stick used by Jean-Jacques" used also at one time to be a favourite article of commerce. A single tradesman in the neighbourhood of Ermenonville where Rousseau died used to boast that he had disposed of thirty-two "last walking-sticks" between 1802 and 1820.

This trade in relics of literary interest has, however, often assumed a more gruesome shape. Descartes' skull was sold in 1820 at Stockholm for £4; and it is related that, when the body of Héloïse was removed to the Petits-Augustins, an Englishman offered £4000 for one of her teeth. But business has been done in literary relics since very early times. The lamp of Epictetus, it is said, was sold for 3000 drachmas.

It seems at first sight a curious thing that the German plays in London are not better patronised by the English public. They pay, but the fact is due to the patronage of the vast German colony in London. The reason, we believe, is not the difficulty of language. There are very many people in London who speak German well enough to enjoy a play in that tongue. The real, deep-lying cause is simply the narrow range of the London playgoer's sympathies: and this is an interesting point. Putting aside the odious musical comedy, and suchlike fripperies, there is practically only one kind of play that we care to go and see; and this is what we may describe as the comedy of drawing-room manners. Oddly enough, this is the one type of play which the German is quite incapable of presenting.

The German actress is inimitably funny in farce. She is convincing in romantic drama, and wonderfully strong in tragedy. But she cannot for the life of her wear fine clothes gracefully, nor be easy and natural in a drawing-room. The cause lies, no doubt, in the different constitution of society in Germany. Except among the "Junkers," all society there is what we should call provincial. It consists of folks who have to consider ways and means; and by a kind of tacit agreement we in England seem to have conspired to take an interest only in the doings of the leisured classes.

A very curious study on what may be called the esoteric side of Rabelais' work appears in the March issue of the Mercur de France. The author, signing himself "Péladan," joins issue with the critics who agree with Sainte-Beuve in denying that Pantagruel has any secret significance at all, and sets out evidence to prove that Rabelais was a master of craft with definite political views, which he outlined in cabalistic language throughout his works.

From this point of view—a rather dangerous one, it seems—the Rabelaisian rhapsody of drink and frolic becomes a formidable revolutionary tract. Its message is then no mere carpe diem call to jollity, but a cry of desperate or ferocious cynicism. The masonic password "Lanterne ci el" is translated "Loin terre est ciel," and the last word of the doctrine is "Tripe règne"—"the belly is God." It is to be hoped that the new Rabelaisian society inaugurated by M. Lefranc of the Sorbonne will resist the temptation to discover this sort of secret teaching in every page of Pantagruel.

Attention may be drawn to an interesting collection of letters published in the Bibliothèque Universelle—the Swiss Nineteenth Century. They are from Charlotte Haller, daughter of the great Haller who wrote the famous poem on the Alps, to Henri Meister, who succeeded Baron Grimm as editor of the Correspondance littéraire. Charlotte was in love with Henri, but did not succeed in marrying him.

Maxim Gorky has turned his imprisonment to good account, having written during his incarceration a new play entitled The Children of the Sun. The drama deals with the revolutionary movement and is regarded by the author himself as his masterpiece. Imprisonment is certainly from the psychological point of view an excellent stimulus for literary composition. Shut out from all communion with the external world, cast back upon the perpetual circle of his own thoughts, an intellectual man in prison will rush to literature as the one and inevitable outlet. In Gorky's case of course the stimulus must have acted with special force. Always a bitter opponent of the existing régime he must have derived an added impetus from this concrete personal experience of the brutality of the bureaucratic system. The Russian Government would seem indeed to have been neatly hoist with their own petard. The imprisonment of Gorky's body has only served to give his mind a wider and more powerful range, and the net result of this official policy of suppression is a piece of work which will in all probability be the gospel of New Russia.

With reference to our review of Miss Sybil Thesiger's translation of "Hauff's Tales" in the ACADEMY of March 18, we understand from the publishers, Messrs. James Finch and Co., that Miss Thesiger is not responsible for the Introduction, though there is no statement to that effect in the volume itself. The price should have been given as 2s. instead of 6s.

LITERATURE

PORTRAITS AND MEMORIES.

Adventures Among Books. By ANDREW LANG. (Longmans, 6s. 6d. net.)

AMONG the responsibilities incurred by Mr. Andrew Lang one of the greatest is that of having taken a prominent part in introducing a personal note into the journalism of his time. The excuse that can be made for him is that, unlike many of his imitators, he has a personality well worth expression. He has a humour that is entirely his own, a wit that never fails, and what is perhaps less a matter of congratulation, he has behind both a background of melancholy.

The title he has given the book now before us is by no means the happiest part of it. It begins with an autobiographical fragment, in which he describes his early reading, and he seems to have begun almost as soon as the prodigy of a boy who excited the ridicule of "My Uncle Toby."

Pope we know "lisped in numbers" because the numbers came, and while most children are still in short clothes Mr. Andrew Lang had begun to be a reader.

"About the age of four I learned to read by a simple process. I had heard the elegy of Cock Robin till I knew it by rote, and I picked out the letters and words which compose that classic till I could read it for myself. Earlier than that 'Robinson Crusoe' had been read aloud to me, in an abbreviated form, no doubt. I remember the pictures of Robinson finding the footstep in the sand, and a danc of cannibals, and the parrot. But, somehow, I have never read 'Robinson' since: it is a pleasure to come."

Excellent reading he seems to have started on, viz., Fairy Tales and Chat Books about Robert Bruce, William Wallace and Rob Roy. At that time these things, now cheaply purchased for their weight in gold, could be bought for a penny piece.

From fairy-tales he advances along the high road to Shakespeare, and the following pretty picture is given of himself as an infant reader.

"The Shakespeare was a volume of Kenny Meadows' edition, there are fairies in it, and the fairies seemed to come out of Shakespeare's dream into the music and the firelight. At that moment I think I was happy; it seemed an enchanted glimpse of eternity in Paradise: nothing resembling it remains with me, out of all the years."

His childhood was spent on the Scottish border, but at the age of six he was taken to live in the south of England, though in the course of twelve months he was back again in Scotland, to reside in future about four miles from Abbotsford.

The lay about the Gray Wizard appears to have been poured into his mind as soon as he could take any kind of interest in it.

Of his early introduction to fiction he says:

"Probably the first novel I ever read was read at Elgin, and the story was 'Jane Eyre.' This tale was a creepy one for a boy of nine, and Rochester was a mystery, St. John a bore. But the lonely little girl in her despair, when something came into the room, and her days of starvation at school, and the terrible first Mrs. Rochester, were not to be forgotten. They abide in one's recollection with a Red Indian's ghost, who carried a rusty ruined gun, and whose acquaintance was made at the same time."

As may be imagined, such a child when he went to school devoured books more than ever, and the field of his delight was clearly won, when he attained enough knowledge of Greek to read the "Odyssey," which he found more interesting than the "Morte d'Arthur" itself.

In the course of his further disquisition, he gives the following charming account of his introduction to Tennyson:

"Previously one had only heard of Mr. Tennyson as a name. When a child I was told that a poet was coming to a house in the Highlands where we chanced to be, a poet named Tennyson. 'Is he a poet like Sir Walter Scott?' I remember asking, and was told, 'No, he was not like Sir Walter Scott.' Hearing no more of him, I was prowling among the books in an ancient house, a rambling old place with a ghost-room, where I found Tupper, and could not get on with 'Proverbial Philosophy.' Next I tried Tennyson, and instantly a new light of poetry dawned, a new music was audible, and a new god came into my medley of a Pantheon, a god never to be dethroned. 'Men scarcely know how beautiful fire is,' Shelley says. I am convinced that we scarcely know how great a poet Lord Tennyson is: use has made him too familiar."

The remainder of the essay continues to be of great interest as showing how the mind of the youth was moulded in those days, and how in turn Browning came to him and Matthew Arnold and Clough and many others who exercised a great influence on the people of their day and generation.

The second chapter is devoted to recollections of Robert Louis Stevenson, and this we do not find satisfactory.

Mr. Lang complains almost pathetically that he is no hand at reminiscence. "I have no skill in reminiscences, no art to bring the life and aspect of the man before those who never knew him," and unfortunately there is little more to be said except that this is sadly true.

Mr. Lang does give us the exterior of the persons with whom he comes in contact, but he does not seem to possess that sympathetic mind which would, as it were, make them his own, or enable him to divine the central and commanding features in their character. This picture, for instance, of Stevenson has something of the quality of a finely drawn miniature, which looks so pretty, but tells us so little of the person it is supposed to represent.

"I faintly seem to see the eager face, the light nervous figure, the fingers busy with rolling cigarettes: Mr. Stevenson talking, listening, often rising from his seat, standing, walking to and fro, always full of vivid intelligence, wearing a mysterious smile. I remember one pleasant dark afternoon, when he told me many tales of strange adventures, narratives which he had heard about a murderous lonely inn, somewhere in the States. He was as good to hear as to read. I do not recollect much of that delight in discussion, in controversy, which he shows in his essay on conversation, where he describes, I believe, Mr. Henley as 'Burley,' and Mr. Symonds as 'Opalstein.'"

And the disappointment which we receive from the reading of the Stevenson chapter becomes still greater when Mr. Lang tells us what he knows of Dr. John Brown, the ever delightful author of "Rab and his Friends." Here we have a draped figure only, and no picture such as would enable us to recognise and know Dr. John Brown if he should ever again visit these glimpses of the moon.

There is a piece from the author which he quotes, and which we cannot forbear writing out. It is so clever, and so truly interpretive of the child mind.

"Children are long of seeing, or at least of looking at what is above them; they like the ground, and its flowers and stones, its 'red sodgers' and ladybirds, and all its queer things; their world is about three feet high, and they are more often stooping than gazing up. I know I was past ten before I saw, or cared to see, the ceilings of the rooms in the manse at Biggar."

Oliver Wendell Holmes, who figures third in this gallery of men whom Mr. Lang has known, is also very slightly treated. The remainder of the book is made up of what are practically review articles, poems of William Morris, and novels of Mrs. Radcliffe, the work of Thomas Stoddart and the "Confessions of Saint Augustine." Concerning the last, we hear a true book-man speak in the following passage:

"My copy of the Confessions is a dark little book, 'a size uncumbersome to the nicest hand,' in the format of an Elzevir, bound in black morocco, and adorned with 'blind-tooled' that is ungilt, skulls and crossbones. It has lost the title-page with the date, but retains the frontispiece, engraved by Huret. Saint Augustine, in his mitre and other episcopal array, with a quill in his hand, sits under a flood of inspiring sunshine. The dumpy book has been much read, was at some time the property of Mr. John Philips, and bears one touching manuscript note, of which more hereafter. It is, I presume, a copy of the translation by Sir Toby Matthew."

His "Smollett" is not as it seems to us, distinguished sufficiently from the other men of his time.

The other essays are such as readers of Mr. Lang might very well expect, perhaps the most interesting being that of "The Supernatural in Fiction" and the most striking passage in it is the following:

"Perhaps it may die out in a positive age—this power of learning to shudder. To us it descends from very long ago, from the far-off forefathers who dreaded the dark, and who, half-starved and all untaught, saw spirits everywhere, and scarce discerned waking experience from dreams. When we are all perfect positivist philosophers, when a thousand generations of nurses that never heard of ghosts have educated the thousand and first generation of children, then the supernatural may fade out of fiction. But has it not grown and increased since Wordsworth wanted the 'Ancient Mariner' to have 'a profession and a character,' since Southey called that poem a Dutch piece of work, since Lamb had to pretend to dislike its 'miracles?' Why, as science becomes more cocksure, have men and women become more and more fond of old follies, and more pleased with the stirring of ancient dread within their veins?"

Such is a slight account of the book that Mr. Lang has given us. It may not, perhaps, do full justice to the charm which makes these papers readable even when we are not in agreement with the opinions they express, but the charm is there all the same.

Mr. Lang has a personality that never grows old or faded, and long before we come to the last page we seem to have grown more familiar with a writer whose work is never anything but most welcome.

THE PLATONIC MYTH

The Myths of Plato. By J. A. STEWART, White's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford. (Macmillan, 14s. net.)

It was a very happy thought to bring together the myths of Plato and examine the lesson of each. We are grateful, moreover, to Professor Stewart for giving us the Greek in every case on the page opposite to the English rendering. The Greek of Plato (especially in the myths) is one of the noblest works of God, and, apart from the pleasure it gives per se, it puts us in a position to enjoy the singular felicity of the English version. Jowett's translation is so good that it seems churlish to say that the present rendering is even more perfect, and reads even more like an original composition in English. But this praise may be given to Professor Stewart without really detracting from the merit of Jowett's handiwork; for the perfect imitation of the seventeenth-century English could not have been maintained through five volumes without producing a sense of effort which might become painful. One only regrets that the context of each myth has not been given, for nothing is more delicately beautiful than the way in which the myth seems to flow naturally from the dialogue by gentle and easy transitions, such as those which charm us in the "Georgics" of Virgil—the story of Aristæus and the sublime reflections introduced by the words "Forsitan his arvis."

The function of the myth in Plato is often misapprehended. It is not a mere added ornament. Each dialogue is a drama, which is not arrested by the myth, but sustained on another plane. Philosophy and poetry are blended together in it, as in a great poem like the "Commedia" of Dante, just as in a great fresco Philosophy and Painting go hand in hand. The myth reminds the reader, who is following a piece of subtle dialectic, that the head is not the whole Man—that beside the Understanding, which deals with phenomena, there is the Reason (in the Kantian sense) which deals with noumena. Imagination is often starved in pursuit of Ratiocination. The Understanding, like the World, is too much with us. Professor Stewart writes on p. 386:

"The metaphysician is too often found trying to set forth a ground which shall be plain to the understanding, forgetting that—

Thou canst not prove the Nameless,
Nor canst thou prove the world thou movest in,
For nothing worthy proving can be proven
Nor yet disproven.

The Poet does better: he induces the dream-intuition of a ground, and leaves us with the wonder of the vision haunting our minds, when we wake to pursue the details of his interesting story."

This marriage of thought and feeling is the astonishing cachet of the dialogues of Plato. Poetry does something like this now. Wordsworth's "Ode on the Intimations of Immortality" is a Platonic Myth in germ. Plato would have told how a Child rescued from the sequel of Death (like Er in the "Republic") somehow was permitted to see how the cloud of glory, which he trailed from his heavenly home, gradually faded into the light of common day; and he would have told us all about "the vision splendid" by which the Youth was attended on his way. The Platonic Myth appeals to Transcendental Feeling, which Professor Stewart explains as an effect produced within consciousness by the persistence in us of that primæval condition from which we are sprung, when Life was still as sound asleep as Death, and there was no Time yet. The whole question of the imaginative solution of the problems of the World, the Soul and God is summed up for Professor Stewart in the fine words of Plotinus:

"If a man were to inquire of Nature: Wherefore dost thou bring forth creatures? and She were willing to give ear and to answer, She would say: Ask me not, but understand in silence, even as I am silent."

The Myth sometimes (as in the "Protagoras") illustrates the distinction between the mechanical and teleological explanations of the world. Sometimes (as in the Gorgias) it sets forth, in a vision of Judgment, Penance and Purification, the continuity of the responsible Self and its development, to be worked out only under κλῆσις, the discipline of correction. It is interesting to find Oscar Wilde in his posthumous "De Profundis" putting forward, apparently quite seriously, that his abject debasement was necessary and requisite, in order that the scheme of his intellectual and temperamental development might be carried to its end through deep humiliation. Sometimes, again, as in the beautiful story of Er in the "Republic," the myth holds out to us visualised for the Imagination that "hidden hope" to which the Good Voice clings in Tennyson's "Two Voices." Le lendemain de la mort, the Day of Judgment, is a favourite subject of the Myth, and so is the Future World with its detailed topography, its rivers and its jewels, reminding us now of Dante, now of Revelations. But, as is well observed by Professor Stewart, Plato does not transform his physical into moral relations. It would have been alien from his art to make, like Dante, the tears of this world supply the waters that flow in the rivers of Hell, or, like Thomas the Rhymer, to fill the springs of Elfland with "a' the bluid that's shed on earth."

A strange mystery is set forth in the Gorgias myth—that the criminality of a man is in direct proportion to his opportunities of committing crimes—that the tyrants Archelaus and Tantalus suffer eternal punishment, which Thersites with his limited opportunities escapes. It is a terrible sin to get rid of temptation by yielding to it, and the crime is blacker and more unpardonable in proportion to the facility of "the means to do ill deeds." The theory is in the spirit of the "Lead us not into temptation" of the Lord's Prayer.

We have space only to refer our readers to the "Phædrus" myth, showing the real meaning of that ever ignorantly misapplied phrase "Platonic love," the story of the Androgyns in the "Symposium," the Earthborn in the "Republic" and the Atlantis in the "Timæus."

Professor Stewart well rebuts a charge brought against Plato by Kant in a celebrated passage:

"The high dove, in free flight cleaving the air and feeling its resistance, might imagine that in airless space she would fare better. Even so, Plato left the world of sense because it sets so narrow limits to the understanding, and ventured beyond on the wings of Ideas into the empty space of the pure understanding. He did not see that with all his effort he made no way."

The passage is interesting as being one of the few—that about the Starry Heavens above and the Moral Law within is another—in which the philosopher of Königsberg forsook the arid road of scientific language for the flowery paths of fancy. But it is a misapprehension of the Platonic myth. Plato never sought to make noumena the objects of the "Categories." Professor Stewart writes on p. 73:

"The attempt made in the latter half of the tenth book of the 'Republic' to place the natural expression of man's belief in the immortality of the soul on a scientific basis—to determine Soul by means of categories of the Understanding—I regard as intended by the great philosopher-artist to lead up to the myth of Er and heighten its effect by contrast—to give the reader a vivid sense of the futility of rationalism in a region where Hope confirms itself by 'vision splendid.'"

The excellent account of the Cambridge Patonists, More, Cudworth, Clarke and Smith, will be to some not the least interesting part of a work full of thought and learning and in every way worthy of the great University, whose splendid reputation Professor Stewart so worthily maintains.

JOHN KEATS

The Poems of John Keats. Edited by E. DE SÉLINCOURT. (Methuen, 7s. 6d. net.)

"SHRIEKING 'celestial' the pale youth died." So wrote a critic of a bygone age of literary men in picturesque and exaggerated phrase, and succeeding generations have been somewhat apt to follow this idea of John Keats. In the unfortunate race of poets, Keats was one of the most unfortunate, misrepresented and depreciated during his life; ignorance and stupidity have continued to fight against the fame which can only now be regarded as securely established. His character has always been assailed as weak and sensuous, accompanied by a pusillanimous spirit which broke down completely under the severity of the reviews directed against this apothecary's apprentice. Byron's ill-natured assumption that it was

"Strange the mind, that very fiery particle, Should let itself be snuffed out by an article," was accepted pityingly by Shelley in his deathless lament for him

"Who has outsoared the shadow of our night."

The new complete volume of Keats' Poems edited by Mr. de Sélincourt clears up many disputed points. The prefatory study is the result of much original and painstaking research and the notes leave no clue to the sources of the poet's ideas untouched. Mr. de Sélincourt has exploded the myth that Keats was dependant on Lemprière for his knowledge of the classics. But neither the "Dictionary," nor Tooke's "Pantheon," nor Spence's "Polymetis," all of which he read assiduously at school before he was fifteen, was the true foundation of Keats' love of the classics. Mr. de Sélincourt proves that this young Greek was really a child of the Renaissance, and that from the Elizabethan poets he gathered all his classical information, and what is more, sucked that spirit of wonder and joy which informed Cortez in his famous sonnet when he stood

"Silent upon a peak in Darien."

It was Spenser indeed who first awoke his enthusiasm for poetry, and it was into that strange land of glamour and unworldliness he first strayed when, as his friend Clarke said:

"he went through it as a young horse through a spring meadow ramping."

Spenser, Shakespeare, Fletcher, Chapman, and many others of the Elizabethan era, were his teachers, as his rare and strange words disclose, and how much he owes to Milton "Hyperion" bears witness. The use of certain words in Keats, the misuse rather, the lack of taste he displays so often in his earlier writing has caused Mr. de Sélincourt to put forward more than once an explanation that may be combated. He ascribes too much to Keats' "vulgar origin." The phrase is in itself objectionable for at the most his parentage could be described as bourgeois. Parents who contemplated, had their means permitted, sending their sons to Harrow, and did eventually succeed in sending them to a very excellent private school, might surely escape the suspicion of vulgarity. Byron, with his aristocratic birth, was a real vulgarian, and his work was tainted in a fashion that refuses comparison with the boyish lapses of Keats. Mr. de Sélincourt has allowed the conventional aspect of Keats' origin to cloud his judgment. Leigh Hunt was the vulgar influence, generous and inspiring as he was, who early in his development had a transitory effect on the poet. The aspersions cast on him as being a Cockney poet are hardly worth examining now, but take this pathetic extract from a letter during his last illness:

"How astonishingly does the chance of leaving the world impress a sense of its natural beauties upon us! Like poor Falstaff, though I do not babble, I think of green fields; I muse with the greatest affection on every flower I have known from my infancy—thus shapes and colours are as new to me as if I had just created them with a superhuman fancy. It is because they are connected with the most thoughtless and the happiest moments of our lives. I have seen foreign flowers in hot-houses of the most beautiful nature, but I do not care a straw for them. The simple flowers of our Spring are what I want to see again."

The notes to this edition are so copious as to be slightly irritating. Commentator is piled on commentator. If the shade of the pale youth could see the edifice of critical appreciation and industry built on the small body of his verse it would glow with wonder and laughter. Long ago Shelley rejoiced to leave him sleeping securely far "From the contagion of the world's slow stain," but now a garish dawn of praise illumines every word he penned. Mr. de Sélincourt pursues the facts of the indebtedness of Keats to other poets a little too closely. Poetical thought, poetical phrase, repeats itself. It may be that certain phrases are unconsciously assimilated once read, but the repetition of the same words is often merely a proof of the identity between poets, between poets too of different ages and climes who have never read each other. It was certainly the student of Milton who produced "Hyperion," but to take line by line and word by word to make parallels is not stimulative criticism. Mr. de Sélincourt is apt to carry his point too far. For instance, take that most passionate cry of Milton where unbearable suffering is flaunted in the eye of day:

"O dark, dark, dark, amid the blaze of noon."

This is compared with the lines in "Hyperion" which seem to come with faltering wordiness in the wake of Milton:

"For me, dark, dark,
And painful vile oblivion seals my eyes."

Mr. de Sélincourt still further disposes of Keats by saying:

"The conjunction of the two epithets 'painful vile' has also a Miltonic sound."

We would say that the "gloomless eyes" of Apollo in the preceding lines owes just as much to Miltonic inspiration. Then he extracts such a phrase as "though an immortal" from that most exquisite and telling touch which paints the goddess as she bends over the sorrowing Saturn,

"One hand she press'd upon that aching spot
Where beats the human heart, as if just there,
Though an immortal, she felt cruel pain."

It is "just there" that Keats breaks through the passionless suffering of Thea, and why should the phrase mentioned come under the heading of elliptical constructions derived from Milton? In the same way he has made a list of Miltonic repetitions, though he proves it a common poetic device which we may say is used equally with telling emphasis in prose eloquence. An example he takes is:

"How beautiful, if sorrow had not made Sorrow more beautiful than Beauty's self."

This, though unapproachable in itself, has become quite a common trick in musical verse. The line before may be considered a more subtle and living expression of Miltonic influence packed and breathing with his unmatched power:

"There was a listening fear in her regard."

The words are made to stand still. Then again he takes orb used as an adjective. To ascribe the use of it by Keats to his study of "Paradise Lost" or even to Shakespeare is hardly necessary. If that is the case Shelley and others less famous may be referred to the same masters. Shelley gives some interesting references; there is his "orbed maiden, with white fire laden"; his "spheréd skies," his "massy earth," to mention a few words Mr. de Sélincourt takes straight from Milton, without mention of their occurrence in Shelley.

Then the collocations of adjectives which are quoted as derived from Chatterton such as "nerveless, listless, dead," "lovelorn, silent, wan," are not peculiar to Keats when he wished to make the climax of despair. Shelley's line, beats for vigour the accumulation of adjectives in any description of Keats.

"An old, blind, mad, despised, and dying king"

Mr. de Sélincourt has proved for the last time, if it needed proving, the folly of making the "irresponsible reviewers" the cause of the poet's death. It was only when he had brooded over, in the supersensitive state of sick persons, the wrongs done him that he made any wail, when he was also distracted by his passion for the prosaic Fanny Brawne, and when disease was sapping his energy and ruining his last hopes of ambition and work. It was too true he dwelt with beauty:

"Beauty that must die
And Joy whose hand is ever at his lips
Bidding adieu; and aching pleasure nigh,
Turning to poison while the bee-mouth sips:
Ay, in the very temple of Delight
Veil'd Melancholy has her sovran shrine,
Though seen of none save him whose strenuous tongue
Can burst Joy's grape against his palate fine;
His soul shall taste the sadness of her might,
And be among her cloudy trophies hung."

SOCIAL GERMANY IN LUTHER'S TIME

Bartholomew Sastrow. Being the Memoirs of a German Burgomaster. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM. Introduction by HERBERT A. L. FISHER, M.A. With Illustrations. (Constable, 3s. 6d. net.)

QUITE apart from its historical interest as affording an intimate picture of social Germany in Luther's time, this autobiography of a hard-headed Pomeranian notary is a most curious human document. Sastrow is not to be compared for a moment in personal charm with Benvenuto Cellini, Pepys, or Boswell, but his self-revelation is, in its way, as complete and as natural as theirs. If only he had had imagination, and a little romance in his composition, the story of his life might have become immortal. As it is, there is plenty to console us in this amusing record of an eager, irrepressible, pugnacious spirit, who had tasted the bitterness of extreme penury, and was all the better able to appreciate good cheer and prosperity. His father had a lawsuit which lasted thirty-four years, and this no doubt influenced Bartholomew's choice of a profession. He was over thirty, and had already rendered important diplomatic service, accompanying the Pomeranian chancellors in the character of notary on a mission to the Emperor, when he had the strength of mind, in spite of the protests of his wife and her relations, literally "to go to school again," attending law lectures and qualifying himself with the greatest industry. Sastrow is very dry about his improved reception at home when the profits began to come in, not only money but all kinds of provisions, hares, mutton, venison, wild boar, and "magnificent hams," as he calls them enthusiastically.

Sastrow was born in 1520, the year in which Luther's three great Reformation tracts were published, and he died in 1603; his life therefore covers a period of fascinating interest, of violent excesses and appalling barbarities, mingled with theological and metaphysical disputations, and the craft and subtlety of princes and their statesmen. He was eleven years old when the Smalkald League was signed, and he had been dead and buried nearly half a century when the struggle between the Protestant North and the Catholic South in Germany came to an end with the Peace of Westphalia. On the earlier stages of that struggle his memoirs are continually throwing interesting side-lights—always from the Lutheran side. He quotes a curious letter written to his father by Dr. Luther himself. Nicholas Sastrow had absented himself from the Holy Communion because of his lawsuit, and the great Reformer gives him very sensible advice:—"Wait for the decision of the court before whom your suit is pending, but do not forget that nothing prevents you from participating in the Holy Supper. If it were otherwise I myself and our princes would have to remain away from the Holy Board until our differences with the papists be settled." Bartholomew gives an extraordinarily vivid picture of the corruptions and abominations at Rome, which he visited in 1546. Like all good Lutherans, he has his own superstitions, as we see, for instance, in his account of a miraculous guide who appeared to him and rescued him out of deadly peril at Viterbo. Even more entertaining were his experiences in the service of Herr von Löwenstein, a Receiver of the Order of St. John. We shall not soon forget the picture of this festive old gentleman, with his fool, his ape, his good cheer, and his pretty mistress, into whose favour the sly Sastrow soon crept.

Altogether this is a book to be kept and enjoyed, especially by those who understand the great art of "dipping." Mr. Vandam has done the work of translation so well as to make us regret afresh his premature death—so well, indeed, that the book does not read like a translation at all. In two or three places he has been obliged to bowdlerise, but no one can accuse him of prudery in what he has chosen to leave. Mr. Fisher's introduction is brightly written, and not at all "donnish." The book is illustrated with reproductions of old prints.

A BATTLE LONG AGO

The Perth Incident of 1396, from a Folk-Lore Point of View. R. C. MACLAGAN. (Blackwood, 5s. net.)

SIR WALTER SCOTT in "The Fair Maid of Perth" took as his central incident one of the most astounding facts narrated in early Scottish history. His authority was Wyntoun's Chronicle, which supplies the first and most trustworthy record of the event. As this is the original document on which all other accounts are directly or indirectly founded, it may be as well to summarise what the bard said. He gives the date as "a thousand and three hunder yere nynty and sex," and tells us that thirty wild Scottish men were matched against other thirty, and that they fought with the cruelty engendered by an ancient feud. He gives the names of the clan as Clahynnhe Qwhewyl and Clachinyha, and they were led by the two chieftains Schir Ferqwharis and Cristy Johnesone. The warriors it seemed entered into the fray armed "wyth bow and ax, knyff and swerd." He describes the conclusion of the affair as follows:

"Quha had the ware thare at the last,
I will nocht say; bot quha best had,
He wes but dent bathe muth and mad.
Fyfty or ma ware slane that day
Sua few wyth lif than past away."

Time played the usual tricks with this bald account. Wyntoun had the advantage of living at the end of the fourteenth century and in all probability either witnessed the affray himself or took the account of it from eye-witnesses. The next version comes from the Scottish Chronicle of John Fordun, who writing as far as we can calculate half a century after the event, added a few graphic details that, true or not, helped to fire the imagination of Sir Walter. The first of these was the story of how "one of the combatants, looking for a way of escape, slipped from among them into the river, and crossed the water of Tay by swimming." Readers of Scott will easily remember how well he turned this to account in making Eachin adopt the same cowardly way of escaping combat. The second incident is the appearance in the crowd of a volunteer substitute for a recalcitrant. In Fordun he is "a common hired countryman of medium stature but of savage mien" who offers to take on the quarrel for the modest fee of half a mark and the promise of some support or other as long as he should live. Fordun tells us that the "raw recruit did valiantly and in the end came forth scatheless." This low-statured fierce-visaged countryman suggested to Scott his famous Gow the Smith, or Hal o' the Wynd, and with what admirable blazonry he worked the striking incident into his novel every reader knows. The same story was practically repeated in the "Chronica Scoce" and in the "Registrum Episcopatus Moraviensis." The tale was repeated with slight variations by several chroniclers till the time of George Buchanan, who with the literary instinct to be expected of him gives the account with much local colour and many details, and John Leslie, Bishop of Ross in his "History of Scotland" followed in the footsteps of Buchanan. From the literary point of view the incident is of very great importance as showing the use to which a master of romance could put a tale that was in itself barbaric, and make of it a scenic incident not unworthy of comparison with the best fights in the Iliad. Whoever has read the "Fair Maid of Perth" in youth has probably heard the cry of the Highlanders "Another for Hector" ringing in his ears like a Border slogan. The author before us, Mr. R. C. MacLagan, appears to have made this fight on the Inch of Perth an object to be pursued during the labour of years. He has written a solid treatise on the subject that might supply endless matter for argument were we disposed to follow him into the minute details which he has collected. The whole world of folk-lore seems to have been laid under contribution to supply example and illustration to bear on this remarkable argument, but at the end it stands exactly where it did before, a bit of wild Scottish history transacted in the neighbourhood of Perth at a time when the Highlanders had not yet been subjected to the influence partly good, but for the most part malignant, of the Southern civilisation. The reader who is interested in the subject may be sincerely recommended to go to Mr. MacLagan's book, which he will find to be a work of patient and thoroughgoing research into all that folk-lore has had to say about this picturesque page of Scottish history.

MECCA UNVEILED

With the Pilgrims to Mecca. The Great Pilgrimage, A.H. 1318-A.D. 1902. By HADJI KHAN, M.R.A.S., Special Correspondent of the Morning Post, and WILFRID SPARRO. With an Introduction by Professor VAMBERY. (Lane, 12s. 6d. net.)

THE Hijaz, the Moslem Holy Land, and Mecca, its Jerusalem, are in theory absolutely inaccessible except to those of Moslem faith. Actually, however, the sanctuary has been visited by nearly a score of Christian travellers. But not one of these would have lived to relate his experiences had he not travelled in the guise of a Mussulman, and succeeded in keeping up the deception.

The latest Hadji (pilgrim) to the Moslem Holy of Holies must not, of course, be classed with these factitious devotees, and being a Mohammedan he is able to give a fuller account of the remarkable rites and mysteries connected with the pilgrimage than any other recent traveller.

Further, this informing yet entertaining description of the experiences of a twentieth-century pilgrim must be placed in a different category from the travel books written to order by the latter-day "professional" globe-trotter. We are all too familiar with this kind of work, where the author seems chiefly concerned to crowd in just as much travel and exploration as will fill the kind of volume demanded by the patrons of the circulating libraries. In these hasty and superficial impressions de voyage we occasionally find highly diverting "howlers," due either to want of knowledge or defective powers of observation. We remember coming across, in the pages of a popular travel book recently published, a description of some remarkable Mohammedan monuments in Turkestan. The author was at a loss to reconcile their modern appearance with the date on the inscription, which showed that they were built in 1158, the ingenuous traveller having confused the Christian with the Mohammedan era, and having consequently added some six centuries to the history of the nineteenth-century structures!

This, we may parenthetically observe, recalls a very diverting error in a certain theatrical poster advertising a famous revival of Julius Cæsar produced in London a few years ago. It represented a facsimile of a Roman coin with the inscription "Cæsar Imperator, B.C. 44"!

But to return to our author. Mr. Khan undertook the somewhat hazardous journey to Mecca in 1902 as the special correspondent of the Morning Post, a task for which he was very well equipped, as not only was he a Mohammedan, but he spoke Arabic fluently, was a trained observer, and possessed in a marked degree the journalistic instinct. The result is a book which gives perhaps the most vivid and picturesque account of the great pilgrimage which has ever been written in English, compared with which the well-known narratives of Burckhardt and Burton are dry, jejune and colourless. Moreover, our author's first-hand information on the extraordinary semi-pagan rites and ceremonies of the Moslem "Holy Week" is far more ample. For vigour of style and picturesque treatment Hadji Khan may be compared with the famous traveller, Palgrave, without the latter's tendency to embroider the narrative at the expense of accuracy.

The guide employed by the author at Jeddah, a certain Sayyid Ali, is a singularly original character, full of quaint conceits and sceptical witticisms which give a piquant flavour to the book. Every trifling incident affords this delightful cicerone an opportunity for cynical comment, a seasonable proverb, or a quaint example of folk-lore or legendary superstition. The manner in which the engagement was made gives an inkling of the spirit of camaraderie in which master and man undertook the pilgrimage. Says Sayyid Ali, "Your Excellency is fortunate to have met me: the Hajj season is far advanced: Moghavem guides are scarce: and I am one of the most reasonable of men. If you will burst from the bonds of economics in the matter of salary, you will find in me a pleasant travelling companion and a lettered guide." And we are bound to say that this self-laudatory estimate is justified.

The author's description of the extraordinary ceremonies is graphic and convincing. Certainly the work of a devout pilgrim is arduous in the extreme. He has to make the circuit of the Kaabah seven times in company with a vociferous and odoriferous mob of fanatical devotees, some thousands in number, while each time he passes the sacred Black Stone he must kiss it or, at all events, touch it. Then he has to pass between the low hills Safâ and Merwâ, partly running and partly walking in memory of Hagar's hurried steps as she wandered up and down seeking water for Ishmael. The last "lap," if the modern phrase be permissible, has to be performed hopping. Next the pilgrim must make his way to Mount Arafat to pray and listen to a sermon lasting the greater part of the day. After this ordeal a night's respite is allowed him, and the next day he goes to the valley of Mina and casts seven stones at certain marks which represent devils. The final ceremony is performed in the valley of Mina, where a wholesale sacrifice of animals takes place. Feasting and rest last all night and a religious festival is turned into licentious carnival. All these ceremonies are extremely ancient. Some are frankly pagan, the signification of which is unknown, while in others the symbolism is obvious. The ceremonial walk round the Kaabah is naturally one of the most popular of the rites owing to the liberal "indulgences" granted for its due performance. Each step in the seven circuits blots out seventy thousand actual or potential sins, and earns the fulfilment of seven hundred thousand desires both in this world and the next. "Consequently," observes the irrepressible Sayyid Ali, "we took precious care that our steps, if quick, should be extremely short ones."

The Kaabah (square house) in the centre of the Mosque Enclosure (Harem), the Holy of Holies of Islamism, has the appearance from a distance of a colossal cube of dark stone. Built into the southern wall is the famous Black Stone (no doubt a meteorite) which is believed by the orthodox to have been given by the angel Gabriel to Abraham when he built the Kaabah. It is now as black as ebony, though originally as "white as driven snow," and this change in colour is accounted for by the faithful as being due to the shadows from the sinful hearts of pilgrims falling upon it. The stone has been hollowed out by the kisses of millions of worshippers till it now resembles a saucer in shape.

Several chapters are devoted to an illuminating description of the bazaars and social life generally in the holy city. At this period the Mecca "Fair" is to the Moslem world what that of Nijni-Novgorod or Leipsic is to Europeans; for with the Arabs commercial and religious instincts are closely associated. Indeed, Mahomet seems to have encouraged this tendency, as the Koran assures the pilgrim that it is no sin to combine worldly and spiritual aims during his pilgrimage.

SAMUEL ROWLANDS

The Bride. By S. R. London 1617. (Boston: printed by D. B. Updike for C. E. Godspeed, 1905, $3.50, net.)

"ALL Rowlands' works," wrote Mr. Sidney Lee, in the "Dictionary of National Biography," in 1897, "are bibliographical rarities, and several are extant only in one, two or three copies. Two at least are lost . . . no trace exists of 'a Poeme entituled the Bride, written by Samuëll Rowlande,' which was licensed to be printed by Thomas Pavier on May 22, 1617." In the spring of 1904, however, a copy of "The Bride" was found mentioned in the catalogue of a bookseller in a small German town, and promptly secured for the Harvard College Library, by means of the Child Memorial Fund. It has now been reproduced, if not in facsimile, yet as closely as possible, by C. E. Godspeed of Boston, in a limited edition printed at the justly celebrated press of D. B. Updike, with an Introductory Note by Alfred Claghorn Potter.

The copy is practically perfect, the title-page and the two head-pieces are reproduced in facsimile, and possessors of the reprint of Rowlands' works, issued by the Hunterian Club of Glasgow in 1872-80, will do well to add this issue as a supplement to their edition. Printers' errors have been left uncorrected. This is a very doubtful advantage in books set up afresh in imitation of an older form. With the greatest care in the world it is almost impossible to avoid fresh printers' errors creeping into a reprint and, when original misprints are left uncorrected, as in the present case, any fresh printers' errors that might accidentally creep in are inevitably placed to the debit of the original issue. Unquestionably, in all reproductions of an original text, save those in which the actual page is photographed, the correct method is to follow the plan which, we notice, has been adopted in the series of "Cambridge English Classics" now in course of publication, i.e., to correct obvious printers' errors by the insertion of the correct word or letter in square brackets, and, at the end of the volume to give a list of these, with particulars of the misprints corrected. No editor of a scientific reprint would now dream of correcting errors "silently," after the method upon which the editors of a decade or two ago so often plumed themselves. The trail of the modern editor has to be perceptible in his notes or in his appendix.

Of Samuel Rowlands little is known. He flourished at the end of the sixteenth and beginning of the seventeenth centuries, and he was the author of many pamphlets and tracts in verse and prose. In the introduction to his quarto of 1602, entitled "'Tis Merrie when Gossips meete," there are interesting references to Greene's works in a dialogue "between a gentleman and a prentice," and other writings of his contain so many references to contemporaries that students of literary history cannot afford to leave him on one side. Occasionally he compiled publications for the booksellers after the fashion of the celebrated "hackney writer" of his own times, Gervase Markham; such, for instance, is his versification of the well-known story of Guy of Warwick; and his title-pages have the charm of the spacious days in which he lived. It is impossible not to think kindly of a man who could issue an octavo, bearing the title "The Letting of Humours Blood in the Head-Vaine. With a new Morisco danced by Seven Satyres upon the Bottome of Diogines Tubbe," and, when this pamphlet was publicly burnt as too scurrilous to be endured by those in authority, could issue a colourable variant of it as "Humors Ordinarie, where a man may be verie Merrie and exceedingly well used for his Sixepence." At a bound, the writer takes his place among the company of "resolute John" Florio, who, within a year or two of this incident, had rendered Horace's

"omnes eodem cogimur, omnium versatur urna serius ocus sors exitura et nos in aeternum exsilium impositura cymbae"

by

"All to one place are driv'n, of all
Shak't is the lot-pot, where-hence shall Sooner or later drawne lots fall
And to deaths boat for aye enthrall;"

and a familiar line of Petrarch's by

"He that can say how he doth frie
In pettie-gentle flames does lie."

The 1611 edition of Rowlands' "Humours" pamphlet was reprinted in 1814 by Sir Walter Scott, whose view of its author and his works was to the effect that "the humourous description of low life exhibited in Rowlands' Satires is more precious to antiquaries than more brave works, and those who make the manners of Shakespeare's Age the subject of their study may better spare a better author than Samuel Rowlands."

In "Looke to it; for Ile stabbe ye," a quarto of 1604, Rowlands describes the types of unworthies whom Death will kill, and his sketches are forerunners of the "characters" that were to become popular twenty-five years later in the "Microcosmographie" of the genial Bishop of Salisbury. His "Martin Mark-all, Beadle of Bridewell; his defence and Answer to the Belman of London. Discovering the long-concealed Originall and Regiment of Rogues" (1610) may be read side by side with Thomas Dekker's "Belman of London: Bringing to Light the Most Notorious Villanies that are now practised in the kingdome," for, together, they furnish an excellent account of the low life of London in Shakespeare's day, of the acts of seventeenth-century "boys" and "hooligans," and of thieves' slang.

The pamphlet now for the first time reprinted will add little to Rowlands' fame. It is a farewell dialogue in verse between "The Bride" and "my wenches all" prior to her change of state, and concerns itself with the nature of a "maydes" and a "wives" life. It enshrines a proverb more familiar to us through Shakespeare's phrase, "But speake the truth, and so the devil shame"; and the Bride's discourse on the eight duties that "doe concerne a wife" recall the famous ten maxims that Arnolphe gives Agnes to read, "avec son exercise journalier" in the inimitable "L'École des Femmes:" but the Bride "wears her rue with a difference."

A FORGOTTEN WAR

The Fight with France for North America. By A. G. BRADLEY.
(Constable, 3s. 6d.)

THE pen of a ready writer has many disadvantages, not the least of which is its tendency to beguile the author into making in haste statements which one less eloquent, but with equal knowledge of the subject, would never commit to paper. Mr. A. G. Bradley is a writer of great eloquence, especially on subjects connected with Canada, and his book, "The Fight with France for North America," which has been reprinted, is evidence of this fact; but, like the great Napier, he is apt to be careless. It is an attractive subject and a picturesque story of the struggle which gave the Anglo-Saxon race supremacy in North America: but it is to be regretted that the author has not worked more scientifically. References to authorities are meagre, and it is, therefore, difficult to understand Mr. Bradley's point of view in many cases; but it is evident that his knowledge of the history of the Army is not equal to his knowledge of Canada. His reference, for instance, to "Wolfe's Light Infantry" is curious, for what scanty evidence there is goes to show that, in the general revolt against the pipe-clay tradition of the German school, it was Brigadier Lord Howe or Colonel Gage who formed the regiment to which Mr. Bradley alludes. This regiment ranked for a time as the 80th, and was known as Gage's Light Infantry. The account which Mr. Bradley gives of the raising of the Royal American Regiment of Foot, a regiment known to fame as the Sixtieth, is distinctly misleading; he says nothing of Pitt's opposition to the Bill which enabled the King to grant commissions to foreign Protestants in America, and nothing of Pitt's vehement declaration that British soldiers should fight British battles. The omission is all the more curious, as the history of a regiment which combined the functions of a Colonial Corps and of a Foreign Legion is distinctly interesting.

On larger issues, however, this author is apt to be led to some curiously false conclusions, and his defence of Mont-calm's move to oppose Wolfe on September 13, is a case in point. "Montcalm," he says, "has been blamed for precipitating the conflict, but surely not with justice! . . . The British held the entire water. Wolfe once entrenched on the plateau, the rest of his army, guns and stores could be brought up at will, and the city defences on that side were almost worthless." He quite ignores the fact that the British had but two days' provisions with them, and that for all further supply they had to depend on a single zigzag path just wide enough for one man abreast. Montcalm's supplies, it is true, were short, but by manœuvring with superior numbers he could have kept Wolfe under arms all day and at night his Indians could have prevented stores or reinforcements being brought up. And then, after two nights and a day under arms, what would have been the physical condition of Wolfe's men? Mr. Bradley worships Wolfe, and with justice; but his worship allows no criticism of the hero, or some explanation would have been given of the futile efforts below Quebec with which Wolfe wasted all August,

A SCHOLAR'S JEST

On a Recently Discovered Fragment of Juvenal. By ALFRED DAVIES COPE. (Oxford: Blackwell, 6d.)

THERE was a time when a satire on the methods of classical scholars could raise a laugh from the readers of magazines. Now, even in spite of compulsory Greek, the satirist must give up the hope of securing a wide public and issue his jest in the form of a separate brochure. No doubt there are some compensations for this limitation. Scholars, like all people who are not remarkable for their sense of humour, prefer a joke which is unintelligible to the general public to one which they share with the man in the street. They will therefore delight in the little paper which Mr. Cope has just published. By means of skilful emendation, transposition of lines and division among interlocutors he has succeeded in turning the logical mnemonic verses, "Barbara Celarent," into a military dialogue written, obviously, by Juvenal. The word "subalterni" has given him the hint and he has used it well. "Festino Baroko secundæ" becomes "Festino obaroque" (the word "obaro" will be found in its proper place in Lewis and Short), and with "Secunda et" another personage takes up the dialogue and continues with a health to the slain Disames—"Tertia da rapti Disamis." Perhaps the passage would appear too disjointed to be genuine, were it not that there are local touches too subtle for a mere commentator to have discovered. "EvA per acci" hides the words "Eu! aper. Acci," and the boar, as is well known, was the standard of a glorious legion. Where Latin fails to provide words to which the original can be converted, Greek supplies the gap. "Bramantip Caminres" becomes "Branā ἀντειραμεν" is, and the beauty of this conjecture grows clear when it is shown that the word Brana occurs in Pliny as the name of a town in Spain. This gives the scene of the dialogue and is, as the Germans would say, so objective and necessary an emendation that the author's whole contention is proved at once. Mr. Cope in true scholarly fashion descants on the merits as literature of the fragment he has reconstructed, and the whole tone of his little skit is admirably modelled on the best examples. The paragraph at the end of the paper, "Our author cannot be called 'lutulentus' or said to write lines running 'incomposito pede,'" illustrated by the appropriate references, is a charming bit of restrained pedantry. He is happy, too, in his parody of the modern mania for transposing and dividing lines, and his emendations are sometimes really brilliant. Unfortunately a parody of the emending editor is now somewhat out of date, for the present generation of scholars have turned their ingenuity into quite another direction. There are, however, still enough of the old school to give point to Mr. Cope's parody, and the impulse to emend is widely enough spread to allow the neatness of these "corrections" to be appreciated. A graver fault in this little paper is that the author has mixed argument with parody. He has chosen as his motto the words of Horace, "Ridentem dicere verum Quid vetat?" and he is very anxious to prove that Greek and Roman authors frequently allowed their characters to use popular and incorrect language. Indeed, his satire is largely directed against those who refine away all the incorrect touches in an author's language. To employ the same methods to produce an opposite result may be good parody, but it is not a good way to recommend the result; and by allowing the arguments in proof of his not very novel discovery to appear side by side with his mock arguments in favour of his emendations Mr. Cope confuses the effect of his paper. This, however, does it little harm, for the chief merit in an author is too often considered to be the faults which the commentator can correct.

FANNY BURNEY AT COURT

Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay. As edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. Vols. II. and III. (Macmillan, 10s. 6d. net each.)

THE period of Fanny Burney's life comprised in the second and third volumes of Mr. Austin Dobson's edition of her Diary, extends from June 1781 to June 1789, and the book is unequally bisected by the capital event of her life, her appointment at Court in June 1786; the narrative of these three years being to the remainder as five to three, an exact reversal of the chronological proportion. Except in dimensions, these segments of her history might be not inaptly compared to the halves of the legendary apple poisoned by being sliced with a knife envenomed on one side only. Up to Miss Burney's removal to Windsor everything in her Diary, save when the misfortune or death of a friend has to be recorded, is geniality and sunshine. Immediately after her transfer to the frigid atmosphere of the Court, it becomes chequered, not with complaints, for it is part of the tragedy that Miss Burney would have deemed herself very wicked if she had ever complained, with whatever justice, but with a constraint and gloom evidently due in the main to the systematic repression of her buoyant spirits by formality and lack of intellectual sympathy. She does, indeed, strive gallantly to make the most of every gleam of sunshine that struggles into her cage. Yet it is painful to find her declaring that it is high time she saw something of her old friends, and professing herself, after two years and a half's experience, as "quite resigned to my fate and situation," which had seemed the gate of Paradise. Macaulay's denunciation of her family's and her own blind superstition is not too strong, though perhaps too rhetorical in expression: the person least to blame is good Queen Charlotte, to whom the idea that attendance upon herself could be uncomfortable never occurred till forced upon her by Fanny's ingratitude, as she deemed it. We have not yet proceeded so far. Fanny is still only breaking, not broken down: the King is still in his senses: and the public stage is occupied by Warren Hastings and his assailants. Miss Burney's attitude in this matter is delightfully feminine, and her report of her conversation with Mr. Windham, at the Hastings trial, alone shows with what reserve her reproductions of conversations are to be received. She conveys the general drift of a colloquy fairly enough, but it is steeped in her sentiments, and the diction is her own. Nevertheless, though the Court chapters of her Diary are often painful reading, they are the more valuable. Such another picture has perhaps never been given: for seldom, if ever, has such an observer as Fanny Burney been brought into contact with such a Court as George the Third's, so homely, so proper, so dull, so cruelly though unconsciously oppressive, so really respectable and honourable, and so intolerable! This part of the Diary has, further, the advantage of possessing a certain unity of interest: we find our heroine in a situation which we know must terminate somehow, and although the development of the incidents is to all seeming irregular and inartistic, we follow it with the curiosity excited by a good novel. The pre-Windsor period has the advantage of greater variety, and of introducing more interesting people. It is mainly a swarm of entertaining nothings, recounted with great vivacity, and so skilfully related or so providentially contrived, that we seem to live in the society depicted, and though unable to realise Johnson, or Mrs. Thrale, or any other conspicuous figures with the distinctness with which Boswell endows them, to have even a better idea than he would have conveyed of the atmosphere in which they spent their lives.

ANGLING AND ALLEGORY

The Amateur Spirit. By BLISS PERRY. (Gay and Bird, 6s. net.)

"THE emotions of the author who discovers that he has produced a treatise when he intended only a series of essays may be likened to the surprise of the child who observes that his blocks piled almost at random make something that looks like a castle after all," writes Mr. Perry in his preface by way of apology, naïve but unconvincing, for producing in the form of a volume these six essays, which have already made their appearance in several magazines. The blocks remain blocks for all the charming imagination of the child, and to us the ingenuity seems a little far-fetched that can see a connection between "Fishing with a Worm," "The Life of a College Professor," "Hawthorne at North Adams," and "The Amateur Spirit," except in so far as every essay has some bearing on some form of life, and the amateur spirit is shown in the first essay to be the most human spirit in which to approach life. We do not for a moment cavil at the name, which is excellent, but it is a pity to overdo the hidden significance. There is a certain kind of sanity that makes one see the beauty of the insane, just as there is a species of virtue which "many a mad magenta minute" is needed to counteract. There are men who carry with them a pocket pulpit, into which they mount upon the smallest provocation; others who mount, then pause and dismount as if they thought: "No, I am really on your level; I will not preach." There is a flavour of this conscious condescension in these essays, and it takes away from the charm which they possess in spite of it, charm both of phrase and anecdote. It is necessary to settle oneself for a "heartly talk," and having done so one is agreeably surprised that the matter of the talk is not so depressing as one was led to expect. The ideas are not very subtle; nor have they any marked freshness; but to the main idea we heartily respond—that it is better to look at the world "in a generous than in a sordid way," and the word generous is practically synonymous with his use of the word amateur. And so the inherent difficulty of the subject seems to be avoided. Mr. Perry is not precise enough; he does not show that different things in life should be approached in a different spirit; a certain discrimination is necessary in dealing with the amateur in athletics, the amateur in art, and the amateur in business; but he makes no such discrimination; he talks about each in turn, and comes to the conclusion that it is better to live for love than for money, a conclusion which no one would hesitate to endorse.

But in the last essay Mr. Perry pulls on his waders and goes a-fishing: and while his waders are on we follow him gladly, whether he is "derricking" out the Taylor Brook trout with a worm or a fly, or with a brown hackle for the tail fly and a twisting worm on the dropper. He writes with appreciation and enthusiasm, distinguishing nicely between the claims of fly and worm, singing the delicate beauty of casting, the fierce, almost immoral joy of pulling out fish after fish with a large worm . . . "but ah! to fish with a worm and catch nothing," and there comes the inevitable moral, forced home to the hilt. He pulls himself up with a jerk, and though he relaxes to tell a delightful child-story, he begins to write about morality in the sacred terms of fishing, gusto giving place to suavity, as if his angling had only been an active allegory all the while. We do not want to think of Taylor Brook as the "Psalmist's river of God"; nor to be reminded that life "is a long brook to fish, and it needs a stout heart and a wise patience." There is a time, it has been said, for all things, but we have failed to discover a time that is appropriate for such moralising. Mr. Perry is a splendid fisher of trout, and should hesitate before he encroaches upon the dual capacity of the apostolic elect.

APOPTHEGMS

Life's Questionings: A Book of Experience. By WILLIAM ROMAIN PATERSON (Benjamin Swift). (Methuen, 3s. 6d. net.)

MR. PATERSON presents us in this little volume with some seven hundred utterances on life and books, about six to the page. There is no attempt at any connection between the various sayings; our author perches, as it were, on one twig of the tree of life, chirps at us thence, flits at once to another twig, whence another chirp, and so on to the end. By avoiding all sequence of thought himself, Mr. Paterson inevitably focusses the attention of his reader upon one isolated saying at a time, and we therefore have a right to expect therein the brilliant finish and flawlessness of a gem—but what are we to say of the following, taken from the first twenty pages, where we might reasonably hope to receive of the author's best:

"It is a strange fact that those who work with poisonous substances are more liable to become insane."

"Unbelief may be a kind of bad manners of the soul, and those who disbelieve in God are rude."

"Perhaps the artist should be like the sundial, horas non numerat nisi serenas."

Surely the last speck of dust has not been blown off the gem by this craftsman. Mr. Paterson can be neater, of course—e.g.,

"There are some human beings who should be labelled poison," and again:

"There are some persons who refuse to become meek until they are convinced that the meek do really inherit the earth"—but there is another pitfall which yawns for the sententious, the pitfall of platitude, and Mr. Paterson has more than once plunged to the bottom of it with a plump. "The duration of love as a passion does not seem to lie within our own control." Surely we have heard something like that before, and something also like this: "Quarrelling seems to be one of the chief occupations of lovers." It is a long, long time since "amantium iræ" first fell to the Roman jester's gun.

The patient reader will learn little directly from this book, since the writer seems to be rather an experimenter in notions than an expert in hard facts, but he will find his thoughts pleasantly led from one big subject to another, and, better still, he will probably be induced to look up again some old favourite—Sir Thomas Browne, or perhaps Epictetus himself, to whom our author alludes more than once with affection and reverence.

No book of apophthegms can be of lasting service unless, at the back of the semi-independent thoughts, can be discerned the thinker, driving them forward and keeping in loose touch with them as a shepherd with a flock of sheep. Emerson has peculiarly this power of scattering diverse ideas, which at first sight seem rebellious, as do the comets, but which are none the less faithful members of one shining system. Marcus Aurelius and Pascal are more womanish—they do not like to see their fancies run too far afield, and one could not imagine a Sermon on the Mount from either, with its creative paradoxes and its freshness of the spoken word.

The sententious cynic and the sufferer from Weltschmerz, once so fashionable, are tiresome to us nowadays, because they both refuse to play the game of life. We are not wicked or feeble enough to appreciate them in the small hours of a new century. And yet the most popular collection of short sayings at the present moment is undoubtedly the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, who professedly despairs. The cause of our admiration in this case is the masculine heartiness with which all the terrors and difficulties of the Universe are faced, and the inextinguishable laughter of old Omar's soul. There has seldom been seen such a strong manifestation of the will-to-live as in this melodious denier.

There is certainly room for the book of short essays and of apophthegms even at this hour, but in our opinion the conclusions should be like hammer-strokes, all more or less in the same direction, if the public is to be expected to pay any heed. For good or for evil, the days of ambling and laissez-faire are done, and a strenuous time is coming upon us, for which strenuous utterance is required. If you want to sell good wine, you must advertise it; if you want to make a point, whether ethical, political, or literary, you must present it a dozen times in different ways, or no one will even know that you have begun to think.

AMERICAN RHODES SCHOLARS

OXFORD, March 1905.

UNDERGRADUATES of the last generation never saw, what we are seeing every day, buggies rattling down the High or the Corn. The sight assures us of a definite change in our midst; it is not now a mere glimpse of American ladies with cameras and picture postcards—incongruous but not unfamiliar; it is the feeling that these lords of the buggy are now part of Oxford. They belong to us; in some cases they even look like undergraduates. And yet, if one observes them closely, they are found to be quite different from the young men to whom Oxford is accustomed. They were not brought up parentally predestined for Oxford; five years ago the idea to most of them would have seemed romantic but fanciful. Then the chance came, and it was seized. Candidates sent in their names and were required to pass an examination roughly on the lines of our "Responsions"; about eighty per cent. were ploughed for the simple reason that an American education does not in any way resemble the course of classics which enables the stupidest Englishman to pass Responsions. Latin Prose, for instance, is a mystery into which most Americans are not initiated. All this will be remedied in future, and we may fairly expect—without in the least disparaging the present Rhodes Scholars—a more representative selection in following years, when the system is more widely known and better organised. Probably the claims of athletics will gradually lose their power, and at some distant date a few points in the Freshmen's Sports will again fall to Englishmen.

Conceive the migration of these young men from their various homes, the leave-takings, the anticipations, the last glimpse of the native University; and the wonder of it all. They met at New York and were taken straight on board, part of the ship having been reserved for them. There they sat and wondered and read books about Oxford. When they reached Liverpool they were bundled into reserved railway-carriages, and on that very same evening found themselves in their rooms at Oxford. This sudden transplantation touches the fancy; one tries to imagine their impressions of Oxford; their surprise at the restrictions to which we bow, in contrast to the freedom of those Western Universities with the odd names: the general sense of mouldiness and senility in the architecture—and the dons: the nostalgia for large and bracing effects, for prairies and forests and Indian corn and sweet potatoes. So the imagination flounders: for one of these Americans, when asked what it really was that he missed in Oxford, what was the great blank, confessed that it was the absence of female society! "I don't know how to spend my time or my money now," he said. My eyes were opened: I saw the tragedy of the buggy with its solitary driver, and with a touch of contrition I recalled the hard things which I had said about North Oxford and its fair denizens.

The fact is that co-education colleges have made but little progress in England; they are regarded with apprehension. Even ladies' colleges have had to assert themselves gradually. An American girl was enlarging upon the advantages of "mixed" colleges: it was such a help in education, she said. "Of course," she went on, "I know there are some people who think that education should be of the mind; and then I am not sure that co-education colleges are the best thing. But we always think that education should be of the heart." But taking into consideration the altered status of women, the Spartan system will not work. No man will play mixed hockey for the game.

The Americans who have come to Oxford have little idea of a thorough education: many have no standard of work. The American system of education is to teach something about everything (without adding everything about something). A lady came to Somerville with certificates attesting her proficiency in thirty-two subjects! Or again another American, who wished to study the history of the Tudor period, admitted that he could not read manuscripts nor did he know any of the European languages which are essential for the understanding of that age. His history tutor advised him to go to Italy for his first vacation; and soon received a letter from the budding historian to say that he had not learned much Italian but had met a most charming young lady.

Another influence which must be fought is the tradition of German education, the pedantry and theses: the ordinary course for an American scholar is to obtain his Ph.D. either in Germany or in America at a very early age, and then to go back to his university as a lecturer. Hence the ridiculous theses. The head of a college is said to have been confronted by a young American who declared that his special subject was the "Synthesis of the Universe."

What, then, will be the ultimate effects of the Rhodes scholarships? The Americans—and probably this applies equally to the Colonials—have been received with great friendliness, which is one of the natural peculiarities of Oxford but which has appealed very strongly to them. This hospitality has bred much good feeling, which is bound to affect the general attitude of Americans toward Englishmen. One of the former recently made a fine harangue in a college debate on the subject of Anglo-American friendliness: he dwelt at some length on the reverence with which his countrymen regarded the old country, the affection, the faithfulness and the loyalty of all Americans. Then he paused for a moment: "But gentlemen, let me be frank with you; there may have been, there have been, times in the past—on the fourth of July, for instance—when I have ventured to twist the Lion's tail: but that was only in jest."

Yet further than the international cordiality which the practical author of the movement doubtless intended primarily to encourage, we may without rashness predict a great influence on American literature arising from the scholarships. It is sometimes suggested that the present cessation of literary activity of a high order in America is due to the gradual weakening of the ancient respect for European tradition. If there is a want of standard in American education, it is most noticeable in this. The Professor of Literature at a prominent Western University (and it is mainly from the west that the Rhodes Scholars come) was asked by a New York publisher to edit four books of "Paradise Lost" as a volume in a series of classics. He had never read it. However, he mastered those four books during the railway journey from New York, some five hundred miles, and wrote his notes on his arrival. So extreme an instance as this serves to show the contrast between American University life and ours. The contrast of appearance, even, is striking; and an American whose idea of a University was a single wooden edifice, asked his Oxford guide, after visiting several colleges, which was the University. His guide satisfied him by pointing to the Radcliffe Camera.

In this great movement which was started by a man's signature on a piece of parchment, it is possible that the individual, or at any rate the pioneers of the movement, will be sacrificed. And it is natural for us to feel occasionally a certain dismay, and to wonder whether it was worth while; but this is because we have all the benefits of the Oxford life and cannot fully comprehend the blessings which we enjoy. For surely if this handful of strangers are sacrificed to a great international movement of friendship, it will be a martyrdom amply rewarded, should the victims, passing into the cool and cloistered antiquity of immemorial tradition, take up arms with us in that "warfare against the Philistines which," as Matthew Arnold says, "this queen of romance has been waging against them for centuries, and will wage after we are gone."

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

ROBERT HERRICK

CATULLUS was Herrick's master, as he was the master of innumerable Elizabethan lyrists. The fact is that Herrick wrote in isolation from his environment, if I may put it in the Irish way. He had one foot in Elizabethan letters, and the other was in the literature of the Restoration. He had true affinities with both Ben Jonson and Suckling. He was at once the author of a series of devout pieces, and the composer of love-verses. It is love-verse always, and sometimes it is more; it is always neat and deft; it is usually dainty. For Herrick was a master of epigram, and maintained "form" above everything.

"Away with doubts, all scruples hence remove;
No man at one time, can be wise, and love."

Herrick could not; he babbles folly as a boy in his 'teens would desire to babble, had he the art. For calf-love is silent, and only maturity speaks and sings. I do not believe Herrick was ever silent, although he defends himself thus:

"You say I love not, 'cause I doe not play
Still with your curles, and kisse the time away.
You blame me too, because I can't devise
Some sport, to please those Babies in your eyes:
By Love's Religion, I must here confesse it,
The most I love, when I the least expresse it.
Small griefs find tongues: Full Casques are ever found,
To give, (if any, yet) but little sound.
Deep waters noyse-lesse are; And this we know,
That chiding streams betray small depth below.
So when Love speechlesse is, she doth expresse
A depth in love, and that depth, bottomlesse.
Now since my love is tongue-lesse, know me such,
Who speak but little, 'cause I love so much."

Herrick's mission is to represent the gaiety of passion. His mistresses, one must conceive, are imaginary. He is not the sad dog he makes himself out. He writes to Silvia, Julia, Anthea, Perilla, Perenna, Electra, Lucia . . . to all and sundry, so be only they are beautiful and worthy his incorporate love. Julia's lips outvie the cherries; his cry is triumphant, challenging. The flowers are always suffering by comparison with the charms of these ladies, and perhaps monotonously so. But who will deny the sweet richness of this?

"Sweet, be not proud of those two eyes,
Which Star-like sparkle in their skies:
Nor be you proud, that you can see
All hearts your captives; yours, yet free:
Be you not proud of that rich haire,
Which wantons with the Love-sick aire:
Whenas that Rubie, which you weare,
Sunk from the tip of your soft eare,
Will last to be a precious Stone,
When all your world of Beautie's gone."

We do not go to Herrick for stately odes and sonorous sonnets; and, after all, lyrical quality is the first thing requisite in poetry. Every one knows Herrick, and is content to know him, by his famous "Gather ye rosebuds while ye may," or his equally famous "Bid me to live, and I will live, thy Protestant to be." But those fine poems do not stand alone, although they may be taken as the pick of the "Hesperides." Such a note as this of tenderness, of subdued passion, is by no means unusual with him:

"Now is the time, when all the lights wax dim;
And thou (Anthea) must withdraw from him
Who was thy servant. Dearest, bury me
Under that Holy-oke, or Gospel-tree:
Where (though thou see'st not) thou may think upon Me, when thou yearly go'st Procession:
Or for mine honour, lay me in that Tombe
In which thy sacred Reliques shall have room.
For my Embalming (Sweetest) there will be No spices wanting, when I'm laid by thee."

It must not be imagined that Herrick was so surrendered to amative verse as to go blindfold like his god. He saw the other side of the shield and was under the shadow at times. To him Death is ugly for it is the end of Love. He plays with the thought till it would make him melancholy, if he had not his glorious company of Julias to rejoice in. He can write almost gloomily:

"Life is the Bodie's light; which once declining
Those crimson clouds i' th' cheeks and lips leave shining, . . .
So, when Death comes, Fresh tinctures lose their place,
And dismall Darknesse then doth smutch the face."

But that mood is a passing one; with a pirouette he is right-about-face, and celebrating the frivolous delights of dress:

"A sweet disorder in the dresse
Kindles in clothes a wantonnesse:
A Lawne about the shoulders throwne
Into a fine distraction:
An erring Lace, which here and there
Enthralls the Crimson Stomacher. . . ."

If he can thus swerve aside to the "tempestuous petticoat" there is not much in his philosophical mood; certainly it has no depth. But why want depth? This is mere irresponsible abandonment; it is "youth, youth," and youth (save the mark) hymned by middle age. Herrick's mind remained that of the boy. Was it no more than calf-love he imagined?

"You say, to me-wards your affection's strong;
Pray love me little, so you love me long.
Slowly goes farre: the meane is best: Desire Grown violent, do's either die, or tire."

This may have been the measure of his real feelings. He was really a respectable and comfortable country parson with a number of pleasant friends and a taste for Catullus. But he is incorrigibly cheerful. Catch him at a melancholy occasion, and you can see with what difficulty the fellow keeps his face lugubrious. His grin emerges. He feels he and the company are losing time, and he implores the widow to throw off her weeds.

"Dry your sweet cheek, long down'd with sorrow's raine;
Since Clouds disperst, Suns guild the Aire again. . . .
Off then with grave clothes; put fresh colours on;
And flow, and flame, in your Vermillion."

It was a feather-headed, light-hearted parson, and 'a babbled of green fields very prettily. Is there anything to equal the exquisite aubade of May-time; when "sweet Slug-a-bed," Corinna, tarried in her chamber? I love the sound and the freshness and the lilt of it. I stand this March day in the breath of that soft May breeze:

"Get up, get up for shame, the Blooming Morne
Upon her wings presents the god unshorne.
See how Aurora throwes her faire
Fresh-quilted colours through the aire:
Get up, sweet Slug-a-bed, and see
The Dew bespangling Herbe and Tree. . . ."

Herrick lived his life in the country, yet he had none of that worship of nature common to modernity. Flowers and the ensigns of nature were to him merely so many figures for his erotic verse. The primrose was indeed something more than a yellow primrose; it imaged some love-thought, as a rose resembled Julia, but weakly. Yet the primrose was, very handsomely,

"This sweet Infanta of the Yea-re."

It is in his purer romantic conception of love that Herrick is at his best. His coarseness, for which the lady in his dreams reproved him, is at best a cloak, perhaps the property of Catullus; and maybe he is right in his boast at the end of the "Hesperides":

'To his Book's end this last line he'd have plac'd, Jocond his Muse was; but his Life was chast.'

M. W.

A SONG AT SUNSETTING

"MORE fleet than flights of fire,
More soft than stealth of sleep,
Speed down the abysses dire
'Twixt outpost stars that keep
Lone boundary lights ablaze,
While, meshed in spiry rings,
Suns weave their devious maze"—
Even so my sweet merle sings.

He furls his dusky wings
Beneath the ivy-hood,
That o'er yon gate-arch clings,
As hill and field and wood,
Through pale mists hovering dim
Go lifted high and higher,
Up, up, with cup-curved rim
Against the west's rose-fire.

"Speed swiftness still and nigher;
Nay, ere our grey dawn slings
The disc of vermeil fire,
Breathe hither, O Spring of Springs,
Thy spell's enchanted might,
Whose sudden gramary brings
A change to strange delight"—
'Tis so my sweet merle sings.

Ah, list his soothsayings
Of joy unthought, untold,
Waked in all mortal things,
Till even the weary and old
Must deem they dream in truth,
And see their soul's desire,
Thrilled through anew with youth,
Whose shadow is dew and fire.

"Fled hate and wrath's fell fire,
Slain fear and sorrowing sore,
The very airs inspire
Love-lore and wonder-lore;
A heaven no heart shall miss,
Where storm wild rapture flings,
And calm sheds balm of bliss"—
Even so my sweet merle sings.

JANE BARLOW.

FICTION

The Seething Pot. By GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM. (Arnold, 6s.)

A PIECE of fiction that is written to express party feeling is a pamphlet in disguise, and does not come within the realm of art. It is difficult to treat politics in an artistic way, for the reason that politics presuppose bias, and the artist must approach his subject with an unbiased mind:

he must not be caught by the tentacles of any sect or party, and the tentacles of the political octopus are far-reaching and possess a grip that is diabolical. Mr. Birmingham writes of Ireland, and he does so with marked success, for though he at times goes more deeply into controversial detail than is necessary for the purposes of conviction, the political interest is always subordinate to the wider human interest. Moreover, he realises the fine dramatic possibilities of the situation and knows how to take full advantage of them. We see the pathos in the failure of men who would gladly give their lives, so passionate is their zeal, for the cause, and are beaten by the stupidity of the men for whom they are struggling, by the ability of men to whom diplomacy is a pastime in which they stand to win fame and lose nothing: we see the real sincerity at the heart of the priest, although he will stop at no baseness to achieve his end: we see the charm of the fickle people, simple, loyal, and superstitious, and the hopeless position of the landowner who makes an appeal to their reason. All these conflicting elements lend themselves to artistic treatment, as was seen in Mr. Shaw's brilliant comedy: and Mr. Birmingham, on different and less brilliant lines, has produced a book, serious and vigorous, which it is uncommonly pleasant to read after the innumerable tales, futile, and, at best, mildly amusing, that glut the market. He writes well and knows his subject. The characters—especially John O'Neill, the Irish leader, and Father Fahy—are drawn with discrimination and insight, the only exception being Lady Geoghegan, who is somewhat nebulous. We believe this to be Mr. Birmingham's first novel; we congratulate him upon the result, and shall look forward with interest to the appearance of his next work.

By Beach and Bogland. Some Irish Stories. By JANE BARLOW. (Fisher Unwin, 6s.)

MISS BARLOW's work is always marked by certain characteristics not too common among latter-day story tellers. By virtue, perhaps, of a certain quality of innate sympathy she always seems to move in the midst of her tales. Her humour, again stands out in gentle relief against an atmosphere of high seriousness. Above all she knows and appreciates the Irish peasants of whom she writes. In the first of these tales, indeed, the peasants share the honour of attention with the "quality." It is not only the widow Connor from her very little house, but the Lady Winifred from the (comparatively) Big House at Clannal-roan, who go into the winding walk on a certain sad spring evening in the hope of "seeing" their dead who have fallen in the war. But if most of the pathetic touches are given to "the Captain's" desolate young wife (irresistibly so, perhaps, in view of her twenty years), there is pity enough for both and to spare in the mournful colloquy between them at the trysting-place. And after all both are "ghost bereft" when the red (why red?) uniform which has been noticed flitting near the plantation is proved to belong to Private Jack Macdonnell, who is on the eve of departure for the front, and who will be coming back one of these days for sure, as his sweetheart says, "a corporal, maybe, or sargint with lave to marry." The brave little hope cuts queerly across the irretrievable loss of the two bereaved women, and, on the whole, this glimpse at three lives is a human and a moving thing. "A Money-Crop at Lisconnel" which succeeds it is a capital little tale concerned with the loss of a cherished shilling "on a grassy strip beside the bog stream," and with the extraordinary variety of coins which the neighbours find growing near the same spot pending the discovery of the real truant in an unexpected quarter. In a still lighter vein "Their New Umbrellas" and "A Small Practice" are pretty pieces of comedy, while "The High Tide and the Man Trappers" and its sequel "The Foot-Sticks of Slughnatraigh" are full of humour and gloom and rather wintry sunshine. The book is, incidentally, a perfect storehouse of Irish sayings, and we cannot help feeling it pity that so many of these should have been dovetailed as it were into narrative sentences, amidst which they sometimes lose their complete flavour.

The Wedding of the Lady of Lovell. By UNA L. SILBERRAD (Constable, 6s.)

Miss Silberrad has quality; she has the power to create atmosphere. The stories in this book have all the hallmark of real ability, though their artificial nature makes them difficult to handle. The scene is laid, one does not quite know where—either in England or America, in the seventeenth century. As the author writes the word "offence" with an "s" we rather conclude the latter; but there is little to show. The thread that connects them is the interference, or intervention, of one Tobiah, the dis-senter, a godly man with a strong vocation for being instant, in season, out of season, which proves of the greatest value to his allies when once he has been induced to espouse their cause.

The best of the stories are "The Dower Chest of Anne Ponsford" and "The Winning of Elizabeth Fothergill"; perhaps the palm should be given to the latter, which is original in design and a work of art in the telling. Elizabeth is affianced, by her dead father, to one Gifford, a gambler and a cheat. He, playing one night at the Fox and Grapes, falls in with his match, in the person of a wandering student who plies the trade of a tinker; and by the end of the evening, Gifford has staked his betrothed and her snug farm-house and goodly acres; and lost them. Jeremy, the tinker, has a mind to look at his winnings, without it being known that he is the man who has acquired some kind of a right to them. The upshot must not be told. But old Tobiah's rôle in the matter is well imagined.

Lord of Himself. By MRS. AYLMER GOWING. (Long, 6s.)

WHEN March arrives your candidate for the Oxford Newdigate must dismount from his Pegasus and leave his "heroics" with motto duly attached and his name in a sealed envelope at the vice-cancellarial portals. And not till May will he know whether he has won the prize or come in (as he will not infrequently confide to you afterwards) a goodish second. How many undergraduates of fiction have entered these lists it would be rash to guess, but no one, surely, has ever been so well equipped as the hero of a recent novel, whose "mystic steed, spurred on by the passion of the man, still bore him on and upward as lover and poet, of imagination all compact," beyond the common thoughts of men!

Although "the time was short, he felt, to master the technique of poetic art, failing which no effort of genius could pass the rhadamantine council," Aubrey Wedmore was no faintheart, and "roaming afield," we learn, "in company with Plato, Homer, or one of the great tragic masters of every mode that can stir the spirit of man to love or hate, tender compassion, or horror unspeakable . . . he was taught to play upon that complex instrument, the human heart, as upon a harp of many strings."

He won the prize, of course; and when at the Encænïa "a pale young face and lithe form in academic robes, quivering, passion-fraught, rose up in the western rostrum, 'dead' silence harkened—men and women hardly dared draw breath amid the hush as the poet's fire called back the great spirits of a vanished age." Need we add that a princess "drank the flowing measure like a new wine," or that after the general delight and wonder had died down, "the soldier, the archbishop, the pro-consul, the empire-builder" vied with each other in congratulation and expressed esteem?

All this, and much more also, is to be found in Mrs. Aylmer Gowing's "Lord of Himself." To all those now in suspense we commend, by way of distraction, her imaginative (but alas! somewhat misleading) romance.

Little Citizens. By MYRA KELLY. (Hodder and Stoughton, 6s.)

STORIES have been written of the Russian and Danubian ghettos, stories of gloomy episode and interest. Kompert wrote them; so, a little later, did Franzos. The pictures they presented left an ineffaceable impression of suffering; the good and bad qualities of their people were the qualities of the bitterly oppressed. Civilised Europe shuddered only yesterday at the tragedy of Kischineff, but Kischineff is one act in a long history; and there is not an invented story of Jewish distress that is not the shadow of a worse reality. The intolerable conditions of life imposed on Jews in Russia drive numbers forth, and so, as every one knows, there are both in London and New York whole colonies of these unhappy folk. Their ways, bad and good, are sufficiently discussed; their arrival creates a political problem. But, except by those directly interested, little is known of their children. How is the next generation growing up? What part will it play twenty years hence in its adopted country?

Miss Myra Kelly shows us these Little Citizens at work and play in a New York school. Their parents are pedlars, seamstresses, and costermongers. The older people herded together here as they did there, and the squalor of the ghetto still clings to them. They are timid, ignorant, unwashed. But the children they send shrewdly and faithfully to school, the children are enchanting. Of course they are naughty. Miss Kelly is at once too honest and too artistic to write stories about little saints. Her boys and girls quarrel, they tell lies, one of them drinks till he is taught better. But they are clever, affectionate, and teachable. Also, according to their own quaint etiquette, they are anxiously polite. They speak an odd dialect that we take to be a graft of Yiddish on American; and at school their ways are most humorous and entertaining. You guess at the sad bare homes from which they come; you see them hungry, dirty and forlorn. But you see them happy at school, learning with amazing quickness, ready to adapt themselves to the new civilisation that prescribes cleanliness and order. Properly handled, the stuff they are made of yields good citizens; and these boys and girls will some day illustrate the saying that every land has the Jews it deserves. They will cling to America with the deep affection of their natures and they will serve her with their able brains. Their sons will speak real English and their sons' sons will have forgotten the narrow traditions of the ghetto. Then they will be like other people. Miss Myra Kelly's Little Citizens are as strange to us as the countries of their birth, and their charm is partly the charm of novelty. She has presented them with originality and freshness and with a convincing sympathy.

Before the Crisis. By F. B. MOTT. (Lane, 6s.)

The Clansman. By THOMAS DIXON, JUN. (Heinemann, 6s.)

THAT splendid fanatic, John Brown of Harper's Ferry, haunts the romantic fiction of New England. At first the ethics of slavery excluded other considerations, and we had impassioned tracts like "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Gradually, however, other aspects of the racial problem invited attention; and the novelist of to-day is (or should be) concerned rather with showing the difficulties attending the political fusion of the black and white races than in passing judgment on either side. In both of the novels before us, "Before the Crisis," by F. B. Mott (John Lane), and "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, Junior (Heinemann), does the soul—and in the first the body also—of John Brown go "marching on." In Mr. Mott's case the historical background is frankly manipulated so as to throw into relief the fortunes of the lovers; whereas Mr. Dixon has painted in vivid colours the conflicting tendencies of the time, his love-story being of secondary importance. Mr. Mott's romance is a moderately deft piece of workmanship on familiar, melodramatic lines. "The Clansman" is planned on a more ambitious scale than "Before the Crisis," and the political atmosphere of the period is reproduced with greater skill than in Mr. Mott's story. Mr. Dixon's volume is the second book of a series of historical novels planned on the race conflict, and develops the story of the "Ku Klux Klan Conspiracy" which overturned the ill-advised Reconstruction régime. Starting with the assassination of Lincoln, and the overthrow of his wise, moderating counsels, it details the action of the Extremist party in the State, who, in punishing the Southern "rebels," set up a black oligarchy. The enfranchised negro, ill-educated, credulous, and passionate, falls an easy victim to unscrupulous adventurers from the North, and a reign of terror is inaugurated. Then follows the organisation of a secret society among the incensed whites—the "Ku Klux Klan Conspiracy"—Mr. Dixon taking a more favourable view of its doings than some historians have done. He shows how the spirit of old Scotland animated its leaders, and however tortuous may have been its methods, it served certainly one good purpose in checking the storm of blind passion that had swept over the States.

An Instinctive Criminal. By GILBERT COLERIDGE. (Treherne, 6s.)

It will be a mystery to most readers why Mr. Coleridge thought it worth while to write such a story as this, or indeed any story, considering his limited qualification for such a task. There is not a pleasant page in the book, nor a tolerable person, scarcely even a probable incident. Dr. Allison, who tells his own story, is a cold-blooded monster who murders two wives, and half kills a third for scientific and practical reasons. His first wife, a woman of the streets, annoys him by her cockney accent, and brings about her doom by her unconventional manner at a dinner-party, when she goes down upon her hands and knees under the table in search of her gloves. The author is singularly lacking in a sense of humour, but he occasionally provokes a smile where he intends to be pathetic, or when he expresses a passing regret for one of his murdered wives:

"Those deep and lustrous eyes had woven themselves into the garment of my life, and though out of keeping with the pattern, their absence made a hole; her white skin no longer vied with the purity of the pillow, and her neat figure no longer graced the fireside."

It is a wretched, sordid tale, badly told, and without one redeeming feature.

Crittenden. By JOHN FOX. (Constable. 6s.)

THIS is less a story than a vivid account of the Spanish-American War, with a spice of romance thrown in, the chief characters being of an unusual type, well-defined, and always interesting. The book will no doubt be widely read, particularly in America, for its realistic pictures of the war in Cuba, terrible pictures many of them, as one of the eye-witnesses exclaims: "It was horror, horror, all horror!" And certainly the truth loses nothing in the telling here, as all who remember Mr. Fox's admirable powers of expression will readily understand. The underlying story is essentially and completely American, not in incident only, but in atmosphere, feeling, and experience—not one book out of a hundred that comes across the Atlantic is touched by the intense national sentiment that permeates "Crittenden," distinct and exclusive, as if it had no part or lot with other nations of the world. "Crittenden" will be found worth reading, both as a story and as history, though probably some pages will be skipped by those who avoid the war horrors in their daily newspapers. It is written in an easy, vigorous style, and the interest never flags. It is an attractive looking book too, handsomely printed, and well placed upon the page, thereby adding to the reader's satisfaction.

The Confessions of an Ambitious Mother. (Heinemann, 3s. 6d.)

MR. HEINEMANN is evidently making a point of introducing us to the American novelist. The book before us is anonymous, and probably seeks to pique curiosity as a roman à clef somewhat after the style of "The English-woman's Love Letters." In fact, the Duchess de Belcourt is history very thinly veiled. The book is a strange mixture of cleverness and immaturity. The writer can be guilty of the following:—"I was not sufficiently stupid as to try that avenue to fortune," and writes, thanks, perhaps, to the printer (for the proofs are very carelessly corrected) "ingeniously" where she means "ingenuously." On the other hand, some of her observation is strikingly shrewd.

"We sometimes talked of the people . . . and finally came to the conclusion that they are not really taught anything but surface book-knowledge. They can add, multiply, and subtract figures, but not facts. There appears to be a wall between their learning, such as it is, and their actual living. The relation between the two, which is education, is unknown to them."

This is good, surely. We see the vulgar-minded, hard, soulless woman, walking through life with one sole aim,—to get on; and with the talent to achieve her object. Those who know the annals of New York during the past two decades, may be able to supply the surname which she never confides to us throughout. She is perfectly frank; she tells us that she thinks Becky Sharp was a fool. "I could teach her things that neither she nor her creator ever dreamed of." So she evidently could; for the fashion of making a living by giving away the life secrets of your friends to the Yellow Press was not invented in Thackeray's day. The worst feature of the Ambitious Mother is that she is to the last wholly unaware of her own moral degradation; and, in maintaining her pose, the writer shows no little ability.

THE BOOKSHELF

The Collectors' Annual for 1904. Compiled by GEORGE E. EAST. (Elliot Stock.)

MR. EAST'S compilation should prove, as he hopes, not only a guide to the present market value of works of art, but a permanent book of reference. It is divided into seven headings: Pictures, Engravings (which includes Etchings), Pottery and Porcelain, Antique Silver, Antique Furniture, War Medals and Decorations, and Objects of Art. In each case an alphabetical list is given of the articles sold, with the price, the date of sale, the place of sale, the title and measurements in the case of pictures, and in the other cases sufficient description to make the object recognisable. 1904 was a good year in the salerooms, and its records are full of interest. Mr. East's book, if accurate—and we have been unable to detect any inaccuracies—cannot fail to be of great service to collectors, connoisseurs and art-lovers in general, and it is hoped in future years to improve and enlarge the Annual.

Cerberus, the Dog of Hades: The History of an Idea. By MAURICE BLOOMFIELD. (Chicago: The Open Court Publishing Co. London: Kegan Paul.)

THE rudiments of this essay were published by Professor Bloomfield in the Academy in August 1892. It is concerned with the origin and meaning, judged by comparative mythology, of Cerberus. Professor Bloomfield, in the familiar manner of his school, has gone back to Hindu mythology for his justification in seeing in Cerberus, who, it may be remembered, never had definitely three heads until the Roman poets fixed him in that shape—nothing else than the sun and moon; Çabala, the bright, or spotted, one, and Çyama or Çyava, the black one; in other words, day and night. Max Müller, to whom the little book is dedicated, explained Cerberus as Çarvari, night: Professor Bloomfield prefers the double origin. The "dogs of heaven" of the Rig-Veda are not only the destroyers of life, which is clear enough, since time devours life; they are the keepers of the gates, not of hell, but of heaven. The Upanishads have it that all who leave this world go first to the moon. If they are unfit for the world of Brahma they are born again on earth; if they are fit they go forward. "From Çyama do I resort to Çabala; from Çabala to Çyama. Shaking off sin . . . do I enter then into the uncreated world of Brahma." In his interesting and suggestive little essay Professor Bloomfield explains by this duality the two heads which Cerberus so frequently has in Greek vase-paintings, and accounts step by step for the transition from the sun and moon as the gates of heaven to Cerberus, the guardian of the doors of hell.

Millet. By NETTA PEACOCK. (Methuen's "Little Books on Art," 2s. 6d. net.)

WITH Sensier's "La Vie et l'Œuvre de J. F. Millet," and Miss Julia Cartwright's "Life and Letters" to fall back upon, Miss Netta Peacock could hardly go far wrong in her monograph on Millet; and she has made good use of her material in turning out an adequate and useful little book. Miss Peacock quotes freely from Millet's letters; she adds a bibliography and a list of the famous contemporaries with whom Millet came in contact, and has made a very praiseworthy effort to compile a list of Millet's works. Of the reproductions with which the book is illustrated, the drawings, many of them after photographs in the Boston Museum, come out very fairly well, though, of course, they cannot compare with the reproductions of the Staats Forbès drawings which illustrated Miss Julia Cartwright's recent articles in the Burlington Magazine. One is of special interest, that of the "Man with a Wheelbarrow," in the Boston Museum, as showing a further development of the idea of a drawing in the Staats Forbès collection. The paintings are not so fortunate, though as object-lessons in Millet's composition they will, no doubt, be of service. And all the subjects for reproduction are well chosen.

Child Slaves of Britain. By ROBERT H. SHERARD. (Hurst & Blackett. 6s.)

Slavery. By BART KENNEDY. (Treherne. 6s.)

NEITHER of these books makes pleasant reading. Mr. Kennedy, a novelist, has thrown his contributions to social science into imaginative form, and yet it is unlikely that he has been guilty of deliberate perversion of fact or conscious exaggeration. Mr. Sherard is well known as a writer who made a hit with one book, and was therefore likely enough to produce as soon as possible another of the same kind, and yet it is equally unlikely that he has ventured any statements that he could not substantiate. And after all allowances are made for the writer of fiction and the man with a "subject," the state of the children of the very poor in England, as revealed by these two works, is woeful. Mr. Sherard has studied the conditions of poor child-life in the great cities of England and Scotland, and one of the most disturbing of his conclusions is that the clergy, the officers, even the agents of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, do not know the facts and take altogether too optimistic a view of them. The easy cry of "drink!" as the cause of all the misery he puts aside: "the working man or woman has not enough money to buy sufficient drink with which to injure his or her constitution to the extent necessary to transmit degeneration and the hereditary alcohol curse to his descendants." Exorbitant rent he believes to be one great cause, both of degeneration and of overwork; and on the subject of rent as affected by the alien immigration he is worth reading. But, horrible as some of his revelations are, we cannot recommend his book to the unhealthy minds who like the stimulus of such horror, for his aim, at any rate, is to be scientific and impartial.

The Burden of the Balkans (Edward Arnold, 14s. net).

MISS DURHAM records in her new book her sixth journey through the Balkans, and in spite of the discomforts which had, and always have, to be endured, her experience was most enviable and instructive. She visited in her capacity of distributor of relief to the starving inhabitants, Resna and the villages on Lake Presba, Ochrida, Tepelen of Ali Pasha fame, Avlona, Elbassan, Kavaia, Durazzo, Tirana, Croia, Oroshi and Skodra, a list which includes all the historic names of Albania. She went into the houses of the peasants, a thing which it is given to few of us to do to such an extent, and in so doing learned many things which threw light on the problem which Europe will soon have to face in real earnest, in spite of the anxiety of the Powers to burke the whole disagreeable business. First of all she learnt the truth about "Macedonia," which she justly observes is a conveniently elastic term, made to include all the territory which any one wishes to annex. It is a loose, and therefore a misleading term, and there are even people who believe that there is a special race, which they call "Macedonian," whose "cause" they wish to aid. The truth is that in a district which has no official frontiers, and never had any stable boundaries, there are no fewer than six races, all of whom have "causes" to be considered.

This fact is the one base upon which all understanding of the question must be founded, and when it is mastered the first step to comprehension has been taken. When the other States of Europe were gradually coming into being by a long and, speaking generally, uninterrupted process of evolution, the Balkans suddenly stood still. While still at an early period of their national development their growth was arrested, and arrested with extraordinary completeness. The Turks occupied the country in the Middle Ages, and as they had no ideas beyond conquest, they camped on the vanquished territory, and forced the people to feed them. But they suddenly stopped the growth of the Balkan peoples, with the consequence that the country remains in the Middle Ages to the present day. The land is strewn with the wreckage of dead one-man empires, and the peoples were still engaged in a wild struggle for existence when the all-conquering Ottoman swept down on them, froze them into inanition and blotted them out from the world's history. Then, as the Turkish power declined the Balkan nationalities awoke and resumed the struggle where they had left it off. Greek, Serb, Bulgar, Albanian and Vlach took up their history where it had stopped four hundred years before, but they found that the face of the world had changed and that new Powers had arisen in Europe. "Internally there were the problems of the fourteenth century still unsolved—externally they were faced with those of the nineteenth century, Western and insistent."

These are the two cardinal facts with which the Balkan question must be approached. Miss Durham recognises them, for her experiences in the land revealed the true state of affairs to her, and the story of her travels should make it equally clear to her readers. Those who still have the courage to tackle the subject may be heartily recommended to read this book. It is easily and pleasantly written, and will give the reader who knows not the Near East a clearer insight into an irritating and unsolved problem than other more weighty and pretentious works.

THE DRAMA

"DU BARRI" AT THE SAVOY THEATRE

THERE is an old formula for the discussion of works ostensibly of art, but found wanting in some essential quality. One can say that they "do not exist." I have heard the formula applied to certain of Besant's novels, and have dissented; but if any one chooses to apply it to the new play at the Savoy Theatre, I shall not dissent. Indeed I can picture myself asking gravely: "Is there really a new play at the Savoy? I thought it was tableaux vivants." But my actual impression is that once upon a time there was a play called Du Barri, and that somebody—or perhaps several somebodies—started to turn it into a series of tableaux vivants, but left the transformation uncompleted—left, in particular, a good deal of dialogue which distracts attention from the spectacle. For M.

Richépin, when one comes to think of it, is a dramatist, and even a dramatist of some reputation. The presumption is strong, therefore, that he planned, and even wrote, a drama. But when the question of adaptation came to be faced, other interests were evidently found to conflict with his: the interests of scene-painters, theatrical costumiers, and theatrical upholsterers, Mr. John D'Auban, and Mrs. Brown-Potter, who is clearly more anxious to dress herself than to dress her part, and declines to be the slave of historical precision. One may express pity for Mr. Christopher St. John, to whom fell the task of reconciling all these conflicting interests; but having done that, one can do little more. The art critic might praise the scenery. Other specialists might commend Mr. John Barker for his chairs and tables, and Miss Edith Craig for her skill in designing glorious apparel for the company. But the mere dramatic critic can only wonder what he is doing in the galley. There is no drama for him to criticise. Nothing gets over the footlights. The whole thing is on the plane of tableaux vivants and poses plastiques; and even on that plane perfection is not attained. The stage is over-crowded; the performers get in each other's way; and Mrs. Brown-Potter is an anachronism in a sequence of fancy dresses which, whatever their separate merits from the dressmaker's point of view, bear little relation to the period represented. To say that she alone among the players is badly dressed would be a fair dramatic, though an unfair sartorial, criticism. She is not much more appropriately dressed than a man would be, on the same stage, in a silk hat and a frock coat, however skillfully cut.

The theme was not without its possibilities. It would have been possible to weave round the Du Barri a story that would have been dramatic without being too contemptuous of history. The play before us has perverted history without achieving drama. It may have been a slip of the tongue that caused one of the actors, on Monday night, to make a passing reference to the execution of Louis XV.; but it is quite certain that the plot implies some confusion of the identities of that monarch and his unfortunate successor, and also that words are put into his mouth—a recommendation to the poor, if they have no bread, to eat cake—which history attributes to Marie Antoinette. The flight of time, moreover, is ignored in a manner most disconcerting to those who, however dimly, recollect their dates. We see the Du Barri disgraced and banished from the Court—was she ever in fact disgraced and banished from the Court?—because of an affair with a lover, at the time of the intrigues to secure office for the Duc d'Aiguillon and the Abbé Terray. That was not later than 1770. Her lover meets her again, having spent the interval in the Bastille, finds her looking as young as ever, and clasps her in his arms, in the midst of the Reign of Terror, that was in 1793. Between the two meetings, therefore, twenty-three years at the least must have elapsed; while, as the Bastille was stormed in 1789, the lover must have allowed four years to elapse after his release, before troubling his head about the lady for whom he professes such devotion. Finally we see the lady driven off in a tumbril to execution, looking like a virgin martyr of seventeen. Her exact age when she met her terrible doom was fifty-nine. The Abbé who is represented as giving her the last consolations of religion had been fifteen years in his grave.

Perhaps this defiance of history would not have mattered if it had resulted in the construction of a poignant drama. The fact is that we only find, as I have said, faint indications of a drama which somebody has been tampering with. The French version presumably made clear what were the relations between the Du Barri and her lover, the Prince Rohan-Rochefort. One probably does not err greatly in conjecturing that the Prince figured there as the amant de cœur in the technical French sense of the phrase, and that he made love to her instead of exhorting her to virtue. In the English version he exhorts her to virtue, yet implores her to fly with him, though without breathing a word to suggest that he is her lover pour le bon motif. If he did propose to marry her, at any period of her career, he would hardly have failed to mention it: and if he did not, the exhortations to virtue are pointless, he is an oleaginous hypocrite, and the bottom is out of the piece. Probably the vagueness is a concession to the supposed prejudice of British playgoers in favour of propriety. But it is a poor way of being proper, and absolutely fatal to any interest that the drama might otherwise have had. That interest sacrificed, the drama may indeed be said not to exist.

The most profitable reflection suggested by the performance is a more general one, and concerns the injury done to the interests of the drama in this country when important productions—or what should be important productions—are under the control of ladies whose ambitions are rather personal than artistic, and who, knowing their limitations, seek to impress the spectator by the brilliance of their toilettes rather than by more legitimately artistic means. It is not merely that, in order to afford full scope for their limited gifts, the playwright has to subordinate himself to the costumier; and it is not merely that we get a leading part incompetently played. The graver consequence is that competent players are excluded not only from the leading part but from all parts lest the effects of competition should be felt, and invidious comparisons be instituted. That is what we seem to see at the Savoy. The only players who are competent—or who are given the opportunity of showing that they are competent—are men. Mr. Gilbert Hare, as Louis XV., has not much of a part, but is good in it. The same may be said of Mr. Herbert Ross as the Duc de Richelieu, and of Mr. Jerrold Robertshaw as the Abbé Terray. But none of the ladies rose above an amateur level, and none of them, except Mrs. Brown-Potter, were given the chance of doing so.

FINE ART

THE HISTORICAL PICTURES OF VELASQUEZ

At a time when we are enjoying a Whistler Exhibition in London, it is natural to cast our thoughts back to that great master to whose painting Whistler's work bears so strong a resemblance, in spite of the intervening centuries. Truth to nature was the keynote of both Whistler and Velasquez, but, apart from this, few who have stood before the Menippus in the Prado Gallery at Madrid can fail to see the influence it has had over the later artist's portrait of Carlyle in Glasgow. Though the attitude is not the same—Carlyle sits while Menippus stands—the treatment of both pictures is based on a kindred conception of artistic values, there is in both that same feeling of limp lassitude in the limbs.

To realise the full greatness of Velasquez we must appreciate his position in his own age and in his own country. The predominance of Italy in pictorial art had passed away ere he was born. Titian had died at a ripe old age in 1576, Tintoretto had followed him before the close of the century, and the great names of the Dutch school had not come into prominence when Velasquez was born in 1599. Indeed, Rubens was only just over twenty at the time, Vandyck was born the same year as Velasquez, and Rembrandt was seven years their junior. Thus Velasquez began his life in an age when artistic traditions were passing from their old home, and before the seventeenth century was many years old he had practically created a Spanish school of painting. In this Spanish school Velasquez has excelled all others. As he surpassed his masters, Pacheco and Herrera, so did his pupil Murillo never seriously challenge his supremacy. If Zurbaran painted the Adoration of the Shepherds attributed to him in the National Gallery, then once, but once only, he came within measurable distance of his great contemporary. Nor can Ribera be considered a rival in any way, and indeed this master belongs more to the decadent Italian school than to the nascent Spanish school of painting. In the case of Murillo, however, comparison is more possible. The two years during which he was Velasquez' pupil had a decided, if transient, effect upon him. For a time he turned to the serious study of nature. Yet the work of the two artists tends to assimilate nowhere but in their treatment of religious subjects. There is a similarity of style and conception between the Madonna by Murillo in the Pitti gallery at Florence, and the Adoration of the Magi by Velasquez in the Prado, but the likeness is discounted by the quite uncharacteristic nature of this Velasquez. Indeed, we do not see the master in his true personality in any of the pictures with religious titles which he painted. All of them were painted by order of Philip IV., to be given as presents to religious foundations, and all are marked by a conventionality which betrays Italian influence and a lack of sympathy between artist and subject. The details in the Crucifixion in the Prado might have been the work of a Bellini; only the black background betrays the portrait painter.

It is fortunate that Velasquez, as court painter, was not compelled to paint more such pictures, for his instinct rebelled against the conventions which the religious thought of that time imposed. Even as a youth he had scandalised his master, Pacheco, by declaring that he would rather excel in his own line than be a disciple in any other, and he found no scope for his originality in the conventional subjects of Italian art. Velasquez looked to nature as the inspiration of his genius; he strove to reproduce in the most minute detail the world he saw around him. In a word, he immortalised his age in his pictures, and it is because he was an historical painter—a painter, that is, who by his art teaches more of the true spirit of his period than all the musty documents so dear to the historian—that he is now enthroned where none of his predecessors have sat. The beautiful imagery, the gorgeous colouring, the eternal simplicity of the great Italian masters, give them their particular niche in the temple of fame, but they all speak in the accents of a period that had long passed away. Velasquez, in spite of his intimate acquaintance with Italian art, was never oppressed by that worship of antiquity which was so strongly marked in the Italian Renaissance; he was never bound down, except in his religious pictures, by the rules of any school, nor by the conventions of any style. He reproduced on his canvas the pictures that he saw in the world around him, and therein he stands alone among the artists who preceded him, but shoulder to shoulder with the men and women among whom he lived. Thus in the Bacchus, or, as it is sometimes more properly called, "The Topers," we have no allegorical scene such as an Italian would have painted, or as his contemporary and friend Rubens was painting, but a life-like reproduction of a drinking scene. True, the peasants on the right of the picture do not seem to be quite in keeping with the semi-conventional Bacchus on the left, but this very want of harmony shows Velasquez' realism in a scene which, under any other hand, would have followed the old traditional lines. If Bacchus is somewhat of a modernised ancient, the peasants are the typical roisterers which the painter saw in the country round him. Moreover, this picture was painted just at the time when Velasquez was emerging from a short period of formalism, which followed his sudden appointment to the position of court painter. It is therefore an apt illustration of the triumph of his naturalistic creed as a painter, which refused to be bound by the forms and traditions of court life, for above all courts that of Spain was classical and pedantic in character. This formality of the Spanish court is emphasised in a picture which we may aptly compare with the Bacchus as the ultimate expression of Velasquez' realism. In Las Meniñas—the Maids of Honour—a picture painted in his later style, he gives us a vivid picture of the court of Philip IV. It is not merely the prim costumes, which of themselves are of historical value as faithful reproductions of the dress of the age, but the whole grouping of the figures which gives an idea of stiffness, not the stiffness of archaism, but the stiffness which is a second nature to those who have been trained in it. Withal the picture gives a convincing sense of continuity, lacking in the Bacchus. The little Infanta, with the inborn pride of her race, the courteous deference of those who surround her, the marvellous sense of space, all go to make up a living picture of Spanish court life in the seventeenth century. If legends be true, it was a sudden inspiration which produced this picture. Velasquez was painting the King, when unexpectedly the Infanta and her attendants came into the room. The painter, stepping back from the canvas on which he was working, was seized with the idea of reproducing the scene, as he saw it, even to the reflection of the King and his Queen in the glass at the end of the room, and the dog in the foreground of the picture. If this be true, and there seems to be little reason to doubt the authenticity of the story, we have in Las Meniñas a valuable artistic document of the court of Philip IV., and an apt illustration of the methods of our historian artist.

In contrast with the formality of Las Meniñas we have another picture of the later period, Las Hilanderas—the Spinners. Here all is activity and energy. The spirit of the workroom of seventeenth-century Spain is reproduced as skilfully as the enforced repose in Las Meniñas. Again we have a page from the life of the times, the life of the busy workers before Spain had passed into decay. These two pictures, with their contrasting subjects, are perhaps the greatest masterpieces that Velasquez ever produced, not only in tone and colour, but also in drawing and proportion. They are, besides, two human documents, a quality which gives them a twofold value.

There are many other pages of the national life, pages which Velasquez had read with his wonderful perception of the essential, to be found in such pictures as the Boar Hunt, the Riding School, and the Betrothal, but perhaps the most famous historical picture of all is the Surrender of Breda. Velasquez was not an eye-witness of the scene; the main outline is based on the account of Spinola; but its historical value lies in the marked differentiation of national characteristics as seen in the faces on either side of the picture, in the portrayal of the typical military pageant of the period, and in that insight into the Spanish character which is revealed in the chivalrous, almost friendly attitude of Spinola. Some have found contempt in the painter's mind, but surely any one who has studied the picture will recognise that proud courtesy which characterised the Dons in the Elizabethan age. As historical evidence this picture is not so valuable as those glimpses of the national and home life of the people which we get in the pictures already mentioned; yet there is something to learn of the characteristics of the Spaniard, even in this comparatively formal canvas, as there would have been also in that picture of the expulsion of the Moors which unfortunately perished when the Alcazar was burnt in 1634.

As court painter, Velasquez was expected to paint numerous portraits, some of the Royal family and great officers, which all have their own special interest, others of court personages, dwarfs, &c., who all bear the mark of their age. The Lady with the Fan, now in the Wallace Collection, reminds us of the foolish edict whereby Philip hoped to save the susceptible hearts of his court gallants. Other portraits, with their stiff linen collars, serve to illustrate the use of the "galilla," which was introduced by the same frugal monarch to cut down the expense incurred by wearing lace and ruffs. Each bears the stamp of the individuality of the sitter, be he prince or princess, minister or dwarf.

All through his active life Velasquez studied one model in chief—Philip IV., and we see him as he passed from early manhood to his prime, and thence to his later years. Throughout we watch the same weak, indolent, pleasure-loving character, looking out from the canvas, without enthusiasm, true to the incidents of his life. In the portrait of Olivares we find the proud Minister, who liked to imagine himself a general, and thought himself a match in diplomacy for Richelieu, while Pope Innocent X. appears as the cold, calculating, crafty potentate that history has taught us to regard him. With stern realism Velasquez painted what he saw. Not one touch of his own personality appears in his portraits. Unlike Rembrandt, he leaves the man to tell his own story.

When a great artist speaks the sentiments and aspirations of his fellow countrymen, he naturally has a large audience. This accounts for the fact that Velasquez appeals to many who would not spare a glance for an "old master." For he is above all things modern. Spain had stolen a march on the rest of Europe, she had stretched out her hands to the new world, while other nations were concerned in internal strife and religious wars. She had already started on the road towards modern ideas, and it was a later generation that was to show her absolute inability to continue on that highway. Velasquez, in his realistic spirit, mirrored the modern aspirations of his country. In studying his pictures we do not feel that we have to step back into the centuries, and conceive of an artistic treatment entirely different from that of our own day. He speaks to us of his age in a language that all can understand; and though perhaps only few really appreciate its true significance, yet by combining truth with beauty he stands out as the herald of modern painting. At heart he was a realist. He painted what he saw, and above all what he understood. True sympathy is necessary between subject and artist, and that is why his pictures of court life, and his portraits of men and women whom he knew, are greater, both artistically and historically, than his sacred pictures, or his Venus and his Mars.

SCIENCE

THE LIFE OF THE UNIVERSE

If the Universe, as Robert Boyle and Paley thought, be like a clock or watch, made and wound by an Almighty Clockmaker, it is to be expected that this world-machine will ultimately run down and stop:—not even the Cosmos as a whole is to be regarded as a perpetual motion machine. Or if we regard the Universe as a living thing, whose motion is the evidence of its life, we may expect that, like other living things, it must ultimately die. Its substance will remain intact, as the doctrine of the conservation of energy assures us, but its life will have ceased; it will be merely a corpse immune from decay.

Now there is a well established "law" of thermodynamics, discovered by Lord Kelvin in 1852, which bears directly upon these two metaphors that regard the life or activity of the Universe, though not its mere existence, as having had a beginning and as destined to end. The doctrine of the Dissipation of Energy teaches us that whilst energy never disappears it ever tends to become unavailable. For the purposes of the present argument we may regard heat as the common or undifferentiated form of energy, which all the other forms constantly tend to assume. Now heat, like water, must always "seek its own level," and when we suitably arrange any system of which one part is hotter than another, we can make it do work. But when the water has fallen from the height, or the heat has distributed itself, no more work can be got out of it. The energy is still there, but it is no longer available. At present there is a great difference of heat potential between the different parts of the solar system, one consequence of which is the presence of life upon the earth. But in time to come, the heat will have distributed itself so that what corresponds to the solar system of to-day will be all of one temperature, and life will be impossible.

Now if energy, as represented by heat, is ever seeking its own level, the time must come when, if there be no compensatory process, all the energy in the Universe ceases to be available. To state the case broadly, the heat will still be there—the dead Universe will have a certain temperature—but there will be no difference of potential, and the cosmic life will have run its course. If the law of the dissipation of energy be the whole truth, the Universe is certainly comparable, in this connection, to a watch that is running down. Furthermore, there is within it—if this law be the whole truth—no possibility of being wound up again, for it is a prime character of natural processes, as Lord Kelvin was the first to point out, that they are irreversible. "This remarkable property of all natural processes," as Dr. Merz says, "seems to lead us to the conception of a definite beginning and to shadow forth a possible end—the interval, which contains the life or history of Nature, being occupied with the slow but inevitable running down or degradation of the great store of energy from an active to an inactive or unavailable condition." Recent discoveries, such as that of intra-atomic energy, radio-activity, and the presence of radium in the earth's crust, may show that the watch will run for millions of æons longer than we had thought; but they do not affect the fact that it is running down. The imminent picture suggested by the law of the degradation of energy into heat and its dissipation throughout space, is that of a dead Universe, existent, indeed, but no better than a perdurable corpse.

Now ere we inquire whether there are indications that this is the whole truth we may note how remarkably this, which is the accepted scientific teaching of the time, consorts with various conceptions of the Deity. It is exactly compatible with the idea of God as entertained by Boyle and Paley and Cowper—the Great Artificer. He built the watch, wound it up, and, as Carlyle has it in "Sartor Resartus," is now the absentee God, who has sat idle since the first Sabbath, watching the Universe go. And when it has at last run down, He alone can wind it up. If we pursue the metaphor somewhat further, we may inquire whence the Watchmaker obtained the materials from which the watch is made. And here is an analogy which breeds an insuperable difficulty. For the human watchmaker does not create the steel and rubies and so forth of which his watches are made. They were extant before him. And similarly the doctrine of the Conservation of Energy teaches that the substance of the Cosmos, its corporeal frame, is from everlasting. The scientific teaching thus appears nicely to confirm the ancient conception of an aboriginal Chaos, into which the Deity infused at some definite period, the breath of life—or which he built into a machine, wound up and set going. It is therefore possible to construct a scientific defence for the doctrine of a primæval entity, without form and void, which is presumably "self-existent"—whatever that may mean—and to which a Deity, conceived as independent thereof and having his (or her) habitat beyond the range of any telescope yet constructed, has given form and a finite period of activity. His sole object in constructing it was, as Dr. A. R. Wallace has lately written a book to prove, the production of the human soul. Thereafter the machine will run down, having served its purpose: and will so remain unless its Maker should care to wind it up again.

On this position there are two criticisms to be made. The first has reference to the origin of the energy or stuff of which the Universe is composed. Plainly any ultimate answer which leaves out of account or fails to explain the existence of the Universe, apart from its life or activity, cannot be regarded as adequate, or even as true in so far as it goes, for we can scarcely be satisfied with any explanation that does not meet all the facts. Furthermore, we cannot accept as final any explanation which proceeds on the assumption that Time is what, for our daily purposes, we regard it. Few will now dispute the proposition that time is no more than the symbol by which we express our consciousness of change without and within us. Now evolution is simply an assertion of universal and ordered change, so that time is thus merely an expression or symbol of our consciousness of evolution, and cannot be included in any ultimate explanation of the fact of evolution. Let me make a second attempt to express myself. The foregoing theory states that evolution, change, life, activity—to live is to change, says Newman—had a beginning and therefore a Beginner, and will have an end. But if Time be an expression of our consciousness of change or activity, we cannot introduce this (derived) temporal concept into our explanation of the Cause of that which it symbolises. Judged by any philosophical canon, therefore, the argument for a beginning of the cosmic activity must be regarded as circular and vain. We might, indeed, apply to it, as to any other circular argument, that blessed word “self-existent,” with which Professor Haeckel explains the prime fact of Nature’s being.

Secondly, we may leave the philosophic and consider the scientific question. Ere we infer from the law of the dissipation of energy that the universal clock is running down, let us ask ourselves what it is that we really know. We shall find that, even when the objective validity of the concept of time is impugned, there still remain some difficulties in our argument. For instance, we know practically nothing as to the destiny of the light-energy and heat-energy which are incessantly being radiated from the solar system. Perhaps they are restoring the balance elsewhere; the energy that is dissipated for us may be marshalled for others. All we have observed are certain facts as to the part of the Universe which we know; but when the doctrine of the dissipation of energy was framed, our Universe was thought to be infinite and the only Universe. Yet to-day the astronomers are inclined to think that the stellar Universe—bounded by the Milky Way—may possibly be to the sum of things no more than the solar system is to it. And even if our Universe be running down, there may be that in process elsewhere which shall wind it up again; a speculation in which is implicit, let us mark, the assumption that other Universes, if such there be, and ours, are inter-related. Yet who shall say whether this assumption is gratuitous or no? Indeed the prophecy of universal death is a sorry piece of presumption when we come to inquire into it. Here, in a point of what they call infinite space—not that they can conceive space to be either infinite or finite—is a race of beings, born but yesterday, whom gravitation bloweth where it listeth. They have lately discovered that their prison-home is moving, but are not sure whither. The other day they made a few experiments, which they have interpreted as their reason permits them, and which they infer to imply that All things are coming to a standstill. They were not there when the dance began, nor will they see its conclusion. Their total life history can be but a moment in its course, but they are assured that it did begin and will end; for are they not the privileged spectators of “all time and all existence”?

The reader must not say that science points to a conclusion which I dislike and that I am trying to sail away from it on the inflated wings of rhetoric. If science does point to this conclusion, then it must be accepted: but the question is whether so tremendous an inference, involving a whole host of tacit and unexamined assumptions, can legitimately be drawn from the known data. I maintain that it cannot. If it were necessary, I might quote the considerations advanced by Lord Kelvin himself in 1874, to show that certain indications point to the restoration, not of energy, but of its availability: and these considerations might be reinforced by the inquiries of the past thirty years. But I am not prepared to admit that the question of the death of the universe can be solved by any balancing of known or conceivably knowable considerations. If, for instance, there be not other universes than that which perhaps the galaxy bounds, I do not see how their existence could be disproved save by the lapse of infinite time during which no disturbance attributable to them was observed in ours. To say that our macrocosm is to die when it may be no more than an atom in a greater whole, to which it is of no more account than a constituent atom of one of your blood corpuscles is to you—would surely be madness. Indeed we may venture to say—whilst not forgetting the many instances in which apparently similar assertions have been falsified, as when Comte declared that we could never tell whether gravitation acts amongst the stars, or of what they are composed—that even if the life of the All be finite, we shall never be able to prove it. Radium clocks have been made that will go for a million years; but I believe that the Universe was never made and will go for ever.

C. W. SALEEBY.

MUSIC

THE “SYMPHONIA DOMESTICA”—ANOTHER VIEW

II

It has been said that the fugue represents discussion between husband and wife as to the future of the child; the mother being eager to make him a cavalry officer and the father preferring a learned profession. Meditative passages interrupted by martial trumpet-calls certainly hint at an interpretation of this kind, and as the husband’s theme gradually becomes more and more assertive, and finally ends the work, we may assume that, according to most household law in Germany, his opinion turns the scale—the word “Beschluss” meaning decision as well as conclusion.

While we have to thank Mr. Wood for bringing this interesting work before the London public, and once more express admiration of the masterly way in which he handled its complexities, it is only truthful to state that from the hearing of the “Symphonia Domestica” a large portion of the audience came away puzzled and unconvinced. A great living artist and composer once denounced Strauss in our hearing as a charlatan, but in this age of scientific machinery his great structural powers, his magnificent orchestration compel attention and interest, even when the results are positively offensive to sensitive ears. It is to be supposed that the twentieth century listens with its brains rather than its ears, and when, as in some of his other works, we are told that the composer handles a fabulous number of themes without a single grammatical mistake, we say: “How clever!” with as much enthusiasm as our grandmothers said of simpler strains: “How divine!” Richard Strauss is frankly modern; he storms up Parnassus in a motor-car, so to speak, snatches his Calliope by the wayside, and whirls her with much bustle and a good deal of blatant horn-blowing home to the domestic hearth. But what has become of Pegasus? Who nowadays bestrides that winged steed? Who cares to climb with Apollo and the Muses to the springs of pure melody, the sound of whose waters will soon seem as remote to this generation as the pipings of a forgotten Pan? We remember a song for tenor voice, in which a young lover summons his nymph to meet him on the mountain-tops. “Come,” he says, “come on thy naked feet!” It is the call of the real to the ideal, and straightway conjures up visions of an ethereal being, all dignity and simplicity, pacing through the dews of morning towards the cry of an earthly love. Does Mr. Strauss’s musical phrase come to him or to us on naked feet?—stripped of its orchestral dress will it bear the light of sunrise on its movements?—has it the strength of one that walks the eternal hills? To put it crudely—is not nudity the true test of beauty, and naked beauty the test of inspiration? “Das ewig-weibliche,” wrote Goethe, “zieht uns hinan,” by which, we take it, he meant less the ordinary relations between man and woman, than the sublimated idea of sex—masculine and feminine—the spirit which allures and attracts, leading ever onward and upward, and the spirit which, attentive to that attraction, pursues, seizes and controls. From the mystical union of these in the composer’s mind, springs that ineffable impulse which is to music what the quality of inevitableness is to poetry, bringing with it suggestions of abstract beauty so transcending our powers of imagination that they must be called divine. Of the uplifting of heart which follows on such impulse something perhaps is written for us in those cryptic passages of the Apocalypse, where, in the midst of secret things which it is not given man to utter, we are told that the "Spirit and the Bride say 'Come.'" To these doors, of which the key is held by the bride in the spiritual sense, for so we may translate Goethe's "ewig-weibliche," Richard Strauss does not take us. Is he, then, no more than a great mechanical genius, an engineer of polyphonic strains?

"A little child shall lead them," it is written, and in quoting this text we mean not the real child mentioned in the dedication of the "Symphonia Domestica," whose "baby fingers, waxen touches," have stirred the wheels within wheels of this complicated music into movement, but the child-spirit inextinguishable in all human nature. It is to this side of human nature that the emotional part of the work appeals. The Greeks cast their god of love into child shape, because of the lovely foolishness of close human intimacy, of the glamour which to a child's eyes makes beautiful the simplest things. If inspiration, emanating from the "Eternal Feminine," transcends all imagination, inspiration proper to the child demands it, plays with it, dresses with it the lowly beginnings of life. One is the kindling of Promethean fire, the other glorifies the humblest hearth with associations none the less warmly beloved because of their homeliness. "O it's hame, hame, hame!—O it's hame wud I be!" cries the wanderer, and with this cry his thoughts cease to lure him towards unexplored regions, and the child within him tugs at his heart-strings.

Mr. Strauss's inspiration is sometimes a little laboured, his jokes overwhelming, his suggestions trivial, we might almost say material; nevertheless, on account of the "idea within the idea," of the tenderness and truth of its fundamental conception, his musical creation moves in beauty polarised by the "Eternal Child."

DR. ELGAR'S ORATORIO "THE APOSTLES" AT THE ALBERT HALL

SCRIPTURE tells us that the Whale swallowed the Prophet, but in this age it is frequently the Prophet who has to end by swallowing the Whale. When Wagner revolutionised every tradition of the musical world, infuriated critics predicted that such madness could only be of short duration, as the infatuation for his bewildering innovations would die out of itself. But not so very long afterwards, they were obliged to swallow Wagner themselves, and could even digest him quite comfortably by the end of the nineteenth century; with succeeding years they have become so accommodating as to take gigantic pieces of modernity at a gulp.

During a reception given in honour of most of the musical conductors of European fame, on the occasion of one of our recent London Festivals, there is a legend that Dr. Elgar came under discussion and was unanimously pronounced by them to be one of the leading men of his age. The most important musical event of the last fortnight therefore is undoubtedly the performance of his oratorio "The Apostles" at the Albert Hall on March 8.

To compel acknowledgment from masters of the craft is to force one's personality on the world at large; it is to say not "Listen to me" but "You shall hear me." Yet we must confess that even the world of music, meek as it has grown, does not accept Dr. Elgar's leadership altogether blindly. Magnificently intellectual as it is, original as it is, ultra-modern as it is, this oratorio does not seem to us to have the divine freshness which characterises the immortals. Swedenborg tells us that in heaven the angel first created remains ever the youngest, because of its primal relations with the fountains of everlasting youth. We have an impression that it is precisely this quality of youth which is lacking to Dr. Elgar's work. It seems to us—we say it humbly—over-learned, over-developed, over-laborated, missing thus the spring and inspiration belonging to more spontaneous creations. It would take perhaps another Dr. Elgar entirely to explain Dr. Elgar to the satisfaction of his audiences, and in any case an analysis of such a titanic composition as "The Apostles" would overweight this little article. We speak as it were from the outside only. Students of music tell us they spent several weeks previous to its production, disentangling the difficult strands of the score, so as to bring a more intelligent mind to bear on the work when given in public; they declare that the composition gained in beauty and interest with every hour devoted to this pursuit. Interest, we can believe; but surely to represent beauty there must be an outward impersonation as pleasing as the inner structure—what should we say of the human organism if it had to be laid on a dissecting table and explored with scalpel and microscope before its manifold perfections could be perceived?

As a whole, we think "The Apostles" cast a feeling of dreariness over its Albert Hall audience; the richness of its orchestration hardly compensating for the weariness of endless recitative. Passages of melodic beauty there were, rare and beautiful; and the work abounds in novel and daring effects, notably the Judas theme with its purposeful discords, and the jingling and clinking of the silver pieces as the betrayer casts them down; the storm music, and the music in the temple in which a weird eastern instrument known as the "shofar" is introduced. These masses of dramatic sound are permeated with the deep religious earnestness characteristic of all Elgar's creations: indeed, the singers' monotonous—we had almost said puritan—chant, pitched against an orchestral background of oriental gorgeousness, is one of the features of the work.

"Music hath charms" wrote one poet, and Keats prophesied that "They shall be accounted prophet-kings

Who simply tell the most heart's-easing things."

but that was long ago. The music of "The Apostles" cannot be termed exactly "heart's-easing," and its charms are as yet difficult of realisation to the unlearned; in fact, on most faces in that immense audience could be detected a puzzled and preoccupied expression, as of people trying painfully to decipher some obscure caligraphy. Well, let us look facts in the face. This is the music of the future. We have out-Wagnered Wagner. Richard Strauss has already denounced him to a musical critic as "zopf," which is Viennese slang for something stuffy and old-fashioned; and according to the laws of progress, we shall out-Strauss Strauss, and out-Elgar Elgar by-and-by. However, this concerneth not the present generation. It is only fair to say that the oratorio was somewhat inadequately rendered on March 8, and that at the Cologne Festival last spring, where it was enthusiastically received, more prominence was given to many points of interest than at its production at the Albert Hall.

E #.

THE FAILURE OF OPERA

OPERA has never held a very vital place in the artistic affections of the English people, and it is not likely now that it will ever do so. This need be no matter for strong regret; on the contrary, it is perhaps rather to the credit of English taste than otherwise. True, such a negative quality is not much to plume ourselves upon; at least, we had better not say much about it, until we can point to other positive indications of a sound national taste in things musical and dramatic; but there is somewhere, mixed up no doubt with much that is false, a certain love of reality which alienates the hearts of most Englishmen from opera. With the unwise this degenerates into a mere love of realism, a totally different result, though often originating in the same principle, misapplied through lack of education. The two represent the healthy and unhealthy workings of a right impulse, just as do physical development and abnormal athleticism, scholarship and pedantry, morality and priggishness. The love of realism is in short but a distorted and ill-conditioned growth of the love of reality, but so distorted as to work in direct opposition to it, just as abnormal athleticism results in overstrain and ill-health, pedantry closes the mind to true learning, and priggishness is itself a moral offence. Prospero's celebrated speech was certainly given no greater force by all the "baseless fabric" with which Mr. Tree lately smothered it at His Majesty's Theatre; rather this was a powerful instance of reality lost, where realism was gained. But opera in its fundamental structure goes even further than Mr. Tree; the paradox which it sets up is more flagrant than that represented by Shakespeare at His Majesty's. Music, in spite of twentieth-century programme-makers, speaks directly to the mind of man without any need of help from the externals of human life. If it be combined with words, the most satisfactory result is achieved when the words deal chiefly with the inward and spiritual part of man's life. The more the words tend towards description of events or scenery the slighter must be the music in order to avoid absurdity; composers must resort to the most simple phrases of recitative, and ultimately where the words deal simply with the commonplace occurrences of every day, they will be wise to cease setting them to music at all. This principle is fully recognised by all serious composers who attempt to set words to music, except opera composers. They cannot do so, because the very form of opera precludes them from it. Dramatic action and scenic effect bring into prominence of themselves, and demand from the words just those qualities which are least suitable for musical expression—all the outward part of human life; the music demands the lengthened expression of the inward, which must mar the successful presentation of the outward.

The words standing half-way between these two contending parties are continually pulled hither and thither, and are first made to say things which people cannot sing, then to sing things which people would not say. The whole history of opera appears to be one long and tragic struggle to express by means of two arts conjointly what would have been better expressed by each separately. The presence of music has always effectually destroyed the realism of the stagecraft, and the action and scenery have damaged, in proportion as they have detracted from the importance of the reality of the music.

All who have read the classic essays of the Spectator will remember the caustic sarcasms levelled therein at the opera of that day. It is scarcely surprising that Addison should have formed a somewhat low opinion of the function of music. He says:

"Music is certainly a very agreeable entertainment: but if it would take the entire possession of our ears, if it would make us incapable of hearing sense, if it would exclude arts that have a much greater tendency to the refinement of human nature; I must confess I would allow it no better quarter than Plato has done, who banishes it out of his Commonwealth."

Had he substituted the word "opera" for "music" his indictment would have been more justifiable; but it was only natural that he should lay the blame at music's door, since he was well acquainted with the drama as an art, and saw its degradation when combined with music. He could not realise that music was as much diverted from its true purpose as was the drama which he understood better.

The absurdities of the opera of his day, Handel's day be it noted, which he describes, make most entertaining reading, and rather tend to put us into better conceit with ourselves when we see how the aim was to combine every possible attraction in one performance, from the music of the great Handel to a blind conjurer, a dancing bear, or a flight of real sparrows let loose in an unreal forest. Our position, indeed, is the more dangerous in proportion as the absurdities of it stare us less boldly in the face. Between the year 1710, when Addison wrote, and the present day, opera has undergone many reforms. It has passed through the hands of Glück and Mozart, of Rossini in Italy and Weber in Germany; it once received the honour of attention from Beethoven himself, and lastly, it has passed through the fiery furnace of Wagner's revolution. And yet we have it to-day, substantially no less absurd than it was when the sparrows flew across the stage in Handel's Rinaldo. Can any one witness a performance of Der Ring des Nibelungen and fail to be struck by the absurdity of the close juxtaposition of dragons and giants, Rhine maidens and melodramatic villains like Hagen, with music of such mastery as the finale to the Götterdämmerung? Yet Wagner reasoned the matter out more fully than any one else. He thought about it, wrote about it, struggled with himself and his fellows over it in his own stormy way, till at last he trampled opera under foot in his rage, and introduced in its place his heroic attempt at the solution of the problem in the "music-drama" of The Ring. This solution proved to be nothing else than a more strenuous effort to combine what I have spoken of as the reality of music with the realism of the modern stage; that is, the combination of that which all educated and refined minds seek for in any art with the counterfeit presentment of it which satisfies the vulgar. Being a genius, he knew what his music could do towards the one end; being a man of practical outlook, he saw the allurements of scenic display and believed they might supplement his art. He believed, too, that music and drama, instead of quarrelling for the supremacy, might be made to combine and to yield the supremacy by mutual consent to an ideal greater than either, to the expression of the philosophy of life. Thus he was led on to theorise and to forget that a dragon on the stage is made of coloured cardboard or canvas with green electric lights for eyes; that a stage giant is but a man stuffed out with pillows and perhaps lengthened by walking on stilts; that such things cannot minister to any more profound thought than that suggested by a children's pantomime; that, so far from assisting his music towards the expression of his ideal, they only serve to distract the attention of those who wish to listen, and to amuse the frivolous who do not want to hear. So Wagner, like all his predecessors, failed in the end to perceive the paradox which lies at the root of all opera, and that, in spite of all his thinking and contriving. That paradox is nothing more nor less than this, that opera collects together all the great realities of art, and throws them down in a heap with all the most trivial contrivances of everyday life, such as cardboard, canvas, pillows, and stilts. Just as The Tempest cannot be turned into a pantomime without loss to the dignity and beauty of Shakespeare's lines, so cannot music be associated with such follies and keep her "wonted state" among her sister arts. All that Wagner or any one else could achieve was an improvement in detail, an accommodation of the various elements to the nicest point possible, to give fair play to each.

That having been accomplished, there does not seem to be anything more to be done, and modern composers since the death of Wagner appear to have definitely turned their faces away from opera. In England we occasionally hear a cry of: "Shame on us, that we have no national opera," but, when some champion of the cause writes one, it receives polite attention and arouses no enthusiasm; or again, when some public-spirited impresario announces a course of English opera, as did Mr. Moody Manners last year, it is not, we are told, a financial success. I venture to prophesy, in conclusion, that music will tend to become more and more dissociated from the stage; that even the Parisian practice of having no music between the acts of an ordinary theatrical performance is significant in this connection; that some day an English audience will listen with pleasure to a performance of the works of their own great dramatist without the introduction of "ballets," just as they already wisely prefer to take their music at Queen's Hall rather than at Covent Garden.

C.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE "ANTI-JACOBIN," GILLRAY, AND CANNING

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—May I thank your reviewer for his courteous and kindly review of my little book on Canning? I think, perhaps, some little light is thrown by me on the authorship, &c., of the Anti-Jacobin—e.g., pp. 44-5, I quote a letter from the Auckland papers which proves conclusively that the "simile of the Oar and Stream" (quoted by the reviewer) was really made or suggested by Pitt. This same letter also, I think, shows that Frere's contribution to the "New Morality" was very small, because Canning speaks of himself as its "author," and acknowledges only the "occasional assistance" of Frere. I think also that Bartle Frere's memoir of Hookham Frere proves conclusively the real shares of Canning and Frere. It supports other concurrent testimonies and indicates joint-authorship in the "Friend of Humanity," "Mrs. Brownrigg," "The Progress of Man," and "The Song of Rogero." In all those the authorship seems to me to have been really joint and the share of each to have been almost indistinguishable. It is interesting to note that neither of them ever again wrote so well separately. The "Loves of the Triangles" was also written by both, but Frere was, I think, responsible for more than usual.

The "Memoir" gives the assignments of authorship of the different pieces made by Frere in his own copy of the Anti-Jacobin. So far as these can be tested they seem to me singularly accurate. "The Meeting of the Friends of Freedom" (from which your reviewer quotes extracts) is claimed by Frere as his sole work, whereas in many other pieces he admits the joint authorship. Hence then my omission to quote from that incomparable travesty, which should, I think, be significant to readers of my little book. The sole authorship of Frere is rendered more probable by the fact that Canning was a great friend of Mackintosh ("Macfungus"), and interested himself in the success of his lectures on the "Law of Nature and Nations." We can then easily understand why Canning should abstain from parodying him as "Macfungus." The matter is one of importance, because it shows Frere could be almost, if not quite, as witty as Canning himself. Had I space I would venture on the assignment of the later pieces with which Canning is credited.

There was nothing I could find in the British Museum to throw much light on the Anti-Jacobin. The only thing of any interest, besides the letter of Lord Auckland, which is in the Auckland Papers, was the connection of Canning with Gillray, which arose from the Anti-Jacobin. It was perhaps fitting that the wittiest of literary parodists should meet the wittiest of caricaturists. Gillray begun by publishing some unauthorised illustrations to the Anti-Jacobin. (Edmond's edition contains some of his caricatures.) This roused Canning to remonstrance and finally led to acquaintance. "I wish," writes Gillray to Douglass, 1797, "very much to retain his (Canning's) good opinion." Then to Canning direct: "Any future work which J. Gillray may engage in, he will take the liberty of submitting before hand to Mr. Canning, very much wishing to publish only that which may give entire satisfaction." Then again to Douglass, "Mr. Canning has acted in the most generous manner. I should have lost a patronage it is my highest ambition to retain." The editors of the Anti-Jacobin had threatened Gillray for his unauthorised cartoons. Canning stood up for him, but refused to allow them to be republished. In some other cartoons which Gillray drew Canning interfered to prevent a merciless caricature of Sheridan, for whom he retained all his old affection. On November 1, 1800, Gillray was first personally introduced to Canning, and with this introduction I may close this letter. A new letter in which Gillray corresponds with Canning on the subject of the taste of the Anti- Jacobin is quoted on p. 47 of my book. The letters quoted above are in Add. MSS. 27,337.

Apologising for the amount of space I have taken up,
H. W. V. TEMPERLEY.

P.S.—I wish the reviewer or some other could inform me of the whereabouts of Canning's own copy of the Anti-Jacobin, which is said to be in existence.

SIR THOMAS MORE AND THE LUNATIC

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—In your article on "Bedlam in Literature" in this day's ACADEMY I am sorry to see a statement which ought to have been thoroughly discredited long ago. It is as follows:

"Even the most enlightened men were often guilty of gross cruelty to these unhappy wretches. Thus we find Sir Thomas More relating with much complacency how he had ordered a lunatic beggar, whom he found howling in the street, to be soundly flogged at a public whipping-post."

The only case at all like this which More relates is that of a man who had indeed been in Bedlam but still knew well enough what he was doing when he was guilty, not of "howling in the street," but of some grossly indecent "larks" in churches, which would have been intolerable in any place whatever.

"Whereupon I," writes Sir Thomas, "being advertised of these pageants, and being sent unto and required by very devout religious folk to take some other order with him, caused him, as he came wandering by my door, to be taken by the constables and bounden to a tree in the street before the whole town, and there they striped him with rods till he waxed weary, and somewhat longer. And it appeared well that his remembrance was good enough, save that it went about in grazing till it was beaten home. For he could then very well rehearse his faults himself and speak and treat very well, and promise to do afterwards as well. And verily, God be thanked, I hear none harm of him now" (More's Works, 60r).

Surely it is evident that the "complacency" with which, as you say truly, More relates this anecdote is only satisfaction in the fact that the punishment was effective; and if corporal punishment was ever well applied I should say it was so to a rascal who flung women's petticoats over their heads in a public place—not to say in a church—to the disturbance of a service going on. I state the nature of this case plainly because it is misdescribed to More's disadvantage even by Mr. Sidney Lee in his article on Sir Thomas in the "Dictionary of National Biography"; and I must say, I cannot understand how there should be such a conspiracy (as one would almost think it) even now to charge such a man as Sir Thomas More with inhumanity.

March 18.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

[Dr. Gairdner's quotation describing in detail the incident referred to in the article "Bedlam in Literature," serves but to emphasise the truth of the general statement we made as to the deplorable treatment in More's time of the mentally deficient. Here was a man, obviously irresponsible for his actions, publicly "striped with rods till he waxed weary, and somewhat longer,"—the words we italicise sound ominous.

We yield to none in our admiration of the moral grandeur of Sir Thomas More's character, and this instance of cruelty to a proven lunatic must, in common fairness, be attributed to the limitations of the age in which he lived.

The WRITER of the article.

CHARLEVOIX

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—In your number of March 18 (p. 262) you quote a reminiscence of an earlier "Sherlock Holmes." To be sure, Charlevoix, the Jesuit traveller, was known to Voltaire. And Voltaire's "Histoire de Zadig" (Romans de Voltaire, "Zadig ou la destinée," histoire orientale) shows the methods of Sherlock Holmes better than any story written in this manner after him, although written one hundred and sixty years before this modern sensational author.

MAX MAAS.

MR. KIPLING'S TITLES

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The running to earth of titles is a recreation of peculiar interest, for in not a few instances does the result reveal an idiosyncrasy or characteristic of an author. You quote an instance in the ACADEMY of this week, a correspondent giving the source of Mr. Kipling's title, "Captains Courageous." In this connection, I wonder whether the derivation of the title of Kipling's latest book, "Traffics and Discoveries," has been at all generally noticed. It comes from Hakluyt's Voyages, of which, it will be remembered, the full title is, "The Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffiques and Discoveries of the English Nation."

It is, of course, quite in consonance with our conception of Mr. Kipling to find his laying Percy and Hakluyt under tribute in his search for titles.

March 21.

T. E. TURNBULL.

AN UMBRIAN LOST ART REVIVED

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Professor Alessandro Bellucci writes me that the Cinquecento industry of carpet-making (tapestry) by handloom is again flourishing in Perugia (Italy). The zig-zag pattern heretofore in vogue gained for this manufacture (dating from A.D. 1500) the appellation of Tappeti a fiamme,—anglicè "Flame-Carpets."

The recent discovery of an antique weaving-machine cast aside in a lumber-room of the Congregazione di Carità enabled Count Rossi-Scotti (an old associate, I believe, of Lord Leighton in Perugia) to help forward the revival of a lost art, now in exercise under the superintending care of the Countess del Mayno.

These costly mediæval fabrics composed of either silk, damask, or velvet had long since fallen into disuse, when the remaining relic employed in their production was found in the suppressed convent of the Derelitte Nuns. Happily a surviving pupil of the Nuns, Signora Cangianelli, is still alive to carry on the famous traditional workshop and trade, where these radiant and harmoniously-coloured carpets are once more offered for sale.

Other hand-woven materials made of linen and cotton with fanciful arabesque borders in blue, are also now reproduced, just as in the fifteenth century, under the protecting care of Signora Mary Gallenga Stuart, of Perugia—a lady I know to be the English daughter-in-law of my quondam friend Signor Gallenga, the late well-known correspondent of the Times in Italy.

All such choice arts and handicrafts are to be recommended in this utilitarian age of makeshifts.

March 20.

WILLIAM MERCER.

THE CRESCENT AND STAR

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Coleridge writes of what I once witnessed, "The horned moon, with one bright star within the nether tip."

In a school edition of "The Ancient Mariner," published by Houghton, Mifflin and Co., a note upon the quoted lines, from an English astronomer, asserts the impossibility of what is described. The moon when I saw it, indeed, was in the west; but if possible there, might not the same phenomenon appear in the east?

I am told that in Abbotsford the stained glass windows all have the star and crescent, and in the arms of our oldest Greek-letter society the same thing appears. Can any of your readers tell the origin of the design, or refute the astronomer?

March 9.

JOHN B. TABB.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

"ST. JOHNSTON'S TIPPIT."—This, like "Tyburn Tippet," was an expression used for a halter. St. Johnston or St. John's Town was the ancient name of Perth, and its connection with the "Tippet" originated from a vow taken by 300 of the citizens, that they would die rather than give up their Protestant faith, which had been threatened by the Queen Regent and the Popish Clergy at the time of the Reformation. Accordingly the valiant three hundred had halters put round their necks and swore to die by these rather than deny their faith. They went forth to fight with the clear knowledge that if any of them turned traitor the hempen cord would serve to end his career. From the above tradition the phrase St. Johnston's Tippet has originated.—D. R. Clark (Glasgow).

M. AND N. TEMP. EDWARD VI.—The replacing of M. by a dash over the preceding letters in the King Edward VI. Prayer-book is a survival of a very general practice in old manuscripts. The copyists, though a trained guild, when not monks of the cloister, used considerable freedom in omitting letters and dividing words; chiefly on account of the scarcity of parchment. M. was an early subject for elision probably on account of the space taken; but also, it is conjectured, because the dash, which in arithmetic signifies subtraction, was often accepted as the equivalent of M. It is represented that, written more and more hurriedly, the letter tends to become a wavy line. Still, greater speed draws it straight; hence we are invited to see in the minus sign the decayed form of M. A line above some letters in a word is often found in old MSS., indicating the dropping of other letters, and not exclusively M. or N.—S. C.

AUTHOR FOUND.—The quotation asked for by "J. C., Liverpool," is "Give me health and a day and I will make the pomp of emperors ridiculous," and will be found in Emerson's Miscellanies: "Nature" (section on Beauty).—Hamel Lister (W. Derby).

THE WORD "SOCIOLOGY."—This hybrid term was invented, not by Herbert Spencer, but by his great predecessor, Auguste Comte, who purposely derived it from Latin and Greek as indicating the double origin of modern civilisation. The term was first adopted in England by John Stuart Mill, and thereafter popularised by Spencer. It is now in universal use—least so in this country. Spencer had practically no classical knowledge; besides his own language he knew little more than a very little French, which may yield a moral.—C. W. Saleeby.

[Replies also from K. C. B. (Chingford) and F. A. L.]

MONARCH OF THE NORTH.—That is to say, Lucifer; as deduced from medieval comment upon Isaiah, xiv. 13, especially as it stood in the Vulgate version. I have already explained this thrice. See A Student's Pastime, p. 23; Note to Piers Plowman, B-text, i. 118; Note to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, Group D, 1413. The first of these notes appeared in 1867. I sometimes wonder how often and for how many years an explanation must be repeated before it can become generally known.—Walter W. Skeat.

CUMBER.—This well-known word has been in use, in five varying senses, ever since 1303. The whole history of it is duly given in a work which deserves to be better known, viz., "The New English Dictionary," now being published at Oxford.—Walter W. Skeat.

[Replies also from C. S. Jerram, Mrs. G. A. Jamieson, and R. O. A.]

AUTHOR WANTED.—

"St. George to save a Mayd a Dragon slew,
And 'twas a brave exploit, if all be true.
Some say there are noe Dragons; nay, 'tis said
There was noe George; Pray God there be a Mayd."

The above was found written in a copy of "Dalton on English Law," published 1620, which has recently been acquired by a collector in Northumberland. He states that the handwriting appears to be that of the seventeenth century, and is most anxious to trace where the extract comes from and its probable author and date.—W. K.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

Heaton, Harriet A. The Brooches of Many Nations. Edited by J. Potter Briscoe, F. R. Hist. S., with 78 illustrations by the Authoress. Simpkin, Marshall, 6s. net and ros. 6d. net.

Bryan's Dictionary of Painters and Engravers. New Edition revised and enlarged under the supervision of George C. Williamson, Litt. D. With numerous Illustrations. Vol. V., S-Z. Bell, 21s. net.

Capart, Jean, Keeper of the Egyptian Antiquities of the Royal Museum, Brussels, Lecturer at the University of Liège. Primitive Art in Egypt. Translated from the revised and augmented original edition, by A. S. Griffith, with 208 illustrations. Grevel, 16s. net.

Auscher, E. S. A History and Description of French Porcelain. Translated and edited by William Burton, F.C.S. Containing twenty-four plates in colours, together with reproductions of marks and numerous illustrations. Cassell, 30s. net.

BIOGRAPHY.

Macmillan, D., M.A. John Knox: a Biography. With an appreciation of the Reformer by the Very Rev. Principal Story, D.D., LL.D. Melrose, 3s. 6d. net.

de Noussanne, Henri. The Kaiser as he is, or the real William II. (Le véritable Guillaume II.). Translated by Walter Littlefield. Putnam, 6s.

Rathbone, Eleanor F. William Rathbone: a Memoir. Macmillan, 7s. 6d.

CLASSICAL.

- The Golden Ass of Apuleius.* Newly translated with introduction and notes by Francis D. Byrne. The Imperial Press, 1s.
Harvard Studies in Classical Philology. Edited by a committee of the Classical Instructors of Harvard University. Vol. XV., 1904. Harvard University, Cambridge, U.S.A., 6s. 6d. net.

ETHNOLOGY.

- Twenty-first Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, 1899-1900. Twenty-second Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, 1900-1901, in two parts.* J. W. Powell, Director. Government Printing Office, Washington.
 Moncrieff, A. R. Hope. The World of to-day: A Survey of the Lands and Peoples of the Globe, as seen in travel and commerce. In six volumes. Vol. I. The Gresham Publishing Co. 8s. net.

FICTION.

- Donovan, Dick. A Knight of Evil. White, 6s.
 Dale, Alan. Wanted a Cook: Domestic Dialogues. Putnam, 6s.
 Wilson, Rathmell. Hinemoa and Tutanekei, a Maori Legend. With other stories and some verses. The United Press Association, 2s. 6d.
 Darlington, H. A. The Chaunceys. Nisbet, 2s. 6d.
 Fox, John. Crittenden. Constable, 6s. (see p. 337).
 Moore, F. Frankfort. The White Causeway. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Willcocks, M. P. Widdicombe. Lane, 6s.
 Gillie, E. A. Jehanne, a Romance of Modern Normandy. Isbister, 6s.
 Coleridge, Gilbert. An Instinctive Criminal. Treherne, 6s. (see p. 337).
 Freeman, R. Austin. The Golden Pool, a Story of a forgotten Mine. Cassell, 6s.
 Kelly, Myra. Little Citizens. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s. (see p. 336).
 McCutcheon, George Barr. Beverly of Graustark. With illustrations by Harris N. Fisher. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.
 Haggard, Lieut.-Colonel Andrew, D.S.O. A Bond of Sympathy. Long, 6s.
 Phillpotts, Eden. A Deal with the Devil. George Newnes, 6d.

GARDENING.

- The Garden Lover's Series in three Vols. Vol. I. A Garden Lover's Birthday Book. Compiled and arranged by Alfred H. Hyatt. Vol. II. A Book of Sundial Mottoes. Compiled by Alfred H. Hyatt. Vol. III. A Garden of pleasant Flowers: being a description of the most familiar of our English Garden Flowers, from the famous collection of John Parkinson. Chosen and arranged by Alfred H. Hyatt. Wellby, 3s. 6d. net each.

HISTORICAL.

- Knox, John. The History of the Reformation of Religion in Scotland. With which are included Knox's Confession and the Book of Discipline. A twentieth-century edition, revised and edited by Cuthbert Lennox. Melrose, 4s. 6d. net.
 Library of Congress. Journals of the Continental Congress, 1774-1789. Edited from the original records in the Library of Congress by Worthington Chauncey Ford, Chief, Division of Manuscripts. Vol. I, 1774. Government Printing Office, Washington.
 Firth, John B. Constantine the Great. The Reorganisation of the Empire and the Triumph of the Church. Putnam, "Heroes of the Nations Series," 5s.

LITERARY.

- Bolam, Cecil E. John Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress. A lecture delivered before the Members of the Lincoln Diocesan Higher Reading Society at Lincoln, December 6th, 1904. With a preface by the very Rev. E. C. Wickham, D.D., Dean of Lincoln. S.P.C.K., 6d.
 Newbigging, Thomas. Sketches in Prose and Verse. Sherratt & Hughes, 3s. 6d. net.
 York Powell, Professor F. John Ruskin and Thoughts on Democracy. The Saint George Library, Allen, 6d.
Rabelais. Selected and edited by Curtis Hidden Page. Putnam, 2s.
 Lang, Andrew. Adventures among Books. Longmans, 6s. 6d. net. (see p. 324).

MILITARY.

- Fortescue, the Hon. J. W. The British Army, 1783-1802. Four Lectures delivered at the Staff College and Cavalry School. Macmillan, 4s. 6d. net.

MUSIC.

- Oldmeadow, Ernest J. Schumann. Bell's "Miniature Series of Musicians," 1s. net.
 Oldmeadow, Ernest J. Chopin. Bell's "Miniature Series of Musicians," 1s. net.

NATURAL HISTORY.

- Seton, Ernest Thompson. Monarch, The Big Bear of Tallac. With 100 drawings. Constable, 5s. net.
 Smith, R. Bosworth. Bird Life and Bird Lore. With illustrations. Murray, 10s. 6d. net.

ORIENTAL.

- Die Gatha's des Awesta: Zarathushtra's Verspredigten,* übersetzt von Christian Bartholomæ. Strasburg: Trübner, 3 m.

PHILOSOPHY.

- Crichton-Browne, Sir James. Materialism. Part of an address given to the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh. S.P.C.K., 2d.

POETRY.

- Verhaeren, Émile. Les heures d'après midi. Brussels: Edmond Deman.

REPRINTS.

- The Spenser of his Age,* being Selected Poetry from the Works of Phineas Fletcher. With an introduction and notes by Walter Jerrold. Tutin, 2s. 6d. net.
 Rowlands, Samuel. The Bride. Reprinted for the first time from a Copy of the Original Edition of 1617 in the Library of Harvard College. With an introductory note by Alfred Claghorn Potter. Boston: Godspeed, $3. 50c. net. (See p. 329).
Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay (1778-1840). As edited by her niece, Charlotte Barrett. With preface and notes by Austin Dobson. In six Vols. Vol. IV. Macmillan, 10s. 6d. net (see p. 331).
 Bird, Isabella L. Unbeaten Tracks in Japan. An account of travels in the interior, including visits to the Aborigines of Yezo and the Shrine of Nikkō. With Illustrations. Murray, Popular edition, 2s. 6d. net.
 Dickens, Charles. A Tale of Two Cities. "The Cameo Classics," I. Library Press, 6d. net.
 Sterne, Laurence. The Beauties of Sterne. "The Cameo Classics," II. Library Press, 6d. net.

SCIENCE.

- Curtis, M. E. "Nothing to Pay" and other Health Lectures. S.P.C.K., 6d.

SOCIOLOGY.

- Chadwick, Rev. W. Edward. Poverty, a Social Disease. Suggestions for Workers among the Poor. S.P.C.K., 2d.

SPORT.

- Beard, D. C. The Outdoor Handy Book. George Newnes, 6s. net.

THEOLOGY.

- Lagrange, Père J. M. Historical Criticism and the Old Testament. Translated by Edward Myers, M.A. Catholic Truth Society, 2s. 6d.
An Old Catholic View of Confession. Being the Pamphlet "Compulsory auricular Confession, as practised in the Church of Rome, a human invention." By Eduard Herzog. Translated with the Author's permission by G. C. Richards, M.A. S.P.C.K., 6d.
 Rosadi, Giovanni. The Trial of Jesus. Translated from the third Italian edition. Edited with a preface by Dr. Emil Reich. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Muirhead, Lewis A., B.D. The Times of Christ. New edition, with some alterations and additions. Clarke, 2s.
 Bird, Robert. Jesus, the Carpenter of Nazareth. New edition. Nelson, 6d.
 Harper, William Rainey. A critical and exegetical Commentary on Amos and Hosea. The "International Critical Commentary." T. & T. Clark, 12s.
 Worsley, Deaconess Madeleine. The Will of God and other Devotional Works. New edition. S.P.C.K., 1s. 6d.
Work in the Vineyard. A series of Practical Papers for the newly confirmed. By various writers. Edited by William John Ferrar, M.A. S.P.C.K., 6d.

Does it occur to you that there is a reason why 750,000 Waterman's Ideal-Fountain
 Pens were sold in one year, last year ?

Do Good

and leave behind you a monument of virtue.

Write your name by kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with day by day, and when you write, use a

Waterman's Ideal-Fountain Pen

From 10/6. In Silver and Gold for Presentation. Of Stationers, Jewellers, &c.

Dainty Illustrated Booklet on these Pens, post free, from
 L. & C. HARDTMUTH, 12 Golden Lane, London, E.C.
 New York: 173 Broadway. Paris: 6 Rue de Honore.

THE WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER - Improved No. 2.Special Advantages.

VISIBLE WRITING.	The WILLIAMS was the Pioneer in Visible Writing, and is still the leader and best exponent of this important feature. The idea once ridiculed and argued is now recognised as of great value; there can be no argument against it - 'Seeing is believing.'
BEAUTY OF WORK.	This feature sells hundreds of machines to people who are dissatisfied with smudgy ribbon work after seeing the clean-cut typing of the Williams.
COLOUR TYPING. RULING.	Letters, words or lines in Red, Blue, Green, etc. Vertical or horizontal lines can be ruled in different colours.
WRITING ON LINES.	The platen revolves freely and may be adjusted by the platen knob for typing on ruled lines or any part of the paper.
DUPLICATE COPIES.	Carbon and Stencil Duplicating require no more effort than ordinary typing. Originals for lithographic fac-similes of Hektograph copies may be typed with Williams Special Inks.
LIGHT RUNNING.	Ball bearings at all points ensure light running carriage. There are no slow keys and no heavy ones.
LIGHT TOUCH.	The touch is light, uniform and elastic, adapted for high speed and all day work.
KEYBOARD.	Models 2 and 3 Williams Typewriters have 28 keys with double shift, writing 84 characters, and can be fitted with accents for foreign languages. Keyboard plans on application.
CARRIAGE LOCKS.	Easily adjusted screw bolts at either end of carriage lock all moveable parts, so that the machine may be safely shipped.
GUARANTEE.	These machines are guaranteed against mechanical imperfections and will be carefully looked after by our Branches and Agents.
POPULAR PRICE.	The improved No. 2 Williams embraces all these advantages and is a high grade machine in every respect. We claim that it is the best double shift key machine irrespective of price. We are now offering it in the United Kingdom under the name of 'ACADEMY MODEL' at the following prices:— No. 2 F'cap size formerly sold at £21 now £12 12 0 cash No. 3 Brief ,, ,, ,, 23 14 14 0 ,, We also offer these machines by deferred payments— 25/- on delivery and 12/6 per month until the machine is paid for. This figures 5d. a day covering a period of about two years. Apply at any of our Depots for full details, or write for catalogue.
12/6 PER MONTH.

WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER COMPANY.LONDON

ABERDEEN - 115 Union Street
 BELFAST - 71 Ann Street
 BIRMINGHAM - 28 High Street
 BURNLEY - 9 Grimshaw Street
 CARDIFF - 8 St. John's Square
 DUBLIN - 5 Upper Ormond Quay
 EDINBURGH - 19 Sandwick Place

EXETER - 31 Queen Street
 GLASGOW - 66 Bethwell St.
 LEEDS - 3 Park Lane
 LEICESTER - 60-64 Halford St.
 LEIGH - 64 Bond Street
 LIVERPOOL -

57 Holborn Viaduct

MANCHESTER - 267 Deansgate
 MIDDLESBROUGH - Royal Exchange
 NEWCASTLE - 21 Collingwood St.
 NOTTINGHAM - Prudential Bldgs.
 PORTSMOUTH - 154 Queen Street
 SHEFFIELD - 72 Queen Street
 SOUTHAMPTON - 12 Portland Street

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1717

APRIL 1, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, W. This day (Saturday), April 1, at three o'clock, the Right Hon. Lord Rayleigh, O.M., D.C.L., LL.D., Sc.D., F.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy, R.I., first of three Lectures on "Some Controverted Questions of Optics." Half a guinea the Course. Tuesday next, April 4, at five o'clock, Perceval Landon, Esq., first of two Lectures on "Tibet." Half a guinea. Thursday, April 6, at five o'clock, Professor R. Meldola, F.R.S., M.R.I., first of two Lectures on "Synthetic Chemistry" (Experimental). Half a guinea. Subscription to all Courses in the Season, two guineas.

THE ELIZABETHAN STAGE SOCIETY. "EVERYMAN." St. George's Hall, W.; Tues. and Fri., April 4 and 7, at 8.30. "FRANCIS OF ASSISI," a religious drama, will be given at St. George's Hall on Thursday, April 6, at 8.30 and Friday, April 7, at 3. Seats can be booked at the Hall.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH. The Council invites Applications for the Post of WARDEN of the Alexandra Hall of Residence for Women Students in succession to Miss E. A. Carpenter. Applications and 70 copies of Testimonials to be sent by May 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.—T.F. ROBERTS, Principal.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH. The Council invites Applications for the Post of Registrar and Secretary of the College at a Salary of £300. Applications and 70 copies of Testimonials to be sent by May 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.—T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

WALSALL EDUCATION COMMITTEE School of Art. Applications are invited for the post of HEAD MASTER of the WALSALL SCHOOL OF ART. Salary £250, rising by £25 per annum for meritorious service to £300. Applications to be received not later than APRIL 7, 1905.—Further particulars and prescribed Form of Application can be obtained from the DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION, Education Offices, Walsall.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL (view from the South-West) drawn by Mr. J. B. Fulton; also views of Ancient Buildings at Famagusta, Cyprus, &c., together with other interesting matter, both literary and artistic. See The Builder of April 1 (4d., by post 4½d.). Through any newsagent or direct from the Publisher of The Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

ANALOGY BETWEEN MUSIC AND LIFE. One guinea prize for the best; original or quoted. Send 3d. for April number of Musical Herald.—Office, 24 Berners Street, London, W.

LADY wants engagement as Secretary: short-hand, typewriting, seven years' City experience.—Apply B., c/o ACADEMY.

Books Wanted

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.—"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookfinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1800; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

FIRST Editions. Pickwick, cloth, uncut, 25s., Oliver Twist, 3 vols., half roan, 21s., Bleak House, half calf, 10s., Nicholas Nickleby, half calf, 10s., Cricket, cloth, 6s., Battle of Life, cloth, 5s.—David Cadney, Cambridge.

VANITY FAIR.—20 vols. from 1872-86. Mrs. Highmore, Worcester Park, Surrey.

ANIDA AMERIGO VESPUCCI: novos espudos e achegas especialmente em favor da interpretação dada à sua la viagem em 1497-98, Vienna, 1874.—J. C. L. Clark, Lancaster, Mass., U.S.A.

ANY of the writings of Dr. George Starkey, alchemist and empiric (died about 1665).—J. C. L. Clark, Lancaster, Mass., U.S.A.

OLD PORTRAITS of Judge Jefferies, the "Bloody"—The Bloody Assizes, 1689; The Western Martyrology, 1705.—A. Iredale, The Strand, Torquay.

WORKS by Wilde, O.; Whistler; Beardsley; books in large and small quantities purchased.—J. Jacob, 149 Edgware Road, Hyde Park.

MOORE, The Crying Sin of England, 1653. Miniature Books under 4 in.: Dion, Areopagita, Greek; Dion, Areopagita, Parker's Trans.—H. H. Peach, 37 Belvoir Street, Leicester.

LETTERS of S. E. Brown, 2 vols., also collected poems of same. X., 1 Regent Terrace, Cambridge.

FRANKLIN (Benjamin) any of his Works, or anything published by him. Fraser (Sir W.), The Stirlings of Kier, 1858, or any of his Genealogical Works. Frasers of Philorth, 3 vols., 1879. Freeman (E. A.), Historical Geography, 2 vols., 8vo, 1881. History of Sicily, 4 vols., 1891-4. Norman Conquest, 6 vols., 1875, &c., or any of his works. Freemasonry Books and Tracts before 1840. Freer (Miss), Last Decade of a Glorious Reign, 2 vols., 1863, or either vol. Marie de Medici, 2 vols., or either vol. Any of her Works. From Dawn to Noon, by Violet Fane, 1872. Froude's English in Ireland, 3 vols., 8vo, 1872-4. History of England, 12 vols., 8vo, 1856-70. Short Studies, 4 vols., 8vo, 1867-83. Fugitive Pieces, Newark, 1806, £40 offered. Fur and Feather Series, any. Gafori (F.), Theoricum Opus Armonice, sm. 4to, 1480. Gaguin (R.), Chroniques de France, sm. folio, 1516. Gamonia, 1837. Gardiner. History of England, 1603-16, 2 vols., 1863. History of the Civil War, 3 vols., 1886-91. Prince Charles and the Spanish Marriage, 2 vols., 1867. Garland of Good Will (The), by T. D., 12mo, 1705, or any Garlands. Gascoigne (Geo.), Whole Works, sm. 4to, 1587.

Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF

G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings, Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from

FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W. Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

LEIGHTON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS. Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s. JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.—J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 139.

Containing a special article, entitled: "SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS."

By Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact bibliography of their publications and a double plate of their portraits.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

THOMAS THORP, Secondhand Bookseller, 100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND 4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

ILLUSTRATION.—To Authors, Publishers, &c. Books, Periodicals, Articles illustrated. Refined, realistic, original. Moderate terms. Specimens submitted.—W. FREUND, 13 Norland Square, Kensington, W.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss FOOT, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L., 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING (Smith Premier).—Scientific, Legal MSS., Plays, Translations, Duplicates, Novels, 9d. 1000.—Miss HANDLEY, Berkhamsted Herts.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS & NEW REMAINDERS.

OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

The APRIL LIST NOW READY, contains Popular Works on Sport,
Travel, Biography, and Fiction.

Sent POST FREE on application to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34 New Oxford Street, London.

THE "COUNTRY LIFE" LIBRARY OF SPORT.

Under the General Editorship of Mr. HORACE G. HUTCHINSON.

FISHING.NOW READY. IN TWO VOLUMES.

With Coloured Plates of Salmon and Trout Flies. Over 250 Full-
Page Illustrations with various diagrams.

Price 25/- net. (12/6 net per Vol.)

Published at the Offices of "COUNTRY LIFE," LIMITED, 20 Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Books for Sale

THE STORY OF SOMERSETSHIRE, by
W. R. Richmond, map and 90 illustrations, 4s. 6d. post free.—John D. Ballie, Grand Pump Room, Bath.

EARLY PRINTED BOOKS, Pynson, 1510.
The Golden Legend, 1489; earliest Issue Burns' Poems, Edinburgh, 1787, in our Catalogue No. 5, ready April 5.—The Chaucer Book Co., 37 St. Martin's Court, W.C.

WARD (Edward), Miscellaneous Works in Verse and Prose of Edward, commonly called Ned Ward—"London Spy," "Don Quixote," "Grand Rebellion,"
"Nuptial Dialogues," &c., in all, 36 vols., £25.—W. E.
Goulden, 5 St. Paul's, Canterbury.

RECLUSE, Universal Geography with hundreds of Engravings, Maps, and Gilt Edges. 10 vols. published at £5 5s. will sell cheap.—Lloyd and Townsend, 13 Dillwyn St., Swansea.

POETS AND POETRY OF THE CEN-TURY, edited by A. H. Miles. Crabbe to Coleridge and Keats to Lytton, 2 vols., original editions, uncut, 2s. 9d.
each.—J. W. Thompson, 45 Pasture Street, Grimsby.

STIRLING-MAXWELL'S Works, Annals,
Artists of Spain, Charles V., Miss. Essays, 6 vols., large paper copy, Engravings in duplicate. Nimmo, 1891, £10 10s.
for £4.—Walker, 37 Briggate, Leeds.

W. J. LOFTIE'S Kensington Picturesque and Historical. 30s. net. T Faulkner's History and Antiquities of Kensington, 1820. 42s. net.—Young's Library, 179 Kensington High Street, W.

W. THACKER & Co.2 CREED LANE, E.C.

A MONOGRAPH OF THE ANOPHELES MOSQUITOES OF INDIA.—By Capt. S. P. JAMES, M.B. (Lond.), and Capt. W. GLEN LISTON, I.M.S. With 15 full-page coloured plates, and other Illustrations.
Quarto cloth, 24s. net.

MALARIAL FEVER & MALARIAL PARASITES IN INDIA.—
By Major ANDREW BUCHANAN, M.A., M.D. Second edition, with 12 coloured plates. Cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE FOR INDIA.—By I. B. LYON,
C.I.E., etc. New edition by Lt.-Col. L. A. WADDELL, M.B., etc. Complete in one volume. Royal 8vo, cloth, 25s. net.

FORTIFICATION AS APPLIED TO SCHEMES.—By Major L. J.
SHADWELL, P.S.C., and Major W. EWBANK, R.E. Demy 8vo, 9s. net.

NORTH-WEST FRONTIER WARFARE, Being a Supplement to "Tactics as applied to Schemes." By Colonel J. SHERSTON. Second edition, much enlarged, and brought up to date, by Major L. J. SHADWELL, P.S.C.; late D.A.A.G. for Instruction. With six Maps. 8vo, 6s. net.

NOTES, QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON MILITARY LAW.
The Manual of Military Law and the Indian Articles of War.—By Major
L. J. SHADWELL, P.S.C. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. net.

FORTIFICATION AND TOPOGRAPHY. Memoranda and Formulæ.
—By Lieut.-Col. H. M. S. BRUNNER, P.S.C. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

RIDING FOR LADIES, WITH HINTS ON THE STABLE.—
By Mrs. POWER O'DONOGHUE. Illustrations by Chantry Corbould.
Second edition (revised 1905), imperial 16mo, cloth, 8s. 6d. net.

THE IMPERIAL JAPANESE NAVY.—By FRED T. JANE. Its History from the earliest times to the present day. With 80 Illustrations.
Royal 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

ASTRONOMY WITHOUT A TELESCOPE.—By E. WALTER
MAUNDER, F.R.A.S. Fully Illustrated with full-page Plates, Maps and Charts. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.THE PALL MALL GAZETTE

10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily.

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books
Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

ADVERTISING IN IRELAND.
THE DAILY EXPRESS
DUBLIN.

PREMIER FINANCIAL PAPER OF IRELAND.

"One of the few Daily Papers in the United Kingdom showing a distinct interest in Literature."—The Academy.

Most Suitable Medium for Publishers.
Advertisements.

Special Columns devoted to Literary Matter
every Thursday.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper

THE DAILY CHRONICLE

10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—

The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes.
Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events.

Science and Art Specially dealt with

Fullest Reports of All Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere

THE SPHERE

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week.

Also List of Books Received.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.
Office: Great New Street, E.C.

NOTICE.

"THE ACADEMY" is POSTED FREE
(52 issues at 3d.) to every ANNUAL SUB-
SCRIBER in the United Kingdom prepaying
13s. FOREIGN SUBSCRIBERS by a PRE-
PAYMENT of 17s. 6d. will secure it being sent Post Free to any address throughout the World for a uniform 1d. postage, though the postage payable varies from 1d. minimum to 2½d. per copy. Orders may be sent through any Bookseller or Newsvendor, or direct to the Publisher, 5-7 Southampton Street, Strand, W.C

CONNOISSEURS OF COFFEERED

DRINK THE

WHITE

DELICIOUS FOR BREAKFAST
& AFTER DINNER.

&

BLUE

In making use less quantity, it being so much stronger than ordinary COFFEE.

Chatto & Windus, Publishers.NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.*A SPOILER OF MEN. By RICHARD MARSH, Author of "The Beetle."*Florence Warden's New Novel.—On April 3.THE YOUNGEST MISS BROWN.

By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh."

*New Novel by the Author of "The Leavenworth Case."—On April 10.THE MILLIONAIRE BABY.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN (Mrs. C. ROHLFS), Author of "The Leavenworth Case."

The following Six-shilling Novels will be ready shortly :THE PHANTOM TORPEDO-BOATS. By ALLEN UPWARD.
STINGAREE. By E. W. HORNUNG.THE ERROR OF HER WAYS. By FRANK BARRETT.THE MISSING ELIZABETH. By ADELINE SERGEANT.BALIOI GARTH. By ALGERNON GISSING.DILYS. By Mrs. F. E. PENNY.

Fcap 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

LI TING OF LONDON. By GEORGE R. SIMS.

Shortly. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

THE WILD MARQUIS :LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF ARMAND GUERRY DE MAUBREUIL (the Would-be Assassin of Napoleon I.).

By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY, Author of "With Zola in England."

Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net.

MACAULAY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

Vol. I. (New Volume of THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.)

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.

Printed in clear type on fine paper; full size of page, 6½ by 4½ inches.

IMPORTANT SERIES OF ELEVEN NEW VOLUMES IN THE PRESS.

MACAULAY'S History of England. In Five Volumes; andJUSTIN MCCARTHY'S The Reign of Queen Anne. In One Volume.*The other Volumes of the Series are as follows :LONDON; ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN; SIR RICHARD WHITTINGTON (Shortly); GASPARD DE COLIGNY (Shortly). By Sir WALTER BESANT.THE DEEMSTER. By HALL CAINE.THE WOMAN IN WHITE. By WILKIE COLLINS.ROBINSON CRUSOE. (The Two Parts.) By DANIEL DEFOE. With 37 Illustrations by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE. By THOMAS HARDY.CONDENSED NOVELS. By BRET HARTE.THE AUTOCRAT OF THE BREAKFAST-TABLE. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. With Illustrations by J. G. THOMSON.THE ESSAYS OF ELIA. By CHARLES LAMB.THE LIFE OF THE FIELDS; THE OPEN AIR; NATURE NEAR LONDON. By RICHARD JEFFERIES.THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. With 32 full-page Illustrations. "IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By CHARLES READE.

Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

A History of the Four Georges and of William IV. In Two Volumes; and A History of Our Own Times, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to 1897. In Three Volumes.MEMORIES AND PORTRAITS; VIRGINIBUS PUERISQUE; MEN AND BOOKS; NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS; ACROSS THE PLAINS; THE MERRY MEN (May 4); THE POCKET R.L.S. : Favourite Passages from Stevenson's Works. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.SKETCHES. By MARK TWAIN.THE COMPLETE ANGLER. By WALTON and COTTON.THE DECAMERON. By BOCCACCIO.Some Recent Six-shilling Novels.*TALES OF THE FIVE TOWNS.

By ARNOLD BENNETT, Author of "Anna of the Five Towns."

FLEUR-DE-CAMP : A DAUGHTER OF FRANCE.

By A. GODRIC CAMPBELL.

HEIRS OF REUBEN.

By CHRIS HEALY, Author of "The Endless Heritage."

MR. SWINBURNE'S POETICAL WORKS.

The COLLECTED LIBRARY EDITION in Six Volumes is NOW COMPLETE, and a SECOND IMPRESSION is on Sale. Price 36s. net for the Six Volumes. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt tops.

A HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES,from the Diamond Jubilee, 1897, to the Accession of King Edward VII. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 24s. [Preparing.]RECOLLECTIONS OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON IN THE PACIFIC.By ARTHUR JOHNSTONE. With Portraits and Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net. [Preparing.]WHEN A GIRL'S ENGAGED.By HOPE MERRICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]THE LIFE OF CHARLES DICKENSas Revealed in his Writings. By PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 2rs. net. [Shortly.]THE MAN-HUNTER.

By DICK DONOVAN, Author of "The Man from Manchester," &c. A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, picture cloth, flat back, 2s.

A RAINY JUNE, AND THREE OTHER STORIES.By OUIDA. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]THE ADVENTURES OF JONES.

By HAYDEN CARRUTH. With Illustrations. A NEW EDITION. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE POET AND THE PIERROT.By DOROTHEA DEAKIN, Author of "The Smile of Melinda." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.*THE LADY OF LYNN. By Sir WALTER BESANT. With 12 Illustrations by G. DEMAINE HAMMOND.AS LUCK WOULD HAVE IT. By WILLIAM WESTALL.A PRINCE OF GOOD FELLOWS. By ROBERT BARR. Illustrated by J. F. SULLIVAN.HAVILAND'S CHUM. By BERTRAM MITFORD.THE MASSARENES. By OUIDA.THE BAG OF DIAMONDS. By G. MANVILLE FENN.THE SHADOW OF THE ROPE. By E. W. HORNUNG. [May.]

Some of CASSELL & COMPANY'S New Books

Canada as It Is.

By JOHN FOSTER FRASER. With about 40 Full-page Illustrations. 6s.

Russia.

By Sir DONALD MACKENZIE WALLACE, K.C.I.E., K.C.V.O. Entirely new Revised and Enlarged Edition, reset, and in great part re-written. Two Vols., with Maps. 24s. net.

King Leopold II.

His Rule in Belgium and the Congo.

By JOHN DE COURCY MacDONNELL. With 48 Full-page Plates. 21s. net.

The Other Side of the Lantern.

By Sir FREDERICK TREVES, Bart., G.C.V.O., C.B., LL.D. &c. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 39 Full-page Plates from Photographs by the Author. 12s. net.

Reminiscences of a Radical Parson.

By the Rev. W. TUCKWELL, M.A., With Photogravure Portrait. 9s. net.

"It is a record of stirring times in a past which, though only fifteen years ago, already appears half fabulous. Several chapters are occupied with personal anecdotes, full of interest, of the great figures in the struggle with whom Mr. Tuckwell came into contact."—Daily News.

IMPORTANT NEW FINE ART WORK

Part 1 Now Ready, price 7d. net

The National Gallery of British Art

(The Tate Gallery)

With a number of EXQUISITE REMBRANDT
PHOTOGRAVURES,

And Beautiful Reproductions of the Principal Pictures.

"A handsome folio work, descriptive of the treasures that have accrued at the Tate Gallery. Sir Charles Holroyd, the Keeper of the Gallery, supplies an introduction calculated to instruct as well as to instil appreciation of the works of art to be dealt with, and the full-page reproductions in half-tone and photogravure are well worthy of our admiration."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LTD.,
London, and all Booksellers.

April No. to be ready April 1.

2s. 6d. net. Subscription 10s. per annum,
post free.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

A Quarterly Review of Religion,
Theology, and Philosophy.

THE EDUCATION OF A MINISTER OF
GOD. The Rt. Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter,
D.D., Lord Bishop of Ripon.

MR. BALFOUR AS SOPHIST. Professor
Henry Jones, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, Glasgow.

THE CRUX OF THEISM. W. H. Mallock.

THE LORD IS A MAN OF WAR. Rev. F.
W. Orde-Ward, B.A.

CHRISTIAN, GREEK, OR GOTH? H. W.
Garrod, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

THE RESURRECTION OF OUR LORD AND RECENT CRITICISM. Rev. C. F. Nolloth.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOOD. Professor
W. R. Sorley.

THE TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE
PATRIARCHS. Professor C. H. Charles.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS AND THE CHRIST OF EXPERIENCE. Romanus.

RELIGION OF ROME, CLASSICAL AND CHRISTIAN. M. A. R. Tuke.

Discourses, a number of signed Reviews, and a Bibliography of recent Literature.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

114 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden,
LONDON, W.C.

The "Country Life" Library

PREPARING FOR PUBLICATION

To be Issued in Two Volumes, PRICE
THREE GUINEAS Net the Two Volumes.
A Sumptuous work, handsomely bound in cloth, containing about 300 plates

Being a Series of Illustrations from Photographs of the most Famous Examples of

THE GARDENS OF ITALY

BY

CHARLES LATHAM

Descriptive Text by E. MARCH PHILLIPS

Dedicated by Special Permission to his
MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY

MR. MURRAY'S New Books.

Now ready. With 200 Illustrations from special Photographs and Maps.
Demy 8vo, 25s. net.

LHASA AND ITS MYSTERIES.

A Record of the Expedition 1903-1904.
By L. A. WADDELL, LL.D., C.B., C.I.E.,
Lieut.-Colonel Indian Medical Service.

Now ready. Seventh and last Series of SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF'S DIARIES.

NOTES FROM A DIARY, 1896-

Jan. 23rd, 1901. Two vols. Crown 8vo, 18s.

"The closing volumes of a modern journal which has qualities, contents, and a style that suggest Evelyn's."—
Daily Chronicle.

A MOTHER OF CZARS.

A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, Wife of Paul I., and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I.

By MRS. COLQUHOUN GRANT,
Author of "The French Noblesse of the XVIIIth Century."

Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY AND ITS MEMBERS.

A History from 1768-1830.

By the late J. E. HODGSON, R.A., and
F. A. EATON, M.A., Secretary of the Royal Academy.
With Portraits. Large Demy 8vo, 21s. net.
[Ready next week.]

Now ready. Demy 8vo, 8s. net.

MAKERS OF MODERN HISTORY

Napoleon III. Cavour. Bismarck.
By the Honble. EDWARD CADOGAN.

Mr. Ward's new work on the Nile Valley.

OUR SUDAN.

By JOHN WARD, F.S.A.,
Author of "The Sacred Beetle," "Greek Coins and their Parent Cities." Dedicated by request to Lord Kitchener of Khartoum.

Crown 4to, 400 pp., 720 Illustrations. Price 21s. net.
Including Maps and many Portraits.

A NEW 6s. NOVEL.

A QUIXOTIC WOMAN.

By ISOBEL FITZROY. [Now Ready.]

NOW READY.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW.

Edited by CHARLES HANBURY WILLIAMS.

APRIL 1905. 2s. 6d. net.

IN THE CITY. John Davidson.
THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE RUSSIAN
NATION.—A. S. Rappoport.
AVE ATQUE VALE, HONESTATES.—J. F.
W. Howley.
BEETHOVEN.—Arthur Symonds.
GREAT BRITAIN AND GERMANY.—J. L.
Bashford.
POPULAR SONGS OF OLD CANADA.—
George Stewart.
THE LATTER BOURBONS.—G. W. P.
ABOUT "THINKING IMPERIALISM."—
Morston Frewen.
QUAINT MEMORIES.—Emma Hessey.
SAINT-BEUVE.—Ferdinand Brunetiere.
A SIDE-LIGHT ON INDIA. THE BYLE.—
E. H. Aitken.
BEAUJEU (Chapters XII.-XV.)—H. C. Bailey.

JOHN MURRAY,
ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	353	A Literary Causerie:
Literature:		Hans Christian Andersen	364
Wit and Fashion	356	Fiction	366
Shakespeare	357	The Bookshelf	368
John Knox	357	Book Sales	369
These Two	358	The Drama: "Lady Ben" at the
The Tyranny of the Thesis	359	Comedy Theatre	369
A Scholar Among Birds	360	Fine Art: Mr. Rackham's Colour-
Dr. Opimian—with a Difference	360	Drawings	370
The Lion Rampant	361	Art Sales	371
Flowers in Fiction	361	Science: A Belated Exposure	372
Jules Verne	363	Music: A Modern Symphony	373
Jules Verne: A Reminiscence	363	Correspondence	374
Melancholia	364	Books Received	375

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

It is interesting to remember that it was in England that Hans Andersen was first allowed to realise how great a man he was. He came here in 1847, stayed at a hotel in Leicester Square, and prowled from that centre as the lion of a London season, being welcomed with equal cordiality at Gadshill and Marlborough House. "Here," he wrote to a friend at Copenhagen, "I am regarded as a Danish Walter Scott, while in Denmark I am degraded into a sort of third-class author far below Hertz the classical and Heiberg the infallible." And now more will wonder, than know, what these Hertz the classical and Heiberg the infallible ever wrote.

For all his popularity, Hans Andersen was very badly remunerated for his work. From the first instalment of "The Improvisatore," he only derived £19, paid in instalments after repeated dunning. He told this to Dickens, who was incredulous. "You mean £19 the printer's sheet, I suppose?" said he. "No, £19 for the whole work," Andersen replied. "We misunderstand each other," Dickens insisted. "You don't mean to tell me that you only got £19 for 'The Improvisatore'; you must mean that you were paid for it at the rate of £19 per sheet?" Again Andersen contradicted him, and Dickens threw up his hands in amazement. "It would be incredible," he said, "if I did not hear it from your own lips." And Andersen, telling the story, adds: "It is a fact that my translator (Mrs. Howitt) got more than I, the author, did."

The wealth of English publishers was another thing which excited Andersen's remark. He stayed with Richard Bentley, who no doubt "did him well," at Sevenoaks. "He has a nice residence," he wrote to his Copenhagen friend, "with such elegance. Lackeys in silk stockings wait upon us—there's something like a bookseller for you."

The Melchior family, with whom Hans Andersen spent his last years have assisted in the publication of an interesting portfolio containing photographs of his humble birthplace in the Danish provincial town of Odense, numerous portraits of the writer, and photographs of his scissor-pictures. In these scissor-pictures he took as much pleasure as the children to whom he presented them. They show fantastic elves and goblins and animals, and are usually signed in his queer crabbed handwriting. Andersen was a strange, peevish, vain, yet lovable creature. His vanity was perhaps his most salient characteristic. He was photographed scores of times in every position and costume, and he never wearied of new presentments of his strong but unhandsome features. His whims were legion.

He had a morbid horror of being buried alive and always set a slip of paper by his bedside bearing the words: "Segerskindöd" (I am in a trance). His hosts often found him an exacting guest, but his little failings were easily pardoned for the sake of his genius and his childlike nature.

Some extracts from an English letter written by Andersen to a friend in New York are quaint and interesting. The letter was probably revised by a friend, for Andersen's command of English was not so great. The letter is dated "Copenhagen, 24 of March 1868," and runs:

My Dear Sir! Excelent friend! You and your noble lady have not forgotten me, I am sure of that, and as one of my friends, Mr. Melchior, whose lovely family I visit nearly every day, is starting for New York. I can't omit to send you and yours my warmest compliments. I am, thank God, still well and youthful in mind. I have been travelling every year, in France, in Switzerland, Spain and Portugal to refresh my mind, thus refreshed return home bringing with me new tales and stories, that fly all over the world. God has been so good towards me, that I am obliged to put the question to myself; What have I done to deserve all the good that befalls me? You will no doubt have read in the New York Times some months ago, how beautiful my native town Odense has honoured me, by electing me to citizen of honour in the town. . . . Sending my kindest regard to you, to your lady, and to every one who has room in their heart for me, I remain, yours for ever,

"HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN."

"To Mr. Spring, Esq."

Jules Verne's first dramatic success, though not his first play, was the adaptation of Round the World in eighty days. Cadol proposed to adapt it, but could not make a piece that satisfied him. "There is only one man who might be able to do it," he said, "and that is d'Ennery." So d'Ennery was called in, and the drama was produced at the Porte Saint Martin in 1874. "Is it a success?" Jules Verne modestly ventured to ask. "A success? It is a fortune," was the reply. It had a run in fact of four hundred nights, was frequently revived, and earned in all about £120,000 for the theatre. Michel Strogoff, produced in 1880, was hardly less successful. The profits divided amounted to not less than £56,000.

The comparison, which has been drawn in these columns, between the newspapers and weekly reviews of the sixties and those of to-day reminds a correspondent of a stately essay on the Press, published in the Edinburgh Review in 1823. The writer is convinced that the historian of journalism has no cause to be laudator temporis acti. "Let any one," he says, "who may be disposed to disparage modern intellect and modern letters, look over a file of old newspapers . . . and compare the poverty, the meanness, the want of style and matter in their original paragraphs, with the amplitude, the strength, the point and terseness which characterise the leading journals of the day, and he will perhaps qualify the harshness of his censure." This was written five years before the birth of the Spectator, and the papers which aroused the essayist's enthusiasm must have been the Times, the defunct Morning Chronicle, and probably the Observer. His approval, however, is not unqualified, for in the same article he says, in a style which is worthy of the early quarterlies: "Literature was formerly a sweet heremitess who fed on the pure breath of fame in silence and solitude; modern literature, on the contrary is a gay coquette, fluttering, fickle and vain." The characteristics of the popular novel and the cheap press have evidently changed little in eighty years; but if by literature the writer means literary journalism, as he apparently does by the context, we fear that his ideal is impracticable. For the part of "heremitess" private means are essential.

A well-known novelist has recently protested against the inconsistency with which a daily paper treats his fiction alternately with scorn and praise. The matter may be explained as follows. While a novelist is building up his reputation, his works seldom fall in the way of the severest critics, who have a prejudice against what they are pleased to consider unprofitable reading, and are able, within limits, to pick and choose the books that they will review. Consequently these novels are allotted to the younger reviewers, who are often disposed to take Macaulay's genial view that there is no such thing as a bad novel, though some novels are better than o'hers. In due course, however, when the novelist has made something of a name, the critic with the higher standards does come to the consideration of his case—either because the reputation has aroused his curiosity, or because an editor has decided that the time has come for weighing that reputation in the balance. And then the case of the novelist is like that of a passman entering for one of the University prizes. New criteria are applied to his performances, and the consequences are not invariably agreeable to him.

A correspondent writes to a contemporary asking how it is that part of a story appearing in a volume by Wilkie Collins accurs also in "The Lazy Tom and Two Idle Apprentices" which—he goes on to say—is given in the Gadshill Edition of Charles Dickens's works without any word on the part of the editor, Mr. Andrew Lang, as to Dickens having had a collaborator. The "Lazy Tom" was certainly written in collaboration by Dickens and Wilkie Collins, and so successfully that Dickens himself said of one story in it:

"I think you would find it very difficult to say where I leave off and he comes in."

It would be impossible to separate the work of the two now, unless there should be a marked copy in existence in which one of them had already done so, and that is little likely. The descriptive passages, according to the late Mr. F. G. Kitton's "The Dickens Country" were mostly the work of Boz.

Yesterday, Friday, March 31, it was just half a century since the last of a remarkable family quartet passed away on the death of Charlotte Brontë—who had nine months earlier become Mrs. Nicholls. At the time of Charlotte Brontë's death it was fully recognised that she was one of those writers in whose personal history readers felt the greatest interest, and from that recognition sprang Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Brontë." The passing of fifty years seems to have produced something of a cumulative interest in the Haworth household, justifying a remark of Mrs. Gaskell's in an unpublished letter written when she was engaged upon the biography: "I am sure the more fully she, Charlotte Brontë, the friend, the daughter, the sister, the wife, is known—and known where need be in her own words—the more highly will she be appreciated." In proof of this it would be easy to refer to perhaps a dozen works on the Brontës—of whom Charlotte is the most widely remembered—and their writings, and the spring announcements show that "Charlotte Brontë" is to be added at an early date to the Literary Lives Series. It is, perhaps, worthy of note that the English Men of Letters Series yet lacks a volume on the Brontës.

Unquestionably the co-operative History is in the forefront of literary modes. Like other fashions, its contemporary popularity appears to have spread from Paris. Lord Acton's great undertaking was anticipated by Lavissee and Rambaud, and the monumental "History of France," which M. Lavissee is guiding to completion, is only now to have its English pendent in the 12-volume "History of England," entrusted by Messrs. Longman to the editorship of the Rev. R. L. Hunt and Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole. The United States keeps in the movement with the twenty-eight volumes to be issued under the care of Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard, under the catholic if cock-a-whoop title of "The American Nation." There is nothing in English at all comparable with the "History of French Literature," due to M. Petit de Julleville, or the "History of the French Language," preparing under the supervision of M. Brunetière, but doubtless embryo counterparts are already germinating at the back of some enterprising publisher's brain.

On the other hand the "Oxford History of Music" has no match in the continental tongues, and Professor Bury's "Cambridge Mediæval History" stands, albeit in nubibus, still unchallenged. The German mind which has made the word Handbuch synonymous with co-operation in magistral yet meticulous marshalling of minute detail has not yet turned wholeheartedly from medicine and science to history, and the most notable German undertaking of this kind in progress is the not very exhaustive "Handbuch der Geschichte der Medizin," which has passed into the editorship of Dr. Max Neuburger and Professor Julius Pagel. In looking at the recent development of the co-operative History one tendency seems discernible. Where the collaborator of a decade ago was invited to contribute a chapter, his successor has an increasing chance of obtaining the ampler dignity and freer range of a volume all to himself.

George Outram, who was born one hundred years ago, was "probably the first in Scotland, since the days of Sir Richard Maitland, to turn the dry processes of law to poetic account." The quality of his verse the English reader must take largely on trust, for Outram was a congener of Lord Glenlee, who, though a "philosophical and abstracted gentleman," never used an English word when a Scotch one could be got. This is to be regretted, in Outram's case, because in ingenuity and fecundity of rhyme he would not degrade the company of Calverley or Owen Seaman. His best known piece is "the Annuity," the woful tale of an old lady annuitant, whose persistence in life threatened to bring ruin to the astute lawyer who sold her the annuity. In despair he contemplates her removal:

"I'd try a shot—but whar's the mark?
Her vital parts are hid frae me;
Her backbone wanders through her sark
In an unkenn'd corkscrewity.
She's palsified, an' shakes her head
Sae fast about ye scarce can see't;
It's past the power o' steel or lead
To settle her annuity."

Outram was born at Glasgow, but was educated in Edinburgh and called to the Bar there in 1827. After two years' practice he became editor of the Glasgow Herald, a post which he retained till his death in 1856. By far the greater part of his verse is concerned with legal subjects, the terminology of Scots law seeming to have a perennial fascination for his peculiar dry humour. After the fashion of the time Outram's verses were handed round in manuscript among a circle of friends which included lawyers and men of letters in Glasgow and Edinburgh. His "Legal and other Lyrics" were first printed privately in 1851, and subsequently were published in 1874.

A few years ago a controversy was carried on in the ACADEMY with reference to the authorship of an epigram "On hearing a Lady praise a certain Rev. Doctor's eyes":

"I cannot praise the Doctor's eyes,
I never saw his glance divine;
He always shuts them when he prays,
But when he preaches he shuts mine."

The lines were attributed to various writers, including the late James Crossley, of Manchester. The authorship had, indeed, been discussed in the Manchester Quarterly in 1884, and it was alleged that Mr. Crossley had never claimed the lines, which were found in a pocket-book belonging to him. They appear, however, in Outram's "Legal Lyrics," and probably represent the only work from his pen in which readers South of the Tweed have an understanding interest.

All over Germany preparations are being made to celebrate in worthy fashion the centenary of Schiller's death, which occurs in the May of this year. The Swabian Schiller Society announce the issue of Schiller's Poems and Plays in one volume, bound, for the price of one shilling. The first and second editions to appear respectively at the end of April and end of June, and consisting of about 60,000 copies, are already sold out; a third edition will be published at Christmas, and it is expected that the number will then be brought up to 100,000.

The Society for the Diffusion of Popular Culture has bought 1000 copies of "Wallenstein" for distribution among communities possessing small funds. The Swiss cantons have ordered 194,000 copies of "Wilhelm Tell" for distribution in the schools. Schiller Exhibitions are to be held in May, at Weimar, Munich and Vienna. The objects will include autographs, portraits, first editions and manuscripts. A Schiller memorial is to be erected in Nuremberg, and an inhabitant of the city, who desires to remain anonymous, has contributed £1000 towards its erection.

The widow of the well-known and lately deceased Leipzig bookseller, Otto Dürr, has presented his valuable Schiller Library, containing first editions of Schiller's works and books on Schiller, in all besides pamphlets about 400 volumes, to the University of Leipzig. They will be kept together and shown in the same room as that in which the Hirzel Goethe Library is. Pastor Burggraf, of Bremen, is giving a series of sermons on Schiller in his Church. He considers Schiller to be much more than a creator of æsthetic value. His whole work tends to uphold and carry on what the Reformation did for religious Germany: "Luther and Schiller, although men of such different temperaments, are one thought in the plan of Providence."

There will shortly appear from the pen of Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, F.R.S., the distinguished surgeon, the volume entitled "Fish Eating and Leprosy," which was heralded in our columns some eighteen months ago. In it Mr. Hutchinson will maintain the thesis which he has defended contra mundum for some thirty years, that the consumption of fish is, in certain conditions, the cause of leprosy—a disease from which about one hundred thousand of our fellow subjects in India are always suffering. Another distinguished heterodox student, Dr. Charlton Bastian, F.R.S., is also about to undertake, for an important scientific series now being issued in America, a volume on the origin of life, concerning which he also has been at odds with the entire scientific world for some three decades. Whether these two workers be wrong or right in their respective contests with authority, their books will be welcome to those who agree with the dictum of Bacon that truth is more easily extricated from error than from confusion.

We notice with pleasure that the April number of the Neues Deutsches Rundschau, one of the most recent and most modern of German reviews, is announced to contain Mr. George Meredith's "Tales of Chloë," and "The Letters of Aubrey Beardsley." Even apart from its indication of the fact that Mr. Meredith is becoming more and more known in German literary circles, the inclusion of two translations from the English in one review is a welcome proof of the cosmopolitan spirit in literature.

It is interesting to notice, too, that the Browning Letters have recently been translated into German, that the Sonnets from the Portuguese are already in preparation, and that German versions of "Diana of the Crossways" and the "Egoist" have appeared within the last few months. Apropos of "Diana of the Crossways," the reader's undivided attention is ingeniously called to the theory which identified the heroine with Lady Melbourne by its express denial on the blank page opposite the first chapter. In "The Egoist," the celebrated "and mark you he has a leg," has proven quite an insurmountable obstacle to one of German reviewers, who cites it ironically as a specimen of the novelist's peculiar view. Would the reviewer, I wonder, change his mind, if told that the point of the epigram lies in the paradox of the dignity, in this special case, inherent in what is in most cases an essentially undignified portion of the anatomy? The fact, however, that an edition of all the most important works of Mr. Meredith is announced would tend to show that the Germans are making great strides in their appreciation of English literature. Having taken the preparatory steps with Browning and Mr. Meredith, perhaps they will eventually finish with Mr. Henry James. The thought of a German translation of "The Wings of the Dove" or "The Golden Bowl" is certainly stimulating.

In England, as recent events have once more shown, we confine our efforts to be rid of the dramatic censorship to expressions of opinion in the press. In Germany they adopt more drastic measures. About two years ago a powerful agitation against the Prussian censorship came to a head. A representative meeting held under the auspices of several members of the Reichstag and such well-known literary figures as Sudermann, Fulda and Von Liszt resulted in the unanimous condemnation of the institution and the presentation of a petition to the Reichstag. The Report of the committee appointed to investigate the matter has quite recently been published.

It was perhaps only to be expected in so bureaucratic and conservative a State as Prussia that they should declare it inadvisable to alter the existing system. A further term of life is thereby given to a very pretty paradox; for each of the different States composing the German confederacy has its own separate censorship, so that a play prohibited in Berlin or Leipzig may be performed with impunity in Cologne or Stettin. In Würtemberg and Hamburg the censorship is non-existent, and the stage is as free as the press.

A propos of the rights and wrongs of the question the following quotation from the resolution passed at the meeting held on March 8, 1903, is illuminating: "The stage censorship shields those managers who endeavour to make capital out of the lowness of the public taste. If a play has once been passed by the censor, the manager is ipso facto exempt from all prosecution in the matter. The censorship in fact is the guardian not of morality but of immorality. What happens every day? On the one hand risqué importations from France are given the full official sanction, while on the other the public performance is prohibited of plays like Tolstoy's Powers of Darkness, Björnson's Beyond our Strength and Hauptmann's Weavers. It is not immorality which shocks the susceptibilities of the censor but that spirit of aspiration which is the result of deep moral emotion." The agitation may no doubt have failed to accomplish all that it would have desired, but that it has none the less borne fruit is evidenced by the fact that the censorial ban has been removed from Hauptmann's Weavers.

The news that the Committee of Ministers at Saint Petersburg has decided to abolish the existing regulations against the publication of the Bible in the Ruthenian (Little Russian) language will interest those who are acquainted with Russian ecclesiastical arrangements. There is no difficulty in Russia in obtaining a Bible, and copies of the New Testament lie on the stalls that so often stand outside the monasteries. Nor are any particular difficulties thrown in the way of the British Bible Society, which circulates, or is about to circulate, copies of the Scriptures in Lettish, Russian, Finnish, and Georgian. But according to present arrangements only songs and folklore may be published in Little Russian. The hopelessness of the struggle, as far as the Russian Government is concerned, is obvious when we reflect that there are seven million Ruthenians in Austria, at liberty to print and speak what they please.

A contemporary lately gave some information concerning the unpublished fragments which will be included in M. Paul Meurice's definitive edition of the complete works of Victor Hugo. We may add that there is enough unpublished matter to fill four unpublished volumes; and that there is to be subjoined to each poem, romance, or play, a note upon its reception by the contemporary Press, with copious extracts from the contemporary reviews. We have once seen an edition of Byron with similar appendices, but the principle might well be applied in new editions of others of the masters. Some of the reviews which could be reproduced in such a case are of the most entertaining character. Of Gray's Elegy, for instance, the contemporary reviewer wrote: "The excellence of this little piece amply compensates for its lack of quantity." That and nothing more. Of "In Memoriam" again one contemporary estimate was to the effect that its "simple but touching verses" were evidently inspired by "the full heart of the widow of a military man"; while the publication of "Amelia" elicited from Griffiths of the Monthly Review—an indignant denunciation of that "flood of novels, tales, romances, and other monsters of the imagination, imitated from the French, whose literary levity we have not been ashamed to adopt."

LITERATURE

WIT AND FASHION

Notes from a Diary, 1896 to January 1901. By the Right Honourable Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF. Two volumes. (Murray, 18s.)

THESE two volumes, ending as they do with the beginning of the reign of Edward VII., bring to a close the author's entertaining series of notes on his time. Though the practice of jotting down for immediate publication the conversations heard in private circles is not wholly to be admired, the result before us justifies what has been done. The author has lived among the most brilliant men of his day, but has retailed only what is unobjectionable in their conversation. His sympathies are very wide and yield him equal delight in a good story, a new scientific fact, and a fine piece of poetry. His is a tale mostly of visits and dinners and good stories. We open the book at random and come upon this:

"An officer at Aldershot, who was too fond of wine, at last attracted the unfavourable notice of the authorities and was put upon his trial. Among the witnesses called for the defence was his soldier servant, who deposed that upon a particular evening he had come in quite sober. On cross-examination the man was asked whether his master had said anything to him after he came in. 'Yes,' he replied; 'he told me to call him early.' 'To call him early,' said the President; 'why was that; he had not to go to parade next morning? Did he give any reason?' 'Yes,' answered the witness, 'he said that he was to be Queen of the May.'"

Here naturally we are inclined to pay every attention to the literary reminiscences of Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff. They are those of one scarcely of the literary circles, but still intimate with many celebrities. However, he picks up the oddest little facts, as witness the following:

"Murray told us that there was an English poet for whom no fount of type sufficed, a necessary preliminary to reprinting his works being largely to reinforce the 'l's' and 'v's.' This was Tennyson, and the cause was the constant recurrence of the word 'love' in his writings."

This reminds us distantly of the tale told sarcastically about James Mill, that his autobiography necessitated the casting of a new fount of capital I's. The following story about Southey is not new to us, but is so characteristic of Rogers that we cannot forbear printing it:

"Coleridge told me that, after the death of Southey, a committee assembled at his father's, Sir John Coleridge's, house to discuss the best way of doing honour to the poet's memory, and he, then a very young man, was appointed to act as secretary. A number of highly distinguished persons being assembled, there was a knock at the door, old Mr. Rogers was ushered in, and received, of course, with much respect. Just as business was about to commence the new arrival said, 'I once heard the Duke of Wellington speak of Mr. Southey.' 'Oh,' said some one, 'what did the Duke say of Mr. Southey?' 'The Duke said,' answered Rogers, 'I don't think much of Mr. Southey,' and with this encouraging introduction the proceedings of the committee began."

But our author has an ear for pregnant criticism, as well as for amusing anecdotes. Here is a saying from the mouth of William Watson, the poet, over which critics may ponder: "Keats, admirable as was some of his work, was becoming decadent before he died, while Shelley was crescent to the end." The following is a really delightful account of a typical lecture by Ruskin:

"The subject was Sandro Botticelli. The lecturer began by a few words about that painter. Presently, however, he said: 'Before I can make you understand Sandro Botticelli, you must understand Fra Angelico and the monastic system of the Middle Ages,' but ere long he exclaimed: 'Yet what is the good of talking to you about Fra Angelico and the monastic system of the Middle Ages? All your sons have latch-keys'; and the rest of the discourse was devoted to that subject."

Some of the most agreeable passages in the diary are those describing how the writer lighted on treasures in the way of verse. As examples one might quote the following. Miss Soulsby sent him this delicious extract from Ben Jonson:

"Fair and witty,
Savouring more of Court than City,
A little proud, but full of pity."

Lady Gregory found and sent the following very fine translation of a well-known passage in Moschus. He pointed out, however, that the word "scented" did not represent the Greek properly, yet this is scarcely a flaw in a rendering otherwise exquisitely beautiful:

"Alas, alas, when mallows die, when winter tempests kill
The light-leaved tender parsley and the curly scented dill,
They die, and come to life again and bloom each following year.
But we who are the lords of all, we men of wisdom clear,
So strong and great and mighty, in dying once die out,
And lie for ever in the ground, stark, quiet, wrapped about
With sleep that hath no waking up."

Sir Mountstuart ranges far and wide for his matter, and many little jokes crop up most unexpectedly, as for example this:

"Did I record an amusing story which Miss Sorabji sent me from India? Over a baker's shop in Poona she saw an inscription: 'Best English Loafer to His Excellency.'"

Here is a little budget of good things which are set down at random:

"Mr. Nigel Combe, who is staying with us, told me that some one having said of a rather unpopular person, 'But surely Mr. — is at least a cultured man,' received the reply, 'Manured.' Very good was the schoolboy's answer, which he reported as having been actually made when he was at Charterhouse: "'What are the Chiltern Hundreds?' 'Small animals which infest cheeses in great numbers.' Hardly less so was a definition of a cherub as an 'immoral object of strange shape.'"

Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff tells us in his preface that it is with deliberation that he has avoided the more serious interests of his life, which are politics and administration; and no doubt it would have been very imprudent to deal intimately with these topics in view of the fact that it must have been impossible to avoid mentioning men who are living and working to-day. Thus he seems to skim more lightly over the surface of life than is the case in actual fact. However, there are moments when he throws a curious sidelight on political movements, as for example in the amusing anecdote which we quote:

"Lord Balfour mentioned that when the Gladstonian peers deserted their benches in a body, rather than listen to the attack on them made by the Duke of Argyll, Lord Rosebery, speaking of their small number, said:

'Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto.'

"'He has completely mistaken,' said Lord Denman, 'the nature of the charge against them. It is just that they were not apparent.'"

Very amusing, too, is the remark of Miss Elliot about Mr. Gladstone; though it is too casual to be actually malicious, it leaves something for the great statesmen in the University of Oxford to divide between them. She said that Prince Albert had once said to Lord Russell:

"Mr. Gladstone is a very clever man, and as he was educated at Oxford he is able to believe anything he chooses."

We might write a great deal more about these very entertaining volumes and fill many pages with quotations from them, but must leave the reader to discover that pleasure for himself. Ages hence these will be extremely valuable documents, since they paint the manners of the time more graphically than any novelist has been able to do. They are exclusively concerned with the sunny side of life, and give only an occasional hint of the shadows that fell across the writer as they fall across every man; but for that very reason they are the more delightful to read and none the less valuable for purposes of reference.

SHAKESPEARE

Shakespeare's Marriage: His Departure from Stratford and other incidents in his Life. By JOSEPH WILLIAM GRAY. (Chapman and Hall, 10s. 6d. net.)

MR. GRAY endeavours at great length, and with infinite pains, to disperse the clouds that hang about our knowledge of the precise details of Shakespeare's marriage. He has succeeded, it must be admitted, in adding (to use his own words) "to the great mass of inference and assumption to which few writers on the incidents of the poet's life avoid making a contribution." Yet though he has failed to discover any single new and indisputable fact in the poet's biography, his careful research into the history of the marriage ceremonies of Shakespeare's days refutes many theories which have enjoyed considerable vogue. Mr. Gray has investigated the sixteenth-century records of the Diocesan Registry at Worcester with greater industry than any predecessor, and he has proved clearly that the "bond against impediments" which was deposited there on the eve of Shakespeare's marriage and is still preserved there conforms in all the essentials with the ordinary practice of the time. The irregularities which had been detected in the document are for the most part imaginary.

It will be remembered by students of Shakespeare's biography that according to the Bishop's Register, a licence was issued for the marriage of William Shakespeare and Anne Whateley of Temple Grafton. On the day before, the "bond against impediments" was signed, by way of preliminary to Shakespeare's marriage. This Whateley entry has puzzled many biographers of Shakespeare. On the strength of it, some have contended that Shakespeare's wife was not the Anne Hathaway of general acceptance, but this Anne Whateley of Temple Grafton. Mr. Gray gives some interesting examples of the extraordinary carelessness with which the names of the parties, to whom marriage licences were granted, were entered in the Registers of the Bishops of Worcester at the date in question: within a few months of Shakespeare's marriage "Joan Barbar" the bride of one John Baker, was miswritten by the clerk "Joan Baker;" while two bridegrooms, "Robert Bradeley" and "Humfrey Elcock" were disguised in the Register respectively as "Robert Darby" and "Humfrey Edgock." Mr. Gray suggests that the "Anne Whateley" entry is an irrelevant misdescription of the poet's wife. He ingeniously points out that on the very date that Shakespeare's application for a marriage licence was under the consideration of the Bishop's officials, one William Whateley, vicar of Crowle, was a suitor on other business in the Bishop's consistory court, and was already familiarly known to the Bishop's officials. The careless scribe was thus led by a freak of the pen to enter the name of Whateley in a wrong place. One may regret that Mr. Gray's industry has not produced surer results, but such as they are, they repay the attention of readers or antiquarian taste. At the same time it is difficult to avoid the depressing conclusion that the likelihood of adding to our existing stock of definite information on the points immediately at issue is very small.

Apart from the vexed question connected with Shakespeare's marriage, Mr. Gray prints much information illustrative of Shakespeare's biography, most of which, although not all, is accessible in other collections of Shakespeareana. He seems to be well acquainted with recent Shakespearean literature, and nothing of importance to his subject that has been published in the last few years appears to have escaped him. He may be congratulated on having exhumed for the first time from a manuscript commonplace book in the Diocesan Registry at Worcester (belonging to the end of the seventeenth century) some hitherto unprinted verses which make mention of "famous Shakespeare," and report an incident in Ben Jonson's career which is unknown to his biographers. The extract runs:

"Ben Johnson traveling from London to Oxford upon a Valentine's day, meets an Highwayman.

"BEN JOHNSON. Flee hence or by thy Coat of Steele
I'll make thy heart my brassen bullet feele.
And send that thrice as theevish soule of thine
To Hell to be the Devell's valentine.

Reply by y^e Hman.

"ROBBER. Art thou great Ben or y^e revived ghost
Of famous Shakspeare or some drunken host
That being tipsy with thy muddy beer
Dost think thy rhyme shall dawnt my soule with feare.
Know this base slave that I am one of those
Can take a purse as well in verse as proes
And w^h thou art dead wright this upon thy herse
Here ly's a Poet y^t was robb'd in verse."

JOHN KNOX

John Knox. By the Rev. D. MACMILLAN, M.A. (Melrose, 3s. 6d. net.)

The History of the Reformation of Religion in Scotland. By JOHN KNOX. Revised and Edited by CUTHBERT LENNOX. (Melrose, 4s. 6d. net.)

WHETHER the year 1905 is the fourth centenary of the birth of John Knox, or whether he was born sometime in 1513-15, is quite uncertain. Mr. Macmillan defends the former date, his arguments leave the question open. In any case this year has seen several little books on Knox, and will see more. Mr. Macmillan's is "popular." "The popular judgment of the country has been steadily cast against" Cardinal Beaton, he says truly. The popular judgment is nourished on popular books, and has no relation to an historical judgment. The Cardinal "earned undying obloquy by his murder of George Wishart," says Mr. Macmillan. If the nobles had yielded to the preachers after the Reformation, and had put Catholics to death, would Mr. Macmillan call the executions "murders?" If he did, he would greatly err, the law doomed Catholics to death. In his history, Mr. Macmillan reproduces Knox's account of the siege of St. Andrew's Castle (1547) though it is notoriously erroneous. On the kneeling controversy in England (1552), he tells us, truly, that Knox succeeded in getting "the Black Rubric" introduced. He does not tell us that Knox promised to kneel (at the Holy Communion) on certain conditions, and that he got his conditions, but did not keep his promise. He mentions the lingering love of confession: this will account for such a confidence as the following on the part of Knox to Mrs. Bowes: "Call to mind what I did standing at a cupboard in Berwick. In very deed I thought that no creature had been tempted as I was." This suggests that Knox was tempted to steal jam out of the cupboard, or to kiss Mrs. Bowes! The context, not usually quoted, disproves these romantic hypotheses. Of a pamphlet to Knox, we read that "it may appear rough and harsh, but by the men of his day it would not be characterised in that fashion." As a matter of fact it was "characterised" much more severely by the men of his day," as well it might, for it contained incitement to assassination. Reading Mr. Macmillan's account of the famous theological supper at Erskine of Dun's, no mortal could guess at the real gist of the matter, still less imagine that Knox, in 1568, employed, against the English dissenting Puritans, the very argument from St. Paul's conduct at the Temple in Jerusalem, which he had rejected at Edinburgh, as doubting whether St. Paul and St. James were "inspired" in their behaviour. It is true that Knox, as regards his political views, was "a long way ahead of the man of Geneva," Calvin. He was as far ahead of Calvin, in theory, as the murderers of the Grand Duke Sergius. Any godly person, according to Knox, might kill a Catholic if he had an opportunity. Yet Mr. Macmillan writes that Knox "never encouraged bloodshed." Can Mr. Macmillan have read Knox's "Appellation" (Laing's "Knox," vol. iv. p. 501)? He mentions the work, but does not cite the passage. He does not quote Calvin's words about Knox's "First Blast," and so on. We neither see the real Knox nor hear the censures of him pronounced by the leaders of the Genevan Church; censures of Knox's "reckless arrogance" (Calvin) and "fury" (François Morel). If the English public had been foolish enough to accept and act on the doctrine of Knox's "First Blast," the result would have been a revival of the Wars of the Roses. The pamphlet was, in fact, very "objectionable," as Mr. Macmillan says of something else. Mr. Macmillan naturally accepts Knox's story (given in two versions) of the perfidy of Mary of Guise when she summoned the preachers for May 10, 1554. No other contemporary writer appears to hint at any treachery in the matter; the charge is not in Croft's letter, a week later, nor in "The Historie of the Estate of Scotland," nor, of course, in Lesley's History. As to the wrecking of churches and monasteries at Perth, Knox tells his friend, Mr. Locke, that "the brethren" did the deed: in his History, having the fear of Calvin before his eyes, he throws all the blame on the mob, "the rascal multitude." Mr. Macmillan does not give both versions, yet he knows both, for he has used Mr. MacCunn's admirable brief "Life" of the Reformer. Mr. Macmillan (p. 138) declares that the leaders of the Revolution "clearly aimed at the overthrow of her"—the Regent's—"Government." On page 147 he avers that the Regent "had been busy poisoning all whom it might concern" (sic), "hinting that it was Rebellion, and not Reformation, that they were contemplating." Yet Mr. Macmillan says himself that they "clearly aimed at the overthrow of the Government." Naturally Mr. Macmillan does not tell us that, in Perth, all priests who celebrated mass were doomed to die, by Knox's party. Knox tells Mr. Locke, but keeps the fact out of his History. Of Knox's amazing conduct in giving to England a thoroughly false account of the terms of treaty of July 24, 1559, and of his attempts to conceal the truth in his History, Mr. Macmillan does not say one word. He writes (p. 160) that Cecil would not "endanger the relation of France and England," by granting an interview to Knox. Cecil arranged an interview, but Knox was delayed by events. ("Knox," vol. ii. p. 32.) Mr. Macmillan knows the facts (p. 162). He defends the frank falsehood of the Reformer's proclamation that they deposed the Regent by the authority of her daughter the Queen. He does not add that they forged the Great Seal, and used the forgery to accredit their proclamations and letters. Of Knox's perpetual insinuations against the personal chastity of the Regent, things on the lowest level of halfpenny "society journalism," not a hint is given. The occasion of Mary's giving a dance, against which Knox preached, was apparently taken to have been the massacre of Vassy (March 1, 1562). This is impossible: the dance was given in December and cannot be connected with any news from France. To summon his armed multitude to menace justice at a trial, as Knox did, "was only an assertion of the liberty of the Church" (p. 264). It was an ecclesiastical sanction of Scottish anarchy.

But criticism is thrown away on history as written by Mr. Macmillan, without a reference to authorities. For style we may cite, "Lethington was sitting on the fence and riding for a fall"! "The Abbot's giving himself away," was, in fact, the adoption, by the Abbot, of an opinion of St. Jerome.

There is a brief introduction by the Very Rev. Principal Story. If the Principal has read the book he ought to know that Knox did not "come in 1560 from Geneva."

Mr. Cuthbert Lennox has "revised and edited"—and cut down and expurgated—Knox's "History of the Reformation," which he calls "an honest and truthful record." By dropping essential passages, as on page 170, the darkness that envelops the record is made more than Egyptian at this point. Where Knox says that after a sermon preached by himself against Mary of Guise, "began hir bellie and lothsome leggis to swell," (she had dropsy, and Knox's party had intercepted her letter announcing the act to d'Oysel) Mr. Lennox prints, "a few days thereafter the Queen Regent was smitten by disease." She had been smitten before: Knox prophesied after the event, and with a brutality of language that Mr. Lennox dares not reproduce. The language of the Reformer is modernised throughout. "Here we have an inspired record of the dealings of God with men," cries Mr. Lennox. "The spirit was a little foul-mouthed," as some one said of the "inspirational discourse" by James I. and VI.

THESE TWO

The Golden Ass of Apuleius. Translated by FRANCIS D. BYRNE. (The Imperial Press.)

THE work called "Metamorphoses" by its author, but better known as "The Golden Ass," is redeemed only by the beautiful fairy tale of "Cupid and Psyche," which, quite charming in itself, is introduced very inartistically into "The Golden Ass," indeed, dragged in by the head and shoulders, and put into the mouth of an illiterate old hag in a cave of robbers. "The Golden Ass" was written in the reign of Trojan about the same time as "Lucius or the Ass," ascribed, with no certainty, to Lucian. The two tales, no doubt, have a common source: and we are told that one Lucius of Patrae in Achaia composed a book of metamorphoses which may have been used by both the Greek and the Latin writer. The Greek tale is, in our judgment, much the better of the two, if we leave out of consideration the episode of Cupid and Psyche, which does not appear in the Greek. The Latin is much longer, and is embarrassed by subsidiary stories interwoven after the fashion of The Arabian Nights—a feature which renders the reading of the Greek novelists very confusing, but from which "The Ass" of Lucian is free. Nothing could be clumsier than the way in which Apuleius permits himself a long digression to tell the history of the woman who was condemned to be thrown to the wild beasts, but whose sentence was commuted to a public exhibition with the Ass as partner. The monotonous episodes illustrating the sufferings of the Ass are tiresome, and the style is tortuous and affected, showing a remarkable tendency to revert to the sermo vulgaris of the early Latin comic drama.

The Greek tale is admirably translated in the series issued by the Council of the Athenian Society, 1895-1898. We cannot say as much for the translator of Apuleius. Words of so little authority as "burgling" ought not to be introduced unless the whole rendering is deliberately couched in the diction of slang; and ill-formed words like "unreliable" ought to be avoided. "You rascally, perjured individual" (p. 425) is very stilted; and the husband did not "pray for his wife's health" (429) when she sneezed. "Replete with every virtue" (443) is, to say the least, journalese; and "the affair demands that I should explain" (438) as well as "promised everything in length and breadth" (504) certainly suggests Latin rather than English. Again, what is the meaning of "in rite lymphatic" (182)? And where is the joke for an English reader in:

"Do you know a man called Milo, one of the leading men?" She smiled. "'It's true,' she said, 'you can call him a leading man, for he lives outside the whole city in the suburb.'"

"Jokes apart, mother dear," I said, "'&c. (p. 27.)"

The translator is not sufficiently equipped for his task either in English or classics. "The Metamorphoses were composed" is bad English, unless we are to say "The Two Gentlemen of Verona are inferior to As you like it." "Villanious" (431) is probably a misprint, and so is inspirata for insperata (xxiii.); but can "fratricide" be used of the murder of a sister, as on p. 218? This, too, is very slipshod:

"Her hair was grey and dishevelled and all dirty from the ashes with which they were besprinkled, while a great part of it." &c.

We meet (468) a "lad's" forehead wrinkled with "a senile care." The notes are very poor, and have impossible accentuation such as καίλας, ἑρως, and ἄημος "people" accentuated ἄημος which means "fat."

Mr. Byrne professes to eschew expurgation, but in the very objectionable passages he gives only the original Latin (with misprints or mistakes like appliciore for applicitiore). The writer of the Latin tale was withheld only by lack of skill from rivalling the grossness of the Greek. He was as gross as his limited literary capacities allowed him to be. It seems to us absurd to look for an allegory or moral lesson in such a work. Even "Cupid and Psyche" seems to us to be no more than a romance. It would be a lucky find if some papyrus should yield up to us the Greek original of that charming tale.

THE TYRANNY OF THE THESIS

N. Hawthorne: Sa Vie et son Œuvre. Thèse pour le doctorat soutenue devant la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Paris. Par L. DHALEINE, Agrégé de l'Université. (Hachette.)

THE tyranny of the thesis in the continental universities is a subject which invites remark. Broadly speaking, the condition of things is this: that, in order to profess and call himself doctor, a man must write a prodigiously long book which no one will ever want to read, and publish it in a "format" deterrent to any reader who may accidentally present himself. The pity is the greater because it very often happens that good work has gone to the making of such a book, and that the book might even have been good as a whole if it had not been written for the satisfaction of examiners. A good case in point was the thesis lately written on Sainte-Beuve by Professor Michaud of the University of Fribourg. There was a pearl in that oyster, though the shell was disproportionately large. One could extract the pearl and make an admirable and readable article for a high-class magazine. The thing was done by more than one popular writer at the time of the Sainte-Beuve centenary. But even in that exceptional thesis the distinguishing vices of the thesis were exhibited. The writer quite obviously wrote with one eye on his subject and the other on his examiners. He seemed afraid to be amused, lest the examiners should think that he was laughing at them, or that he despised his task. He crowded his canvas with superfluous details for fear lest some well-informed pedant among them should suppose him to be ignorant of any fact, however unimportant, which he neglected to mention. And that is what always happens and is, in the circumstances, bound to happen. The necessity of pedantry kills the sense of humour. The obvious is elaborated. Theses are "biblia abiblia" in consequence.

The general includes the particular, and M. Dhaleine's thesis on "N. Hawthorne" has already been reviewed by implication. It is accurate and sufficiently sagacious. No Board of Examiners could conceivably have ploughed the author; but no reader can conceivably have any use for his book, which reminds one of the orator at the debating society who explained, at great length, that he was in agreement with all the remarks of all the previous speakers. Mr. Henry James's little monograph on the same subject is worth the whole of it, though if that delightful piece of personal criticism had been presented as a "thesis sustained for the doctorate," the author would very likely have been "referred to his studies" by the guardians of the Academic gate. Certainly there is no value to be attached, at this time of day, to M. Dhaleine's recitation of familiar biographical facts, or to his laborious progress through the plots of everything that Hawthorne wrote from "Twice-told Tales" to "The Marble Faun." All that is really valuable in his work is concentrated in the short chapters on Transcendentalism and the Transcendentalists. Here at any rate was something worth explaining—especially to Americans, who are so apt to mistake words for things and to imagine that the one thing needful in order to define a man's philosophical position is to pin a label on his coat. They currently talk of the Transcendentalists in the same light and airy fashion in which they talk of the Mugwumps and the Copperheads. They know whom the word denotes—Emerson, Thoreau, Margaret Fuller, and the Concord group generally; but if you question them as to its connotation you will have to pause for a reply. M. Dhaleine at any rate brings them back to that. He shows how the real Transcendentalism arose when Hume's scepticism awoke Kant from his dogmatic slumbers, and called forth the system which began with Space and Time as "forms" of the human intelligence, and ended with the Practical Reason and the Categorical Imperative. He shows also how this system was developed in different directions by Schleiermacher, Fichte, and Schelling, and he finally shows how little the Concord Transcendentalists had to do with it in any of its developments. They were Transcendentalists in the sense of not being Positivists, but hardly in any other sense. Certainly they stood in no conscious and definable relation to the Kantian or any other school of thought. They had thought nothing out as thinking is understood in Europe. Their philosophic standpoint varied from day to day. Emerson's philosophic standpoint often varied from sentence to sentence in a single essay or lecture. Their chief philosophic asset was well described by one of themselves as a nebulous "feeling about the Infinite." It is impossible to say whether, on the balance, they were Pantheists or Theists; while they vaguely and conjecturally anticipated the doctrines alike of Charles Darwin and of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. Excellent people who not only meant well but served the world well by their devotion to ideals and their opposition to the coarser kind of American materialism; but people who would never have been called Transcendentalists if they had been born anywhere but in a nation of new journalists who require every man to bear a label for the convenience of the sub-editors in charge of the newspaper headlines.

On this branch of the subject M. Dhaleine writes well and lucidly, though we have taken the liberty of supplementing and illustrating his conclusions. But it is only a small branch of a great subject, and not the most important branch of it, seeing that Hawthorne, looking back upon his relations with the Transcendentalists at Brook Farm, remarked pertinently that "the real Me was never a member of the community." The chapter dealing with it may perhaps be described as a rich "pocket" in a gold mine mostly of low grade ore; though the general poverty of the lode is the fault not so much of the writer as of the conditions in which he wrote. Coming under the tyranny of the thesis, he was conscientiously submissive. They asked him to add to the long list of "biblia abiblia" and he did so. That is the conclusion of the whole matter—a conclusion which makes one desiderate some device for the awarding of the Doctorate of Letters less wasteful of the valuable time of the postulants.

A SCHOLAR AMONG BIRDS

Bird Life and Bird Lore. By R. BOSWORTH SMITH. (Murray, 10s. 6d. net.)

THOUGH in the last resort the unfailing charm of Gilbert White's letters about his Hampshire parish escapes critical analysis, more than to any other single quality it is probably due to the fact that he writes always as a scholar and a humanist, and thus puts himself unfailingly in touch with observant and cultivated minds, whatever their special bent or interest. The collection of articles and studies which Mr. Bosworth Smith has recast and republished in the present book is distinguished in its degree by the same breadth and sureness of appeal, which marks only a small proportion of the volumes on bird and animal life which have lately been appearing in such numbers. Another of this small company of scholarly naturalists, Mr. Warde Fowler (whose name, by the way, Mr. Bosworth Smith honours but mis-spells) has suggestively described all field ornithology as essentially scholarship, in its unresting conjunction and comparison of generalised principles with new and accurate observation. True though this is in one sense, it is not given to every good naturalist to write books about birds that can pretend to rank as scholarly literature, and it is because many, at any rate, of Mr. Bosworth Smith's bird-studies are distinguished in this way that they are sure of a wide welcome and esteem.

The writer devotes a special chapter in his study of the Raven to "the thoughts which men have had about him and the influence which he has, in turn, had over them"; but this point of view is largely characteristic of the whole book, and it adds precisely that touch of interest which is often somewhat lacking in books devoted purely to field natural history. He was fortunate enough, in his Dorsetshire home and elsewhere, to become acquainted very early in life with the raven, the "King of birds," as he claims him to be, when he still nested in English inland districts; and the acquaintance begun in the great fir-clump on Badbury Rings has matured into a lifelong interest and friendship. Perhaps no man can ever become a true lover of birds unless he learns to know them as a boy, and in after years can feel with Wordsworth as he writes in his ode, "To the Cuckoo":

"And I can listen to thee yet
And lie upon the plain,
And listen, till I do beget
That golden time again."

At any rate, the writer of these studies confesses that "the heart of my book, the germ from which most of it has been developed," is to be found in the chapter describing his early home, and it is this lifelong continuity and fixity of interest which makes the many allusions to the raven, or the various species of owls, gathered from a wide field of literature and history, to appear not mere extraneous and tiresome tags, but a ripe and inherent part of the whole presentment. Occasionally, but only occasionally, Mr. Bosworth Smith, in his interpretation of literary passages, seems to fall into that pedantic class of error which is the outcome of attaching excessive weight to some one small resemblance or difference, to the neglect of a sane general estimate. Quoting Nash's poem on Spring, familiar to most readers of the "Golden Treasury," he expresses doubt as to what bird is indicated by the mysterious sound "pee-wee" in the refrain:

"Cuckoo, jug-jug, pee-wee, to-witta-woo," and rejects the obvious view that it is the cry of the peewit in favour of the tentative opinion that it is "the familiar note of the young brown owl." The cry of the young owls can hardly have been so familiar and typical a sound of spring to any poet as to lead him to include it in a list of the four commonest notes—"In every street these tunes our ears do greet." In much the same way, he says of Tennyson's "sea-blue bird of March" (that celebrated crux, till Sir Herbert Maxwell published the poet's own statement that he meant the kingfisher):

It is not a happy characterisation, for so close an observer of birds as Tennyson, of the English kingfisher. The kingfisher can hardly be said to be 'sea-blue'; it never 'flits' from bush to bush, but always dashes like an arrow down-stream; and it is, in no special sense, the 'bird of March.'"

There is no need to dispute about the kingfisher's precise tint of blue, though Alcman's original epithet ἀλιπόρφυρος ought to be allowed some weight; but nothing could be more true to life of the kingfisher than to describe it as flitting "underneath" the naked thorn-bushes fringing the bank; while it is in March, when the frosts lose their power, that it often returns to its summer haunts on the smaller streams. These points, however, are in any case but slight blemishes in a well-written and attractive book, of which the only material demerit is the rather patchy and uneven effect almost inseparable from volumes made up of papers originally published at divers times and in divers manners; though even this defect has been minimised by careful revision. The illustrations are excellent, and the shape, print, and paper all that could be wished.

DR. OPIMIAN—WITH A DIFFERENCE

Reminiscences of a Radical Parson. By Rev. W. TUCKWELL, M.A. (Cassell, 9s. net.)

THOUGH not to be compared with his delightful "Reminiscences of Oxford," one of the best books of the kind that has ever been published, Mr. Tuckwell's latest volume is full of entertainment. With much of it as the expression of vigorous party polemics we have nothing to do here; rather are we concerned with the humours and the pathos of Mr. Tuckwell's political tours, and the stories he has to tell of the famous or curious personalities encountered in his wanderings. All unconsciously the Radical parson reveals to us in this book a very charming and thoroughly human personality. A College don, a schoolmaster, and then, in later years, the incumbent of a College living, Mr. Tuckwell first attracted public attention by his unconventional methods of working his parish. He organised dances for the lads and lasses, and was amply rewarded by a rustic criticism, "Tell 'ee, Passon, this be better foon than getting tight"; and he went on to al fresco services which often included a whole Dissenting congregation led by its minister. But he was getting on in years before he delivered his first political speech, though he took to the work so readily that he had delivered nearly a thousand orations before he decided to retire. A lofty ideal of politics as the science of human happiness he has always held, his object being to improve the social conditions of the proletariat, especially the agricultural labourer. After hearing one of his speeches a shrewd north-countryman observed that Mr. Tuckwell would never be a bishop, and indeed he does not shrink from Disestablishment, quoting Charles Buller's bitterly ironical saying: "For heaven's sake do not destroy the Established Church; it is the only thing that stands between us and Christianity." Mr. Tuckwell has a pleasant habit of quotation, especially from Horace and Virgil. Thus, in recording his entertainment at a large political dinner-party at Cardiff, he says, "They greeted me with wild flattery. 'Very excellent things are spoken of thee,' said a portly alderman, who sat opposite. He took his wine freely, suggesting at last that we should 'drop the blooming meeting, and stick to the mayor's port.' 'Fortiter occupa portum,' I quoted; but there was no scholar to pick up my pearl." But he does not often take such liberties with the classics. Once Sir William Harcourt suddenly asked him what Dr. Arnold had died of, and when he said "From angina pectoris," Sir William corrected him; "No," he said, "from angina pectoris." Mr. Tuckwell retorted by criticising the word "amabil-issimus," which occurs on the monument of Sir William's grandfather in York Minster. Years afterwards Sir William wrote to Mr. Tuckwell in great triumph to say that he had found the word in Cicero!

Mr. Tuckwell, who contributed to the Spectator for some years, draws an interesting picture of Hutton, with whom, however, he was hardly in sympathy. Hutton met his contributor one day in Trafalgar Square, and, to the astonishment of the passers-by, proceeded to propound in vociferant tones the worthlessness of an historic Christ unless based on a metaphysical logos. We have an extraordinary picture of Lady Beaconsfield tasting Trinity audit ale within a day or two of her death. "She was a bright creature," said Dizzy after her death to an old friend; "she had no fears for the future, and no knowledge of the past; she used to tell me that she never could remember whether the Greeks or Romans came first."

Mr. Tuckwell used to stay in the palaces of the great, as well as in tumble-down insanitary cottages, and he gives a delightful vignette of a bookish old squire, who remembered that when Mr. Pickwick—who of course came out in parts—was committed to the Fleet, Charles Buller gravely consulted Sir William Follett how he could be got out again. The great lawyer said it was impossible, and Buller warned Dickens, who responded cheerily, "He will come out all the same, you'll see." Very different was another entertainer, a mighty capitalist, evidently none other than Jabez Balfour, whose tenants were more than contented and loved him as a father. Mr. Tuckwell owes to New College his appreciation of the difference between good wine and bad, and he quaintly complains that many of his earnest Liberal entertainers found no place for wine at all in their menus. He recalls Dr. Whewell's apology for his nightly glass of audit ale: "I think that when one takes water so much of the system is poorly occupied." Of course there are many political reminiscences of Gladstone, and indeed of many other famous men, to which we can do no more than allude. The book possesses an index which contains misprints.

THE LION RAMPANT

The Scots Peerage. Edited by the Lord Lyon King of Arms. Vol. II. (David Douglas, 25s. net.)

THE second volume of this valuable work fully bears out the excellent qualities of the first. It is really an entirely new inquiry, though based on the lines laid down in Sir Robert Douglas's old peerage, a wonderful book for the time in which it was compiled. The genealogists whom the Lyon King has gathered round him have assisted to produce a masterly piece of work embodying the results of the most recent researches. All the latest authorities have been laid under contribution, such as the numerous Reports of the MSS. Commission and the recently published Laing Charters. The early historical notices have been verified, sifted and toned down in accordance with the scientific method now introduced into heraldry. But in spite of the insistence of unvarnished records the Scottish peerage is still a romance, there being hardly a family in which there was not some startling incident, some hereditary vendetta to hand down from sire to son. One of the longest and most interesting memoirs in the volume before us is that of the Kennedys, Earls of Cassillis, from the pen of the Marquis of Ailsa, present chief of the name. It is written in the best of taste, all facts well verified and nothing extenuated. A masterful and valiant race, whose long sword ruled all the extensive country from Wigtown to the town of Ayr and from Portpatrick to the cruives of the Chrystal Cree. The memoir on the extinct Carlyle peerage, by the Rev. John Anderson, is also an excellent account of a family long passed away, and now, since the death of Mr. Hildred Edward Carlyle, lately sub-controller of the Post Office Savings Banks, unrepresented, so far as is known, in the male line. The name of Carlyle has had additional lustre added to it during the last fifty years by Thomas Carlyle. The sage had some grounds for believing that his grandfather was a far-out cousin of the Laird of Brydekirk, the chief cadet of the baronial house. He seems not to have made any effort to complete the missing link, as he himself was no doubt content to hold the patent of nobility he has made for himself. It would have been most interesting if Mr. Anderson could have cleared up the matter in his exhaustive memoir of the parent stock. Those students who examine curiously the rise and fall of families will treasure a book that tells of the shadowy prime of ancient houses—Omnia sunt hominum pendentia filo. A feature of this compilation of strange eventful histories is the spirited and artistic heraldic shields and initial letters by Mr. Graham Johnston, of the Lyon Office, who has inspired the great devices of heraldry with something akin to life—something more than the dreary formalism of his predecessors.

FLOWERS IN FICTION

THE works of the poets of all ages and all countries abound with allusions to flowers. Shakespeare himself is an example; nowhere in his pages, perhaps, can we find more lovely lines than those familiar ones which speak of

"Daffodils
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violets dim
But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes,
And Cytherea's breath."

It would seem that the mere handling, as it were, of such images, the sweeping of such exquisite strings, stimulates the singer to music sweeter even than his theme. Wordsworth, too, portrays daffodils in his own simple and direct fashion, and seizes at once the character of the flowers in question:

"A host of golden daffodils,
Beside the lake, beneath the trees,
Fluttering and dancing in the breeze."

Elsewhere he speaks of his "sweet wild-cherry tree." Here, again, he employs no artifice; the image conjured up before our eyes is that of the tree itself with its faint, woodland fragrance, its airy grace. Other poets lend an artificial significance to the flowers of which they treat; thus Herrick addresses violets as "maiden posies," and Edgar Allan Poe speaks of "puritan pansies," in that strange, wild, fantastic lyric, "To Annie."

It is not, however, the flowers of poetry that I have in my mind to-day, nor the flowers of those old-world gardens chronicled by Bacon and Izaak Walton, nor even the flowers made familiar to us by the fascinating pen of "Elizabeth"—I am thinking of the flowers of fiction, and of the growing propensity among the novelists of the present day to enhance the beauty of their pages by references to these most beautiful of created things. Of the present day, I say, for most of the great masters of nineteenth-century literature were unconscious, or perhaps disdainful, of this art. Thackeray, indeed, seldom troubled himself to describe inanimate nature; here and there we may find a brief reference to a "smiling landscape," or some such phrase; but he was ever in too great a hurry to be dealing with flesh and blood to dally with what seemed to him unmeaning trivialities. It is not that this consummate artist was unaware of the value of a vivid suggestion of colour—he, who has drawn for us Emmie, in her white dress, pressing George's crimson sash against her bosom, and Beatrice descending the stairs in her scarlet stockings, and again, Becky Sharp in her pink silk gown; but as far as I can recollect, he makes no use of the flower in any pictorial sense. We have once or twice a reference to a treasured rose—a withered one—but the flower is used merely as an emblem, a love-token; a lock of hair, a crumpled glove, a faded note, would have served the purpose just as well. The dream-blossoms of the doll's dressmaker, the scanty blooms of her garden on the tiles, are, like the solitary flower of the lame boy in "Nicholas Nickleby," introduced by Dickens to heighten the sense of contrast between their fresh loveliness, and the sordid lives which they served to brighten; not for what I may call the decorative effect aimed at by the writers of our time. Of these, I would single out Mr. Thomas Hardy as the most notable and admirable example.

When he first presents to us Bathsheba Everdene, she is sitting in a gaily-painted waggon, surrounded by flowering plants. He enumerates these plants—myrtles, geraniums, cactuses—all, be it noted, eminently characteristic of her own vivid personality. He tells us himself that "they invested the whole concern of horses, waggon, furniture and girl with a peculiar vernal charm." The reader comes under the influence of that charm from the moment when his eyes first fall upon the page in question—it is indeed this essential quality which marks out Mr. Hardy's work from that of all other writers, which is unattainable, unapproachable, by any of his host of followers. Contrast this picture of Bathsheba Everdene in her crimson jacket, with her bright face and black hair, with the "pale companion" whom Joseph Poorgrass conveys, also in a painted waggon, from Casterbridge Workhouse—poor Fanny Robin, lying in her coffin. She too is surrounded by flowers, and here again the author's choice is noteworthy; laurustinus, variegated box, and yew, boy's-love and bunches of chrysanthemums. Bathsheba, obliged to pause for a few moments on the high road, wiles away the time by inspecting herself in a small swing looking-glass; she smiles at her own image in the sunshine; "the picture," says the author, "was a delicate one." Unforgettable that other picture of Joseph's sad burden looming "faintly through the flowering laurustinus" as the horse plods slowly through "the unfathomable gloom, amid the high trees on each hand, indistinct, shadowless and spectre-like in their monochrome of grey. . . . The dead silence broken only by a heavy particle falling from a tree through the evergreens and alighting with a smart rap upon the coffin of poor Fanny." So the story goes on, gathering tragedy with every line, until the page is reached which portrays for us Bathsheba gazing at her dead rival, suffering as that hapless rival had never suffered in her short life. Here, again, the flowers come in. It is while she is laying them about the dead girl's head that her husband looks in upon her. It is when Troy, falling on his knees, kisses the pallid face smiling so placidly amid the blossoms, that the passionate cry bursts wildly "from the deepest deep" of the wife's heart: "Kiss me too, Frank—kiss me." In all literature I think there is not a page so daring, so absolutely truthful in its revelation of a woman's nature.

But flowers are needed again for the crowning catastrophe of the miserable love-tale of Francis Troy and Fanny Robin. Having set up a tombstone over the poor girl's grave, he proceeds to plant the mound beneath with flowers. "There were bundles of snowdrops, hyacinth and crocus bulbs, violets and double daisies, which were to bloom in early spring, and of carnations, pinks, picotees, lilies of the valley, forget-me-not, summer's farewell, meadow saffron, and others, for the later seasons of the year." The author minutely describes the planting of these by Troy with his "impassive face," on that dark night when the rays from his lantern spread into the old yews "with a strange illuminating power, flickering, as it seemed, up to the black ceiling of cloud above." He works till midnight, and sleeps in the church porch; and then comes the storm and the doings of the gargoyle. The stream of water from the church roof spouting through the mouth of this "horrible stone entity" rushes into the new-made grave, turning the mould into mud and washing away all the flowers so carefully planted by Fanny's repentant lover. At the sight of this havoc, we are told, Troy "hated himself. He stood and meditated, a miserable man. Where should he go? He that is accursed, let him be accursed still."

In each of these scenes the writer makes use of the images he conjures up with a double purpose, to enhance the effect of the picture presented to our mental vision, and to convey almost insensibly a deep and hidden meaning. This particular treatment of flowers in fiction seems to me essentially modern.

George Eliot has given us countless pictures of Hetty Sorrel, minutely describing for us her plum-coloured bodice, her rose-coloured ribbons, the exquisite tendrils of her dark hair, the lustre of her eyes. It seems strange that she who had such a strong sense of the picturesque should not have given us flowers in conjunction with this "distracting, kitten-like maiden." Twice, indeed, she would seem to make such a suggestion. Hetty, in rapture at meeting her gentleman-lover for the first time alone, was "no more conscious of her limbs than if her childish soul had passed into a water-lily, resting on a liquid bed and warmed by the midsummer sunbeams"; again, we are told that "hidden behind the apple-blossoms, or among the golden corn, or under the shrouding boughs of the wood, there might be a human heart beating heavily with anguish; perhaps a young blooming girl"—yet we are not shown Hetty among the water-lilies, or Hetty's delicate dark beauty outlined against a background of apple-blossoms, or Hetty standing breast-high amid golden corn. The present-day writer would have drawn at least one such vivid picture, to heighten the contrast for us between the outward peace and beauty, and the agony within. George Eliot, nevertheless, in ending the story of Maggie and Tom Tulliver, has a phrase that haunts the memory. "Brother and sister had gone down in an embrace never to be parted: living through again in one short moment the days when they had clasped their little hands in love, and roamed the daisied fields together."

Stevenson, that master of language, would seem to concern himself less with the appeal of flowers to the sense of sight than their appeal to another sense: but his words, with the extraordinary power that these instruments have under manipulation such as his, conjure up for us a whole scene. When he speaks of the "hot smell of the heather" we see the great, glowing expanse in all the glories of its crimsons and purples. Again, when he describes St. Ives' escape and tells us how, when he passed within a little distance of a bush of wallflower "the scent of it came over him with that impression of reality which characterises scents in darkness," the reader shares that impression, sees the trembling figure hanging shadowy between earth and heaven, feels his heart beat with infectious fear. And yet again when Will o' the Mill, dying, is "suddenly surprised by an overpowering sweetness of heliotropes," we share the old man's wonder and bewilderment, we wait breathless for the vision that is coming.

Among living writers, the authors of "Young April," a book as fresh and as thickly strewn with flowers as its name would seem to imply, are foremost in availing themselves of the peculiar form of art of which I speak. One book indeed, "The Star Dreamer," stands out above the rest, for every page of it is fragrant with the scent of the old-world garden which forms a background to the drama of human passion. The heroine dwells among the flowers, the Star Dreamer, her lover, descends from his far-off tower to meet her there. An ineffaceable picture is drawn for us of this dreaming lover, as he comes, at night, full of wild energy and yet not awake, to seek the woman whom by day, in full possession of consciousness, he had forsworn. "His heavy hair was tossed away from his forehead as if wild fingers had played with it. Fragments of moss, a withered leaf here and there, clung to his garments; but it did not need this evidence to tell Ellinor that he was straight from the woods—the breath of the trees and of the deep night emanated from him, fresh and pungent, indescribable."

Again, we have a vision of Ellinor, herself a flower that "had opened wide to the sun of great love," Ellinor, with her arms "full of branching leaves and strange blossoms

... purple and mauve, crimson and orange ... she seemed to bring with her into the room all the breath of the herb garden and all its imprisoned sunshine."

Give us more of such writing, say I, more dealings with beautiful, innocent things, more of Nature in her lovelier aspects. It has been the fashion of late years to cry up those authors who haunt the slums, showing us humanity at its ugliest and most sordid—authors who, when they have defiled their pages with noisome images, appeal to us to admire their strength and daring. Well, every one to his taste; if there be folk who delight in conjuring up pictures of filth and squalor by all means let them read their fill; but human nature is as truly human nature, men and women can live and love with as much strength and passion among the pleasant places of this fair earth of ours as amid the abominations of the city streets. George Eliot's "daisied fields" and Hardy's "vernal charm" will linger in the memory long after the idyll of the slums has been shudderingly dismissed.

M. E. FRANCIS.

JULES VERNE

In the obituaries of Jules Verne which have appeared in England and France since the death of the celebrated writer on Friday of last week, can be noticed a marked diversity of opinion corresponding with a certain vein of contradiction in the author's life. It was perhaps only natural that the appreciations should vary between the enthusiasm of Le Temps—which boldly held the Académie Française to have belittled itself by refusing a seat of immortality to its old contributor—and the placid irony of Les Débats in defending him against the charge of perverting youthful minds with a specious blend of falsehood and science; for Jules Verne could not but seem great or little as regarded with the eyes of imagination or of fact. The contrast between the adventurous creator of Captain Nemo, and the industrious municipal councillor of Amiens, possessed of no more astonishing passion than an omnivorous appetite for newspapers and a predilection for milk, was assuredly of a nature to perplex the judicious. In psychology, however, all extremes are explained by contraries, and we see Jules Verne in his truest aspect as the precise and welcome converse of that not uncommon type of modern voyager, who, after beating up the world from Patagonia to Japan, has absolutely no adventures to relate. The redoubtable author of "Twenty thousand Leagues under the Sea," hugging the coast of Northern France in his ten-ton sloop, is decidedly the more interesting study of the two.

Born at Nantes in 1828, he was sent off in due time by his father, a Breton advocate, to faire son droit in the Quartier Latin. At Paris he discovered more liking for literature and science than for the law, and opened his career as a writer by the composition of a number of unprosperous tragedies in verse. When only twenty-one he succeeded in getting a one-act piece, Les Pailles Rompues (written in collaboration with Dumas fils), accepted and played at the Gymnase. For ten or twelve years he maintained his connection with the theatre, writing numerous pieces in collaboration with Charles Wallut and Michel Carré—among them L'Auberge des Ardennes and Onze Jours de Siège. During this period of dramatic hack-work he held the unsalaried post of secretary to Emile Perrin, then director of the Théâtre-Lyrique, and earned his living by working during the day as clerk to Fernand Eggly, an agent de change on the Paris Bourse.

In 1860 or 1861 he met Hetzel, the publisher of Victor Hugo, George Sand, and De Musset, who was then just returning from eight years of exile at Brussels. Aeronautics were in high fashion at the moment, Nadar was exciting Paris with his daring ascents, and Verne precisely hit the popular fancy with a new kind of scientific romance, his "Five Weeks in a Balloon." Editions of the book sold very rapidly, and the generous offer of a twenty years' contract from Hetzel satisfied the author that the fortunate tide in his life had come. Thereon he took leave of his friends, Aristide Rignard, De Béchenel, Duquesnel, and others, and announced his intention to retire with a wife to Amiens, there to compile the great list of ninety complete novels of adventure which have since delighted the heart of English and French youth.

That list of books is one whose best names are still potent with every hearty boy, and with every man who respects the memory of his immature years. "From the Earth to the Moon," "Round the World in Eighty Days," "A Journey to the Centre of the Earth," "The Clipper of the Clouds," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," and "Michael Strogoff" are to the age of fourteen what "The Three Musketeers" is to twenty-five. All are essentially dramatic, and two of them, "Michael Strogoff" and "Round the World" have been staged with remarkable success, first at the Porte-Saint-Martin, and later in every considerable town of Europe and America. Yet an analysis of their elements yields somewhat mystifying results. In most of the books there is a definite vein of pedagogy which few authors could introduce without annoying or disgusting their readers: the characterisation, though clear and amusing, is markedly theatrical; and, most curious fact of all, there is little or no love interest. It is possibly an impeachment of nineteenth-century gallantry that books containing no descriptions of sweet or wonderful women should have been translated into so many languages; it is unquestionably a paradox of the most tantalising character that a Frenchman should have been their author. Let it stand, however, as a testimony to the fundamental health and freshness of France, that the romances were all clean and invigorating as the sunlight. The name of an inventor or discoverer Jules Verne always modestly disowned, though by his popularisation of mechanical science he might justly have claimed the great distinction of helping forward the perfection of the flying-machine and the submarine vessel. As the founder of a literary school his position is less uncertain, for the obligations of Mr. Kipling to Mr. Swinburne, or of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle to Edgar Poe, are not more vital than those of Mr. H. G. Wells and others to Jules Verne.

W. L. W.

JULES VERNE: A REMINISCENCE

ALTHOUGH Jules Verne sacrificed everything to his work—he led, at any rate during the last twenty years of his life, an existence of almost monastic seclusion, simplicity and austerity—his personality was interesting, quite apart from the fact of his immense, almost astounding popularity. What that popularity really was could only be gauged by a glance at that corner of his fine library, the library of a cultivated scholar and lover of the classics, where stood the various foreign editions of his books, including those published in Japanese and in Hebrew.

To the end the old man, who physically recalled to a curious extent a more serious-minded, a less self-conscious and ebullient Victor Hugo, was a typical Breton, proud, reserved and silent; a typical member, also, of that curious social caste known as la noblesse de la robe, for his father had been a member of the Nantes Bar.

It has often been asserted that M. Verne felt deeply the fact that the magic word "Académicien" was not written after his name. But I believe I am right in saying that he never presented himself for election, and, comparatively early in his life, he turned his back on Paris and all that Paris would almost certainly have brought him. It is, however, a mistake to suppose, as many of his English biographers have done during the last few days, that Jules Verne lived apart from the literary world and its interests. He was the intimate, life-long friend of that wonderful son of a more wonderful father, Alexandre Dumas fils. When both men were in their early twenties they wrote a short comedy together, which is still occasionally played, and they remained fast friends. Another of his contemporaries with whom he was intimate was Hector Malot, and though he rarely left Amiens, he often welcomed fellow writers to the pleasant hospitable house, No. 1 Rue Charles Dubois, once the French home of a distinguished Englishman, Sir Daniel Lange, the friend and supporter of De Lesseps.

Few of the visitors, however, unless they happened to be real intimates, were ever taken upstairs to the tiny room where the master of the house, following in this the method of so many of his contemporaries, including writers as different as Anthony Trollope, Mrs. Oliphant, and "Gyp," began and ended each day's work before most of the good townspeople of Amiens were out of bed. For the last thirty-five years of his life Jules Verne did all his creative writing between the hours of 5 and 8 A.M., seated at a plain wooden table placed across the broad window which commanded a beautiful view of Amiens Cathedral. He took an extraordinary amount of trouble over every detail connected with his work, writing always with a half-page margin, so as to leave plenty of room for corrections and additions. More fortunate than most of his fellow authors, he was allowed by his publishers practically to re-write each of his novels in proof. In spite of all the labour he lavished on his manuscripts, he always completed two stories each year, and he must have left many unpublished volumes ready for publication.

The only critic to whom Jules Verne ever listened patiently, and who alone saw any of his work before final publication, was his own wife. No woman ever influenced more happily a writer's career than did this charming, warm-hearted Amienoise, who was, for nearly fifty years, Madame Jules Verne. She and her husband were in the best sense complementary the one to the other, for whereas it was difficult to believe that M. Verne could ever have been in the French sense of the words young and gay, it was evident that Madame Verne had always been too busy looking after his comfort and that of her children to find time to grow old. Indeed she seemed during the last years of their joint life the embodiment of one of the delightful fairy godmothers created by Madame d'Aulnoy.

Sometimes Madame Jules Verne would quaintly lament the absence of feminine interest in her husband's stories, but the listener was well aware that, even as she spoke, there was an underlying pride in the delightful knowledge that she herself, some fifty odd years before, had known how to conquer the heart of the serious-minded woman-hater, of the writer whose only success in drawing "le sexe" was to be "Mistress Branican." There can be surely no indiscretion in now opening the long-closed page containing the simple story of the veteran writer's own life romance.

As a young man, Jules Verne, whose ambition it then was to become a great dramatist—his first attempt took the form of a drama entitled Alexandre VI.—solemnly forswore both love and matrimony. In vain his friends with some concern pointed out that "l'un n'engage pas à l'autre;" he declared that to his thinking no man could be at one time both a worker and a lover, and that for his part he had no doubt at all as to which he wished to be. He failed, however, in converting those about him to his views, and as he was a man of ardent friendships he in due course found himself compelled to take, much against his will, the long journey—and in the late "fifties" it was a very long journey—from Nantes to Amiens, to be present at a comrade's wedding.

The stage-coach was late, and when young Verne arrived at the house of the bride's parents he found it deserted save for the presence of another daughter, a young widowed lady who had not cared to inflict her sombre presence on the wedding-party, and who had therefore been left to mind the house. Madame de Vanne, for such was her name, did her best to entertain the stranger; they discussed the drama and literature to such purpose that at the end of an hour the young man began to realise the charm of friendship with a cultivated woman.

The return of the wedding-party took place long before either Madame de Vanne or Jules Verne expected it, and they alone, so the story went for many a year after, were unaware, during the long day which followed, of what was even then quite plain to those about them, that Providence had indeed made them the one for the other.

A year later Madame de Vanne became the wife of Jules Verne, and he, the most devoted of step-fathers to her two little girls. Comparatively shortly after his marriage was published "Five Weeks in a Balloon," the first of his wonderful adventure stories. His own only child, a son, is also a writer, but he has inherited his father's interest in science without Jules Verne's special gift of embodying his views and theories in the form of fiction.

MARIE BELLOC LOWNDES.

MELANCHOLIA

THE sickness of desire, that in dark days
Looks on the imagination of despair,
Forgetteth man and stinteth God his praise,
Nor but in sleep findeth a cure for care.

Uncertainty, that once gave scope to dream
Of laughing enterprise and glory untold,
Is now a blackness that no stars redeem,
A wall of terror in a night of cold.

Fool! thou that hast impossibly desir'd,
And now impatiently despair'st, see
How nought is changed: Joy's vision is attir'd
Splendid for other eyes, if not for thee:

Not love or beauty or youth from earth is fled:
If they delight thee not, 'tis thou art dead.

ROBERT BRIDGES.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN

ONCE upon a time the famous sculptor Thorvaldsen said to Hans Andersen, "Come now, write us a new and comical story. I wonder if you could make one up about a darning needle!" Andersen's response was the well-known tale of "The Darning Needle," but there is something more in this little fairy story than the mere reply to a spontaneous challenge; the sculptor's request was something more than a sudden whim of fancy. Those two words "I wonder" were in all probability the involuntary exclamation provoked by a thought which had many times flitted about at the back of Thorvaldsen's mind; now the idea found expression as he listened whilst Hans Andersen read aloud "The Sweethearts" and "The Ugly Duckling." "I believe," said the sculptor to himself, "I believe this man could spin a fairy web around any single thing created by God or made by man." Aloud he ejaculated "I wonder," and Andersen replied in the darning needle dialect that his friend had struck the keynote of his genius. Every living and inanimate thing he could endow with the fairy spirit, for this great magician had discovered the elixir of fairy life, and he distributed it with a lavishness born of a real appreciation of the commonplace.

As we look back over the hundred years that have elapsed since the King of the Fairies was born in the guise of a cobbler's son on April 2, 1805, we seek for an explanation of his immortal genius. We know how furiously the walls of his fairy citadel have been attacked by realism during the thirty years since his death in 1875, and we ask ourselves why Hans Andersen has not been buried beneath the ruins of ideal sticks and stones. In the darning needle story we find a clue to the way in which he was able to erect fortifications which should withstand the fiercest onslaught of mere men. Says the needle when it is in imminent danger: "It is a good preservation against sea-sickness to have a steel stomach, and to bear in mind that one is something more than a mere human being!" Children are more than human because they have not yet come of age, and as experience has not taught them the full meaning of the word, they are unable to realise its limitations; the grown-up, who knows the weakness of human nature, as well as its strength, finds comfort in the thought that he is "a god though in the germ." It is just because Hans Andersen stands for all that is of a very simple superhuman character that he numbers amongst his friends both the old and the young.

As a human being pure and simple, Andersen had many distinguishing characteristics of the species—ambition, pride, loyalty, devotion, and the like; as a human being of the literary type he was a curious mixture of commendable egoism and inordinate conceit. The story of his life he has interpreted in "The Ugly Duckling," and the ill-favoured bird is certainly an object for sympathy till it develops into a swan and compels admiration. "It matters not being born in a duck-yard, when one is hatched from a swan's egg," comments the author, and we think of Hans Andersen's poor home at Odense, and of the many difficulties he had to contend against ere he was able to rise superior to the circumstances of his birth. We remember the indomitable pluck, the sturdy self-reliance, and the steadfast belief in his own ability which, with but fifteen dollars, were his sole capital when as a boy of fourteen he set out for Copenhagen. We think of the almost penniless lad, handicapped by his unprepossessing appearance, vainly trying to become an actor; then of the bitter disappointments he had to encounter when he tried to succeed as a playwright, and we remind ourselves that he had no educational advantages till he was of an age when many boys leave school. As we read once more the tale of "The Ugly Duckling" we are inclined to imagine that Hans Andersen was very unfairly treated, and to sympathise with his attitude towards his critics in "What the moon saw." But it must not be forgotten that the ugly duckling of Odense had no ambition to be that beautiful swan, the Fairy King, which he afterwards became, even though one of the much maligned critics discovered his real identity at an early stage of his career. "I am sure the little elves will show you the right way through the bright blue sky," wrote Mrs. Ingemann to young Andersen after reading one of his youthful publications, but he had no desire to be guided into the highway of fame and fortune by sprites and elves.

It was as a dramatic author that Hans Andersen wished to excel, for he had been held fast in the theatrical grip from his earliest childhood. Play after play he wrote, and occasionally he managed to get his dramas produced; he believed that they were all masterpieces, and when they were pronounced failures, he thought the critics were in league against him. He was entirely blind to his shortcomings as a playwright, but a very slight acquaintance with his dramatic work is sufficient to justify its condemnation. As a novelist, too, he would fain have been recognised as a great genius, but here again he neither deserved nor received the extravagant praise which he demanded. With his books of travel he was more successful, for hopping about their pages are the little fairies who were calling to him to come and take possession of his kingdom. When he began to publish his fairy tales he only looked on them as a quite unimportant part of his work, although J. L. Heiberg, the famous critic, at once pronounced them the cream of his literary output. As more and more of these stories saw the light, their popularity increased; they were translated into other languages, and very soon Hans Andersen had little cause to complain of the treatment he received at the hands of the great literary critics, and the public in general.

When we come to inquire into the nature of the appeal made by Hans Andersen to his little patrons, we find that its power lies in the author's familiarity with various languages appreciated by the young on account of poetic possibilities, and an unlimited pictorial vocabulary adapted to their requirements. Moreover, the swan language, the language of flowers and trees, of birds and of all manner of beasts, of toys, and of the common objects of daily life have no grammar, and are not fettered by tiresome rules; no wonder then that they are the much beloved mother tongue of children. In this tongue Andersen speaks, and he is able to express himself so forcibly because he is familiar with its every dialect. Then again, he is too great an artist to be a wearisome moralist; his stories are not written in order to point a moral, but morals serve to adorn his stories. We notice also that he avoids "horrors," and his childish public are never frightened to such an extent that a sensible elder has to explain that such and such things are all nonsense. He is an optimist, and children are naturally optimistic; his God is the "Our Father" of the little ones, and he has a strong sympathy with tears, which are the child's refuge in times of distress, and its expression of repentance to be followed as a matter of course by full pardon and complete absolution. But in the story of "The Wild Swans" we find, perhaps, the strongest tie which binds Hans Andersen to every child who makes his acquaintance. Here we are told that Elise dreamed of a picture-book in which "everything seemed alive; the birds sang, men and women stepped from the book and talked to Elise and her brothers." Everything which Hans Andersen puts into his poetic word-pictures is alive, and therefore real. Even when children start to make believe they very quickly glide into the actual belief that their imaginary world is full of living things all in possession of the five senses; and it is mainly because children do not feel that Hans Andersen is a mere pretender that they love him so well.

In the Andersen fairy stories the grown-up public discover the philosopher, the poet and the artist, who would have them believe, as they would fain believe, that "life, after all, is the most lovely of fairy tales." They realise that Hans Andersen was not childish, but childlike, and in many women, and more especially in many men, there is fortunately a childlike spirit which responds to the appeal made by such a rare genius. The morals which are not insisted upon in these stories, are nevertheless apparent, and as they are elementary truths common to every creed they go straight home to the hearts of men and women. There is, too, in these fairy tales a fund of humour, and they very aptly illustrate the sense of nonsense which upholds the supremacy of the simpler emotions over the dignity of mere intellect.

To renew an acquaintance with Hans Andersen when the nursery and the schoolroom have been left far behind, may require some courage, for there be many who gibe at the fairy muse. But our good friend Barrie has made it possible for us to handle a copy of Andersen's "Fairy Tales" without blushing, or without resorting to the use of a brown paper cover to hide the title of the book we carry. Who that has made the acquaintance of The Boy that wouldn't grow up can plead "Not Guilty" to clapping his hands in order to save Tinker Bell's life? We have seen grave, elderly men, and—even more surprising—"superior" young men startled into enthusiasm and pity by that daring, yet trustful challenge to the spirit of childhood that lives in us all, though we may not know it until some genius—Barrie or Andersen—tears off the wrappings to reveal it. Old and young have responded to Peter Pan's pathetic appeal to acknowledge that they believe in fairies, and old and young alike will be saying on April 2, 1905, "Just a hundred years ago to-day there was born in Denmark the Fairy King, and —" Well, we wonder what sort of a fairy story Hans Andersen would have written about a centenary.

E. A. B.

FICTION

The Dryad. By JUSTIN HUNTLEY MCCARTHY. (Methuen, 6s.)

MR. MCCARTHY has found a charming idea for a romance in a legend that tells how in the Eleusinian wood by Athens, long after the old Greek gods and goddesses forsook the country, there lingered still an immortal maid, strong as the heroes, young as the dawn and beautiful as Helen. At the beginning of the fourteenth century Duke Baldwin of the Rock, a Frankish prince, was reigning Duke of Athens, and the story tells how his son Rainouart, "whose spirit swam in the clearest ether of chivalry," met this Dryad in the wonder-wood, how they loved each other, how Esclaramonde, Duchess of Thebes, prevailed over Rainouart by enchantment and deceit for a period, but how in the end Argathona the Dryad won back her lover and became mortal that she might wed him. But Mr. McCarthy's treatment falls far short of his idea: he has not succeeded in creating the right atmosphere. He has emphasised historical details, such as the conquest of Greece by the French nobles, the presence and intrigues of the Catalan Grand Order at the court of Duke Baldwin; he has introduced incidents and characters which have no home outside the most commonplace historical novel, so that when the Dryad, as the Knight of Eleusis, comes to the tourney held in honour of the marriage of Rainouart and Esclaramonde, and triumphs, her triumph leaves us cold and we actually find ourselves thinking of the unfairness of the encounter, where an immortal of godlike strength overcomes a mere human knight. This is not at all the impression that ought to exist. The two elements of French chivalry and of Greek legend conflict, and they defeat their own ends. The presence of the immortal maiden makes the history seem impossible and irritating, while the history takes away from the beauty of the legend. Each element by itself is well enough: the adventures and the murders are sufficiently exciting; and there is considerable beauty in the dream of Argathona, in which all the old Greek divinities appear to her and implore her not to ally herself to a mortal lover; but the union of the two elements is never achieved. Moreover, for a story which appeals primarily to the imagination, absolute simplicity of style is an essential, witness "The Happy Prince" and the fairy tales of George MacDonald; but Mr. McCarthy's style is pretentious and highly coloured: he writes a florid kind of romantic jargon, which less scrupulous critics than the author of "Underwoods" might be justified in describing as no language. He runs the devices of alliteration and repetition to death—such phrases as "hissing hot with haste," "muffled in melancholy musings," "brimmed with admiration of the civilisation," constantly occur, and the jingling assonance would offend the least sensitive ear. "Beraped," "oathing free," "anyways," "hooves" for "hoofs," and many other odd words and usages crop up, some of which may be found in the dictionary and others not. And so the book is a disappointment. Mr. McCarthy has found a beautiful theme and in spite of his cleverness has handled it so roughly that he has deprived it of its external charm and has not developed the possibilities of its inherent beauty.

Wanted: a Cook. By ALAN DALE. (Putnam, 6s.)

WE thought before we read these Domestic Dialogues that we had a Servant Problem in England. We seem to have heard that servants are scarce and inefficient, the terrors of the housewife rather than her support. We have even read amusing articles about the creatures in the monthly reviews, and we have perversely reflected that this was a quarrel where one side was dumb. This never seems to us quite fair, and when we follow a lady's procession of incompetent and insufferable servants we always want a servant's history of exacting and grossly ignorant mistresses. But now that we have finished Alan Dale's account of "home life" in America, we will never listen to the complaints of our countrywomen again. If he is trustworthy, there are no servants in that distressful land at all: only ruffians who for high wages drink, steal and carouse under your roof for about a week at a time. But it is difficult to believe in the unbroken bad luck of his young couple, and we can only say that if his Letitia has a counterpart in nature she deserves all she gets. No doubt women of her class have reduced themselves both in America and here to a condition of helplessness that would be absurd if the results were not often seriously expensive and uncomfortable. We were told a true story lately of an able-bodied woman whose only resource when her maids deserted her suddenly was to take to her bed in tears. Luckily she had a husband at home to do the work. The unpalatable truth of the matter is that every day girls undertake the important and delightful art of homemaking without knowing anything about it. Perhaps they are not quite as silly as Letitia, who tried to make tea by boiling it in a saucepan with the eggs. But there is no doubt that if a man were as ignorant of his job as his wife usually is of hers, he would soon be begging his bread. Letitia's Aunt Julia is the sensible woman. "Do you think that a mere cook can either make or mar me?" she asks, and without more ado prepares an excellent dinner. Her niece demurs to her slaving. "I don't say that I should select it as a pastime," the shrewd woman answers, "but when it is necessary . . . I am always on hand. The situation is mine absolutely." If the women who employ servants because it is convenient would learn how to train them and how on occasion to do without them, the situation (we have Aunt Julia's authority for saying so) would be theirs absolutely. And servants would not be demoralised by a market driven through scarcity to pay good wages for bad work. But, after all, the question hardly concerns us. Now that we have been introduced to Mrs. Potzenheimer and Anna Carter we know that in our happy homes we still have ministering angels. They do not come from an American Intelligence Office, where one lady, seeing another look dejected, asks her, "Is this your first time in hell?"

The White Causeway. By F. FRANKFORT MOORE. (Hutchinson, 6s.)

MR. FRANKFORT MOORE has accomplished the difficult feat of introducing the supernatural into a story of modern life without producing a grotesque effect of improbability. The secret of his success lies in the fact that he has mastered the subtle art of construction; and so, little by little, he leads the mind of the reader up to the proper receptive point before he brings out his pièce de résistance. Very cunningly he uses every device to stimulate the imagination to mystery, using the awe of the mountains with the curious legends about them that are current among the people, as his taking-off place into the unknown spiritual world. He does not approach psychic phenomena in the spirit of the believer, as Miss Underhill in "The Grey World," but rather as an expert writer to whom such matters, though within the mental range of the broad-minded, primarily afford infinite possibilities for sensation; and the result is a capital story, a story which goes with a rare swing, and is all the more pleasant because it is written in admirable English and with wit. Olive Austin and Arthur Garnett are in love with each other; and their love is tinged with the mysterious splendour of the Alpine mountains among which it first finds expression. She is a girl in touch with things spiritual; she has strange premonitions and sees visions, notably the White Causeway, which they say was "built by the spirits of the peaks to enable the spirits of the valley to mingle with them." One day when she is rowing on the lake a sudden storm swamps the boat, and Garnett only just manages to rescue her. For four hours the doctors unceasingly try to revive her, and she is only called back to life by the wild cry of her lover. But she has died, "passed over" as the phrase is. And herein lies the point of the book. Her soul and body are separate, and only united by her great love ; but the shock has deprived her of memory, so that, while her soul remembers, her corporeal form does not even recognise her lover. The situations which arise are finely conceived and work up to a magnificent climax, which no one who has a taste for the frileuse in literature would do well to miss. The whole book is interesting and should be read, for it is an excellent example of Mr. Frankfort Moore's versatile ability.

Elizabeth Grey. By E. M. GREEN. (Blackwood. 6s.)

It has often been remarked that the history of any life whatsoever would afford material for an interesting novel, if only it could be truly written, but as Miss Green says in "Elizabeth Grey," "Self-consciousness generally spoils the effects." Many whose one cry throughout their lives is to be understood are totally unable to break through the thin transparent covering with which convention surrounds every soul among us. When some one does succeed in breaking down this wall and giving us a peep at the real self, we say: "Here is a living book." Simpler in its elements no book could be than "Elizabeth Grey," yet the writer has succeeded in giving us a true picture of a living woman. There is no plot, and the only two events that can be dignified by the name of incidents would have been better away, for they alone are unreal. Here is a picture of a girl almost at her last shilling, who has bombarded editors with her MSS., and stormed them in their dens with but little success. She has a home, but one where money is scarce, and she retires into the wilderness of the quietest of country places to live in a farm-house, in order to do the best that is in her undisturbed. One imagines it must take a grand audacity of mind to write such a book, for it is all so slight and trivial; yet there lies its worth. The author cannot have said to herself: "Who will ever care to read this?" or she could never have gone on with it. She must have written it for the pure joy of painting in words the little details that rose so vividly before her: it is art for art's sake. We seem to smell the fragrance of the lilac wafted in at the open window: we see the still warm and ruffled body of the little dead thrush, a moment before so full of life and gladness; we wander willingly back into the reminiscence of "two children in new jackets, called by them 'wooly-doggy,' with an outside pocket in which a tiny handkerchief is tucked, black turban hats with scarlet wings, scarlet cloth gloves and warm plaid frocks, standing in a pew in an old, old church." The whole book is in a minor key, and there is a certain wistful sadness running through it.

It is possible that it would never have been written had not "Henry Ryecroft" appeared, yet it is not mere imitation. It is a refreshing book, because so natural, with the exception of the two blemishes above noted, namely the ridiculous incident where the great author comes to see the lesser one, and after folding up an uncounted number of her MSS., in big envelopes, directs them to various editors of magazines, who accept them meekly; and the still more improbable dab of colour by which, when the first novel, on the strength of a review in a contemporary, has run into a second edition, the publishers instantly offer a thousand pounds down for the second. Such things may have happened, once or twice, but to bring them into a simple narrative like the present is to mar by crudity what is otherwise a good piece of work.

The Stepping-Stone. By HELEN HESTER COLVILL. (Constable, 6s.)

A PLAGUE upon all meddlers! Suppose a young man rescued from a career of crime by a woman who loves him and for his sake loses, quite undeservedly, friends and reputation; suppose him nursed by her through a severe illness, the result of poor living and remorse for his first considerable fraud: suppose, further, that he professed to love this woman; does it seem equitable that she should be treated merely as a stepping-stone to a life of greater comforts and amenities? Hardly, we think; nor does it seem likely that Miss Colvill would argue otherwise, for while she is interested in all her characters (as the perfunctory novelist never is), she has reserved her love for Anna Breien, the Norwegian singer, the "stepping-stone" of the title. What is more, she makes the reader love Anna also. Eustace Sercombe, the reformed, after a long and praiseworthy struggle with himself, puts aside the cup with which circumstance tempted him—the love of his beautiful cousin Viola, with position and wealth in England—and is ready to marry Anna and continue the meagre existence of a clerk in Rome. And at this moment there steps in one of those busybodies who love to constitute themselves the viceregents of Providence, and tells Anna (for the benefit of Eustace, of course) that Eustace does not really love her. Anna sacrifices herself; disappears. Eustace, to his credit, seeks her far and wide, only to learn at last that she has died in her own country. How had Miss Colvill the heart to treat gentle, loving, unselfish Anna in this fashion? So much by way of protest; it would be churlish not to add that Miss Colvill has written a clever story, which will often touch her readers and can hardly fail to interest them.

Duke's Son. By COSMO HAMILTON. (Heinemann, 6s.)

THIS "Duke's Son" is a story of Society, of life among "the best people," which will shock the moralist and yet compel him to read on with ever increasing interest. It records the hard fate of certain members of the peerage, more particularly of younger sons, who discover that the Society into which they were born "will not look at them" unless they can pay for the civility. They find it impossible to maintain their footing upon such poor allowances as a thousand a year; therefore there is absolutely nothing left for them but "to cheat at cards to live." Men and girls, husbands and wives, singly or in partnership, fleece their neighbours and sometimes their friends: other reprehensible things they do, and yet are perfectly happy and unashamed. And some of them are charming people, deservedly popular, and straight and honest in their ordinary dealings. It is not a moral story, but it is an unusually interesting one, gay, cynical, kindly, amusing, and distinctly clever.

A Spoiler of Men. By RICHARD MARSH. (Chatto and Windus, 6s.)

THE numerous readers who delight in Mr. Marsh's tales of mystery and crime have no cause to complain of the quality of the entertainment provided for them in this volume. It is not a woman who is a spoiler of men in this instance, and there Mr. Marsh is wise, since women are almost invariably failures in his pages. There is no definite plot; the threads of the story can be picked up anywhere, and style was never the author's strong point. A wicked Dr. Wentworth hits upon a means of "stopping" any man or woman who displeases him or interferes with his schemes; in a moment "the thing that was a man" becomes speechless, blind, and imbecile. Can imagination go much farther in horror than that? And this operation is performed so many times in the course of Dr. Wentworth's career, that we lose count of the number of his victims, while the details become if possible more sickening in their cold-blooded cruelty with each repetition. But there is undoubtedly a large class of people who like this kind of reading: it amuses and pleasantly shocks them. They will be hard to please if they are not satisfied with the sensational incident here provided.

Widdicombe. By M. P. WILLCOCKS. (Lane, 6s.)

"Do not attempt to put all you know into your first article" was a veteran journalist's advice to a beginner, and the impression that Mr. Willcocks' book leaves is that between its covers are squeezed materials for more than one novel. The stage is too crowded; too many characters play leading parts. The attention of the reader is dissipated; his mind confused. Sylphine and John Saxon, Rosemary and Nix Calmady—their histories are too equal in value to run through the same book. Both are studies of character that show thoughtful insight into the life and minds of those who live on "The Moor." The ways of men with maids and maids with men, that puzzled even that experienced sage, King Solomon, are followed appreciatively throughout delicate mazes to what in each case promises to be the haven of happy wedded life, though by John Saxon and Sylphine that haven is reached only after long years. Given greater knowledge of what a painter would call the "values" of a picture, this author at no distant date should write a book which will command attention.

THE BOOKSHELF

William Rathbone: A Memoir, by his daughter Eleanor F. Rathbone (Macmillan, 7s. 6d.), is too political a book to be dealt with at length in the ACADEMY, but the activities of William Rathbone other than political were many, and this very capably written biography deserves some attention. William Rathbone belonged to a peculiarly modern type. A man of business, he devoted his life to public work, for the sake of no reward to himself, but simply for the good of those whose interests he championed; and throughout a long and active public career he preserved a high modesty that made him, like the late Mr. W. H. Smith and other men, of far more value to philanthropy and politics than more brilliant and less single-hearted persons are apt to be. "The results," he said, "which I have found to follow from principles and modes of action which are open to very many seem to me very encouraging to those who—like myself—have no claim to genius or brilliancy. . . . The men who reap an immediate and material reward for their work are not these great discoverers and brilliant men of genius, but rather those ordinary men whose quick careful observation, common sense and industry just place them a few days, months, or years in advance of what is becoming the general knowledge or sentiment. It is these who see what part of the ideas of the thinkers and specialists of the day are capable of immediate, practical application to the circumstances of their time and country, and who put them into execution." Mr. Rathbone came of Quaker stock; and although his family had ceased to be members of the Society of Friends, the spirit of the Quakers was alive in all he did. His work in Parliament and in various philanthropic movements is too recent to need recapitulation. It is summed up in the following words from the speech made by Professor Wilkins when he presented Mr. Rathbone for his honorary degree at Victoria University. "In workhouse nursing, in local government, in licensing reform, in primary, in secondary and in higher education, both in England and in Wales, his work has been abundantly fruitful, because it has been based on that most accurate knowledge, as well as inspired by the deepest sense of the responsibility, of those who have wealth and culture."

Mr. H. W. Eve, formerly Head Master of University College School, has reprinted in the form of a pamphlet (Nutt) his article on The Teaching of Modern Languages which was published three or four years ago in Murray's "National Education—a Symposium." At the present moment it should appeal to all who are interested in education. After contrasting modern languages with the classics as educational instruments under five or six heads—the advantage of a graduated series of problems, accuracy of observation, the application of remembered facts to new problems, the inculcation of the exact idea, the rationale of language and the number of problems ethical, historical, political and philosophical which are subsidiary to the study—and deciding that modern languages do not fall far short of the classics on any of these points, Mr. Eve turns to the examination of the German method of teaching known as the Neuere Richtung and shows its advantages and disadvantages. It is a contribution, he says, of permanent value to the study of modern languages and not without suggestiveness for the teaching of classics. Of the greatest value in the first stages of learning, it needs to be supplemented, in Mr. Eve's opinion, at a later stage by a system more analogous to that pursued by classical students. Mr. Eve's pamphlet is not only most opportune, but very good reading, being well expressed and enlivened with not a few flashes of wit.

The Official Year-Book of the Church of England, of which we have just received the volume for 1905 (S.P.C.K. 3s.), sustained a great loss during the year 1904 by the death of its Honorary Secretary and first editor, the Rev. Canon Burnside. The work is being continued by the Rev. F. H. Burnside, and carried on in the spirit and with the skill which its founder would have wished. A special feature in this year's number is an elaborate list of Church Educational Societies, with an appendix consisting of brief reports on the effect of the Education Act, 1902, upon the Associations of Church Schools originally formed in 1897 to administer the "Aid Grant." The Archdeacon of Buckingham supplies a short account of the Mission of Help to South Africa, and there is a valuable summary of the inaugural meeting of the Representative Church Council last July. The permanent features of the volume remain excellent in conception and treatment, and the work is wonderfully full and important for so low a price.

Mr. Murray sends us Murray's History of England, an Outline History for Middle Forms, by Miss M. A. Tucker (3s.). It is an attractive book and very clearly printed, the pages being broken up into headed paragraphs which will certainly obviate that painful feeling of "never getting to the end," which is always a trouble to young students. The attempt to sum up characters and events in short paragraphs inevitably leads to some little errors of overstatement or under-statement, but after a pretty careful examination of knotty points we have found nothing that amounts to misstatement. An excellent feature of the book is its full outfit of Maps and Plans, and we are particularly glad to see a Map of India, circa 1785. This is perhaps typical of the spirit in which Miss Tucker's work has been done, for throughout she has borne in mind that the history of England is only a part of the history of the world.

We are glad to receive a very handsome reprint of Mr. Bernhard Berenson's Lorenzo Lotto, An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism (Bell, 7s. 6d. net). There is little difference in the matter of the present volume from that of the first volume, beyond an increase in the number of works by both Lotto and Alvisse which are discussed; but Mr. Berenson, in an interesting Preface, confesses to a change of view and a change of interest. He concerns himself little now with the work of art as a document in the history of civilisation. He laments the confusion that such an interest is apt to create between the historical and æsthetic standards. He "feels even more greatly bound to warn his readers against the assumption that in Art there is such a thing as progress." "A council of perfection," he writes, "would be to avoid confounding an interest in the history of technique with love of art and most of all to beware of finding beauty where there is only curiosity." The book is a handsome quarto, illustrated with a large number of full-page reproductions, mainly after originals by Lotto and Alvisse.

The latest volume in Bohn's Standard Library is Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare (Bell, 1s. 6d. net). The special interest of the volume lies in the illustrations, which have been reproduced by lithography from the drawings made by Mr. Byam Shaw for the "Chiswick Shakespeare." It is impossible to agree in many cases with Mr. Shaw's conceptions of character; it is impossible to find him now and then other than a very poor artist; and yet his work is so full of thought and of ideas that he is always interesting, and we are glad to welcome so cheap a volume which contains such good reproductions of his drawings.

Mr. Edward Carpenter has published with Mr. Fifield (2s. net) a little volume on Prisons, Police and Punishment. The most valuable portions of it are a note on pages 78 and 79 of the most needed reforms in prison management and criminal procedure (among which it is not surprising to find the complete abolition of capital punishment and the establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal), and a chapter on the police system, which asks the question: "Quis custodiet custodes?" Mr. Carpenter's chapter vi. concerns what he calls "non-governmental Society"; that is to say, a society ruled not by fear but by its own good sense. On this substitution of the voluntary for the enforced he is very interesting, not the less so because with such a being as man in such a world as the present Mr. Carpenter's ideals are never likely to shake off the title of quixotic.

Another little book coming from Mr. Fifield is The Higher Love, by Mr. George Barlow (6d. net). These three papers, "The Higher Love," "The Transfiguration of Matter," and "The Feminine Element in Deity," are reprinted from The Contemporary Review. Whether Mr. Barlow is, as he intends to be, scientific in the higher sense of the term, or whether he is setting psychology and physiology at defiance, are matters which readers will have settled for themselves before they begin to read his book, according to the school of thought to which they belong; but to all alike this little volume will prove suggestive.

An interesting and unpretentious little volume on gardening, A New Zealand Garden, by "A Suffolk Lady," comes from Mr. Elliot Stock (3s. 6d. net). It hardly pretends to compete as literature with the works of Mrs. Earle and the others who have made gardening a popular subject for books, but there is a pleasant air of sound health and good sense about it. People who, like the author, are practical gardeners will be interested in a great many of her remarks about flowers, birds, and insects.

The three little books by Mr. Hyatt published separately are now to be got uniformly bound in pale green and linen, enclosed in a case. They are A Garden of Pleasant Flowers, which we noticed lately; A Book of Sundial Mottoes, and A Garden Lover's Birthday Book (Philip Wellby, 10/6 net). The Birthday Book is an apt and charming collection of sayings, in prose and poetry, about gardens since the time of Solomon. The quaint mottoes on sundials have furnished a little book of sermons on stones. Whether in texts or not, they convey many a lesson, as if their wisdom had slowly matured under the warm sun and wit had gathered in one word. "Allez-vous," says a French motto, and the passer-by may read all that is implied; "Sine umbra nihil," moralises the Latin, and Grief leaning on the stone catches at consolation. "It is later than you think," warns the English voice.

The fifth and final volume (S-Z) of the new edition of Bryan's Dictionary of Painters and Engravers, revised and enlarged under the supervision of Dr. George C. Williamson, is to hand from Messrs. Bell (21s. net). Considerable space has been allotted to men recently dead, the most important of whom are Watts, entrusted to Mr. Marion H. Spielmann; Whistler, to Mr. G. R. Dennis; Vereshchagin, to Mr. H. Rayment; and Frederick Sandys, who has been dealt with by Dr. Williamson himself. The article on Whistler is particularly full and able and the list of his etchings is claimed by the editor to be far the most complete that has yet appeared. The revision has been very thorough throughout the volume, many articles having been entirely re-written and much new matter which has recently come to light having been added. An interesting example of this is Mr. Langton Douglas' article on Sassetta, a painter to whom connoisseurs and historians have only lately begun to do justice. The proposed supplement, dealing with artists who have died while the book was in the press, has been postponed, but the editor hopes to produce it in time. A word should be added for the very fine full-page illustrations, over a hundred in number, which make the handsome volume a still more desirable possession.

A useful little book for amateurs of music is The Concert-Goer, A Handbook of the Orchestra and Orchestral Music, by William H. Daly (Paterson and Sons). Mr. Daly's object is to give the concert-goer a little more notion of what he, or she, is hearing, by explaining in a simple, brief fashion what an orchestra is and what forms of music it is intended to express. He begins by tracing the development of the orchestra from the close of the sixteenth century and examining its constitution; he then describes the instruments and combinations of instruments of which it is composed, and passes on to analyse a Symphony, an Overture, a Concerto, and various forms of what is known as Programme Music. His chapter on the conductor (seeing that the conductor—especially when he is Mr. Henry J. Wood—is of quite as much interest to a large number of the audience as the music) will be read with avidity. The book is elementary, but none the less likely to be useful on that account.

Many will be glad to hear that Messrs. Routledge have issued a cheap edition of the late Stepniak's book, The Russian Peasantry, their Agrarian Condition, Social Life, and Religion. It is now nearly ten years since Stepniak died and the work is therefore not strictly up to date; but, as the writer of the Preface remarks, the Russia of to-day remains the same as that of ten years ago.

With spring in the air a very timely publication is The Camera in the Fields, a useful guide to nature photography by F. C. Snell (Unwin, 5s.). Mr. Snell's aim is to provide an elementary and at the same time practical little book for the express purpose of guiding the efforts of beginners in the practice of Natural History Photography. His book is not confined to the art of "stalking," for he recognises that if study of animals, birds, and so forth is the object, much may be done at home and with sitters in captivity; but he gives both sides of the question their due, and his sensible remarks on matters of which he is clearly a master himself should be of great value to students of ornithology, zoology, entomology, and botany. The book is lavishly illustrated with reproductions of photographs, which we presume to be of Mr. Snell's own taking. If that is the case he is an exceptionally clever and artistic photographer and the results are inspiring.

BOOK SALES

ON March 23 at Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge's sale, a set of first editions of Harrison Ainsworth's novels, 106 volumes, realised £66; E. B. Browning's Sonnets, privately printed at Reading, 1847, excessively rare and apparently the only copy sold by auction in the country, £33; S. Daniel's Poetical Works, 1718, formerly belonging to Charles Lamb, with MS. notes by him and Coleridge and three letters from the latter to the former, £39 10s.; Martin Chuzzlewit, first edition, 1848, with original corrected proof-sheets, £29 10s.; Dr. John Hall, Shakespeare's son-in-law, Select Observations on English Bodies, first edition, £25; Lord Lilford's Coloured Figures of the Birds of the British Islands, 1885-97, first edition with index, £51; Coryat's Crudities, 1611, apparently a presentation copy from the author to John Davies of Hereford, £55.

ON March 24 at Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge's sale, Edmond Malone's copy of the Supplement to Johnson and Steevens's edition of Shakespeare, 1780, with autograph notes by Malone and original miniature portrait of Lord Southampton painted for Malone by Sylvester Harding, was sold for £91; Dr. Watt's Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707, first edition, £43; the Kelmscott Press Chaucer, 1896, £45.

ON Saturday, March 25, more Kelmscott Press books were sold, the result being to show that the prices, even of vellum copies, are at present falling. The vellum copy of the Chaucer, which fetched £520 in 1902, went last week for £300. The Story of the Glittering Plain, 1891, one of six copies, inscribed "Frederick S. Ellis from William Morris," fetched £51 (Ellis sale, £114); W. Morris, Poems by the Way, 1891, £25 (Ellis, £60); W. Morris, The Defence of Guenevere, 1892, £20 (Ellis, £40); W. Morris, A Dream of John Ball, 1892, £19 10s.; Recuyell of the Histories of Troye, 1892, translated by W. Caxton, £40 (Ellis, £61); Shakespeare's Poems, 1893, £61 (Ellis, £44); Life of Thomas Wolsey, Cardinal Archbishop of York, 1893, £35 (Ellis, £44); Sidonia the Sorceress, by William Meinhold, 1893, £25 (Ellis, £48); W. Morris, The Wood Beyond the World, 1894, £21; P. B. Shelley, Poetical Works, 1895, 3 vols. £61 (Ellis, £89); R. Herrick, Poems, 1895, £30; W. Morris, The Well at the World's End, 1895, £40; Laudes Beatae Mariae Virginis, edited by S. C. Cockerell, 1896, the first Kelmscott book printed in red, black and blue, £20; W. Morris, The Water of the Wondrous Isles, 1897, £40; W. Morris, The Sundering Flood, £20; Some German Woodcuts of the Fifteenth Century, 1897, £25. All these were on vellum. The Romance of Syr Percival de Gales, 1895, fourth edition, printed by J. O. Halliwell, Morris's own copy, on paper, £26.

At the same sale, Poems; Written by Wil. Shake-speare Gent., 1640, with an original impression of the portrait by Marshall, original edition, slightly defective, fetched £205; a second folio, 1632, £108, and a fourth folio, 1685, £47. R. Allot's England's Parnassus, original edition, 1600, sold for £50; Herrick's Hesperides, 1648, first edition, £75; Milton's Poems, 1645, first edition, £86; More's Utopia, first edition, £49; Coverdale's Bible, Antwerp, 1535, the first edition of the Bible in English, £80.

The sale of the extensive and valuable library of John Scott, Esq., C.B., Halkhill, Largs, Ayrshire, was begun on Monday the 27th March by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge.

A very large collection of books relating to the name and history of Mary Queen of Scots, is exciting attention, and further on there will be every reason for a large crowd.

The following were the highest prices given on the first day of the sale (March 27). John Adamson's The Muses Welcome to the High and Mightie Prince James King of Great Britain, &c., at his Happie return to Scotland in 1617. First edition, £15 10s. Eight entries appear under the name of St. Augustine: De Civitate Dei lib. xxii., fine printed in roman letter, 1486, £52; another edition, 1470, £45. Another edition, 1473, £16; another, 1475, £20: a set of the Bannatyne Club Publications, £139; Barbour's The Actes and Life of the Most Victorious Conqueror, Robert Bruce, King of Scotland, &c. &c. Edin., 1620, £10 10s.

Venerable Bede's Opera, £12; the Geographia de Francesco Berlinghieri (1480), £100; the Holy Bible, King James's or Authorised Version, 1633, £25.

Blundeville (Thos.); His Exercises, containing Sixe Treaties to the furtherance of the Arte of Navigation, 1594, £9 15s. Boeces History and Chronicles of Scotland, 1531, £11 10s. The same, 1536, £24. Boethius De Consolatione Philosophiae, &c., 1476, £15 10s.

Psalmorum Davidis Paraphrasis Poetica Geo Buchanani Scoti. James Boswell's copy, with signed inscription by him on fly-leaf and "James Boswell, 1763. I bought this for 2d. at Greenwich when I was walking with Mr. Samuel Johnson," £15.

Bourne's book called The Treasure for Travellers, black letter, 1578, £10 10s. Rev. Zachary Boyd's Last Battell of the Soule in Death, first edition, 2 vols., 1628, £13 5s. (this book once brought fifty guineas when two booksellers competed with each other for the same customer); Breydenbach's Sanctarum Peregrinationum, 1486, £145; and Brunet's Manuel du Librairie, 9 vols., £10 10s. Altogether on the first day, £1569 14s.

The interesting MSS. sold lately by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge include Thackeray's autograph MS. of part of Pendennis, and also six rough and traced sketches for the same novel; these were sold for £52, while the manuscript changed hands at £290. The original notes for the Four Georges brought £199. A carefully finished pen-and-ink drawing of a "New York Loafer," dating from Thackeray's first visit to America, went earlier in the same sale for £15. It was accompanied by an autograph description of the subject. Other drawings sold at the same time were a pen-and-ink portrait of Evans, of Evans' Rooms, on a sheet of notepaper (£7), and a small sketch of a little girl blowing bubbles, signed in full and dated May 10, 1850 (£10). On the same day a christening mug was sold at Messrs. Puttick and Simpson's rooms, with a letter from Thackeray to "My dear Mrs. Fairfax" asking her acceptance of the mug for her little girl, and signed "W. M. T. and Fammely."

The most characteristic of all these relics was a pair of water-colour drawings, placed in Messrs. Sotheby's hands, depicting "M. Solomons, Gentilhomme Anglais, avec Mme. Solomons et M. Ab. Solomons, voyageant sur le Continent." In these drawings Thackeray developed a particular variation of a theme to which he constantly returned, both with brush or pencil and pen—the insular Briton of the first half of the nineteenth century setting out in full insular war-paint for the chosen resorts of our countrymen at that period in France, in Italy, on the Rhine. Another variant of the same picture is the drawing of "Major and Mrs. Hobkirk for the Continent," included by Mrs. Ritchie in her introduction to Vanity Fair in the Biographical Edition of Thackeray's works. These drawings of the Solomons family were sold for £41.

The Charles Reade MSS. sold at Messrs. Sotheby's on Friday 24th included Gold, A Drama, and the opening chapters of It's Never too Late to Mend, on which the play was founded, £10 5s.; Love me Little, Love me Long, £33; two portions of The Cloister and the Hearth, £24; and Hard Cash, with agreement signed by Charles Dickens and W. H. Wills for the appearance of the work in All the Year Round, 1864, £95. Charles Reade's letter book was sold for £38.

THE DRAMA

"LADY BEN" AT THE COMEDY THEATRE

It would be an interesting but enormously lengthy task to trace the influence of Scribe on our English plays down from its inception to the present day. M. René Doumic has done something of the kind for his influence on French plays, but to do it in full would take volumes. That influence has almost faded out now on the other side of the Channel; here it is fast fading, but there is still enough life in it to affect any author who does not approach the stage as a stranger, with a mind that is a blank so far as the traditions and forms of the drama are concerned. It is impossible, of course, for Mr. George P. Bancroft, the author of the clever and ingenious Lady Ben produced on Tuesday, to approach the stage in any such manner. He has grown up, one may wager, in an atmosphere of the stage, and it must have been just about during his most impressionable years that the Scribe influence became of the greatest weight and power in England by the production at the Haymarket and elsewhere of a number of plays by Scribe's great follower, M. Sardou. The result is that Mr. Bancroft cannot, if he would, come with a perfectly open mind to the making of a play. He may bring a score of fresh and first-hand ideas on life, gathered for himself by independent observation; he may aim most whole-heartedly at depicting not incident but character, at providing not good "curtains" but good "psychology"; and all the while as he develops his play he must be fighting against traditions, against the cast which his mind has taken through descent and years of association with the stage, against the Scribe and Sardouesque pieces of ingenuity which insist on presenting themselves to his quick imagination as necessary things in a play. It is one of the penalties of coming of a famous theatrical family.

In Lady Ben, for instance, we are asked to accept the possibility of a father and son having handwritings so exactly alike that the orthographical experts in a law-court would certainly be unable to tell which was the writer of a certain packet of love-letters. Such cases may be not only possible, but common, and yet one is no sooner asked to accept the fact in Lady Ben than we catch the old influence at work. In the third act again the situation is saved by what is really nothing other than an extraordinarily ingenious and positively brilliant piece of stage-trickery, the abstraction of that same packet of letters from the pocket of a fur-coat and the substitution of a bundle of receipts. It had been most carefully and cleverly prepared for; when it happened it seemed completely natural; and yet it was, as a fact, nothing but stage-trickery, the kind of thing, at any rate, upon which, one feels, the great issues of life do not really hang. A less ingenious piece of trickery is the device which makes a woman write a note, in the hall apparently, to a man she has only just left upstairs, and a note which contained things that no sensible woman, even when in love, would be likely to put on paper. Whatever the proportion of things like these to the central ideas of a play, their very presence in it inclines one, and in this case quite unfairly, to put it down not as a piece of original observation and thought, but as a made-up thing, a thing inherited from playwrights of a superseded school.

Now it was very obvious that such things as these are not the things which came first in the author's mind as he wrote, not the things which really interested him. He was really interested in the delightful, indulgent father—brewer and baronet—whose hobby, whose idol, is his only son. How far will a father's love go? Is it, like a woman's, ready to go all lengths, to bear even undeserved shame and disgrace, for the sake of the idol? Mr. Bancroft's answer is: Yes, it is. There was something very attractive about this picture of Sir Henry Ballantyne, the devoted father, with all the little eccentricities and oddities of a man with an overmastering passion carefully noted and humorously displayed. Interwoven with this story of father and son is the story of the love of Lady Ben, an ill-treated and all but deserted wife, for young Harry Ballantyne. The effect on an unhappy woman of thirty-two (for that we learn in an amusing scene is Lady Ben's exact age) of the love of a really "nice" and honest boy of twenty-two—Mr. Bancroft was clearly interested in that, and he has painted Lady Ben's passion with great sympathy, delicacy and insight. But then again he has had to fight with his preoccupations. When Harry Ballantyne, as boys will, sees a new pretty girl, who happens to be, for him, the girl, and falls straight-way in love with her, it is not Lady Ben's feelings and thoughts to which the attention of the audience is directed so much as the contrivances for the dénouement. A scene in which Lady Ben explains to her friend what she feels passes almost unnoticed because we know that Sir Henry Ballantyne is coming every moment to see her, and that her husband is in the house, waiting to catch them together in circumstances which have been engineered with no end of cleverness to make the pair look guilty of an intrigue. There again Mr. Bancroft's ingenuity—his theatrical inheritance—has been a little too strong for him.

It is a strange and peculiarly interesting case. Mr. Bancroft was born with what it takes other people years of work to acquire—the "sense" and the craft of the theatre. He has ideas, too, in plenty, and no lack of humour, and the story of his dramatic development will be the story of the adjustment of his ideas with his stage-craft; of his desire to treat his characters as men and women, with his inherited temptation to treat them in the Scribe manner, as pieces of wood to be fitted together in a puzzle. Clever and thoughtful as Lady Ben is, it seems to show that the adjustment is not yet complete. When it is, we shall have a sterling playwright.

Lady Ben was not, in one respect, very fortunate in its actors. Miss Darragh, who played the leading part, has no little charm and emotional expressiveness, but she lacks force, weight and personality. She was hardly strong enough to stand up against the Sir Henry Ballantyne, on the whole an admirable performance, of Mr. J. D. Beveridge, and the Sir Benjamin Allix of Mr. Frank Cooper. Mr. Charles Maude brings a popular name and an unaffected, pleasant manner to start him in what we hope will be a successful career, and in Miss Betty Callish, who played the French maid in the piece, the stage has gained from Mr. Tree's Academy a very pretty, bright and intelligent soubrette.

FINE ART

MR RACKHAM'S COLOUR DRAWINGS

It was Kipling (was it not?) who once said, "To write a child's book, to write a book that will truly please children—ah! that is something worth doing." And to illustrate a child's book, to illustrate it in a way that will truly please children, that is another thing worth doing. For the Child is no mean critic, nor a lenient. If the drawings in her fairy book are displeasing to the nursery princess, she will make no allowances for the illustrator. Her father, a man of superior culture and intellect, may appreciate the fact that the illustrator has "studied the best models," may recognise here the influence of Durer, there the influence of Japan; but these considerations weigh not at all with his little daughter who less learnedly, but assuredly not less effectually, criticises the artist's work with her queries: "What's that meant for?"—"What is he doing?"

Such questions rarely rise to the lips of children so fortunate as to possess a book illustrated by Mr. Arthur Rackham. In their stead we hear delighted murmurings: "Oh! look at this funny old woman!" "Did you ever see such a nose?" For Mr. Rackham is as keenly interested in noses as Mr. Shandy. It is in his treatment of this prominent feature that he finds vent for his most mirth-provoking talent. The other afternoon at the Leicester Galleries, where Mr. Rackham's illustrations to "Rip van Winkle" are now being shown, little ripples of laughter broke forth spontaneously from the grown-up children who were looking at the drawings. And what made their laughter so eloquent a testimonial to Mr. Rackham's art was that to provoke it no reference to the catalogue was necessary. The humour of Mr. Rackham's drawing is intrinsic; it does not depend on the text like a sketch in some "comic" paper which requires two or three lines of type for the elucidation of the joke. In the humorous illustrations to "Rip Van Winkle"—and all, it should be noted, are not humorous nor intended to be so—the fun is there independent of all externals, in the expressions and attitudes of the quaint little gnomes and elves. Indeed, of Mr. Rackham, as of Rossetti, it might be said that "he draws just what he chooses, taking from his author's text nothing more than a hint and an opportunity." We can read this determination in the very lines which the artist has selected for illustration. Occasionally, it is true, we find him taking from the text some such well-defined action as "He would sit on a wet rock and fish all day." And when this is the case the drawing will be efficient rather than épatant. But more often he chooses some indefinite phrase which gives the greatest possible scope to his inventive powers, and it is in illustrating these that he shows his varied gifts to the greatest advantage. "The Kaatskill mountains had always been haunted by strange beings" . . . "Their visages too were peculiar" . . . "He preferred making friends among the rising generation, with whom he soon grew into great favour": these are the lines which inspire him to his happiest compositions and his most telling imaginative conceptions.

How charmingly he depicts old Rip "making friends among the rising generation!" In one corner of the drawing the old man sits in his chair, leaning forward, gesticulating, the firelight, coming from the direction of the spectator, throwing his shadow grotesquely upon the wall; in the other corner a group of children sit nestled at his feet, completing the balance and continuing the rhythm of the composition. In some ways this is the most arresting of Mr. Rackham's illustrations, for the lighting, arrangement and character of the drawing are handled with consummate skill. It is intensely dramatic too, and the shadow introduces a touch of that grotesqueness in which the artist excels. But his inventiveness, shown subtly here in the lighting and arrangement, is more obviously visible when he deals with the "strange beings" who haunt the Kaatskill mountains. Far away now from the world of the real, no limit is set to his creative whimsicality, and he can people "these fairy mountains" with the weirdest and most grotesque creatures which his brain can conceive. And here, perhaps, Mr. Rackham most clearly shows his rare discretion and self-control; for though indulging his fancy to the full he is careful not to overstep the narrow boundary line which separates the grotesque from the repulsive. There are draughtsmen who, endeavouring to amuse children, merely frighten and repel them. Mr. Rackham is not of their company, and though he shows us sights which frighten Rip Van Winkle, the nursery connoisseur will not share his alarm.

To insist on the attractiveness to children of Mr. Rackham's drawings is not to belittle his art. On the contrary, in art, as in literature, the difficulty is not in coming down but in coming up to the level of the nursery. To compete for its favour with the "Arabian Nights," "Grimm's Fairy Tales" and "Alice in Wonderland" is to aim at classic rank; at what in this transient existence we call immortality. It is because of this that one fears lest Mr. Rackham should be led astray into catering for grown-ups, lest he should take adults too seriously and children not seriously enough. One grows suspicious at his appearance in an édition de luxe. His work is certainly worthy of reproduction with all possible honours, but . . . One thinks of the Caldecotts of days long past, and wishes to see "Rip Van Winkle" in some such format, that may be dirtied, and prized, and loved.

No, Mr. Rackham is too good to be taken from the child by the book-collector, from the nursery into the library. At present his art shows no signs of deterioration, rather of increased concentration and strength. But in these days of limited editions there is always a fear: a fear not that his illustrated works should become scarce, but that his illustrations should become more elaborate, more complicated, and so lose that simplicity and directness which form so great a part of their present charm, qualities which a child audience imperiously demands, qualities never found wanting in great art.

A little colour is a dangerous thing, and the transition from pure black and white to colour is ever perilous to the draughtsman. Mr. Rackham, who won his spurs in pure line work, has accomplished the passage very successfully and shows himself as versatile in colour as in line. He will paint you landscapes in pure water-colour, mediæval figure subjects in body colour, tinted drawings like these "Rip Van Winkle" illustrations, all soundly executed and pleasant to behold. But here again he must beware of elaboration, more especially when he is working for reproduction. It is a charming convention, this pen-and-ink outline with slight washes of colour, but its charm is largely dependent on its simplicity. For purposes of reproduction flat washes are desirable and the purer the colour the better for the reproduction. Subtleties of modelling are apt to be lost in the process, when the final result is less pleasing than that produced by simple contours. When an artist is working expressly for reproduction it is always a doubtful compliment to say that the original is better than the reproduction. In the originals the colour is always pleasant and has often a sombre mysteriousness well suited to the subject. Consequently it may be urged that the process and not Mr. Rackham should be blamed for any imperfections in the reproductions, and to this one can only reply that an artist never errs in remembering the limitations of his art, and that when he is working for reproduction in colour he must consider the possibilities and limitations of that medium, and work with an eye not only to the original but to the reproduction. Mr. Rackham is too accomplished an artist not to be aware of these facts, and from the very variety of styles in this series of colour drawings one may imagine that he is still experimenting with this newest and least known of media. One can only wonder respectfully at his varied accomplishments, accomplishments which show grace and beauty as well as humour and invention, and finally congratulate him on the success of his experiments.

ART SALES

A MINIATURE oval portrait of Dryden was sold by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge on March 23 for £20 10s. At the same sale 63 French engravings, by Cochin, Coypel, and others, were sold for £76; 200 of Hogarth's engravings, collected in 1772 by Dr. Ducarel, £25, and 87 drawings in water-colour and pencil made for Howitt's books on natural history, &c., £35 10s.

At Christie's on March 24 a pair of Old Worcester circular bowls, painted with fan ornaments in colours and gold in the Japanese taste, fetched 18 guineas; a set of three oviform vases and covers and two beakers in Old Nankin, 75 guineas; a pair of cylindrical vases in Old Nankin, 180 guineas; a pair of bottles in Old Nankin, 30 guineas; a vase and cover in Old Nankin, 46 guineas, and a set of three oviform vases and two beakers, 100 guineas. A Louis XVI. clock by D'Heilly of Paris in ormolu case on marble plinth sold for 64 guineas, and a German seventeenth-century agate bowl, silver-mounted and part enamelled and painted, 59 guineas.

On Monday last Messrs. Christie's sales included a gold snuff-box with miniature by G. Engleheart, 56 guineas; and the following miniatures: Lady G. Fitzpatrick (G. Engleheart), 56 guineas; Sir Elijah Impey (John Smart), 39 guineas; Lady Jane Murray (G. Engleheart), 42 guineas; Maria Countess of Coventry, 38 guineas; Master Fielding (Plimer), 42 guineas; Mrs. Daniell, wife of James Daniell, Governor of Masulipatam, 56 guineas; and Madame Récamier (Augustin), 120 guineas. A pair of Manton pistols, circa 1784, fetched 20 guineas, and a pair of duelling pistols by A. V. Leheda of Prague, 1833, from the Duke of Cambridge's collection, 36 guineas.

On Tuesday last Messrs. Christie sold the Bishop of Truro's choice and complete collection of engravings after Sir T. Lawrence; many of which had been presented by Lawrence to the owner's father. A proof of Master Lambton, by Samuel Cousins, first state, fetched 220 guineas, a record price. Other engravings by Cousins were: Lady Acland and family, presentation proof, 90 guineas; Countess of Blessington, 41 guineas; the Calmady Children, 35 guineas; Lady Harriet Clive, 31 guineas; Miss Rosamund Croker, 86 guineas; Lady Dover and Child, proof before letters, 150 guineas; Harriet Countess Gower and her Child, whole length, first state, 155 guineas; the same, engraver's proof before letters, 105 guineas; Lady Grey and Children, similar proof, 115 guineas; Elizabeth Countess Grosvenor, similar proof, 78 guineas; Miss Julia Peel, whole length, as a child, proof before letters, 62 guineas;

Lady Peel, proof before letters, 82 guineas; the Right Hon. William Pitt, proof before letters, 52 guineas; Richard, Marquis of Wellesley, 25 guineas; and Arthur Duke of Wellington, 20 guineas. By G. Clint: The Masters Antrobus, whole length, 27 guineas; Mrs. Jessop, 40 guineas. By J. Ward, R.A.: Sir Francis Baring, with Mr. C. Baring and Mr. Wall, 56 guineas. By J. R. Smith: J. P. Curran, 30 guineas. By C. Turner: Marchioness of Exeter, proof before letters, 42 guineas; the same, engraver's proof, 90 guineas; Mrs. Stratton, 40 guineas. By F. Bartolozzi: Miss Farren, in stipple, proof before letters in bistre, 76 guineas.

SCIENCE

A BELATED EXPOSURE

MEDICINE is one of the most difficult of the sciences—rivalled only by sociology in this regard—and it dates from the non-scientific era. It has a history of centuries as an art for every year that it can boast as a science. For these and other reasons—such as the notorious necessity for “bluff,” “putting a bold face on it,” “gaining the patient's confidence,” and the like—physicians of the past have ever been ranked amongst the dogmatists; this in spite of their compendious ignorance and incessant retractions, mutual contradictions and even self-contradictions. It was part of their business to ape omniscience, a proceeding which pays as well to-day as ever in the past. If there was any subject of which they knew less than another—though, indeed, I doubt whether the assumption is justified—it was the action of drugs on the normal body; and conspicuously was this true of the actions of alcohol. Now it is the peculiarity of this compound that all the indications which it appears to furnish to empiricism and superficiality are falsified by serious and systematic study. Nevertheless our professional forefathers held certain beliefs and inculcated them into a willing audience. The laity—small blame to it—holds those beliefs almost without reservation to-day: but experimental pharmacology, supported by every other relevant branch of modern science—experimental psychology, clinical medicine, the study of insanity, criminology and a host besides—now repudiates them. Thus it comes about that though the first gropings for the truth did not proceed from the medical profession—which thus resembles all other institutions and authorities and established things—and though the first few medical men who, sixty years ago, stood up against alcohol and lies, were laughed at and branded, like the worthy of all ages, as cranks, yet recently some fifteen thousand doctors presented a petition to the Government, praying that the truth about alcohol be taught in our schools, whilst the leaders of the profession in this and every other country have declared themselves against alcohol—erstwhile the vaunted panacea—and last week there was held in London a medical conference, presided over by the King's physician, at which it was resolved that the profession must set its shoulder to the almost superhuman task of educating the Board of Education in this matter. I have been itching to write about this subject in the ACADEMY since my first opportunity twenty-seven months ago, and my only excuse for what may fairly be impugned as a dereliction of a positive and imperative duty is that it was necessary, in the first place, to establish a presumption that the writer was neither a fanatic nor pecuniarily interested in the matter. It is still widely believed that no one can write against alcohol without one or other of these antecedents, and I have even heard it declared that the interest of one of our foremost students of the question—Mr. Joseph Rowntree of York—is due to the fact that he has a pecuniary concern with a rival beverage. Some of us, who have the honour of Mr. Rowntree's acquaintance and have read his famous book, may be excused for the contempt which such insinuations inspire in us. Further, we may be excused for despising the methods by which we are governed when we remember the pronouncements on this subject to which the names of our leading politicians are attached, and which are left in indecent obscurity so soon as their partisan value is seen to be dubious. With the attitude of the English politician and publicist we may contrast that of their French brethren, who are now conducting a magnificent campaign against one of the most hideous evils of the day.

My present concern is not with the sociological aspects of the question, though they are as truly scientific as any other. It is for others, who speak with greater weight, to combat the absurd delusion that the appetite for alcohol is unlike all other phenomena in being a first cause, and not itself a consequence of many fell causes. But leaving this, and merely remarking that there is no physician of my acquaintance that does not use alcohol in his practice, and quoting Sir Thomas Barlow's opinion of last Friday—how weighty only the initiate can know—that he would not care to be without alcohol in cases of collapse, I pass to the purely pharmacological aspects of the question.

Perhaps the most intelligible and certain of the pharmacological actions of alcohol is that it is a certain reducer of the temperature. It is such in virtue of two actions. In the first place, it increases the stability of the compound in which oxygen is carried in the blood. The red colouring-matter of the blood—hæmoglobin—normally forms a loose compound with the oxygen which it acquires in its passage through the lungs; and this compound, oxy-hæmoglobin, is readily broken up when the blood reaches tissues avid of oxygen. Then oxidation and consequent production of heat can take place. But alcohol, in some unknown manner, increases the stability of oxy-hæmoglobin, thereby lessening combustion, lowering the temperature, and tending to the familiar accumulation of superfluous tissue so characteristic of the beer-drinker.

The second manner in which alcohol lowers the temperature has led to the almost universal delusion that it “keeps one warm.” The drug paralyses the muscular tissue of the blood-vessels of the skin, so that they dilate and flood the sensitive surface with warm blood. This action necessarily cools the blood, whilst making the skin feel warmer. In this, as in other matters, our judgments tend to be superficial; our wisdom but skin-deep.

The most important property of alcohol is, of course, its action on the nervous system; in which its presence can be detected after death when there is no trace of it elsewhere. Here it is of interest to observe that the drug which is so universally abused as a stimulant, is used by the physician as a sedative. In fevers it is alike one of the most valuable of foods, of febrifuges, and of hypnotics.

The most characteristic action of alcohol on the consciousness is its heightening of the “organic sense of well-being,” and its weakening of the powers of inhibition, that is to say, of the control exercised by the higher centres upon the lower. Whoso knows the rôle of inhibition in cricket, and the outer and inner history of the Yorkshire eleven since Lord Hawke has controlled it, will appreciate this fact. But it is the remarkable fact that alcohol weakens the mental power in normal conditions; a marked contrast to the action of coffee. Numerous experiments in psychological laboratories have shown that whilst the subject imagines that he is adding up the column of figures or solving the equation with exceptional ease and rapidity, he is actually taking longer than usual, and with a larger number of errors. One is tempted to speculate on the explanation of this fact, but the whole question of the sense of ease, well-being, and efficiency, with its disorders, is too long for present discussion.

Of course it is not possible to condense a text-book into a brief article; and I have merely been able to offer two or three facts for consideration. If one left the pharmacology of alcohol to consider its pathological effects it would be to write a treatise on pathology and insanity. But I would rather omit further details, and consider the general issues. The facts I have stated are disputed by no competent person. They are to be found rehearsed at length in any modern text-book in any language—whatever the personal habits of the author, whether he be Hedonist or fanatic. They have now been familiar for many years, and are acted upon by competent physicians everywhere. If the reader should wonder how it is that the modern teaching so entirely contradicts that of the past, I would refer him to the former non-existence of the pharmacological or experimental method. Should he think—bless him!—that this volte-face of the doctors is unique, I will give him a parallel instance—relatively trivial, but instructive. Foxglove, or digitalis, the most valuable and universally used of cardiac stimulants, which every one of us is assuredly destined to take some day, unless he be hanged or drowned, was introduced and used for decades as a cardiac sedative in supposed cases of over-action. The reason was that it slows the pulse. Pharmacology has now shown that it owes its strengthening action on the heart-beat to this very fact which was once taken as the index to its weakening power! This, too, was a surface-judgment.

The main question raised is involved in the appearance of this article. If I cudgelled my memory for the data and wrote an unoriginal article on the life of King Henry VIII., no editor would print it. For me solemnly to inform the reader that that redoubtable monarch had six wives would be an impertinence which would never pass the editor's table. The details of Henry's life are essentially nugatory: they are no more than glorified gossip, illustrating no principle, confuting no error, unveiling no truth which any one may not observe in the course of his daily round. But it is possible for me, without a spark of originality, to recite commonplace facts which are to be found in any primer, which do illustrate principles, the neglect of which blights millions of human lives and personally affects every inhabitant of these islands; and yet to insult nobody. I am happy to think that no one will be paid for writing such an article as this fifty years hence—when we have educated our educators.

C. W. SALEEBY.

MUSIC

A MODERN SYMPHONY

[A Symphony by Sir Hubert Parry, performed by Mr. Charles Williams and the London Symphony Orchestra.]

ON March 21, the third of an interesting series of concerts given by Mr. Charles Williams and the London Symphony Orchestra took place at Queen's Hall. This was the last of the set as originally advertised, but probably all who were present noted with pleasure that the programme of a fourth to take place on April 7 was sketched out on the last page of the analytical programme of this concert. Mr. Williams is at present little known as a conductor in London and may in this connection be considered an amateur in the highest and most real sense of the word, since he undertakes these concerts from sheer love of the work. They are given by him, and the programmes, at any rate as far as the orchestral items are concerned, represent his own taste in music. When we see a set of programmes, of which the first begins with a suite by Bach and the third ends with a Symphony by Parry; when each concert includes important works by Brahms, the Symphonies in F and D, the "Tragic" Overture and Variations on a theme by Haydn; when the rest is made up of a rarely heard Symphony by Mozart and shorter specimens of the work of Haydn, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Weber and Dvořák, we can feel sure that we are in the hands of a true lover of the classics and prepare our minds for a more restful enjoyment than modern concert-givers often allow us. Nor are Mr. Williams' practical powers as a conductor unworthy of his task as a musician. Throughout, he conducted with the greatest care and reverence, and in the third concert he evidently profited well by the experience of the earlier concerts to add confidence and strength to his painstaking attention to detail. For this reason I was sorry that we heard the F major Symphony of Brahms, that bold and rugged giant, in the first concert; it would have come better later, but as it would necessarily have turned the Parry Symphony out of the programme of the third, one cannot complain, since that work, being almost unknown to performers and audience alike, required all the mastery of an experienced conductor to make it successful in its effect. Mr. Williams must be congratulated on the result. Its reintroduction to a London audience was certainly the event of the concert and it is to be hoped that it will not be laid on the shelf for another period of eight years before it is heard again, but that it may now take a real and permanent place in the répertoire of the London Symphony Orchestra and in the hearts of the people. It suffers, however, from the too prevalent complaint of "programme." It is only natural that when Sir Hubert Parry was asked to write a Symphony for production at Cambridge, the thought of University life and all that it means to a young man should be uppermost in his mind and that consequently an atmosphere of high spirits, youthful enthusiasm and noble aspiration should pervade the work. Not only is it natural but right and inevitable, since music must make its appeal by being in sympathy with the tone of mind of the hearers. But the zealous analyst need hardly have wearied us with the details of undergraduate life in term and vacation which he has managed to append to the various sections of the work. The fact is that these qualities I have mentioned, this genial warmth of good spirits, this lofty aim and manly bearing, are not only the attributes of any hypothetical undergraduate, rather they are the qualities by which the composer of the Symphony is known and loved by all who are privileged to come into personal contact with him. If the Symphony is programme music, then it is autobiography; and it was the subject of the Symphony who was so hardly persuaded to step to the front of the dress-circle and bow acknowledgments when it was all over. It is just himself, and so ought to be loved and honoured by all with whom it is now the fashion to profess this ardent enthusiasm for English music about which we hear so much; an enthusiasm which like other patriotism often degenerates into mere "jingoism." Sir Edward Elgar, speaking at the new Birmingham University the other day, paid an eloquent and fitting tribute to one "whose name shall always be spoken of in this University with the deepest respect and affection, the head of our art in this country—Hubert Parry." Most people now admit that English music is a subject which Sir Edward Elgar understands, and therefore his words are worth quotation; and I give them since they may carry weight with some who have not yet taken the trouble to make a serious study of Sir Hubert Parry's music. But to return to the Symphony. The writer of the programme notes lays stress on two points, its "geniality" and "ingenuity." The first is apparent to all, the second, though true, does not protrude itself upon the attention; the music never becomes academic. There are perhaps places where the complexity of the score rather clouds the directness of the music and where the average listener gets a sensation that there is a great deal going on without quite knowing what, but such places are not frequent. The Symphony opens with a short introduction in F minor couched in the real Parry spirit of noble purpose, in which the interval of a rising sixth plays an important part. This is again used in the slow movement. The first Allegro which follows the introduction is full of life and spirit, for the most part direct and simple sounding, though it is really contrapuntally developed. In the later movements the points at which the note of inspiration sounded clearest were in the Trio of the Scherzo and in the slow movement. The theme of the first of these is a delightful duet between the clarinet and horn, most refreshing after the bustle and jollity of the earlier movement. The slow movement is always a special test of a composer's genius; it is so easy to become wearisome, so difficult to keep the interest sustained upon so exalted a level. It is like the much abused and rarely attained art of preaching. But here Parry rises to great heights and allows all the inward dignity of his nature to appear. The ending, especially, is very beautiful and brought with it some of that repose of feeling which one experiences in listening to the slow movements of Beethoven and the great masters at their best. The finale is developed in a broad manner and works up to an exhilarating ending. It was here, however, that the complexity seemed a little tiring; but it was late and at the end of a long programme, so that it is probable that the tiredness was in the hearer, not made by the composer. My object has been to call attention to this fine work and to Mr. Williams' enterprise in reproducing it and generally in conducting these concerts. Were I attempting a report of the series there would be many things to mention, but I will only mention one in a few words and that is the extraordinary violin playing of the child Mischa Elman. There always seems something sad and unhealthy in these marvellous child performances, but nevertheless the power and mastery over the instrument which this boy possesses are something wonderful. He played Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D, which is a work containing almost every difficulty possible, and did so with the utmost assurance and ease. I cannot believe that the choice of this work was in accordance with Mr. Williams' taste, and it seems a pity to bring up a musical child on such a diet. It is neither milk for babes nor strong meat for men: rather it is a musical stimulant, pernicious for children, dangerous to adults. It was refreshing to hear the boy play a bit of Bach and the Beethoven Romance in G afterwards.

H. C. C.

CORRESPONDENCE

"JIM BLUDSO": A CORRECTION

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—There are at least two bad mistakes in the quotations from Colonel John Hay's "Jim Bludso," which appear in your issue of to-day.

The first destroys the metre, the second annihilates the sense of the line in which it appears. The correct readings are:

Of the line—

"And her furnace crammed with rosin and pine."

"And her furnace crammed—rosin and pine."

Of the line—

"He seen his duty a dead sure thing."

the correct reading is—

"He'd seen his duty a dead sure thing."

With reference to the supposition that the author of these ballads wrote them as "skits on the dialect poems then current in America," I fancy this is only the case with one of the number—that entitled "The Mystery of Gilgal"—and in that case the skit is not so much upon the dialect as upon sentiment of the Western poems of that date, cf. Joaquin Miller passim—and the delightful parody of him—was it Lowell's?

"For I've killed most all folks who care for me,
And I'm just as lonely as I can be,
So pass the whisky—let's have a spree."

"Little Breeches" and "Jim Bludso" are, despite their note of exaggeration, genuine and sincere work—not conceived in any vein of parody, and it is a curious fact, for the truth of which I can vouch, that even in the England of to-day the latter poem, used as a recitation, rarely fails of its effect, and that too with the most dissimilar audiences.

Apologising for the length of this letter,

HARRY QUILTER.

March 25.

[Our contributor writes: I quoted the last stanza of "Jim Bludso" from the authorised edition of Mr. Hay's poems (London, John Lane; Boston, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1897), revised by Mr. Hay himself. If Mr. Quilter will refer to this volume he will see that his memory has entirely misled him—that the text reads, "He seen his duty," not "He'd seen." With regard to the latter part of Mr. Quilter's letter, I cordially agree that both "Little Breeches" and "Jim Bludso" would be excellent for penny readings and similar entertainments, but what has that to do with their literary quality? Only Mr. Hay himself can say exactly what he had in his mind when he wrote these ballads, but I am so fortunate as to possess among my papers the following extract from the New York Times of September 25, 1898: "His (Mr. Hay's) production of 'The Wreck of the Prairie Belle' and 'Little Breeches' has been explained as the outcome of a desire to parody in a spirit of fun some of Bret Harte's dialect poems. He wrote a few poems of that kind in the expectation that they would be read in the same spirit in which they were written, and, after causing a little amusement, would be forgotten. His friends say he was greatly surprised to find that they were accepted by the public seriously as productions of literary merit." The authoritative character of the literary columns of the New York Times is beyond question.]

[We have to add that the mistake in the first line criticised by Mr. Quilter was not our contributor's doing.—The EDITOR.]

ENGLISH WORDS IN ITALY

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The author of a note in your issue of March 18 ascribes the Italian use of the word "raid" to the Jameson incident. The word was used in French long before the Jameson raid was thought of. It never did mean raid—and does not now—but is apparently a phonetic spelling of the English word "ride"—raid being as near as a Frenchman can get to our diphthongal rendering of the third vowel. The word is chiefly used to denote a long ride—say 100 miles—as a trial of strength and endurance of horse and man, but entirely without any idea of what is called a raid in English. I have seen it used for long bicycle rides, &c., in the sporting press, but the separation from the horse is quite modern.

"Smocking" is simply "smoking" (jacket), and is now the accepted word in France for the tail-less dinner jacket—vide any French tailor's advertisement. The garment, being a modern English invention, came across the Channel as a smoking (jacket), and "smoking" it has been ever since. Pronounce smo-kan(gue) as near as our alleged alphabet can express it.

March 22.

H. E. F.

MR. HARRISON'S "CHATHAM"

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—I quite agree with you that Mr. F. Harrison is not an ideal biographer of Lord Chatham. But may I call attention to a curious mistake in the book? Mr. Harrison says quite reasonably that Lord Chatham's peerage was not only well deserved, but quite according to precedent. And then he goes on:

"Peel and Gladstone are the only examples of Prime Ministers who at the end of their careers have rejected the honour on principle. William Pitt and Canning died in office quite young. Melbourne and Palmerston were peers."

Now no one would imagine from this that Lord Palmerston spent his whole career in the House of Commons, and died Prime Minister like Pitt and Canning. He was, of course, an Irish peer, but he never sat in the House of Lords like Lords Grey, Derby, Aberdeen, and Salisbury, as well as Lord Melbourne. It is also said that Addington, among others, "retired late in life to the Upper House." When Addington became Lord Sidmouth he was about ten years younger than Canning was when "he died in office quite young," and was afterwards Home Secretary for many years, and he survived his elevation about forty years.

March 25.

H. B. F.

THE CRESCENT STAR

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The "English astronomer" to whom Mr. John B. Tabb refers cannot be refuted. An ordinary star can never be seen within the cusps of the moon, since they of course embrace the dark remainder of the disc; but it is not impossible that, by catching the sunrays before illumination of the lowland around, some tall lunar peak just within the terminator (i.e., the mutual boundary of the bright and shaded areas) might give the effect of a "star" in this position.

With a telescope I have often observed this effect, not only "within the nether tip" but all along the line, so to say; though I am not sure that the phenomenon could be seen with the unaided eye.

It is difficult (for the present writer, at all events) to say what was the origin of the design to which Mr. Tabb directs notice.

The national flag of Turkey takes the form of a white "crescent" and star on a red ground; and that of Egypt a "crescent" and three stars, also on a red ground. The Byzantine origin of the Turkish emblem, in so far as the "crescent" is concerned, is well known—or may be found in any reference book—but I have not learned whence the Egyptians derived the device.

As a religious emblem the "crescent" evidently took its origin from moon-worship. Some pictures of the Madonna represent her with a "crescent" at the foot, and twelve stars above the head.

Maybe, in the "dust of systems and of creeds" the emblem—as with so much else originally Pagan—has insinuated itself into the Christian structure. The star is probably quite adventitious, put in to complete the design, and placed—with more regard for symmetry than actuality—midway between the cusps of the "crescent."

J. B. WALLIS.

THE FAILURE OF OPERA

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—With regard to your correspondent C's letter on opera we must distinguish, as the Italians say. No doubt Wagner in choosing mythological themes failed to see that what is fine as poetry will not bear representation on the stage, but this is not true of all such themes. Surely Glück's Orfeo and Iphigenia are admirable.

So in other ways are Don Giovanni (considered as it should be as music), The Huguenots and Il Barbiere, and many other grand operas might be named. It must however be admitted that the German taste for the romantic differs from English taste.

A German, a great admirer of Wagner, said to me, "You English do not care for the romantic," nor do we in the sense he meant. It is the choice of themes that is all important in the composition of opera. The Greek drama surely presents admirable themes.

H. D. BARCLAY.

MR. KIPLING'S TITLES

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The sources of Mr. Kipling's titles make an interesting note. The origin of "Traffics and Discoveries" was new and delightful to me. May I add that the title "Many Inventions" comes from the Book of Ecclesiastes, vii. 29, "Lo this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."

Will some one discover "Life's Handicap" for us?

FRIDA WOLFE.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

Berenson, Bernhard. Lorenzo Lotto. An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism. Revised edition, with sixty-four illustrations. Bell, 7s. 6d. net. (See p. 368.)

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

Notes from a Diary, 1896 to January 23, 1901. By the Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, G.C.S.I., F.R.S. Murray. Two Vols., 18s. (See page 356.)

Coke, The Hon. Henry J. Tracks of a Rolling Stone. With a portrait. Smith, Elder, 10s. 6d. net.
Gray, Joseph William. Shakespeare's Marriage: his departure from Stratford and other incidents in his life. Chapman & Hall, 10s. 6d. net. (See p. 357.)
Wildman, W. B. Life of S. Ealdhelm, first Bishop of Sherborne. Chapman & Hall, 2s. 6d. net.
Vignaud, Henry. Vie de Colomb. Paris: H. Wetter, 10f.
Tighe, Harry. A Queen of Unrest. The Story of Juana of Castile, Mother of Charles V. Born 1479, died 1555. Swan Sonnenschein, 6s.

CLASSICAL.

Aristotle's Politics. Translated by Benjamin Jowett. With Introduction, analysis and index by H. W. C. Davis, M.A. Clarendon Press, 3s. 6d.

FICTION.

Croker, B. M. The Old Cantonment. With other stories of India and elsewhere. Methuen, 6s.
Roosevelt, Florence. The Siren's Net. A Novel transcribed from life. Unwin, 6s.
Graham, Winifred. Wickedness in High Places. White, 6s.
Leaf, A. A Maid at large. Eveleigh Nash, 6s.
Rawson, Maud Stepney. Tales of kye Town. Constable, 6s.
Glanville, Ernest. A Rough Reformer. Constable, 6s.
Hamilton, Cosmo. Duke's Son. Heinemann, 6s. (See p. 367.)
St. Clair, William. Bendish. Swan Sonnenschein, 6s.
Rouse, Adelaide L. The Letters of Theodora. The Macmillan Co., 6s.
"Iota." Patricia: A Mother. Hutchinson, 6s.
Green, E. M. Elizabeth Grey. Blackwood, 6s. (See p. 367.)
Marsh, Richard. A Spoiler of Men. Chatto & Windus, 6s. (See p. 367.)
Torriani, Rassac. The Pains of Happiness. Elliot Stock, 6s.

HISTORY.

Bradley-Birt, F. B. The Story of an Indian Upland. With twenty Illustrations and a Map and an Introduction by the Hon. H. H. Risley, Home Secretary to the Government of India. Smith Elder, 12s. 6d.
Parnell, Col. The Hon. Arthur. The War of the Succession in Spain during the Reign of Queen Anne, 1702-1711. Based on original Manuscripts and contemporary Records. New edition. Bell, 7s. 6d. net.
Maude, Aylmer. A Peculiar People. The Doukhobors. With Illustrations. Constable, 6s. net.
Goodspeed, George Stephen, Ph. D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Chicago. A History of the Ancient World, with Illustrations, Maps, and Plans. Constable, 7s. 6d. net.
Mason, Arthur James, D.D. The Historic Martyrs of the Primitive Church. Longmans, 10s. 6d. net.
Select Documents illustrative of the History of the French Revolution. The Constituent Assembly. Edited by L. G. Wickham Legg, M.A. Two Vols. Clarendon Press, 12s. net.

LITERATURE.

Dhaleine, L. N. Hawthorne: Sa Vie et son Œuvre. Thèse pour le doctorat soutenue devant la faculté des lettres de l'Université de Paris. Paris: Hachette. (See p. 359.)
Dhaleine, L. A Study on Tennyson's "Idyls of the King." Paris: Facdouel.

PHILOSOPHY.

Whitby, Charles J. The Logic of Human Character. Macmillan, 3s. 6d. net.
Barlow, George. The Higher Love, a Plea for a Nobler Conception of Human Love. Fifeild, 6d. net. (See p. 368.)
McDougall, W. Physiological Psychology. Dent, 1s. net.

REPRINTS.

Tales from Shakespeare, by Charles and Mary Lamb. With illustrations by Byam Shaw. Bohn's Standard Library, 1s. 6d. net. (See p. 368.)
The Diary of Samuel Pepys, M.A., F.R.S., Clerk of the Acts and Secretary to the Admiralty. Transcribed by the late Rev. Mynors Bright, M.A., from the Shorthand Manuscript in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge. Edited with additions by Henry B. Wheatley, F.S.A. Vols. VII. and VIII. Bell, 5s. net each.
Beaconsfield, The Earl. Sybil, or the Two Nations. With an Introduction by the Earl of Idlesleigh. The New Pocket Library. Lane, 1s. 6d. net.
Rose, Mary. The Women of Shakespeare's Family. Lane, 1s. net.
Mérimée, Prosper. Colomba. Préface de M. Augustin Filon. Dent, 1s. 6d. net.
Chaucer, Geoffrey. Anelida and Arcite. Cambridge University Press, 10s. 6d. net.
Augustini Dacti Libellus. Cambridge University Press, 10s. 6d. net.
Steele, Robert. Medieval Lore, from Bartholomew Anglicus. With preface by William Morris. The De la More Press, 1s. 6d. net.
De Lahontan, Baron. New Voyages to North America. Reprinted from the English edition of 1703, with facsimiles of original title-pages, maps, and illustrations, and the addition of Introduction, Notes and Index. By Reuben Gold Thwaites, LL.D. 2 Vols. Chicago: McClurg, $7.50 net.

SCIENCE.

Sedgwick, Adam, M.A., F.R.S. A Student's Text-Book of Zoology. Vol. II. Swan Sonnenschein
Macpherson, Hector, Jun. Astronomers of to-day and their Work. With twenty-seven portraits. Gall & Inglis, 7s. 6d. net.

TRAVEL.

Waddell, L. Austine, LL.D., C.B. Lhasa and its Mysteries. With a record of the Expedition of 1903-1904. With 200 illustrations and maps. Murray, 25s. net.
De Séincourt, Beryl D. Homes of the First Franciscans in Umbria, the borders of Tuscany, and the northern Marches. With 13 illustrations from photographs. Dent, 4s. 6d. net.
Smith, Alexander. A Summer in Skye. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell, 2s. 6d. net.

THE WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER - Improved No. 2.Special Advantages.

- VISIBLE WRITING. The WILLIAMS was the Pioneer in Visible Writing, and is still the leader and best exponent of this important feature. The idea once ridiculed and argued is now recognised as of great value; there can be no argument against it - 'Seeing is believing.'
- BEAUTY OF WORK. This feature sells hundreds of machines to people who are dissatisfied with smudgy ribbon work after seeing the clean-cut typing of the Williams.
- COLOUR TYPING. Letters, words or lines in Red, Blue, Green, etc.
- RULING. Vertical or horizontal lines can be ruled in different colours.
- WRITING ON LINES. The platen revolves freely and may be adjusted by the platen knob for typing on ruled lines or any part of the paper.
- DUPLICATE COPIES. Carbon and Stencil Duplicating require no more effort than ordinary typing. Originals for lithographic fac-similes of Hektograph copies may be typed with Williams Special Inks.
- LIGHT RUNNING. Ball bearings at all points ensure light running carriage. There are no slow keys and no heavy ones.
- LIGHT TOUCH. The touch is light, uniform and elastic, adapted for high speed and all day work.
- KEYBOARD. Models 2 and 3 Williams Typewriters have 28 keys with double shift, writing 84 characters, and can be fitted with accents for foreign languages. Keyboard plans on application.
- CARRIAGE LOCKS. Easily adjusted screw bolts at either end of carriage lock all moveable parts, so that the machine may be safely shipped.
- GUARANTEE. These machines are guaranteed against mechanical imperfections and will be carefully looked after by our Branches and Agents.
- POPULAR PRICE. The improved No. 2 Williams embraces all these advantages and is a high grade machine in every respect. We claim that it is the best double shift key machine irrespective of price. We are now offering it in the United Kingdom under the name of 'ACADEMY MODEL' at the following prices:—
- No. 2 F'cap size formerly sold at £21 now £12 12 0 cash
 No. 3 Brief „ „ „ „ 23 „ 14 14 0 „
- 12/6 PER MONTH. We also offer these machines by deferred payments—
 25/- on delivery and 12/6 per month until the machine is paid for. This figures 5d. a day covering a period of about two years.
 Apply at any of our Depots for full details, or write for catalogue.

WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER COMPANY.

LONDON*57 Holborn Viaduct

ABERDEEN	115 Union Street	EXETER	31 Queen Street	MANCHESTER	267 Deansgate
BELFAST	71 Ann Street	GLASGOW	89 Bothwell St.	MIDLESBROUGH	Royal Exchange
BIRMINGHAM	28 High Street	LEEDS	8 Park Lane	NEWCASTLE	21 Collingwood St.
BURNLEY	9 Grimsshaw Street	LEICESTER	60-64 Halford St.	NOTTINGHAM	Prudential Bldgs.
CARDIFF	8 St. John's Square	LEIGH	64 Bond Street	PORTSMOUTH	154 Queen Street
DUBLIN	5 Upper Ormond Quay	LIVERPOOL		SHEFFIELD	72 Queen Street
EDINBURGH	19 Shandwick Place			SOUTHAMPTON	12 Portland Street

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1718

APRIL 8, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH. The Council invites Applications for the Post of WARDEN of the Alexandra Hall of Residence for Women Students in succession to Miss E. A. Carpenter. Applications and copies of 70 Testimonials to be sent by May 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.—T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH. The Council invites Applications for the Post of Registrar and Secretary of the College at a Salary of £300. Applications and 70 copies of Testimonials to be sent by May 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.—T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

THE HOLBURNE OF MENSTRIE MUSEUM, BATH.

WANTED an experienced Curator, single man, or married but without incumbrances, to take charge of the Museum consisting of Antique Plate, Paintings, China, and other Works of Art. He will be required to reside on the premises. The Trustees are prepared to offer £150 per annum with furnished rooms.—Applications to be made by letter only and sent to the Museum, Charlotte Street, Bath.

N.B.—The Trustees can only communicate with a selected number of applicants.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

Books Wanted

GAY'S Fables, 2 vols., 1727-1738, or either vol., 4to. Gebir, a Poem, 1798.
Geodes (W.), A Book of Sundry Draughts, sm. 4to, 1613.
Geneste (J.), The English Stage, 10 vols.
Genz (T., of York). Any of the Books printed by him.
Gentleman's Pocket Album, 5 vols., 1827-31, or either vol.
Gentleman's Tutor of the Small Sword, or complete English Fencing Master, 1730.
George St. Julian, in monthly parts or cloth, 1814, or any odd parts.
Gerard's Herbal, 1597, or 1636, folio.
Germ (The), 4 parts, 1850, or any odd parts.
Germain (P.), Elements d'Orfèvrerie, 4to, Paris, 1748.
Gheyn (J. de), Maniement d'Armes, d'Arquebuses, Mousquet et Piques, folio, 1607.
Gilbert (H.), New Passage to Cataia, 4to, 1576.
Gilbert (J.), Dolomite Mountains, 1864.
Gilbert (Wm.), The Angler's Delight, 8vo, 1676.
The Young Angler's Companion, 8vo, 1682.
Gil Blas, 2 vols., 1833, or either vol.
Gilchrist (A.), Life of W. Blake, 2 vols., 1863.
Girard (P. J.), Traité des Armes, 4to, 1740.
Glaistone (W. E.), Studies on Homer, 3 vols., 1858.
Glaphorn (H.), Poems, 1639.
Goddard's Military Costumes of Europe, 2 vols., folio, 1812.
Goefrey Malvern, 1843.
Godolphin, 3 vols., 1833.
Good-Natured Man, 1768.
Goldsmith (O.), She Stoops to Conquer, 1773, first edit'ion.
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER seeks engagement. Mornings from 11 or afternoons. English, French, German, Drawing. Help with preparation of home lessons. Good references.—D. K., 63 Froggnal, Hampstead, N.W.

LADY SEEKS ENGAGEMENT as Private Secretary. Shorthand, Typewriting (own machine), French, German, Indexing, Research Work. London, Country, or Abroad. Excellent Testimonials.—Apply M., c/o ACADEMY.

LADY wants engagement as Secretary: shorthand, typewriting, seven years' City experience.—Apply B., c/o ACADEMY.

A WAY OF HIS OWN.

By A. KNOTCUTTER
(R. W. ESSINGTON).

3s. 6d.

"A distinctly amusing story"—Spectator.
"The story is original"—Literary World.

H. F. DRANE, Salisbury Square, Fleet Street.

THE LITERARY ASPIRANT IS THE PUBLICATION FOR ASPIRING LITTERATEURS
OBTAINABLE ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION, 1s. YEARLY
7 OXENDEN STREET, LEICESTER

WILDE, PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY.

ELEGANT EDITION. 10s. 6d.

J. JACOB, 149 Edgware Road, London, W.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss Foot, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

TYPEWRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1000 words. Specimens and references.—Address, Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L. 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS., 10d. per 1000, all descriptions; neat, prompt, accurate; duplicating a speciality. Shorthand, testimonials.—Mrs. MICHEL, 23 Quarrendon Street, Fulham, S.W.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS OF THE WORKS OF

G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings, Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from
FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamp. Foreign

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES. The APRIL CATALOGUE of Valuable SECONDHAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is Now Ready, and will be sent post free on application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186 Strand, London, W.C.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140.

Containing a special article, entitled:

"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,"

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

BOOKS, SECONDHAND.

SPECIAL CLEARANCE LIST OF SURPLUS COPIES (and others)

OFFERED, IN GOOD CONDITION, FOR CASH
AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES,

POST FREE ON APPLICATION TO

DAY'S LIBRARY, LTD. (Founded 1776), 96 Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, London, W.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP, Secondhand Bookseller, 100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND 4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECONDHAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.—"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookfinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED.—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jonrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1809; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

FIRST Editions of Modern Authors, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

TYPEWRITING (Smith Premier).—Scientific Legal MSS., Plays, Translations, Duplicates, Novels, 9d. 1000.—MISS HANDLEY, Berkhamstead

Books Wanted—(continued)

LEWIS'S HISTORY OF THANET, and any Thanet, East Kent, and Cinque Port Items.—Blinko and Sons, Booksellers, Ramsgate.

THE BERMUDIAN (a Poem). London, 1774, 4to. Any writings of Dr. George Starkey, Alchemist and Empiric (died about 1665)—J. C. L. Clark, Lancaster, Mass., U.S.A.

WORKS by Wilde, O.; Whistler; Beardsley; books in large and small quantities purchased.—J. Jacob, 149 Edgware Road, Hyde Park.

PLEASE SEND LISTS OF SECONDHAND BOOKS on Zoology, Botany, Geology, and Physiology.—W. Heffer & Sons, Cambridge.

ENGRAVED PORTRAITS, Fancy Prints, Topographical Views, etc., purchased in large or small quantities.—The Chaucer Book Co., 37 St. Martin's Court, W.C.

THE BLOOD ROYAL OF BRITAIN, by Marquis of Ruvigny.—Waagen. Treasures of Art in Great Britain. 2 Vols. and supplement, 1854-7.—Murray's Southern France.—H. H. Peach, 37 Belvoir St., Leicester.

ORIGINAL LETTERS OF SIR RICHARD FANSHAWE, 1702. With a Portrait.—Memoirs of Lady Fanshawe, 1829.—Pair oblong coloured prints of Torquay in 1819. A. Iredale, 13 Strand, Torquay.

Books for Sale

WRIGHT'S ENGLISH DIALECT DICTIONARY, Vols. I. to V., half morocco, gilt top, concluding parts (paper covers) when issued. £7 10s. complete. 1894, &c.—Walker, 37 Briggate, Leeds.

RUSKIN'S LETTERS to M. and H. G. (Gladstone). Privately printed, 1903. Very rare. 30s.—Miss S., 44 Nelson Square, Blackfriars.

RECLUSE, Universal Geography with hundreds of Engravings, Maps, and Gilt Edges. 10 vols. published at £5 5s. will sell cheap.—Lloyd and Townsend, 13 Dillwyn St., Swansea.

ARCHÆOLOGIE CANTIANÆ, Vols. I. to XXIV., blue cloth (including Index vol.), £7 7s. Parish and Shaw's "Dictionary of the Kentish Dialect", wrapper, published 10s., 2s. 6d. free.—W. E. Goulden, 5 St. Paul's, Canterbury.

LIFE AND LABOURS OF MR. BRASSEY. By Sir Arthur Helps, 1878, 4s. 6d. Sir Morell Mackenzie. By H. R. Haweis, 2s. 6d. Lett. rs of Junius, 1822, 1s. 6d.—J. W. Thompson, 45 Pasture Street, Grimsby.

RUSKIN'S LETTERS to A. G. and H. G. (Gladstone). Privately printed 1903. 30s. Ashbee's "Reprint," Wren's "Parentalia, No. 94" (250 copies), £2 10s.—X., 1 Regent Terrace, Cambridge.

W. J. LOFTIE'S Kensington Picturesque and Historical. 30s. net. T Faulkner's History and Antiquities of Kensington, 1820. 42s. net.—Young's Library, 179 Kensington High Street, W.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS opened at any date for THREE, SIX and TWELVE Months. Town Subscriptions, 21s. Yearly. Books of past Seasons, 10s. 6d. Yearly.

Terms for Country, Suburbs, and Parcel Post, sent on application to

MUDIE & CO.,

30-34 New Oxford Street, London.

NOW READY.

Cloth, 2 vols. royal 8vo, 948 pp., 512 Illustrations, 60 genetic Tables, with 28 Plates, price £2 2s. net.

The Evolution of Man.

BY

ERNST HAECKEL

(Professor at Jena University).

The time has come for a complete, comprehensive, and constructive presentment, in a popular form, of the now irresistible evidence for the evolution of man. This Prof. Haeckel accomplishes in the new edition, recently issued in Germany, of his "Anthropogenie." It is virtually a new work, and it entailed the better part of a year's arduous labour from its author. The text has been considerably augmented, the number of full-page coloured plates has grown to thirty, the number of engravings (many full-page size) to 512, and the number of genetic tables to sixty. These illustrations have all been designed and painted afresh by the author on a larger and finer scale, and are splendid examples of the artistic skill which Prof. Haeckel counts among his many attainments. It is now, both in the scientific text and the illustrations, a superb manual of human development.

No reproduction, however augmented, of the older translation could give an idea of the beauty and value of the completed edition of Prof. Haeckel's world-famed book. The new translation makes two volumes covering 948 pages, and, with one exception, all the plates and engravings have been retained. The work of editing and translating has been undertaken by Mr. Joseph McCabe, the translator of "The Riddle of the Universe." The text is rendered in plain language, as far as possible, and all technicalities are made clear to the inexpert reader—a task which has not been difficult in view of the 600 illustrations and tables. The work has, in fact, been written for the general reader, though even for the student it has no rival as a comprehensive statement of the evolutionary position. The first volume deals with the history of the subject, and presents a compendium of modern embryology. It is here that the wealth of illustration is greatest. The second volume discusses the evolution of the race in the light of comparative anatomy and palæontology, and has also a series of interesting chapters on the evolution of particular organs—organs of sense, reproduction, nerves, &c. The argument and attitude are scientific throughout, and the author never quits the biological territory on which he speaks with almost unrivalled authority to-day. There is a full Index and also an adequate Glossary.

The work has been printed from new type on the best paper, and is strongly and handsomely bound.

Agents of the

Rationalist Press Association, Limited:

WATTS & CO.,

17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

DEIGHTON, BELL & CO., CAMBRIDGE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

NEW EDITION, Revised, with 2 Photogravure Plates.

THE RISEN MASTER.

A SEQUEL TO

PASTOR PASTORUM.

By HENRY LATHAM, M.A.,
Late Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ELEVENTH THOUSAND.

PASTOR PASTORUM:

Or, the Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord.

Crown 8vo, price 6s. 6d.

FOURTH THOUSAND.

A SERVICE OF ANGELS.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. net.

STUDIES OF ARIANISM.

Chiefly referring to the Character and Chronology of the Reaction which followed the Council of Nicæa.

By HENRY MELVILL GWATKIN, M.A.,
Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Cambridge.

Extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

With Portrait, Map, and Illustrations.

MEMORIALS OF THE HON. ION KEITH-FALCONER.

By R. SINKER, D.D.,

Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge.

New Edition, with the subsequent History of the Mission to the Mohammedans of Southern Arabia.

Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. viii-160, price 5s.

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

THE ELEMENTARY GEOMETRY OF CONICS.

By Rev. C. TAYLOR, D.D.,

Master of St. John's College, Cambridge.

"The book is in many respects the best and most reliable text-book on the Geometry of Conics that can be obtained."
Mathematical Gazette.

BY THE LATE REV. W. A. WHITWORTH.

CHOICE AND CHANCE.

An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combinations, and Probability.

With 640 Exercises.

Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CHOICE AND CHANCE.

700 Exercises, including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in "Choice and Chance."

With a Chapter on the Summation of Certain Series and a Gresham Lecture on "Some Points in the Philosophy of Chance."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

CAMBRIDGE: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.
LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

GREENING'S POPULAR BOOKS.

At all Libraries, Bookshops, and Railway Bookstalls.

A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST.

OSCAR WILDE.

The Story of an Unhappy Friendship. By ROBERT H. SHERARD. With Several Portraits of the late Oscar Wilde. Uniform in style and size with "De Profundis." Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

A VAGABOND IN ASIA.

The Record of a Tramp off the Beaten Track. By EMDUND CANDLER, Author of "The Unveiling of Lhasa." With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE PRIVILEGE OF MOTHERHOOD. A Popular Treatise by LUCIE SIMPSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Spectator says:—"This little book is full of good sense."
Daily Telegraph says:—"It is a book which should be put into the hands of all thoughtful girls."

POPULAR NOVELS JUST OUT.

A DREAMER'S HARVEST.

By MOUNT HOUMAS, Author of "A Tragic Contract." 6s.

TALES FROM SPAIN. By J. G. P. 6s.

THE PUPPETS' DALLYING. THE PUPPET'S DALLYING.

By LOUIS MARLOW. 6s.

MARIGOLD. MARIGOLD.

A Story by the Author of "Jewel Sowers." 6s.

THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL.

A Romance of the French Revolution and the Time of King George the Third. By the BARONESS ORCZY. 6s.

Truth says: "The interest is kept up quite naturally at an intense pitch. I can recommend you to read it. Especially thrilling is the scene in the little French inn at the close."
Church Times says: "An excellent novel. There is real ingenuity in the plot and human interest in the characters. It is an artistic piece of work, thoroughly readable and commendable."

Daily Telegraph says: "It is something distinctly out of the common, well conceived, vividly told, and stirring from start to finish."

THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

The successful play founded on this exciting and dramatic story is now being presented at the NEW THEATRE by Miss JULIA NEILSON and Mr. FRED TERRY.

Complete Catalogue post free on Application.

LONDON: GREENING & CO., 18 & 20 Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE. 10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—

The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes, Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events. Science and Art Specially dealt with.
Fulllest Reports of all Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE. 10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books. Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

THE SPHERE.

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week. Also List of Books Received.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

The Morning Newspaper for Aberdeen and the Northern Half of Scotland.

Reviews of Books appear on Mondays and Thursdays, and on other days as required.

Book Advertisements are inserted on Literary Page.

NEW BOOKS ARE PROMPTLY REVIEWED.

LONDON OFFICE: 149 FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE WESTERN MORNING NEWS

Is the most widely circulating paper in the four Western Counties.

LONDON PRIVATE WIRE OFFICE: 49 FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telegraphic Address: "PLYMOUTHISM, LONDON."

Telephone No.: 165 HOLBORN.

ADVERTISING IN IRELAND.

THE DAILY EXPRESS, DUBLIN

PREMIER FINANCIAL PAPER OF IRELAND.

"One of the few daily Papers in the United Kingdom showing a distinct interest in Literature."—The Academy.

Most Suitable Medium for Publishers' Advertisements. Special Columns devoted to Literary Matter every Thursday.

THE DUNDEE COURIER.

Has double the circulation of any Morning Paper North of the Forth.

Literary Notes on Monday. Reviews on Wednesday.

FROM MR. MELROSE'S SPRING LIST.

THE KNOX CELEBRATIONS.

Reissue of a Great Work.

KNOX'S "HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF RELIGION IN SCOTLAND."

With which are included Knox's "Confession," and "The Book of Discipline." A Twentieth-Century Edition, revised and edited by CUTHBERT LENNOX. With Frontispiece Portrait.

(A New Edition of Knox's famous History, in which the editor has endeavoured to minimise the difficulties which English readers find in the original text.)

Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 4s. 6d. net.

Dr. ALEXANDER WHYTE writes: "Knox's great masterpiece for 4s. 6d. is indeed a marvel and a matter for thanksgiving. Many Lives of Knox will be bought and read this year, but that great maker of Scotland will never be known aright till his own History is read and reread. Every true Scot will be at his bookseller's counter again and again this Knox year for the best literature, and thousands, I feel sure, will take home this noble volume."

A Life of the Reformer.

JOHN KNOX: a Biography.

By D. MACMILLAN, M.A., with an Appreciation by the Very Rev. PRINCIPAL STORY, D.D., LL.D. With Illustrations specially drawn by THOMAS SMELLIE, F.S.A. (Scot.). Crown 8vo, cloth, rough edges, 3s. 6d. net.

Dr. GEORGE MATHESON writes of this Biography: "It is written with a master hand, a hand that has grasped the significance of historical bearings, and held with an even justice the balance between parties. The clear delineation of the portraits, the absolute tolerance of the author and the charming simplicity of his literary style, stamp the volume as one of unusual merit. Among the many noble efforts which the anniversary has evoked, this book stands out as one of the foremost."

Dr. ALEXANDER WHYTE writes to the Author: "Permit me, a stranger, to thank you for your admirable 'Life of Knox.' I have made use of my pencil as I read your book, and shall take no little help and suggestion out of it for my classes on 'The Makers of Scotland.' Thank you also for getting the Principal to pen his invaluable 'Appreciation.'"

A Popular "Life."

JOHN KNOX: The Hero of the Scottish Reformation. A Biographical Sketch.

By the Rev. EDWARD MILLER, M.A. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

Important New Theological Works.

THE INFANCY AND YOUTH OF JESUS.

By the Rev. A. MORRIS STEWART, M.A., Author of "The Crown of Science," "The Temptation of Jesus," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

THE SHRINE OF FAITH: Our Lord's Human Experience.

By the Rev. T. H. WRIGHT, Author of "The Finger of God," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

An Historical Romance.

THE SPURS OF GOLD: a Romance of England in Lollard Days.

By J. BROWN MORGAN and J. ROGERS FREEMAN. With Illustrations by E. TRAVERS POPE. Imperial 16mo, cloth, 5s.

THE THIRD EDITION.

A Striking Novel.

SONS O' MEN.

A Novel of Colonial Stock-run Life. By G. B. LANCASTER.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE: "The highest hopes may be entertained of the author as the possessor of qualities that seem to promise great things. The book is a breeze direct from the sheep farms and cattle stations of New Zealand . . . with the same original touch of genius that made Bret Harte's sketches of the Californian miner, and Kipling's pictures of Indian life, known all over the world. . . . The whole collection is healthily redolent of the open air, and might have been written from cover to cover among the 'savage mountains and scarred flats' of Mr. Lancaster's 'Mindoorie.'"

LONDON: ANDREW MELROSE, 16, BROADWAY, CHANCERY LANE, E.C.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

On	NOTICE.	On
A	Orders should now be booked for	A
P	MARIE CORELLI'S NEW BOOK.	P
R	FREE OPINIONS	R
I	6/- FREELY EXPRESSED.	I
L	BY	L
17	MARIE CORELLI.	17

JOHN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT OF DUNDEE, 1648-89. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Not only well arranged and well written, but based upon an exhaustive study of original authorities."—Academy.

"On the whole it does not seem too much to say that this book promises to be the definite biography of a man whose character has been traduced by 'prejudice founded upon wilful neglect of evidence.'"—Morning Post.

CATHERINE DE MEDICI AND THE FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL., Author of "Women and Men of the French Renaissance," "The Household of the Lafayettes," &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15s. net.

"She has displayed in the pages before us the most excellent qualities of temper, industry, and perception, and in her treatment of an enigmatic and elusive figure she has neither ignored the complications of her material nor shrunk from solving its perplexities. . . . Miss Sichel's delineations of this remarkable and unhallowed woman conforms to the best standards of historical work, and will dissatisfy neither the scholar nor the less pretentious seeker of interest and entertainment."

Pall Mall Gazette.

THE KING IN EXILE (CHARLES II.). By EVA SCOTT. Author of "Rupert Prince Palatine." Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"A most welcome contribution to historical literature upon a period in Charles's life of which the average student knows comparatively little."—Daily Graphic.

A HISTORY OF THE ANCIENT WORLD. By GEORGE STEPHEN GOODSPEED, Ph.D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Chicago. With Illustrations, Maps, and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

THE JAPANESE SPIRIT. By OKAKURA-YOSHISABURO. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

POETRY.

PENTHESILEA. A Poem. By LAURENCE BINYON, Author of "The Death of Adam," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A ROBIN'S SONG, and other Poems. By MARY SCOTT. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"Very melodious and pleasant little poems."—Gentlewoman.

ST. FRIDESWIDE, and other Poems. By FLORENCE HAYLLER. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"Invested with a weird and magical atmosphere, such as Coleridge knew well how to produce. . . . The suppressed intensity of the feeling and the strong, bold touches are not unworthy of him."—Athenaeum.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

JORN UHL. By GUSTAV FRENSEN. Translated from the German. Over 180,000 have already been sold of this remarkable Novel.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA. By Mrs. COMYNS CARR. Author of "Cottage Folk," &c.

"Mrs. Comyns Carr has very cleverly worked out an original idea, contriving her picture in a perfect mosaic of picturesque detail. . . . The Baron strongly recommends it to those capable of enjoying a good novel when they get it."—Punch.

CRITTENDEN. By JOHN FOX. Author of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

"Crittenden" will be found worth reading, both as a story and as history. . . . It is written in an easy, vigorous style, and the interest never flags."—Academy.

IN SEARCH OF THE UNKNOWN. By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, Author of "The Maids of Paradise," "Cardigan," &c.

"The stories are delightful, and highly to be recommended."

Westminster Gazette.

"All who care for the fantastic or whimsical will find this book exactly fitted to wile away an hour with unusual entertainment."—Morning Post.

MESSRS. BELL'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Catalogues sent post free on application.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO H.M. QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

The History of Portrait Miniatures. By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.

Two Vols., imperial 4to, with upwards of 700 Illustrations.

EDITION de LUXE, containing 35 hand-painted Miniatures, including as Frontispiece a replica of a portrait of Queen Alexandra, for which her Majesty graciously sat to Mr. Alyn Williams for this work. This exquisite portrait can be obtained in no other form.

Limited to 50 copies, of which very few remain unsold. Price £52 10s. net.

Hand-made Paper Edition, limited to 510 copies, £10 10s. net.

In 5 Vols., 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

Bryan's Dictionary of Painters and Engravers.

A NEW EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED, under the supervision of G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D., assisted by a staff of Specialists. With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates. Illustrated Prospectus on application.

* * This Edition contains upwards of 1400 new biographies, and nearly 6000 corrections have been made in articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 lives have been partly rewritten.

"No one interested in the Fine Arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable Dictionary."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Small cumbrier 8vo, 25s. net.

George Morland: His Life and Works. By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. With 48 Collotype Plates and a Frontispiece in Colours.

Also a Large-paper Edition of 100 copies, printed on Hand-made Paper, with the Plates on Japanese vellum. Crown folio, £3 3s. net.

Small cumbrier 8vo, 25s. net.

Samuel Cousins. By A. WHITMAN. Author of "The Print Collectors' Handbook," "S. W. Reynolds," &c. With 32 Collotype Plates and Photogravure Frontispiece.

Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

William Blake: a Study of his Life and Art Work. By IRENE LANGRIDGE. With 48 Illustrations.

THIRD EDITION. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

How to Collect Old Furniture. By FREDERICK LITCHFIELD, Author of "Illustrated History of Furniture," &c. With 40 Plates and numerous other Illustrations.

"Histories of furniture exist in abundance, but we know of no book which will be of such use to the ordinary collector. Mr. Litchfield has had a long experience of the ways of dealers, and he gives his readers the full benefit of it."—Daily Chronicle.

SECOND EDITION. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

How to Identify Portrait Miniatures. By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.

With Chapters on the Painting of Miniatures by ALYN WILLIAMS, R.B.A. With 40 Plates, illustrating upwards of 70 Miniatures.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF ROSE'S "LIFE OF NAPOLEON."

Life of Napoleon I. By J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. Largely Compiled from new materials taken from the British Official Records. In two vols., post 8vo. With Maps and Plans. Fourth Edition. 10s. net.

ORIGINAL EDITION. With numerous Illustrations. Two vols., large post 8vo, 18s. net.

Post 8vo, with Maps, 7s. 6d. net.

Napoleonic Studies. By J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D.,

"Whatever may be the side of Napoleon's career in which the reader may be interested, we make bold to say that he will find something new to him within the four hundred pages of this modest little volume. Dr. Rose is to be congratulated on his mastery of a difficult and complicated subject."—Athenaeum.

Post 8vo, 5s. net.

Napoleon and England, 1803-1813: a Study from Unprinted Documents. By P. COQUELLE. Translated from the French by GORDON D. KNOX, Balliol College, Oxford. With a Preface by Dr. J. HOLLAND ROSE, Author of "The Life of Napoleon I." &c.

"In discussing one of the most controverted questions of modern history, M. Coquelle has collected a number of interesting documents, which form a most valuable addition to the sources available to a student of the Napoleonic period."—St. James's Gazette.

Large post 8vo, 5s. net.

The Foundations of Modern Europe. Twelve Lectures delivered at the University of London. By EMIL REICH, Doctor Juris. Author of "A New Student's Atlas of English History," "Græco-Roman Institutions," "History of Civilisation," &c.

CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S "PEPYS." In 8 Vols., post 8vo, 5s. net each.

The Diary of Samuel Pepys, M.A., F.R.S., Clerk of the Works and Secretary to the Admiralty. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A., late Fellow and President of the College. With Lord BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

ORIGINAL EDITION. In 10 Vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and other Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net each.

Two vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

Economic Inquiries and Studies. By Sir ROBERT GIFFEN, K.C.B.

"Taken together, they present the most complete interpretation of sound principles of International trade yet given. Every large issue of recent fiscal controversy finds lucid and comprehensive treatment in an atmosphere far removed from the heat of partisan debate."

Manchester Guardian.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	381	Literary Love-Stories	395
Literature :		"Scarron"	395
A North Country Squire of		A Literary Causerie :
Queen Anne's Day	384	The Novels of Thomas Love
Phineas Fletcher	385	Peacock	396
Lahontan's Voyages	386	The Mad Spinner	397
The Land of Saint Francis	387	Fiction	397
Indian Studies	388	Book Sales	398
The Credit Side of the Ameri-		The Drama : "Hamlet" at the can Ledger	389	Adelphi Theatre	399
Tales from the Never, Never,		Fine Art : The Loan Exhibition
Never Land	391	of Process Engraving at South
The House of Lords	391	Kensington	400
The Cult of the Nymphs	392	Music : Schools of Music	401
Porcelain of the Palace	393	Correspondence	402
The Glory of Somerset	394	Queries and Answers	403

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

THE Incorporated Society of Authors held its annual general meeting last week under the presidency of Sir John Bergne, the newly elected chairman of the Committee of Management. The chairman's theme was copyright and the practical difficulty of procuring the reform of the copyright laws recognised as theoretically desirable—a subject on which he knows more than most men, as he has represented the Foreign Office in most of the negotiations relating to the Berne Convention. It is, it appears, the fear of the Colonies that stays the hand of the reformer. They are not in love with the system of Imperial copyright; and though they admit that they are bound by the Act of 1842, there is an apprehension that they would object to further Imperial legislation, and would proceed to make their own domestic laws on the matter. Canada, in fact, has already more than once given trouble by doing so. Whence some infer that it is no time for stirring Camerina.

Meanwhile Mr. Heinemann has been discussing copyright in America, and trying to prepare American opinion for some concession in the vexed matter of simultaneous publication. It is suggested that there should at least be a period of grace—say a couple of months—during which the English author should be protected from piracy. At its expiration the pirates should have a free hand if publication had not, in the meantime, been effected. This proposal, however, suggests another question which America will hardly fail to raise: Where does America "come in" if the English publisher uses the period of grace for the purpose of flooding the American market with imported copies of the provisionally protected book?

Perhaps the difficulty might be got over in this way. In the first place it might be forbidden, during the period of grace, to import either sheets or bound copies in excess of the small number which the author's American representative would require to show to American publishers with a view to the negotiation of the production of an American edition. In the second place the period of protection might be extended if, at the end of the two months' grace, an American publisher produced evidence that he had agreed with the author to produce a bona fide American edition. This provision would sometimes save the American publisher from the necessity of rushing out a book at an inconvenient season, and he would in consequence be more willing to treat.

We have received a volume of "Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature" (Asher). The contents consist of essays on various subjects by Professor Dowden, and a number of other authors whose names are less familiar to us. There is nothing to review; but the occasion seems one for reviving the question: Why is the Royal Society of Literature a failure? Can nothing be done to give it a position of dignity in the world of letters?

The Society started under sufficiently good auspices. It is a Royal Society; it has a Charter; it has an endowment—the accumulated funds amounting, we understand, to about £10,000. Eminent men have, in the past, been connected with it—such men as Southey, Hogg, Hallam, Hookham Frere, Austen Henry Layard, Crabbe, and Lingard. It has granted medals to such men as James Rennell, the geographer, Sir Walter Scott, and Mitford, the historian of Greece. Its list of foreign honorary members has included Bunsen, Guizot, Thiers, Ranke, and W. H. Prescott. It was, in fact, intended that it should be to the literature of the United Kingdom that which the "Académie des Inscriptions et des Belles Lettres" is to the literature of France; and it did once get so far as to publish two volumes, in 1839 and 1846, of a Dictionary of National Biography. But it has never succeeded in making itself really important, and nowadays it is little more than an Essay Society.

Evidence of the insignificance of the Society was afforded at the time of the institution of the Nobel Literary Prize. One would have expected the Swedish electors to go to the Royal Society of Literature for the nomination of the English candidates. They went instead to the Society of Authors—a body which has no royal Charter, and which exists not for the encouragement of literature but for the protection of literary property. There could be no clearer proof that the business of the Royal Society of Literature has been badly bungled. It wants new members, a new Charter, enlarging its powers, and a new determination to do something more worthy of its proud appellation than the reading of essays by literary antiquaries. At present hardly any author of any reputation belongs to the Society. Why cannot such authors join it and reconstitute it? Does no leader among them feel tempted to take the matter up?

Landor was not a popular writer but his admirers are no doubt still numerous, and so we may infer that the "Villa Landor" which is for sale will not remain long upon the agents' books. It is on the high road from Florence to Fiesole, and within its grounds is "the valley of the ladies" known to readers of Boccaccio. Landor lived there off and on from 1829 till 1859—a familiar figure to the natives, who regarded him as the maddest of mad Englishmen. Here he collected much of the matter that appears in the "Pentameron," and here he nearly fought a duel for using more than his proper share of the water of the fountain, to which a French neighbour had an equal right. Here, too, when he was once robbed of some plate, he denounced the police with such vigour, that they expelled him from Tuscany.

The interest of the Villa is enhanced by memories of the visits paid to it by famous men. Chief among them is Emerson, who found the "gigantic schoolboy" in "a cloud of pictures," and Monckton Milnes, who spent some time at Fiesole recovering health after illness. When Landor, after quarrelling with his wife, went back to England, he kept as a souvenir of the Villa a big yellow Pomeranian, his constant companion in his walks near Bath, to whom he used to talk French and Italian. Finally, when the irritable poet fled abroad to escape the results of a libel action, he returned to the Villa. But Landor, whatever his merits may have been, was not the man for family life, and stung to madness by the sense of his many ills, he took refuge in apartments in Florence, where he remained until his death.

The Rowfant Library has so long stood, with book lovers, as one of the finest private collections, a kind of monument to the late Frederick Locker-Lampson who made it, that the announcement made by the New York correspondent of the Times that it has been sold will come as something of an extremely unpleasant shock. In 1886 Mr. Locker-Lampson published his fine catalogue of "The Rowfant Library" and when, after his death, there was published in 1900 an "Appendix to the Rowfant Library" it was felt that his successor was going to keep up the proper Rowfant traditions, and that Mr. Andrew Lang's tribute was to be justified at any rate during the present generation. Alas, Mr. Lang's closing words have already become untrue:

"Behold a special act of grace,
On Rowfant shelves behold
The well-loved honours keep their place
And new-won glories half efface
The splendours of the old."

Now, we are told not that the rich contents of "Rowfant shelves" are in the market, but that they have actually been sold to an American firm; and that, if not disposed of as a whole within the next few weeks, the collection will be broken up. This means presumably that it will be dispersed under the hammer of the auctioneer, a fate which will surely be regretted by many people, though it may be hoped in such a case that some of the treasures will find their way back to English collections.

It is impossible within the space of a few lines to enumerate anything more than two or three items from such a collection as that of the Rowfant Library. Numerically the collection is by no means a large one, but in the number of its rarities and its unique first editions, &c., it is far richer than many which are larger. It includes a fine copy of the Shakespeare first folio of 1623, and a wonderful series of quartos and separate first editions. Dekker and other seventeenth-century writers are represented by rarities. There are the first edition of Walton's "Compleat Angler" and "Lives," with old Izaak's own manuscript corrections which appealed to Mr. Lang more strongly than anything else:

"Fair first editions, duly prized,
Above them all methinks I rate
The tome where Walton's hand revised
His wonderful receipts for bait!"

Many are the rare Byrons, Shelleys, and Blakes—including a first edition of the "Songs of Innocence and Experience", together with which we are told that "this volume was cut down by an earlier owner to meet the dimensions of an old weekly washing book from the covers of which Mr. Locker has rescued it." There is a unique copy of Goldsmith's "Traveller" dated 1764—or a year earlier than the date of the "first" edition. In Eliana the Rowfant collection is particularly rich, including as it does half a dozen of the Commonplace Books in which Charles Lamb made extracts from the old dramatists, &c., and a series of thirty-two letters written by him between 1827 and 1833. It is sad indeed to think of the dispersal of all these literary treasures, "each worth a monarch's ransom," as Mr. Austin Dobson wrote.

Mr. Augustine Birrell's reminiscence of his friend may well be quoted here, indicating as it does something of the character of the collector: "He never boasted of his treasures, and, indeed, was fully alive to the touch of human weakness they might decorate but not wholly conceal. I can see him now before me, provided with a finely graduated foot-rule, measuring with grave precision the height to a hair of his copy of 'Robinson Crusoe' (1719), for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was taller or shorter than one vaunted for sale in a catalogue just then to hand. His face, one of exquisite refinement, was a study, exhibiting alike a determination to discover the exact truth, however humiliating, and the most humorous realisation of the inherent triviality of the whole business." Locker-Lampson, by the way, came of a "collecting" stock, for his maternal grandfather, the Rev. Jonathan Boucher, had such a number of books that when they were sold in 1806 they formed nearly 10,000 lots, and the sale lasted for thirty-nine days.

Our congratulations are due to our contemporary Les Annales Politiques et Littéraires, which has attained a circulation of one hundred thousand copies, and has celebrated the event by a soirée at the Hôtel Continental. It began with twelve hundred subscribers in 1883, and gave them four folio pages for their money. Success began to come when it adopted a "format" like our own, and has continued ever since. Its purpose is to introduce literature to the great public which does not read the expensive reviews, and there is hardly an eminent Frenchman of letters who has not contributed to its pages. Its most popular contributor was the late Francisque Sarcey, but its other writers have included MM. Paul Bourget, André Theuriet, René Bazin, Emile Faguet, Camille Flammarion, Henri Lavedan, Jules Lemaitre, Paul and Victor Margueritte, and Jean Richepin. Among the most valued possessions of the editor is a letter from a subscriber who dates from the desert. This writer regrets that he cannot pay his subscription as there are no post offices in his part of the Sahara, but begs that the paper may still be supplied to him on credit. He can occasionally get it sent up by a native porter, and it is his only consolation in his exile.

Les Annales Politiques et Littéraires has just declared the result of a plébiscite organised to select the lady most worthy to be admitted to the Academy of Letters. It is interesting to see that the popular choice has fallen not on a popular novelist, but on a biographer and historian: Madame Arvède Barine. The ladies "placed" were Mesdames "Daniel Lesueur" and Alphonse Daudet.

Meanwhile one of the "fauteuils" is vacant, and most of the candidates are men whose names are well known on this side of the channel. Among them are three dramatic authors: MM. Maurice Donnay, Alfred Capus, and Brieux; and three novelists: MM. Lamy, Maurice Barrés, and Marcel Prévost. M. Lamy is said to be the favourite.

A new volume of Wagner letters, rich in interest, may be expected shortly. Some extracts from them communicated to the Press show the composer reckoning up the allies on whose support he may depend, on the eve of the production of Tannhäuser. These included: "The poet Baude-laire, who has written me two admirable letters, but refuses to be presented until he has finished the poems which he is writing in my honour," "a young painter named Gustave Doré, who has already made a great reputation, and has drawn a picture for the Illustration, representing me as conducting a choir of spirits in the Alps," and "Gounod, a gentle creature, good and pure, but not very highly gifted."

Count Tolstoy apparently aspires to be the Slav Carnegie. He has started two shops for the sale of cheap books, one in St. Petersburg and the other in Moscow, and has also promised to give cheap books to any village in Russia that will ask for them. The offer, however, is not likely to prove very onerous. A very small percentage of the peasants can read with ease, in spite of the really heroic efforts of the Zemstvos to open schools, which have in many cases been promptly shut by the Government. Bookshops in Russia, if not numerous, attract attention partly because of their vast size, and partly because of the great number of French works contained in them. Russian books are badly got up and ridiculously dear.

In spite of the war literature flourishes in Japan. Several novels have lately appeared at Tokio which aim at showing the difference between the Japanese and European minds and points of view. The most successful writers in this line are Mrs. Onote Watanna, whose "Wooing of Wisteria" is familiar to English readers, and Gensai Murai, who, in 1895, published a story describing an imaginary war between England and Japan which results in the loss of Hong Kong and India, the appearance of a Japanese fleet in the Thames, and the payment of an enormous indemnity by the terrified Britisher. Is it because of the alliance and the amicable feelings conjured up thereby that we find no trace of a translation of this popular work in the catalogue of the British Museum?

In a recent number of the Danish fortnightly, Det ny Aarhundrede, Georg Brandes continues his recollections of France in 1870. It was the year of the last meeting at Longchamps under the Empire, and he describes that climax of senseless display, when for four long hours a continuous stream of carriages, often five deep, rolled up the Champs Elysées.

John Stuart Mill was passing through Paris:

"he sought me out . . . stayed two hours, and fascinated me. He was exhilarating to talk to. It struck me at once as characteristic, that whereas all the French writers were opinionated, he would listen attentively to dissent; it was only with regard to his attitude towards the emancipation of women that he refused to submit to contradiction, and overwhelmed his opponents with scorn."

Meanwhile Brandes was at work on what he calls

"my first naive attempt to trace the main currents of the century's literature."

This foundation for the subsequent masterly series naturally contained some arbitrary and crude generalisations:

"However this classification and grouping appeared to me at that period as a discovery, and great was my disappointment when I . . . laid it before Renan, who contented himself with the remark: 'No, no! Things do not evolve so systematically.'"

Among the most interesting books recently published in Paris are "Félicien Rops, Graveur," by Erastène Ramiro (Floury, 25f.) a quarto work with numerous illustrations; the second part of vol. i. of M. Brunetière's "Histoire de la Littérature française classique—Era Pléiade" (Delagrave (2f. 50c.); Emile Gautier's "L'Année scientifique et industrielle" (Hachette, 3f. 50 c.); Henri de Regnier's "Le Passé vivant" (Mercure de France, 3f. 50c.); a choice little 16mo volume, for subscribers only, of Marcel Schwob's "Le Parnasse Satyrique du quinzième siècle: Anthologie des pièces libres" (H. Welter, 25f.), and "Sodom; a play by the Duke of Rochester," published for the first time with a German introduction by Dr. Von Roemer (H. Welter, 10f.)

There is probably no language in which books on military history are more plentiful than English; but these books are of a very varied quality and the difficulty of knowing what to buy is great. The dearth of professional works at many stations, the expense of buying them, and the impossibility of an officer frequently on the move carrying about with him a library as part of his kit, are facts which make the difficulty greater. The Secretary of the Royal United Service Institution is collecting lists, of "the 20 best military books for an officer's portable library" from officers acquainted with military literature, and hopes, by a process of comparison, to obtain the ideal list. The lists thus being collected are for officers generally, for artillery officers, and for cavalry officers, and cover French and German literature as well as English. It will be interesting to see what books are selected, for although there are a few favourites certain of inclusion in the first half-dozen, the field of choice is so wide that it will be extremely difficult to complete the twenty.

The interest which such eminent Frenchmen as M. Glasson, M. Émile Boutmy, Comte de Franqueville, and M. P. Leroy-Beaulieu have displayed in our political and administrative institutions is further illustrated by an important work which M. Étienne Martin is bringing out with Berger-Levrault et Cie. called "Les Impôts Directs en Angleterre." M. Martin is already favourably known in this branch of literature for his works on monopoly in alcohol and the Egyptian Question. In the latter he reviewed the relations between England and the Suez Canal, while in the present work, which is a really important contribution to the study of comparative legislation, he gives a remarkably complete analysis of our whole system of direct taxation, both local and imperial. The book is characteristically documenté, but M. Martin has not been content with the mere selection and presentation of statistics; he has spent a large part of the last ten years among us, mixing with all classes of society, seeing the machinery of taxation at work, and continually checking and revising his documentary evidence in the light of actual experience.

A correspondent sends us the following limpid little essay on the chimaera bombinans in vacuo, which he states to be more or less sanely strung together out of words he has met in his recent reading. It may serve as a lesson in style: "In the noetic universe of writers, there seems to be a dichotomy, which I count it no parergon to scry. Are the allotropic and isomeric capacities of the English language to be used dynamically or kinetically? Shall the reboant conchimarion horns of a neologistic caucous of mugwumps establish their hegemony upon our honest littoral—shall their operose chitine be allowed to pullulate into tuberosities? It does not arride me that our palmary plainness should suffer deliquem, and that these metics, these tumid microcephalic denizens, with their megalomaniac tongues, who regard sound as ancillary to the quite exiguous sense, should flourish, while the autochthonous inhabitant dwines. This is an opodeldoc for our mattoids, a question for our alienists. No Board School erethism can add to the velleity of the cynegetical squire or the crapulous hooligan, or lessen their ineluctable nescience. True, the imago reaches perfection by ecdysis, and patines make mellow the coin. Not to commit the pravity of fioritures in this gnomon, I contend that subter the phasis of the alb, the mansuetude of sporadic anilities is only hebetated plangency, following on the feral machicolations that happed the papaverous halitus of the eudæmonistic advoutress. So that this homiletical eirenicon, formed from the scree of eximious demiurges, may be a rifacimento of protervities—a propugner of blague might call it an insane protocol, but I advance this disparate and discrete proposition, that it is not a bourdon. All the words of this pleonastic fascicle have been culled as met in many various writers. There remain fifty times as many in the polymeric imposthume of my commonplace book."

We need do no more than call the attention of our readers to the letter from Professor Butcher on the subject of Bedford College for Women, which appears in this number of the ACADEMY. The letter speaks for itself. The present moment is one at which it is more important than ever that a standard of taste should be created, and, as experience shows, there is no better way of influencing the tastes of a nation than through its women. It is not only a question of men of letters, who have been proved over and over again to owe a great deal to the influence of their mothers, but of the whole position of literature as an invaluable influence for good on the national character and development. We commend Dr. Butcher's letter to the earnest consideration of our readers.

The attention of all art lovers is drawn to the fact that the copies reserved by the publisher (Mr. Heinemann) of the illustrated de luxe edition of the catalogue of the Whistler Memorial Exhibition, have long since been taken up, and that the only way now to obtain one is to inscribe one's name at the New Gallery. As the catalogue will be strictly limited and will never be reprinted, every one who is interested in art in general or in Whistler in particular should make a point of subscribing, otherwise they cannot be certain of securing a copy. The Exhibition closes on the 15th inst.

Visitors to Rome this spring should on no account fail to visit the substantial remains of the Curia, in connection with which some fresh discoveries have recently been made by judicious exploration. All Roman antiquities are profoundly interesting to those who possess the sense of history, and the Curia, though not one of the oldest monuments of the ancient State, teems with great memories of the Empire from Augustus to Diocletian. In the course of centuries the level of the earth about the building has risen very high, and a church—that of S. Andriano al Foro—has been built over it, but the original walls of the Curia remain, and earnest students of Roman history may be glad of the opportunity of contributing small amounts to the sum of 500,000 lire—little more than £20,000—required for their effective restoration.

LITERATURE

A NORTH-COUNTRY SQUIRE OF QUEEN ANNE'S DAY

Blundell's Diary. Edited by the late Rev. T. E. GIBSON.
Published by G. G. Walmsley, Liverpool.

ON the panelled stairway of a certain old-fashioned Lancashire country house there hangs the portrait of a bluff old gentleman in brown velvet. His round rubicund face looks out from beneath his curled periwig with an expression of mingled good-humour and pomposity: his eyebrows are faintly arched, his lips are pursed, but there is a dimple in the middle of his chin and a knowing twinkle in his blue eyes. He seems uncommonly well-pleased with himself and the world, and carries himself with so lofty an air that one would judge him rather a frequenter of courts than an honest country gentleman, who seldom went abroad, and only visited the metropolis at rare intervals. The published diary of this worthy—Nicholas Blundell, Squire of Crosby—gives many quaint records of his doings. They are recounted very simply in the briefest, not to say baldest, fashion, yet the peculiarity of the phraseology and the extreme originality of the spelling lend vividness to his style. These pages gain moreover a special interest from the fact that they present a faithful picture of the country life of the period. We hear of Goose Feasts and Merry Nights, of Coursings, and Buckhunting, and "Hors-racings;" of the Breaking of the Flax, the Flowering of the Village Cross, the Weaving of Wool spun by the Squire's wife and daughters from his own Jersey Sheep into a "homs Made Sute" for his wear.

The Diarist relates with precision his own courtship of a lady whom he had apparently never seen before he set out to pay his addresses to her. His preparations for the business are set down with great exactness. On March 5, 1703, he "Payed 7s to Ri: Woods for making a Duple Brested Coat;" three days afterwards he "discoursed James Nicolson concerning a Mourning Saddle and Houlters" (Mr. Blundell's father was not long dead). On March 28 we read: "I writ to Lord Langdale, inclosed it to Coz: Eyre, ye lawyer, and sent it to the Post." On April 6 he received permission through three intermediaries to "wate of Mrs. Fr: Langdall" as soon as he pleased. On the following day his chaplain went to Liverpool to buy cloth for another black coat which had to be entrusted to two tailors before it was successfully fashioned. The wooer next borrowed a pair of "pistolls" which, however, proved "Rather too larg and so Extraordinary Fine" that he decided to leave them behind. His journey from Liverpool to Oxfordshire occupied six days, and shortly after his arrival he "Discoursed Lord Langdale (the father of his intended bride) in his chamber, and Lady Webb (her sister) in ye Dining roome." It is a pleasure to read that after this the discreet suitor at length made his "first Adress to Mrs. Fr: Langdale" herself. After another interval of two days "Lady Webb discoursed me in ye garden. I Discoursed Mrs. Langdale in ye kitchen garden." This last proceeding seems to have brought matters to a practical issue, for the very next day "Lady Dowager Webb Read ye Heds of Agreement of Marriage to be between Mrs. Fr: Langdale and me, N. Bl: in presence of Lord Langdale and Sir John Webb." Next "Mr. Trynder ye Lawyer came to Haythrop for instructions to draw Artickleys of Marriage," and a day or two after "I presented my Dimond ring to Mrs. Fr: Langdale."

In the brief interval between betrothal and marriage the Squire visited London where he "Saw the Silent Woman acted, walked to Westminster and saw ye Tombs; Went at night to Will's Coffy Hous," and in fact spent a deliriously exciting week. Then back again to his fair one, to be regaled by morris-dances and kindred performances by "the Lords and Ladys of May."

"I presented my Guilt Coffy Spoons," he writes: "we danned after ye Taber and Pipe . . . I payed Mr. Person for a Weding Ring. . . . Tried On my Weding Sute there and in other Places."

On June 16: "Lady Dowager Webb acquainted me ye marriage was to be ye day following."

On June 17 indeed the triumphant entry appears: "I was Married to Lord Langdales Doughter by Mr. Sloughter a Clergy-man."

On the 25th: "My Chariot came to Haythrop to carry my Wife home to Crosby."

Such good speed, indeed, did the young couple make that the chariot, drawn no doubt by the four blacks which were then considered indispensable to a gentleman's equipage, arrived at its destination in a corresponding number of days.

The lady who was courted with such ceremony seems to have at once assumed the subordinate position proper to the female of the period. There is indeed frequent mention of "my Wif" in the Diary, but it would appear that she had a dull time of it. She rode out behind her husband here and there, and occasionally "fell of the Hors," after which she was immediately "Bluddied," the infallible remedy for almost all disturbances whether of mind or body. Her portrait, which hangs beside that of her lord, presents a depressed and anæmic appearance. She made frequent "Visets and How-do-you's" to her neighbours, particularly after a birth or a death; she went by stealth to Mass and prayers, more often than not in "Disgise"—the Blundells of Crosby being always staunch Roman Catholics. She spun Jersey and tried to make Red Gingerbread. On February 20, 1704, the following tragic entry suggests that delicate ladies of Queen Anne's time had certain qualities in common with those of the present day. "She quarreled with me about her not tacking Phissick and my not coming to see and pitty her."

On September 22 Mistress Blundell presented her husband with a daughter, the future heiress of Crosby, for no son blessed the union. The record of a certain sporting transaction which took place on September 14, 1711, would seem to prove, however, that Squire Blundell did not relinquish hope of a male heir for many years.

"I sold my Mare Punsh to Rich: Westhead for Four Pounds in hand and Eleven Pound more to be payed on ye Birth of my first Son by my now Wife."

Two days afterwards:

"Ned Hatton came to me to Petission I wold be off ye bargain had made with Ri: Westhead, but I would not consent to it."

On the 21st, being anxious to clench the matter:

"I sent Wm Ainsw: to Rich: Westhead with my Mare Punsh, being he had bought her of me some time agoe but he sent her back in hopes I would come upon a new Bargan but we stuck to ye first bargain."

On December 4:

"I sent my Mare Punsh to Rich: Westheads, he was not at home but after some time his Wife took charg of her."

Another daughter, Frances, presently appeared upon the scene, and we have many pretty pictures of the little damsels. On one occasion:

"They buried one of their Babbys with a great deal of formallity. They had a Garland of Flowers carried before it and at least twenty or more of their playfellows were at ye Burryal."

At another time they are taken to a Poppet Show. Again, to view "ye strange Creatures as were to be seen at Ormskirk Fair." The girls were taken to a foreign school and on their way homewards after escorting them thither the Squire and his Lady had quite a festive time in London. "My Wife bought a Red Satine Sute and I a Dove Colour Cloath Sute." They saw a play called "Titus Andronicus acted at ye Play hous in Drury Lain." They went to Tatham Fair and Bartholomew Fair; to

"Malburgh Hous—'tis a pritty little Hous and some good pictures drawn by L'Gar thence to Buckingham House wch is really Noble and Fine."

On another occasion the pair had still greater excitements in London; Mrs. Blundell being taken to see a Poppet Show and a Hanging on the same day.

A kindly, good-natured busybody was the Squire, for ever trying experiments, and being invariably cheerful when they failed, as they always did. Now he is taking the clock to pieces, now tinkering with the kitchen jack which he could not contrive to put together again. Anon:

"I helped to set some Tulop roots as were dressed with Ink after different manners and some as were order'd other wayes in hops to change their cullor, but to no good effect."

Yet again:

"It being near Full Moon I cut my Wives hair of."

He was not above doing a little smuggling on occasion.

"This night I had a cargo of 16 Larg ones brought to Whit Hall . . . W: and Ca: covered the Cargo very well with straw."

Hardly a day passes that he does not mention drinking with this one and that one; sometimes the statement is followed by the remark "Extreaimly merry," at other times "Ill drunk." He seems to have been on most friendly terms with all the neighbouring Parsons, albeit that every now and then he was obliged to retire to a hiding-place in the panelling while his house was searched. Notice was generally given of the impending visit of the soldiers by some obliging neighbour, who as likely as not gave hospitality to the Squire's horses to prevent their being seized.

It is impossible not to laugh when we come upon such an announcement as this:

"It being Saltford Fair I light of a Palsing (pacing) Gelding there I rode him into Manchester and bought him. I call him Pesient Grissell."

A domestic tragedy is succinctly set down in three entries:

"Aug. 14th, 1724. Before three this Morning I disturmed two Cupple of Woosters Jane Withington, Nelly Howerd and their Sparks. Aug. 15th. Mat Withington came to chapter his Doughter for Courtin in ye Night. Aug. 17th. Jane Withington and Nelly Howerd left their Service and went to Darby Waikes."

Though Mr. Blundell appears to have been frequently called in to negotiate difficult transactions, such as the making peace between husband and wife, the adjusting of disputes among friends, the drawing-up of wills for his poorer neighbours, and the generous bestowal of advice on all who sought it, he does not seem to have ruled his own womankind as sternly as was customary in those days. Fanny, the second girl, was evidently a poor-spirited, hysterical creature, always ailing and complaining, going into "convulsions" at sight of a mouse, afraid to "ride out Single," always in the doctor's hands. Mally, on the contrary, seems to have known her own mind, which was not always in accordance with that of her father. Great was his desire to arrange a marriage between her and young Mr. Standish of Standish, when Mally was just twenty-one. But though Mr. Standish the elder "made a Proposall to me," and friends and neighbours interested themselves in the affair, and the young man himself "payed several Visets," the lady would have none of him. Mr. Blundell seems to have been in some measure deceived by her, and indeed to have prematurely counted his chickens.

"Being Matters are now lickley to goe forward Coz: Gillib: and I began to Consider what proposalls were proper to be made to Mr. Standish."

Cousin Gillibrand, who seems to have been the intermediary in this delicate transaction, subsequently dined at Standish with Mr. Blundell. "Old Mr. Stand: I: etc.: discoursed of Proposals for my Doughter Mary's Settlement." The wooer stayed at Crosby shortly after, and was fêted by the family, going with them to the play at Liverpool, helping to "Toos Wm: Roostick in a blanket," riding out with his would-be father-in-law to the seaside, and otherwise diverting himself.

On November 29 the entry stands ominous: "Mr. Standish went hence, this was his last Viset," and on the 25th: "Mally discoursed me seriously and told me her Mind."

The Diary comes to an abrupt end three years later, no doubt owing to the failure of Mr. Blundell's eyesight, which was accelerated by sundry experiments carried out by the advice of his friends. We read that he began:

"to use spectacles but not as a constansy only when ye print is too small for me or that it is too dark to see my Letters plain without ym:"

also to use "Eye Bolsom," and to put Clary seeds in his eyes "without great benefit."

He lived, however, for several years longer, and it is to be hoped that he consoled himself with the simple pursuits in which he always seems to have found delight; raising flowers, playing Tick-tack, wandering over his fields, where he discoursed the Songoers (gleaners) and Marlers, drinking that "extraordinary good Ale," which he so often mentions, always busy, ever full of importance, ever, in his own estimation at least, the centre of his little world.

M. E. FRANCIS.

PHINEAS FLETCHER

The Spenser of his Age, being Selected Poetry from the Works of Phineas Fletcher. (J. R. Tutin, Cottingham, near Hull. Limited to 500 copies. 2s. 6d. net.)

MR. WALTER JERROLD, who may, as the author of the Introduction, be presumed also to be the compiler of this modest little volume, has done a kindly action—he has revived the memory of a worthy poet and at the same time has been careful not to ask too much of the "general reader," for whose benefit the present selection has avowedly been made. The general readers of former generations have passed judgment on Phineas Fletcher with no uncertain voice; they have perhaps glanced through specimens of his work in anthologies, but they have not encouraged any printer to publish the body of his poetry in a cheap and accessible form. There is therefore no need to apologise (as the compiler is inclined to do) for tempting the appetite of the public with only a morsel of ninety pages—the public would certainly not relish very much more.

Born in 1582, Phineas Fletcher passed amid stirring times an uneventful life. Eton and Cambridge gave him a sufficiency of learning, and a Norfolk rectory (1621-1650) supplied the appropriate milieu for the cultivation of an elaborate and ever-gentle Muse. In 1633 appeared the poet's main work "The Purple Island, or the Isle of Man," and it is on this that such fame as he possesses is chiefly based. Many a reader must have been misled by this curious title, which does not allude to any Utopian island in a faery sea nor yet encroach on Mr. Hall Caine's literary preserve, but simply covers a minute description of the whole nature of Man, who is himself the Purple Island. A piscatory play, "piscatorie eclogs," some religious verse in English and Latin, and a few miscellaneous pieces complete Fletcher's acknowledged achievement.

The poem "Brittain's Ida" appeared in 1628 as a belated work of Spenser, who has now been relieved of the attribution. One can easily understand that the real author preferred to screen his reverend identity when describing with quite irreverend unction one of the little gestes of Venus. It is curious to note how easily the verse dedicated to this facile goddess trips along, as compared with many a passage of the poet's more sober work—one is led irresistibly to think of a truant running gleefully down a sunny lane whilst his fellows are chained to their desks beneath the master's eye. Not that our author's muse cannot enjoy an innocent holiday—there is genuine ease and freshness in the lines (from "The Purple Island") describing the Shepherd's life:

"His certain life, that never can deceive him,
Is full of thousand sweets, and rich content:
The smooth leaved beeches in the field receive him
With coolest shades, till noon-tide rage is spent;
His life is neither toss'd in boisterous seas
Of troublous world, nor lost in slothful ease;
Pleased and full blest he lives when he his God can please.

His bed of wool yields safe and quiet sleeps,
While by his side his faithful spouse hath place;
His little son into his bosom creeps,
The lively picture of his father's face:
Never his humble house or state torment him;
Less he could like, if less his God had sent him;
And when he dies, green turfs with grassy tomb content him."

Again, Hymen makes a brave entrance:

"See where he goes, how all the troop he cheereth,
Clad with a saffron-coat, in's hand a light;
In all his brow not one sad cloud appeareth;
His coat all pure, his torch all burning bright."

But ever round the corner is lurking a conceit, which, like an uninvited dog, follows the reader through three lines or even a stanza. We can bear such a slight play as the following:

"Ease thou my wound: but (ah!) what hand can ease
Or give a medicine that such wound may please?
When she my sole physician is my soul's disease?"

but it is too much for us when antitheses are piled one upon the other, as thick as leaves in Vallombrosa, e.g.:

"Love is life's end, (an end, but never ending)
All joys, all sweets, all happiness, awarding;
Love is life's wealth, (ne'er spent, but ever spending)
More rich by giving, taking by discarding," &c.

There is much of this kind to forgive in Shakespeare—there is a terrible amount of it in Fletcher. He is like a bee drowning in excess of his own honey, and the reader himself begins very soon to feel positively sticky.

Nearly half the present selection consists of elaborate personifications of various Virtues and Vices, which afford much scope for ingenious devisings, but little for poetic feeling. For our last quotation we will avoid even the most lurid of the Vices and hear Fletcher's fine lines on the fall of Lucifer himself (which were well known to Milton):

"Thus fell this prince of darkness, once a bright
And glorious star: he wilful turned away
His borrowed globe from that eternal light:
Himself he sought, so lost himself: his ray
Vanish'd to smoke, his morning sunk in night,
And never more shall see the springing day:
To be in Heaven the second, he disdains:
So now the first in Hell and flames he reigns, Crown'd once with joy and light: crown'd now with fire and pains."

A poet capable of such flights can never be wholly forgotten, but his faults will equally prevent his being generally remembered.

There is a Bibliography, a List of English and Latin Poems, and a page or two of explanatory notes. We would point out that the "Crambe" which Hæreticus repeats (p. 53) has nothing to do with Crambo (as the writer of the notes seems to think)—it is the "Crambe repetita" of Juvenal. The photographs of Hilgay, Norfolk, and of the Cam, are out of keeping with the rest of the book, which is neatly got up and most readably printed.

LAHONTAN'S VOYAGES

New Voyages to North America. By the BARON DE LAHONTAN. Reprinted from the English edition of 1703. With Introduction and Notes by REUBEN GOLD THWAITES, LL.D. In Two Volumes. (Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. $7.50 net.)

To the general reader, the name of the Baron de Lahontan will probably be as unfamiliar as that of the locality from which he sprang, but both the man and the village are worthy of some attention. This the labours of Dr. Thwaites may secure them: and, indeed, for many reasons these volumes are very welcome. They display enthusiasm as well as erudition, and render accessible a great quantity of curious information. Few pages of history are more deeply scored with episodes of romantic interest than those which record the early developments of European activity in North America—and here, where the author is a Frenchman, who owes and eloquently proclaims his gratitude to England, the fact that his work now reappears under American auspices cannot fail to render all he did peculiarly interesting at the present time. Of its value we will speak hereafter.

Lahontan lies in the heart of the Pyrenees. Here, of noble but not always prosperous stock, the baron, third of his line, was born in the year 1666. As a child, he enjoyed the sunshine of aristocratic favour, though his father fell on evil days some time before his death. Litigation naturally involved loss, and before he had reached his prime young Lahontan learned not to put much confidence in princes. Even so, he hoped to win his way to success by means of his own adventurous spirit. Conscious of gallant purpose, stout heart, ready tongue, and persuasive pen, he saw the world as a highway for conquest to an adventurer so well equipped with the necessary passports. But luck and Lahontan were almost always strangers to one another. He certainly rendered service to France. More than once his services were handsomely recognised at Versailles. But on the whole, as soldier, diplomatist, or man of the world, he cuts a strange and rather sorry figure, in spite of the fact that the story of his wanderings brought him fame while yet living, and remains to bear witness to his intrepid spirit and his by no means insignificant achievements nearly two centuries after his death. Neglect, however, has been Lahontan's portion, and such neglect it is not a matter of great difficulty to explain.

Lahontan lied. The historian may well be puzzled when he has to deal with the deliberate and artistic liar. But of course there are lies and lies, and wit may serve to cover a multitude of sins. Dr. Thwaites exercises an uncommon ingenuity in explaining the methods of his hero, whose first—and authentic—documents of travel were hailed with joy by an untravelled world, to be succeeded by narratives glowing with "the light that never was, on sea or land." And naturally, when Lahontan invented the Long River, to mislead a whole generation of discoverers, allowance must be made, first, because the thing was wittily done, and next, on account of the position in which he found himself—penniless, yet with a name to sustain and with a traveller's reputation. Unfortunately, this fictitious story is not a solitary blur. There is a curious parallel in the account our author gives of the survivors of La Salle's last expedition, admittedly untrue: and then there is his general lightness of touch, delightful in itself, but critically dangerous. Mankind at large must not be indefinitely exploited. New France, in Lahontan's vivid pages, could be realised by his contemporaries—but, if the narrative were false in other respects, if chapters were added for the sake of gain, what is the use of Lahontan at all? Without much conviction, Dr. Thwaites suggests that the Long River fragment was allegorical, a phantasy, an intelligent anticipation of Swift. This will hardly do. Where Lahontan had a mind to satire, his weapons were already to hand. He is hardly flattered if, for the sake of stimulating a belief in his veracity, you belittle the ingenuity and power which enabled him to pen the exquisite dialogue between himself and the noble Huronian, Adario. It is worthy of Lucian.

"I envy the state of a poor savage, who tramples upon laws and pays homage to no Scepter." This is the keynote of Lahontan's style, the point of his grievance against the world as he found it. To him, as Dr. Thwaites shows, a true Arcadia existed that could be taken for an ensample of brighter life by the saddened denizens of camps, courts, and cities. Here,

"each man was a law unto himself, and did what seemed good in his own eyes. Here were no monks and priests, with their strictures and asceticisms, but a natural, sweetly reasonable religion. Aboriginal marriage was no fettering life-covenant, but an arrangement pleasing the convenience of the contracting parties. Man, innocent and unadorned, passed his life in the pleasures of the chase, warring only in the cause of the nation, scorning the suppositious benefits of civilisation and free from its diseases, misery, sycophancy, and oppression. In short, the American wilderness was the seat of serenity and noble philosophy."

Such a theory gives fullest play to an observer cultivated to the finger-tips, lively, brilliant, and socially popular, and Lahontan's own febrile personality is interwoven with the story he has to tell. He reports acutely and caustically, he celebrates brilliant exploits in which he bore a part, he makes no secret of his aversions and preoccupations, and shows us his Savages naked and unashamed in more than one sense. As a human document his work will remain invaluable. He laid bare the flaws and vices of his age unsparingly; he erected as an ideal the free and splendid life of the forest. Little as this can serve us in our day, there lies within it the germ of a fine philosophy, and Lahontan deserves to be enrolled among the pioneers of thought. "The Zeitgeist from the hills of the future descended upon him." Those who have now reissued his work and have thrown upon it the light of modern research may well claim that for picturesqueness and charm it contains passages which are unequalled in the literature of travel: that these are qualities hardly diminished at all by blemishes which are obvious: whilst the labour that has been bestowed both on the letters themselves and on the bibliography is worthy of the highest praise.

THE LAND OF SAINT FRANCIS

Homes of the First Franciscans in Umbria, the Borders of Tuscany and the Northern Marches. By BERYL D. DE SELINCOURT. (Dent, 4s. 6d. net.)

It is at Foligno—Foligno where young Francis Bernadone sold his father's goods in the service of the poor little chapel of S. Damiano of Assisi; Foligno now of the "dead churches"—that Mr. Maurice Hewlett pauses a little in his "Earthwork out of Tuscany" to muse and wonder on the riddles of Umbria. As he watches "these gray towers and the grand purple line of the hills hemming in the Tiber valley" he feels the folds of the soft Tuscan mantle slipping from off him; feels that from a land that has assimilated pagan and christian religious influences alike, to blend them into something comely and serene he has passed to places where men have outworn all the ecstasies, sensuous or ascetic, of the earth. He speaks of the old Umbrian passions—two ends of the candle indeed—for killing in this world and living in the next, of "the unquenchable Umbrian thirst for some spiritual nutriment, for some outlet for their passion to be found only in bloodshed or in fainting beneath the cross." In illustration of all this he has the terrible, beautiful, Baglioni of the sixteenth-century Perugia before us again, slaughtering in the market-place or confessing in a rapture of weeping at St. Brigida's meek feet; and, finally, hastening back to St. Francis and the thirteenth-century, he bridges seven hundred years or so with a wonderfully comprehensive little landscape with figures—

"Renan saw the gentle cadence of the landscape—violet hills, the silver gauze of water, olive yards all of a green mist; read the Fioretti and the dolorous ecstasies of Perugino's Sebastian, and straightway adapted the high-flown parallel worked out in detail by Giotto. Umbria for him was the Galilee of Italy, and Francis son of Bernard an avatar of Christ."

"But Renan," concludes Mr. Hewlett, "was apt to allow his emotions to ride him." This Mrs. de Selincourt never does. She will forgive us, we hope, for approaching her demesne, as it were, by way of neighbouring properties. Whenever Mr. Hewlett approaches Francis of Assisi he holds a fine bright candle, while the detailed descriptions of scenery and topography, with which the "Vie de Jésus" abound, are of the essence of the conceptions of this book. But emotion? It is no longer of service to any end to treat emotionally a figure which to some less imaginative minds must always seem a little ridiculous. Hallam has dismissed St. Francis in half a sentence as "a harmless enthusiast, pious and sincere, but hardly of sane mind." Mr. George Moore has, we believe, stigmatised him with shocking rudeness as a "squint-eyed Italian saint." Isaac d'Israeli was as flippant as might be when he found a prominent place for him among heroes of ecclesiastical legends. It takes a most imaginative sympathy and better art to see his life as John Richard Green saw it, falling "like a stream of light across the darkness of the time," or to glimpse in his rapt and joyful "imitatio Christi" a religion "perfectly sane, at bottom practical, with a base of plain, everyday ten-commandment morality." But that, we think with Mr. Hewlett, was the base of St. Francis's good brown life, and it is in this spirit that Mrs. de Selincourt treats him, both in her discriminating and sympathetic introduction and in the pages in which she has set him with his companions against the background of the haunts and hills he knew. "No one can hope to know S. Francis," writes M. Paul Sabatier in his preface, "without knowing and loving the places where he lived," and it has been Mrs. de Selincourt's method to traverse at leisure the whole region of his Italian harbourage, describing each convent or chapel, village or mountain solitude, setting each in its proper landscape and transcribing from the two chief contemporary biographies, the "Speculum Perfectionis" and the "Legenda Trium Sociorum," and from the Fioretti, the little flowers of Francis (popular legends probably gathered together in the fourteenth century) the associations of each with the earliest members of the Franciscan order. We almost think that in attempting this archaeology of the open places, if such an expression be permissible, she has essayed a task as difficult as it is fascinating—more difficult, in a sense, because more subtle, than those eager and arduous researches among the archives of Umbrian interiors which have made M. Paul Sabatier the first authority on the subject of S. Francis. Continuous topographical description draws largely upon many qualities, and though Mrs. de Selincourt's style, in any liberal spirit of criticism, is of a high average—broken, too, as her pages are by extracts of great interest—the broad illumination of her descriptive passages is not often flecked with those inspired lights and shades which sometimes make the turning of every fresh page of a book an anticipation of delight. That she can write well, however, any one of many passages would serve to show. Take this, for example, with its fine appreciation of the successive waves of efflorescence and fruition that flood a southern spring:

"The spring which is the youth of all herbs and green leafage, is the autumn and old age of the olives. The hoary leaves shake out their silver, half-crumpled to the sun, awaiting their dismissal; a warmer age is upon the gnarled trunks, luxuriant in deep rich garment of lichen and bedded moss, while the fresh green of the young corn breaks in waves round their feet, with here and there a poppy gem or a sprinkling of crimson clover spikes."

Another drawback to the topographical basis of presentment is that it almost inevitably tangles the thread and so spoils the continuity of the story. Let us take Assisi and its environs for instance, among which we pass most of our time. Its various chapels, convents and localities, are connected inter alia with St. Francis's quarrel with his father, with his influence over St. Clara, with his relations and controversies with brother Elias, whose ambitions for the order did so much to subvert its original ideal of simplicity, and with his death. Yet all these exits and entrances are spasmodic and slightly disconcerting to the uninitiated, who would like to know something more of the story of Clara, or of the difficult question of the exact position and motives of Elias, than they can learn without reference to some such book for example, as Mrs. Oliphant's vigorous and well-sustained narrative. In this connection a brief continuous account of St. Francis's life (it would go into a nutshell), together with a few notes concerning the more prominent of his companions would, we think, have been of great value. The outline map, too, of Umbria and the Tuscan borders (which should by the way have been a folding map) might well have been supplemented by one of Assisi and the country in its immediate vicinity.

In conclusion let us pay a tribute to the excellence of the selection of the various passages alluded to above. The famous dialogue between Francis and Leo on the Perfect Joy, "the sum and flower," as M. Sabatier has said, "of the Umbrian Gospel," is here of course, but one does not often see the beautiful legend of the feast of the brethren with Lady Poverty, transcribed at length from the "Sacrum Commercium," and many a quaint and beautiful little legend from the Fioretti adorns this book like a true and fragrant "little flower."

INDIAN STUDIES

The History of India: the Hindu and Mahometan Periods. By the Hon. MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE. With Notes and Additions by E. B. COWELL, M.A. Ninth Edition. (Murray, 15s. net.)

Cities of India. By G. W. FORREST, C.I.E. (Constable, 5s. net.)

THE enthusiast who seeks to interest a discerning public in Indian history labours under several disadvantages. There is the initial difficulty, of course, that India is a sub-continent peopled by so many and so various native races that any attempt to produce a synoptical record would be a very bewildering and otherwise unsatisfactory process. The Sikh and the Madrassi, for instance, are not only as far apart in language, religion, and character as a Tyrolean peasant and a Cossack of the Don, but they have progressed through the centuries of their historical existence on lines so utterly dissimilar that any co-ordination is practically impossible, at any rate until a comparatively late stage of British supremacy is reached. But the continental character of India is beginning to be well understood in these days when no longer a Member of Parliament could be found to say, as one did not so very many years ago: "I know a great deal about Burma because I have a brother stationed there—but he always spells it 'Bermuda'!" Less generally grasped is the fact that Indian history has a good deal in common with Chinese painting. There is the same flavour of immemorial antiquity, the same brilliance, the same want of perspective. Any epoch in the annals of India prior to the British occupation can by an artist be made to captivate the eye and stimulate the imagination. But there is lacking the true relation of distances, and the result is a flat inconsequence which is very disappointing. Moreover, the student who looks for results other than those which come from "drum and trumpet" performances cannot but swiftly appreciate the reason why Indian history will never rank with classical histories in a truly educational sense. In battle records the annals of India are equally prolific with those of Rome, they afford instances of kings and governors not less heroic and hardly less exemplary. But they are singularly deficient in any hint of a national striving for constitutional improvement, and in any sort of popular effort to check the growth of some of the simplest forms of unadulterated tyranny the world has ever seen. Neither Hindus nor Muhammadans have ever howled as the Romans did for tribunes: the revolutions of India have had their origin not in constitutional yearnings but in palace intrigue; and expansion has usually been along the lines not of imperial conquest but of pure rapine and mere extortion of dues from a broader area. Similarly India, like Greece, can point to a mythology enshrined in epics which will always remain monuments of world literature, and which are familiar to many English readers in the paraphrases by Talboys Wheeler. She has produced some notable dramas, such as Sakuntala, of which the late Monier Williams made an agreeable translation. Her art has merits which are widely and some times enthusiastically recognised. But no comparison is possible between the educational value of the tedious slokas of, say, the Ramayana and "the surge and thunder of the Odyssey." No such intellectual benefit will ever be derived from the conceits of Kalidasa as from the irony of Sophocles. As for Indian art, "humorous, amorous, obscure, subtle, and refined" it may be, but it has never reacted upon us as Greek art did upon agreste Latium, and we may well be thankful for the fact.

Yet with these limitations Indian history has a strange attractiveness. For sheer variety it is incomparable. In its earlier phases the student seems to be watching a horde of insects, busy after a mixed fashion, some in a patient struggle for existence, others in building strange and more or less sumptuous structures for the more dominant members of the crawling community. From the historical standpoint the Hindu period is mostly a drab assortment of lower organisms, from which the Brahmans, the supreme caste, stand out as law-givers and statesmen, as poets and philosophers, the creators of the language, the grammar, the literature of Hindustan, as well as the founders of its religion. Of the Hindu period the era of Buddhist supremacy with its humaner views, its missions and monasticism, constitutes to many the redeeming feature. It carries us along for some fifteen centuries, from about the date of Alexander's invasion to the Brahmanical revival in the seventh and eighth centuries A.D. Next comes a succession of early Muhammadan dynasties brought to an inglorious end in 1398 by the invasion of the great Timur, the Tamburlaine whom Marlowe brought on the stage in a chariot drawn by "pampered jades of Asia," in the fair persons of captive Indian damsels of high degree. Of Muhammadan India the apotheosis is, of course, the Moghul dynasty founded at the close of the fifteenth century by Babar, a dynasty which began to decline after the death of Aurangzeb in 1707, and the fall of which paved the way for British supremacy. It is in this period that the more spectacular attributes of Indian history assert themselves. The court of the Great Moghul will ever be surrounded by traditions of decorative magnificence, coupled with some military display and great artistic ostentation. This splendour reached its zenith in the reign of Shah Jahan, whose throne in the shape of a peacock with a jewel-studded tail was valued by Tavernier at six and a half millions sterling, and of whom so many lovely architectural memorials are to be found at Agra and Delhi. But the Moghul Emperors did more than hold gorgeous courts and build stately mosques and tombs. The far-seeing Akbar founded a new religion of his own, displayed astute imperial statesmanship by his conciliation of the Hindus, settled the land tenure, and even established judges and a police. Aurangzeb, too bigoted to be conciliatory, was still a fine vigorous ruler of the would-be absolute sort, a capital man of business, and well-fitted by personal character for such a throne as that of Delhi. But his very activity and his restless anxiety to subject Southern India to his sway brought him into troublesome contact with the Mahrattas, and clouded with failure a career which, with some modification, might have been one of singular beneficence and progress.

With the advent of the French and English and the struggle for supremacy in the eighteenth century Indian history underwent a kaleidoscopic change, not unhappily exemplified by the difference between the two volumes whose titles are set forth at the commencement of this article. For while Elphinstone has dealt studiously, though by no means exhaustively, with the Hindu period, and has given us perhaps as good an account of the Muhammadan Emperors as is yet available, Mr. Forrest describes some of the cities, past and present, of India, largely by the light of our own Government records of which he formerly had official control. Of course there is in both cases a degree of overlapping, just as there is in the actual eras themselves, but the reader who has taken his impression of the Hindu and Muhammadan periods from Elphinstone will not require much further instruction in this direction from Mr. Forrest. None the less will he find real interest in the latter's description, brightly tinted with local colour, of the establishment of the early British factories at Madras, of the growth of Calcutta from the time of sturdy Job Charnock, of early days at Surat, so valiantly defended by Oxinden in 1664 against the great Mahratta freebooter, Sivaji, and of other early British developments until, in the accounts of Lucknow, Delhi and Cawnpore, the story of the Sepoy Revolt is reached, and elaborated with no mean skill. To the more advanced student of Indian history it will always be an interesting circumstance that the same Elphinstone who wrote the history of India up to about 1761 was himself half a century later a prominent figure in Indian political life. In 1808 he was sent on a famous mission to Afghanistan; later he became Governor of Bombay, and he might have been Governor-General of India had he wished. There are few finer figures in the annals of British India than Mountstuart Elphinstone, and, if his History had no other merit, it would always be esteemed as the work of one who himself left a real mark upon India, and who was distinguished as much by his habitual moderation and good sense as by his genuine appreciation of the native character. As an additional link between the two books coupled for the purposes of this sketch it may be mentioned that the best available account of Elphinstone is one prefixed by Mr. Forrest to his former selection from the State Papers written during the time when the future historian was Governor of Bombay.

We turn from these two books, one by no means a perfect history, the other little more than a glorified, though highly creditable, guide-book, with a renewed sense of disappointment. For the reasons lightly stated above it may be too much to expect that a work about India will ever be produced, of the same class, for instance, as Green's "English People" or Bodley's "France." But we ought to be able to approach more nearly what is wanted than we have done as yet by means of unsatisfying histories and discursive travel-books. To some it may seem that the right line has yet to be taken, in that, with the exception of the late Sir William Hunter, none of the writers on India seem to have grasped the effect of geographical conditions upon the various growth of the Indian peoples, while even Hunter did not keep this aspect as steadily in view as is necessary. The writer of this brief sketch recalls a trip to the Marble Rocks of Jubbulpore in company with Hunter, who discoursed very eloquently on this topic, illustrating with the aid of a walking-stick the fertilising function of the Indian rivers to which the capacity of Northern India to support a dense population is to be attributed. But even Hunter might have gone further than he did in his published works to demonstrate the true relation of their geographical environment to the growth of the various Indian races, an environment which made them sometimes content to remain stationary for ages, sometimes impatient to lay hold on other parts where the conditions of life seemed easier, rendering them now meekly tolerant of any sort of oppression, and again frankly pugnacious and domineering. Nowhere, too, can the influence of geography upon the sort of religion that makes history be more easily traced than in India. The forests of India alone are hotbeds of beliefs so fantastic and monstrous that no race holding them could hope to offer prolonged resistance to conquerors rejoicing in wholesome and practical creeds. Geography is probably at the bottom of the relapse from pure Buddhism into Brahmanism with its many vulgar mysteries and obscenities, and the fact that Islam to-day flourishes freely in the mountainous Indian borderland, to the entire exclusion of the easier religions of the plains, has a distinct historical significance.

THE CREDIT SIDE OF THE AMERICAN LEDGER

The Americans. By HUGO MÜNSTERBERG, Professor of Psychology at Harvard University. Translated by EDWIN B. PH.D. (Williams and Norgate, 12s. 6d. net.)

SOME years ago Professor Münsterberg, of Harvard, drew up a comparative balance-sheet in which the moral assets of Germany and America were contrasted, with the result that not a few of the American values were rather severely marked down, somewhat to the chagrin of the American public, who are, perhaps, more than any other people liable to accept supposed national virtues at their face value. The audit no doubt was a little one-sided, not because the auditor was in any wise unfair or impartial, or because he was unduly drastic in writing down or writing off certain questionable items, but because a comparison was not always feasible. American strong points, unless fundamentals are compared with fundamentals, are often prime numbers which refuse to be expressed in German factors. Professor Münsterberg has very wisely brought out a supplementary estimate of American ideals in which special stress has been laid on those which are least obvious to Germans. The book has been Englished, or rather Americanised, by his assistant, Professor Holt, as may be seen from such phrases as "to budge the masses, to come round obstacles, the more brilliant plays (points in the game), there was never any let up (stop)," as well as from such comical words as muckers (the reverse of millionaires), pinctile and labile. The work, in spite of its undoubted merits, lacks the keen incisiveness that distinguished the "American Traits." At times the style is rather diffuse, and in place of brilliant generalisations one gets somewhat barren generalities. The attack is often scarcely pressed home, and even when the Professor is tilting at the worst abuses, one feels he does it with a blunted spear. For instance, he hardly seems to us to insist sufficiently on the hopelessness of breaking down the unholy alliance between the party "boss" and the low-class voter, which has made some of the most thoughtful Americans regard the disenfranchisement of the latter as the only remedy against chronic corruption. What is better housing to Mr. Dooley and his tribe compared with the blandishments of a "thorough gentleman," who has always a nod and a shake of the hand for every one, finds his clients work, gets them out of trouble if they fall foul of the police, and never misses sending them a substantial Christmas present? We have heard of one boss who gave away yearly sixteen tons of turkey together with corresponding quantities of beef, mutton, etc. etc. If open speculation and misappropriation are on the decline, blackmail which furnishes the bulk of the funds goes on as merrily as ever. Nor is there any freedom outside party; the honest clergyman who denounces corruption finds his assessments rise in proportion to his rhetoric. In the struggles between organised capital and labour one hardly thinks that Professor Münsterberg has taken into account the possibility of high prices bringing into existence a certain number of free labour shops, an eventuality which would effectively prevent employers and employees combining to exploit the general public. To an English reader the Professor's remarks on Trusts in Germany are certainly misleading. They may not have assumed in that country the American form, but that they are not only powerful but extensive we know to our cost from the operations of the Kartell system. Professor Münsterberg is pretty sure that Western Canada will soon form part of the United States. The reasons he gives are largely economic. But much depends on which side of the border the economic pressure falls. As long as Canadian wheat is taxed, the new settlers may desire reciprocity or even union, but recently, in order to keep American mills supplied, a system of wholesale drawback on imported wheat has been introduced which neutralises the tax. In these circumstances the new settler may be quite content to tax American goods as heretofore, as long as he can export his grain on such favourable terms.

Such criticism apart, Professor Münsterberg has been remarkably successful in the general purpose of his book. It should certainly conciliate American opinion, though it be an epode rather than a palinode. For here we have laid bare the four-square foundations from which really springs the greatness of the American character; self-direction, self-realisation, self-perfection and self-assertion. The first pervades all political life. Its motto is the refrain of "Rule Britannia" with Americans substituted for Britons. It reveals itself in its strong love of freedom, its respect for the rights of other individuals, its readiness to enter into association, which is the voluntary subordination of the free man. It is ethical rather than logical, based on the will rather than the intellect. Strong in its hatred of impalpable State control, it is equally strong in its longing for self-government, in its insistence of the individual as an integral part of a government which is of the people, for the people and by the people, with the necessary corollary that every office of State is open to anybody. Its merits are the direct interest it gives to the average individual in political life; its defects that it brings every question down to the level of the man in the street and thereby tends to rule out genius. Yet there are not wanting signs in American Democracy, which we are rather surprised to see unnoticed by Professor Münsterberg, that the Übermensch is rising in value. The need of fixing responsibility somewhere, which the American has discovered to be necessary from his business experience, has led to the putting at the head of affairs, in more instances than one, a strong mayor or governor with almost dictatorial powers. The present struggle between Mr. Roosevelt and the Senate is largely a clash between the old and new conceptions of political management. The spirit of self-initiative dominates the economic arena. The magnificent economic life of America is not a sordid worship of the almighty dollar, but the dollar is the standard by which a man measures the intrinsic value of his activity. In a word, dollars are but counters in the game which the American plays for the love of playing. To marry for money or to gamble in a lottery is not regarded as legitimate speculation, for neither can be considered a game of skill. Nor is the leit-motiv one of enabling one's posterity to dispense indefinitely with work. By not a few it is held almost a sin to die rich, and more than one millionaire, like Mr. Carnegie, is putting back his counters into the common pool. Rivalry is everywhere, but envy is almost unknown. The beaten man in America is a sportsman; he knows how to lose. Business in Europe is looked upon as honest but not noble. The merchant always sinks the shop when he can. Work in America, however, with the exception of shaving, waiting, and boot-blackening, is never regarded as degrading. No one is ashamed of his calling, however humble. The dignity of labour is a real thing. This, however, is no reason why Professor Münsterberg should indulge in a sneer at "the æsthetic conception of the Japanese who teach their youth to despise mercantile business and tastefully to arrange flowers."

The third corner-stone is the spirit of self-perfection. Here the predominant influence is that of Boston and New England throughout the country, just as it is the example of New York and Chicago which counts in the economic sphere. But economic influences are also a force to reckon with in this, the intellectual arena. It is they which give backing to those utilitarian ideals which are ever doing battle with the Puritan. Is the kingdom strictly of this world? Is outward and immediate success the real and only goal? Is not culture as necessary as technics? And so we find in the higher schools a never-ceasing struggle between fixed courses for general education and elective courses in which specialisation is freely permitted in view of business and professional training. Association—whether in the form of church, school, or institution for mutual improvement—plays an enormous part. The churches cater not merely for Sunday wants, but also by means of clubs, guilds, societies, for all the spiritual everyday needs of their members. Each is a little spiritual and social imperium in the body politic. The common school takes the rough metal of European emigration and mints it into American citizens. The free library which is to be found in every town is in many cases the working man's club and takes the place of the pot-house with us. To show how Americans read, it is only needful to state that the number of periodicals published in America exceeds the numbers for all Europe.

The spirit of self-assertion concludes the list of corner-stones. It may be summed up in the phrase "a man's a man for a' that." The day labourer is no less, and the President no more than a man. The arc of one is insignificant, and of the other extensive, but manhood subtends them both. American humour, which is really that touch of nature which makes the whole world kin, is ever reminding the members of American society of their common humanity. To them the State is no intricate patrimonium of accumulated benefits and duties, but a naked collection of citizens, each equally free and independent, with no sense of responsibility to either past or posterity, but absorbed in a workaday present. Hence their comparative obliviousness to two very serious problems. The first concerns the schools. Three-fourths of American education to-day is administered by women. Even in the schools for pupils from 14 to 19 the female teachers are in the majority, and in the training colleges 71.3 of the professors are women. Such a preponderance of female teachers cannot fail to have a profound effect on the race. The best woman teacher can only appeal to the chivalry of boys, to their respect, and perhaps to their admiration. A man alone can teach them obedience for the sake of obedience, and loyalty to an ideal. Again, by his manners and conduct, his obiter dicta, his general criticisms, his passing judgments on men and matters, he alone can unconsciously mould a class to look at things in a certain masculine fashion. A woman may well make a boy more sensitive to influence and suggestion, but she will rarely be able to implant the same regard for logic and principles as a man. If the present state of things continues, the Americans, who are already highly emotional, may pass one day from the category of masculine to that of feminine nations, of which Bismarck was so fond of speaking. The other change is very clearly indicated by Münsterberg. It concerns the whole future of the race. While the negro population in Massachusetts, as elsewhere, shows an excess of 1.74 per cent. of births over deaths, and the emigrant class, which is mainly non-Anglo-Saxon, an excess of 4.56 per cent., the real American stock shows only an excess of .38 per cent., and in some places an actual decrease. The cause of this alarming state of things is probably the upbringing of the American woman. From her youth up she is treated and educated as a superior being. In reality she is the last word of ultra-individualism. Reared in an atmosphere of privilege rather than duty, even before marriage she enjoys all the social freedom of the married woman. Marriage to her often means union with one who is intellectually her inferior, while her marriage duties appear but little better than a corvée. She has in fact been trained for everything else except the purpose for which nature intended her. Not the least factor in this undesirable result is the co-education she has received. Motherhood must necessarily be a neglected subject in a school given over to male or epicene ideals. Yet if America is to save herself, motherhood must be made the corner-stone of her girls' education.

TALES FROM THE NEVER, NEVER, NEVER LAND

Mediaeval Lore. FROM BARTHOLOMEW ANGLICUS. By ROBERT STEELE. With Preface by WILLIAM MORRIS. (Moring: The King's Classics. 1s. 6d.)

IN this collection of extracts from "De Proprietatibus," a "famous knowledge-book of the Middle Ages," we obtain an interesting insight into various mediæval theories concerning the problems of nature. Modern research has indeed proved many of these theories to be entirely erroneous, but the book is none the less valuable on account of the light which it throws upon the daily life and customs of that time. "De Proprietatibus" was the work of a Franciscan friar. It dealt with a heterogeneous mass of general knowledge as "approved by the books of great and cunning clerks, and by the experience of most witty and noble philosophers," and its plain yet forcible language gained a great reputation for the author throughout Europe. The translator of the present series of extracts has preserved as much as possible of the simplicity of the style adopted by Bartholomew Anglicus, despite the difficulties raised by the mediæval Latin in which his book was written.

The chief aim of early philosophy was to explain how everything was generated, and how "the properties of things follow and ensue their substance." The number of elements of which things were composed was generally estimated as four, these being earth, air, fire, and water, which were said to be present—two, three, or four together—in all substances. The science of chemistry was still in a most elementary stage, although it had commenced some four hundred years before the date when Bartholomew laboriously compiled his encyclopedia, and alchemists were regarded as magicians by the common people. "The wondrous Michael Scott," whose writings and translations from the Arabic were of great service to Bartholomew, had gained such an awesome reputation from his learning that the wildest legends gathered around him, and he was regarded as:

"A wizard of such dreaded fame
That when in Salamanca's cave
Him listed his magic wand to wave,
The bells would ring in Notre Dame."

Marvellous supernatural properties were ascribed to inanimate things as well as to human beings, and probably the great popularity which Bartholomew's work achieved was mainly due to the numerous occult influences mentioned in it. Facts and superstitions mingle freely throughout the book. The scientific explanation of the rainbow is enlivened by the tradition that it will disappear forty years before the Day of Judgment. Then, too, people loved to hear wondrous tales of the strange lands beyond their ken, especially of India, that land of marvels, where the trees were so high that men could not shoot to the top of them with an arrow, and where the beasts were all leviathans. Here lived men with the soles of their feet turned backwards, as well as the race of mouthless men mentioned by Pliny, to whom Camoëns in a more enlightened age referred thus in "The Lusiad":

"By Ganges' bank, as wild traditions tell,
Of old the tribes lived healthful by the smell;
No food they knew, such fragrant vapours rose
Rich from the flowery lawn where Ganges flows."

The ancient notion that the earth was an extended plain, to the edge of which bold travellers might make their way and look over, was not entirely exploded at this period, although Bartholomew quotes the fact that "The Highest made the world in the likeness of a sphere," and that against the course of the sun in the south where lies Ethiopia, the blue man's land, "fables tell that there beyond be the Antipodes, men that have their feet against our feet." Yet the credulity of the Middle Ages could easily believe in the real fables; those tales of monstrosities which united the different parts of known animals in contradiction to every established law of nature. The griffin, half eagle and half lion, which guarded hidden treasures in the Mountains Hyperborean; the satyr, shaped like a man save for the feet and horns of a goat; the cynocephali, men with the heads of hounds; headless men; the cynopodes, beings with one foot only, who were "yet so swift that they be likened to hounds in swiftness of running;" men with ears so huge that they could cover their whole bodies with them, all possessed an actual existence in the simple minds of the Franciscan friar and his fellows, as did also the cyclops, sirens, mermaids and the phoenix. But he rejected stories of "one Orpheus that pleased trees, woods, hills, and stones with sweet melody of his voice."

In everyday life too, the supernatural element strongly predominated. Baleful influences were at work, which could only be guarded against by

"The powerful grace that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities,
For nought so ill that on the earth doth live
But to the earth some special good doth give."

Heliotrope was regarded as "The herb that gives invisibility," if certain enchantments were properly observed by the bearer of it. The adamant or diamond was "a precious stone of reconciliation and love," whilst the sapphire acted as a powerful talisman against poisonous bites and stings.

"If thou put an adder in a box, and hold a very sapphire of Ind at the mouth of the box any while, by virtue thereof the adder is overcome and dieth, as it were suddenly. And this same I have seen proved oft in many and divers places," observes Bartholomew. The crystal was supposed to be made of snow and ice, which was permanently hardened by time.

The rough-and-ready methods of surgery practised in those days appear to have been somewhat barbarous in their nature. As Bartholomew quaintly observes: "A good leach leaveth not cutting or burning for weeping of the patient." The crude state of mediæval surgery is plainly set forth in a standard medical treatise which was published some years after Bartholomew had compiled his encyclopedia:

"The practitioners in surgery are divided into five sects. The first apply poultices to all wounds and abscesses. The second use wine only in the same cases. The third treat wounds with ointments and soft plasters. The fourth promiscuously use potions, oil and wool. The fifth cure old women and ignorant people who have recourse to the saints in all cases."

Even the greatest physicians of the day prescribed curious remedies, such as eating a red adder with the head and tail smitten off for the cure of leprosy or blindness. And Bartholomew ends the eighteenth book of "De Proprietatibus" with a eulogy upon the medical value of the fox or Vulpes: "Though he be right guileful in himself and malicious, yet he is good and profitable in use of medicine."

THE HOUSE OF LORDS

The Personal Story of the Upper House. By KOSMO WILKINSON. (Unwin, 16s.)

"How the Peers of England, from being an estate of the realm, grew into an independent parliamentary assembly; how and by what personal agencies the hereditary Chamber became in a sense the parent of the elective; on what issues, by what degrees, it co-operated with other agencies to establish the House of Commons; how then, from seeing in that Chamber its natural ally, if not its political offspring, the Upper House gradually discovered in the Lower a rival and a foe." It is in these terms that Mr. Kosmo Wilkinson describes the main purpose of his book, and we cannot improve upon them. All that is promised is performed—in Mr. Wilkinson's own way; which, as he says, is less in the spirit of a constitutional historian than from the point of view "most likely to find acceptance with those who read to be interested as well as informed." This means that Mr. Wilkinson concerns himself almost entirely with the "personal agencies" which at and from the time of Stephen Langton founded and established the Peers House of Parliament. The other agencies are not and of course could not be altogether neglected. Historic personages must have an historic setting, especially where they have to be presented in conflict with each other or as retarding or advancing the influences of their time. These influences are just what the constitutional historian is most careful to inquire into—in our day, indeed, more careful than ever before; and perhaps Mr. Wilkinson would have done better had he sketched them a little more broadly. However, his plan was a "personal story." His aim was to marshal before his readers' eyes the long procession of great Churchmen and puissant nobles who brought the House of Lords into existence as an organic constituent of the State or contributed to its stability and its authority. Many great spirits march through his pages from Simon de Montfort, Clare Duke of Gloucester, Bohuns, Bigods, Nevilles, Beauchamps, Stanleys, Howards, Cecils, and so forth to the nearer day of Walpole and the Pitts, and then more faintly and feebly to the threshold of the twentieth century. All these personages are swiftly and most often deftly sketched in person and character, and therewith, of course, the part they played in their day and generation according to the judgment of their reviewer. In so doing he contrives to say a great deal in a very small space, minutely parcelled; for the whole survey is comprised in fewer than three hundred and fifty pages of large type. It is evident that in that compass there can hardly be scope enough for safety. By venturing on such limitations the most accurate of historians and the skilfullest of penmen must expose himself to considerable risk from cramp; moreover, he is likely to hear of personal and other agencies which should have been admitted into his story and yet have no place there. The later chapters of Mr. Kosmo Wilkinson's book do, indeed, challenge criticism of that kind; not, however, on account of the influential personages omitted from these pages of the record, but because of the comparatively unimportant and entirely unromantic peers who are included. Why these, if not those others? is the question which arises rather pressingly. However, we do not read far in this volume without perceiving that the author makes no pretension to any great measure of comprehensiveness; and he has undoubtedly succeeded in his intention of writing what is most likely to find acceptance with those who read to be interested as well as informed. The origin, nurture, and development of our parliamentary institutions are not among the things most generally known, and there is certainly no shorter or pleasanter way of obtaining a good general idea of the matter than by reading this romantic and "personal story of the Upper House."

THE CULT OF THE NYMPHS

Harvard Studies in Classical Philology. Vol. XV. (Longmans, 6s. 6d. net.)

FOR unrelieved dullness the thesis of an American classical scholar cannot easily be surpassed. There is only one subject which he allows himself to treat with lightness and that, by some strange freak of nature, is the usually uninspiring one of syntax and grammar. But in the volume before us there is no grammatical thesis. In it Mr. Rand is dull when he treats of Boethius, Mr. Capps is clever and dull on a lost play of Cratinos, Mr. Pease gives a dull account of Mr. Morillot's book on Bells in Antiquity, and Mr. Baker is dull in Latin on the Greek Comic Poets as Literary Critics. All of these are at least excusable, for their subjects do not lend themselves to light treatment and their work is valuable in other respects. But Mr. Floyd G. Ballentine is the dullest and saddest of them all, for he has chosen as his subject "Some Aspects of the Cult of the Nymphs."

Yet we cannot declare that he has no love for his subject because he is dull about it. Other men may be inspired by the Nymphs to be poetical, but a fair object does not always meet with fair worshippers and devotion finds queer ways in which to show itself. Mr. Ballentine may be as true a lover of the Nymphs as Theocritus or Keats and the very thoroughness of his attitude, the unrelieved dullness of his treatment, is probably only a proof of the genuineness of his devotion. A poet would scorn to be prosaic about his mistress, but a dull man would think it unworthy to descend to mere poetry in serving or praising her. Each gives what he thinks best, and Mr. Ballentine has chosen to worship as an ascetic, to honour with prayer and fasting. He has chosen to be what is called scientific in his attitude towards his subject and, though he quotes poetry on almost every page and his subject is as poetic as any that can be found, he never lapses into a sentence which might injure by a touch of feeling the rigid lifelessness of his treatment. He wishes to do honour to the Nymphs by strictly proving that they were more than mere poetical abstractions, and it would detract from their character and from the honour that he does them if he were for a moment to use means which were not quite honest or fair. His method is to quote evidence from ancient writers and whenever he can exclaim after producing some passage from an obscure author which he has discovered with toil and pains: "this proves, I think, that the Nymphs were believed to preserve and care for the water of springs" he seems to have hung a fair jewel about their necks and is prouder than he would have been had he composed a sonnet. It is his way of proving his devotion, of showing himself worthy of his subject, and his whole-hearted sympathy will some day bring him glory. Unfortunately his devotion is too exclusive both in its object and in its means and it has blinded him even in his praise. No one except himself could ever have doubted that the Nymphs were more than mere inhabitants of spring and tree, that they were active in providing and withholding their blessings of fertility and increase. A little less scientific accuracy and a little more poetry would have made this clear to him without all his laborious and insignificant compilation; and had he not so jealously separated the Nymphs from their Greek sisters the Graces, the Hours and the Muses and from the thousand similar fairies of other lands, he would have seen how unnecessary it was to bring together his obscure passages.

But, dull as his pages are, they cannot be quite lifeless since they tell of the Nymphs. Even in the excerpts which he has culled from Byzantine lexicographers they appear as active deities. From Homer downwards the words of the poets are living which speak of them as mistresses of springs under spreading trees, and art keeps alive for us the fair form with which Greek fancy clothed them. Doubtless among the classical poets the subject was to some extent a literary artifice, and so far Mr. Ballentine may be justified in his attempt to restore to them some of their real virtues. But in rustic life and even in the cities the Nymphs were real deities, attached generally to some greater god, Apollo, Hermes or Pan, but probably regarded as kinder and more intimate, more local and accessible than the great god in whose train they served. It was they to whom gifts, images figured and described, or sacrifices and offerings of almost anything but wine were devoted, and it was they who gave in return the water upon which the life of man and beast and tree depended. In a thirsty land where water is conducted by little channels from a well to each tree the value of it as the precious gift of a personal and beneficent power can easily be understood.

Nor did the Greeks regard water as merely possessing this power of giving life to vegetation. The chief feature of Greek marriage rites was connected with springs and with the Nymphs. They were regarded both as the givers and the nurturers of children; offerings were made to them for the conception of children, and for the successful passing of the dangerous age of childhood, though here also the great gods stepped in and robbed them of their due. Bride and bridegroom bathed in streams or were sprinkled with water brought from some especially sacred spring. At Athens marble copies of the vases in which this water was brought from the famous spring called the Fair flowing, were placed above the tombs of maidens who died unwedded, and in a cave in Attica there were recently found miniature vases of the same type dedicated to the Nymphs. They were the givers of fertility to human beings as well as to trees, nor did their gifts affect the body alone. Water brought mental life and activity, and the Nymphs were inspirers of poetry and prophecy before the Muses became marked off as the special patrons of the one, Apollo the chief if not the only source of the other. Egeria, the Romanised Greek nymph to whom Roman matrons prayed when pregnant, is better known as the deity of a spring and grove whom the King Numa consulted when he was meditating some great change in the laws.

It is no wonder that these figures became centres for legend. There were many nymphs who honoured mortals with their favours, and heroes in Homer are as often sons of men and Nymphs as of rivers and mortal maidens. Cœnone who married and mourned her desertion by Paris was a nymph of Ida; but it is not always the goddess who suffers. The nymphs carried off the fair Hylas, favourite of Hercules. Daphnis, the poet shepherd of Sicily, wedded and suffered for his marriage with a mountain maiden. He enjoyed her love on one condition, that no mortal woman should share it, but in a fit of passion and drink he fell a victim to some fair princess, and was not the only poet who paid dearly for his return to Earth. Generally, indeed, the sad aspect of the Nymphs predominates in legend. Death is spoken of on sepulchral stones as seizure by the Nymphs, and they were regarded, like all rustic deities, as distributing equally the good and the bad. Even their gift of prophecy and poetry was not entirely beneficent. As their brothers, the "heroes," caused epilepsy by their onslaught, so did they bring madness upon those who looked upon them. That this belief in nympholepsy was deep and lasting appears from the inscriptions—not quoted by Mr. Ballentine—dating from the fifth century, carved in a cave near Athens, which tell how one Archædamus originally of Thera and now of the deme of Cholleidæ, a victim of the Nymphs' cruel favours, had at their suggestion contrived a grotto and planted a grove to do them honour in the land of his adoption.

Probably there are no nymphs in America. If there are, Mr. Ballentine must walk warily, for he will find that it is simpler and less dangerous to examine them in the dry pages of obscure commentators than to meet them face to face at some fair spring on the mountain side where a tall plane tree gives shade to weary travellers.

PORCELAINS OF THE PALACE

A History and Description of French Porcelain. By E. S. AUSCHER. Translated and edited by WILLIAM BURTON, F.C.S. (Cassell, 30s. net.)

IN adding this book to the excellent series on ceramics which already contains the editor's works on English porcelain and earthenwares, the late Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse's book on Chinese porcelain and Mr. Solon's history of French faïence, a considerable service is done to the collector personally and to the cause of art as a whole. Whatever one's opinion may be of the æsthetic value of even the finest productions of Sèvres, of Vincennes or Chantilly, there can be no doubt the vogue and prestige which the Royal interest created in the eighteenth century and which—after a hiatus of depression—was continued by Brongniart under Napoleon, still exists. The dainty rogues in French porcelain are as much worshipped at the present time as in the brave days when the Pompadour patronised the arts and "Courtiers as butterflies bright, Beauties that Fragonard drew," vied with each other in the possession of the finest examples of native workmanship. Although the author does not think it too much to say that ninety per cent. of the so-called soft-paste porcelain of Sèvres to be found in collections to-day is not of genuine Sèvres decoration, with the passage of time the cult increases. For those interested in it, the history that M. E. S. Auscher, so long chef de fabrication at Sèvres, has written and Mr. Burton, the accomplished potter and experienced writer on the subject, has translated and edited, will prove extremely valuable.

The faïence-makers of the seventeenth century in France were among the many European experimentalists who sought to reproduce the exquisite Chinese porcelain that had already found its way to the West a few centuries earlier, and they were the most successful. The porcelain they made was in reality entirely different from its Oriental model, being compounded of glass, chalk and clay in place of the natural kaolin and felspathic ingredients of Eastern productions. This costly manufacture was supported for some time by the Royal House of France and great nobles before it was replaced by the hard-paste porcelain comparable to the Chinese but of native materials.

Although the development of the technical qualities of these French productions is of the greatest interest and admirably told in M. Auscher's book, it is rather the decoration which attracts the wide appreciation of collectors. In this connection, the author and editor are highly informative and no artist of merit or skilful workman is neglected, no branch of colouring or gilding passed over without valuable criticism or notice. The large number of coloured plates and black and white illustrations is taken from specimens in English museums or from those of Sèvres, the Louvre, the Cluny, and Versailles. Thus the student, with the knowledge which this history affords him and the experience which the actual sight and, if possible, touch, of the best examples will give, may come forth fully armed against the sea of frauds and troubles which the collector of fine French porcelain must encounter. The skilful attempts which the forgers have made upon the pocket of the would-be connoisseur are dealt with in an especial chapter which should be committed to the memory of all collectors. But whether, decoratively speaking, what is considered the finest French porcelain deserves to be collected at all is another question. We think its qualities immensely overrated. Take for example Plate VI. of this work, a typical Jardinière on a pedestal, of the pâte tendre of about 1758-59; the ground is Rose-Pompadour with bands of vert foncé, the groups of flowers are by Bertrand. It is Sèvres at its best period, painted by a famous artist and now in the Wallace collection. The wealth of kings and the knowledge of the world has been brought to its production, and yet its value as a thing of beauty is less than the meanest work that the humblest potter of the Celestial Empire has ever produced. Or turn to the well-known Sèvres Inkstand (Plate VIII.) in the Wallace collection. This may be supposed to be the fine flower of the manufactory, for it was especially made for Louis XV. to present to the Dauphiness Marie-Antoinette. It bears the King's portrait and the monogram of the Princess; it is decorated by Falot. The result is absolutely contemptible and vulgar. In perhaps a lesser degree this is true of the majority of pieces of the grand period of French porcelain. The most satisfactory designs are those that copy the Chinese as in some of the Chantilly pieces, the rare examples of Rouen and the early productions of St. Cloud. The grace of the figures, especially in "biscuit," is another and better affair.

In these no great effort has been made to obtain a gorgeous effect and frequently some of the most pleasing work that Europe has produced may be found in this department. But as a whole the grandest efforts of French porcelain are spoilt by a lack of the artistic spirit, an over-elaboration, a vast display, and a crowding of detail, that rob them of the highest place.

Of course there is a large class of connoisseur that does not agree with this point of view. A man of this more general mood has been typified by Mr. Austin Dobson in some pleasant verses of his which describe two friends, who, having accomplished the feast "not full but fitting," are discussing the treasures of the host.

"Then I produce my Prize, in truth ;—
Six groups in Sèvres, fresh as youth.
And rare as Love. You pause, you wonder.
(Pretend to doubt the marks, forsooth !)

And so we fall to why and how
The fragile figures smile and bow ;
Divine, at length, the fable under

This history will tell the "why and how" to many an after-dinner connoisseur and constantly aid the amateur collector who is inclined to doubt those marks which have provided so prolific and, we fear, remunerative, a field for the subtle forger and trickster of accomplishment.

THE GLORY OF SOMERSET

The Story of Somersetshire. By W. R. RICHMOND. (Wake and Dean, 2s. 6d.)

It would be kinder to forget county history entirely ; but it is as impossible as it is unnatural to do so, for counties are very human and many of them have a past. Somerset (and it's better to have done with it at once) forms no exception ; nay, it is sprinkled with reminders in cold grey stone which forbid forgetfulness. The pen, too, has proved mightier than the trowel, and to all but a Westerner the very name of Bath, for example, suggests Jane Austen, Beau Nash, and a score more shades rather than one of the most beautiful cities in England—or, even worse, it suggests thermal baths and Roman civilisation. There is but one cure for such a frame of mind, and that is to know the county well from personal observation. Somerset's natural face is her fortune. Ride on a summer morning over Lansdown, the hill which stands sentinel over Bath, and know the meaning of "God's glorious oxygen" : stop for a moment on the far edge of the plateau and, if you will, moralise as you gaze on the Bristol Channel and the smoke rising from the great city across the plain below you. Then turn off to the right and in the hedgerow you will see flowers in profusion, especially campanulas—tall strapping stalks set with bells of a more lovely blue than any of your Mediterranean tints. Homeward, whichever way to Bath you may choose, you will see the relics of a past age of frivolity. On Lansdown itself, fairest of all the hills in a county which has hills to boast of, there is the tower built by the Caliph of Lansdown, the quixotic Beckford : in sight across the valley Brown's "folly" and Sham Castle, the latter looking in the morning mist a little more real than is its wont. At such a time, however, there is no opportunity to think of the past glories of the county and of all those quaintly named folk who made Somerset famous ; while even the be-tableted houses in the town seem unreal ghosts of the dim ages long ago. We may grant the truth of ἀριστον μὲν ὄψωρ, praise the beauty of Wells Cathedral and of St. Mary Redcliffe, and be stirred ever so deeply by the sacred quiet of Glastonbury, but we cannot deny that Nature is the making of Somerset. And this is the more surprising, for there has been a pretty determined attempt to pitchfork Nature out. "The finger of taste," of the kind advocated with such zeal by Mr. Milestone in "Headlong Hall," has been allowed to "wave the wand of enchantment" over many places in this fair land, but the result, with the exception of some gaunt early Victorian churches, is visible for the most part only in the "follies" of an earlier generation of foolish men.

Be modern—that is, commercially minded—by all means if you like. Climb Lansdown, and talk as you go of the Education Act, which will afford an opportunity for a dissertation upon the work of Hannah More in the Cheddar Valley, observing by the way a catholic collection of schools. The school for Officers' daughters first : here pause for breath and turning, as if to admire the view, behold, beyond the town, Prior Park, now the home of certain Roman Catholic brethren, and then on up the hill to the Wesleyan School. On the tower of this school there is a clock which the Benedictine prior at Downside, some twelve good miles away as the crow flies, can tell the time by with a glass from the beautiful but unfinished tower of his church. But Bath is merely one of the county's jewels : what of Wells, Glastonbury, Dunster, and a dozen more places ? There is only one Glastonbury in the world ; a place of most sacred associations, of the most beautiful ruins, above all of the most profound quiet. To visit it, even from the episcopal calm of Wells, is to enter an older world. Of Wells, as of Glastonbury, no new thing can be said. Every American globetrotter knows the Early English west front of the Cathedral, the stone Te Deum, the clock, and the Saxon font. This is all Wells. There is besides a handful of houses, a market-place quaint enough, and the Bishop's palace and garden surrounded with moat and battlements. But here it is where good Somerset is talked. A spoken, though unhappily a dying, tongue, not to be associated in any way with the grotesquely spelled words with which the modern novelist delights to fill his pages, and a tongue which the barbarian can never hope to acquire. Witness the Londoner's attempt to pronounce so simple a word as Taunton.

Mr. W. R. Richmond, the latest historian of the county, writes confessedly a popular history, but he has missed, or cannot express, the county's charm. King Alfred, the early Tudors, the literary associations of Clevedon, are all excellent subjects, but they savour strongly of the lamp and are hard to reconcile with the present natural glories of the West. Even his list of the "Worthies of Somersetshire" is incomplete, for it excludes the author of "Vathek" and includes some whose names only go to show that worthies are not a specialised product of the county. Beckford, even if he was born in Wiltshire, may well claim a place in the list by reason of his residence in Bath, and, as a token of gratitude, because he did not disdain in his humbler circumstances to build on Somerset soil.

From so rugged a land it is natural that soldiers should have sprung, and there is no better fighting county than Somerset. "Here," as Mr. Richmond says, "the British held for a time the masterful Saxons at bay, and retired with honour to the western hills ; here Alfred emerged from the Athelney marshes to free England and win lordship over the hitherto unconquered Danes." The monument to Sir Bevil Grenville on Lansdown is a record of another fight in the county where, "on the King's part, were more officers and gentlemen of quality slain than private men." Best of all to recall is the battle of Sedgemoor when "the Somersetshire clowns, with their scythes and the butt ends of their muskets, faced the royal horse like old soldiers." Most tragic of battles, but not without humour ; for there was "Old Patch," the warlike Dr. Mews, Bishop of Winchester, who lent the horses from his coach for the artillery, and who, if he had thought of it, would, no doubt, like Pendleton in the American Civil War, have prefaced the command to fire with the benediction of "The Lord have mercy on their souls." And now, since the custom of fighting in our seagirt island has died out, it rests with the gallant Thirteenth to maintain the county's reputation on the field of battle : this twentieth-century idol may well be worshipped by the good folk in the hills and dales of Somerset together with the ever present idol of Nature.

LITERARY LOVE-STORIES

Stories of Authors' Loves. By CLARA E. LAUGHLIN. (Isbister, 6s.)

To each of us there comes a time when, like children in the fairy tale, we journey to the end of a rainbow to find a pot of gold. Sometimes it is the reflection of the rainbow we follow, and at the end we do not find a pot of gold, but of dust. These stories of Miss Laughlin's are records of such journeyings in the light of rainbows and of some who found the gold and of some who found the dust.

Taken separately, each story has a fascinating interest, for it is evident that the book has been written, not for the purpose of bringing any new scandal to light, but for the "love of love." There runs, indeed, throughout the whole book an undersong, diminuendo, as it were, in praise of love, becoming crescendo only here and there, as in the story of the Brownings, which is chosen as the most ideal of all love-stories, or in the case of George Eliot, where the old story of the monk who heard the bird sing in the wood, and, listening but for a moment, found that fifty years had passed, is quoted as a parallel, for George Eliot was as little likely as any monk to hear "that time-devouring bird" which sings to most of us once, perhaps, in a lifetime.

Taken as a whole the book loses strength and coherence through its utter lack of foundation or plan. It is a jumble of names taken from all countries and all history, American notoriety rubbing shoulders with Dante and Beatrice, Michael Angelo and Vittoria Colonna, while the immortal loves of Petrarch and Laura, Catrina and Camoens, Heloise and Abelard, or even of such as Swift and Stella find no place.

Among the "Lights that failed," Thackeray's saddest story is retold, with Ruskin's fruitless love for "little Rosie," and Fitzgerald's somewhat amusing solution of the problems of guardianship. The Carlyle tragedy is merely suggested, a reticence for which one is grateful; so also that of Charles Lamb, but one is glad to know that he too was one of those to whom there came a time when they heard at least a few notes of the bird singing in the wood, however soon it fell silent and the wood grew dark.

"SCARRON"

Scarron. Comédie tragique en cinq actes. Par CATULLE MENDÈS.
Produced at the Gaîté, Paris.

It is impossible not to admire the fertility of M. Catulle Mendès' genius. Forty-six years ago he began a singularly vivid career by founding his Revue Fantaisiste, and since then he has ventured with uniform daring and much success into every literary field. Fiction, verse, drama, and even history have engaged his talent by turns, and in the intervals of literary work his picturesque life has been diversified by such events as a sentence of a month's imprisonment and some admirably chosen duels. Now, in his sixty-fourth year, he throws down the gauntlet to Rostand and the other young writers of the romantic school with a drama in verse of the semi-historic vein which Victor Hugo made popular. When Scarron shall appear in England, audiences and critics will at once compare it with Cyrano de Bergerac; but perhaps some foolish charge of plagiarism, based on certain obvious resemblances in action, atmosphere, and spirit, may be forestalled by the reminder that Mendès preceded Rostand in the romantic domain to which he now returns by the production, in 1870, of an opéra-comique founded on Gautier's Capitaine Fracasse.

Scarron is a remarkable tour de force. The difficulties which the story presents to the dramatist are so excessive that few authors would have attempted what M. Catulle Mendès has accomplished with wonderful cleverness and almost complete success. In his task of evoking interest in the figure of the crippled satirist, M. Mendès has properly refrained from subduing its repellent features. The first scene of the play—that of the market-place at Le Mans—is a picture of kermesse, in the midst of which the young canon Scarron, garbed as an ape, recites a blasphemous burlesque ending in the lines:

"... Sur un mont pelé
De l'Inde, en un féroce et grimant entourage
De noirs êtres hideux, rauquant des cris d'outrage,
Il vit, à trois gibets, formés d'un double épieu
Entre les deux larrons-singes, le singe-dieu."

The sacrilegious verses are reproved by a childish voice: "Fi! monsieur, que c'est laid!" It is Françoise d'Aubigné, the future Mme. de Maintenon, who speaks, and Scarron—not as yet attacked by the terrible malady by which he is fated to be tortured and paralysed—is fascinated by the strange, calm child whom he is later to marry. Françoise, in the second act, is the wife of Scarron, who has taken compassion on her friendlessness, and has saved her from the convent, but the marriage is not consummated and the inevitable fine lover is prompt to appear, as usually in such circumstances. Villarceaux, the gallant, wins sufficiently on the cool and complex disposition of Françoise to be given an assignation, but the meeting is interrupted at a critical moment by the appearance of Scarron, his paralysis temporarily dispelled by a cruel passion of rage and jealousy. The death of Scarron, reassured as to his wife's fidelity, ends the piece: in which history has been treated with more respect than English playwrights commonly accord it.

Less fresh and ebullient, less romantic in spirit than Cyrano de Bergerac, the drama of M. Mendès takes a higher place as a piece of literature. In reading the fluent, delicate, inspiriting verse, one is tempted to wish that some dramatist would endeavour to acclimatise the play in rhymed Alexandrines here—surely neither an impossible nor an undesirable feat. There are scores of couplets in Scarron which delight the reader by their sonorous and sweetly sententious rhythm—couplets which fall from the mouth with perfect melody and at the same time gratify the mind with a sense of their exquisite aptness and amenity. These qualities of French dramatic verse are, as it happens, both enunciated and exemplified in Villarceaux's description of Francine:

"Fière, non pas farouche, elle a sans nul défaut Le geste qui convient, la parole qu'il faut."

Even the most ordinary phrases become dignified and transformed when cast in the mould of the Alexandrine:

"Que craignez-vous, monsieur? Je suis bonne chrétienne Et je pense être d'âge à tenir un serment."

These are everyday thoughts and words, but in the graceful cadences of M. Mendès they are conversation sublimated—a species of angelic recitative. But the play is not lacking in nobler, prouder effects, in music which recalls the divine high-mindedness of the heroes and heroines of Corneille. Thus Francine speaks of her marriage vow:

"... de l'Ancêtre
J'ai, comme un grand trésor, qui tiendrait dans un dé,
La loyauté fidèle et l'honneur point fardé.
Au foyer de Scarron, où l'hymen n'est qu'un pacte,
Je viens irréprochable et je demeure intacte."

It is hard for English people to understand how lines like these thrill the intrepid hearts of Frenchmen. There is a fine air of gallantry and frankness about the description of Villarceaux by Françoise:

"... Au Carrousel, droit sur un genêt blanc
Qui piaffe, l'on voyait de loin sa tête brune,
Arrogante et jolie.—Oui, la vie opportune
S'émeut. Les bourgeois, c'est de petits cœurs battants, La sève rêve. Une heure, et tout aura vingt ans.
... Mais à qui porte une âme généreuse
Sont de bel air, comme aux reines leurs favoris
Des amants de haut rang, valeureux, bien épris."

Our quotations must end with the admirable couplet with which Léoile—Léoile of the "Roman Comique," brought into the play by a poetic artifice as a sœur hospitalière— consoles the pitiful, outworn Scarron at the approach of death :

"La chimère est réelle, et c'est le vrai qui ment :
Et le rire est divin s'il n'est vil ni méchant."

It would, perhaps, have been as well if the author of "Pour lire au bain" had realised the truth, which he expresses here so admirably, some forty or more years ago, for M. Mendès, like Scarron, has many scabrous works upon his conscience, and has very often set himself to provoke the laughter which is vile and perverse.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

THE NOVELS OF THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK

THE subject of these remarks is not the Peacock of such stiff and dreary poems as "The Philosophy of Melancholy," "The Genius of the Thames" and "Rhododaphne," but the Peacock of seven novels which are models of severe but not unkindly satire, salted with a humour at once reflective and gay, essays in the true Pantagruelism, inspired by scholarship and good sense, and written in concise prose. Peacock, who was born in 1785 and died in 1866, is a connecting-link between the eighteenth century and the twentieth, for at one time he served on board the fleet before Flushing as secretary to Admiral Popham, he was the friend and correspondent of Shelley—and without their correspondence the half of Shelley had not been told us—and, finally, the father-in-law of Mr. George Meredith, who dedicated his earliest poems to him. It will surprise many who from the novels are aware of Peacock's wide and thorough knowledge of the classics to learn that, having but little schooling, he taught himself not only the dead languages but Italian and French—the last to such purpose that although he frequently quotes Rabelais he never refers to a translation. It is evident that he also knew Welsh. His scholarship was not merely grammatical: he read the Greeks for their skill in expressing the great facts of life, for their humanity, to use the word in its classic sense. In addition to all this he was a trusted servant of the East India Company, and frequently appeared before Committees of the House of Commons, generally carrying the Company's point. Many pleasant things are told of him. He was an idly inclined man, professedly so in summer. Sir Edward Strachey says: "A kind-hearted, genial, friendly man, who loved to share his enjoyment with all around him, and self-indulgent without being selfish." All the qualities here mentioned appear in his books. Mr. Sullivan's portrait prefixed to the collected edition of his novels shows a singularly handsome, white-haired old gentleman, habited in broadcloth, with eyes that must have been always a-twinkle, a firm mouth and a broad, decided chin. It reminds us that Vernon Whitford said: "Dr. Middleton has one of the grandest heads in England," and Dr. Middleton is understood to be Mr. Meredith's portrait of Peacock. He is certainly like Peacock's own Dr. Folliott—they had the same belief in drinking champagne while it sparkles, the same love of the Athenian drama and Greek verse.

"The Rev. Doctor (Middleton) was a fine old picture," says Mr. Meredith; "a specimen of art peculiarly English; combining in himself piety and epicurism, learning and gentlemanliness, with good room for each and a seat at one another's table: for the rest, a strong man, an athlete in his youth, a keen reader of facts and no reader of persons, genial, a giant at a task, a steady worker besides, but easily discomposed."

This is Dr. Folliott of Crotchet Castle, or Peacock; and I always think that Peacock spoke his true self through the mouth of Dr. Folliott of "Crotchet Castle" and thirty years later in the words of Dr. Opimian of "Gryll Grange"

"No reader of persons." Dr. Garnett, writing of the novels, makes the same criticism as Mr. Meredith. It is true that in "Headlong Hall" (1816), in "Melincourt" (1817) and to some less extent in "Nightmare Abbey" (1825) the characters are abstractions—intelligent phonographs which set forth the particular opinions of Edinburgh or Quarterly Reviewers, of Benthamites or Transcendentalists, with an admirable gravity—yet they always strike one as real people. The fact is that Peacock could create, if he could not read, persons. In "Nightmare Abbey," Mr. Cypress is a caricature of Lord Byron and of Byronism as well, but only a real man could have said: "Sir, I have quarrelled with my wife; and a man who has quarrelled with his wife is absolved from all duty to his country." The Hon. Mr. Listless is meant to be a mere type, but no mere type could have said: "I find that Dante is growing fashionable, and I am afraid I must read him some wet morning." Peacock's aim was generally to hold absurdity up to ridicule. He delighted to make game of Coleridge who is his Mr. Flosky and his Mr. Skionar. Only Coleridge could have said: "Except my works and those of my particular friends, nothing is good that is not as old as Jeremy Taylor: and, entre nous, the best parts of my friends' books were either written or suggested by myself," or have proposed that he should make a speech to disperse a mob, because "I never failed to convince an audience that the best thing they could do was to go away." Equally delightful is the satire on Lord Brougham and the "march of mind":

"I have a great abomination of this learned friend; as author, lawyer, and politician, he is triformis like Hecate: and in every one of his three forms he is bifrons, like Janus; the true Mr. Facing-both-ways of Vanity Fair."

"Maid Marian" and "the Misfortunes of Elphin" are real romances, simple in plot, full of sunshine, song and merriment, with now a good fight and now a pretty passage of love-making, showing a wholesome delight in the pleasures of the table, blunt common sense and a radiant humour. But to me the best of the novels is always "Crotchet Castle," where one finds satire and wisdom, romance, a good plot, Dr. Folliott and Mr. Chainmail, who was surely an unconscious prophecy of Mr. William Morris. In this novel, too, Peacock expresses with best effect his truly English passion for "the River." I quote the opening sentence in all its old-fashioned stateliness as a specimen of his solid, sufficient and harmonious prose:

"In one of those beautiful valleys, through which the Thames (not yet polluted by the tide, the scouring of cities, or even the minor defilement of the sandy streams of Surrey) rolls a clear flood through flowery meadows; under the shade of old beech woods, and the smooth mossy greensward of the chalk hills (which pour into it their tributary rivulets, as pure and pellucid as the fountain of Bandusium, or the wells of Scamander, by which the wives and daughters of the Trojans washed their splendid garments in the days of peace, before the coming of the Greeks); in one of these beautiful valleys, on a bold round-surfaced lawn, spotted with juniper, that opened itself in the bosom of an old wood, which rose with a steep, but not precipitous ascent, from the river to the summit of the hill, stood the castellated villa of a retired citizen."

Such writing is not for to-day; but I find here many qualities of dignity that our modern prose misses and that unflinching, reticently expressed delight in the beauty of England which always animates Peacock's work. The rich, prolonged music of the sentence absolutely reproduces the cultivated charm of an English landscape. Peacock rarely permits himself such essays in pure prose. As a rule his style is concise and almost rapid, as befits a writer who supported his Toryism with the weapon of a Voltairean wit. I always enjoy his humour; which is not Voltairean but exceedingly English, and have laughed again and again over the following almost practical joke. Mr. Glowry has forbidden his son Scythrop to think of marrying Marionetta, who is to be sent off from Nightmare Abbey at once because she is not sufficiently gloomy:

"When Marionetta hinted that she was to leave the Abbey, Scythrop snatched from its repository his ancestor's skull, filled it with Madeira, and presenting himself before Mr. Glowry, threatened to drink off the contents if Mr. Glowry did not immediately promise that Marionetta should not be taken from the Abbey without her own consent. Mr. Glowry, who took the Madeira to be some deadly brewage, gave the required promise in dismal panic. Scythrop returned to Marionetta with a joyful heart, and drank the Madeira by the way."

I have said nothing of Peacock's women, but who could fail to love Marionetta O'Carroll, or Maid Marian, or Miss Touchandgo, or Lady Clarinda, archest of coquettes, or the doubting Morgana Gryll? They anticipate Clara Middleton and Rose Jocelyn, but one wishes that their creator had taken a little more trouble with their personal attractions. Maid Marian and Miss Niphet and perhaps Dorothy among the enchanting seven sisters of "Gryll Grange" are realised, but the others exist for us only by force of the charm of what they say.

Dull poet as he was when he wore the "learned sock," Peacock sprinkled his novels with delightful lyrics, not of the first order, perhaps, but exceedingly musical. Every one knows "Seamen Three," and "The War-Song of Dinas Vawr," and "In his Last Bin Sir Peter lies," but this song of Lady Clarinda's is not so well known:

"In the days of old,
Lovers felt true passion,
Deeming years of sorrow
By a smile repaid.
Now the charms of gold
Spells of pride and fashion,
Bid them say good morrow
To the best loved maid . . .

Now one day's caprice
Weighs down years of smiling,
Youthful hearts are rovers,
Love is bought and sold:
Fortune's gifts may cease,
Love is less beguiling;
Wiser were the lovers
In the days of old."

If that, for all its rather antiquated style, be not verbal music, if it be not deserving of a place in any collection of vers de société, I must confess to some unsuspected dullness of ear. In "Gryll Grange"—written in his seventy-fifth year—we find several masterly pieces of translation. Take this rendering of the Dei virgo Catharina:

"Virgin bride, supremely bright,
Gem and flower of heavenly light,
Pearl of the empyreal skies,
Violet of Paradise!"

The English version is sweeter and more concise than the Latin. And here is a quatrain from Peacock's favourite Nonnus. It reads rather like Fitzgerald:

"Where wine is not, no mirth the banquet knows:
Where wine is not, the dance all joyless goes.
The man, oppressed with cares, who tastes the bowl,
Shall shake the weight of sorrow from his soul."

Here I leave him—reluctantly: this proud, high-hearted, sensible, humorous Englishman, the merciless but never cruel satirist of folly, a master of sarcasm as Fielding and Swift were masters of irony, the lover of old times and old customs, of the old plain speech and of the landscapes of his country, scholar, humanist and Pantagruelist, the "kind-hearted, genial, friendly man who loved to share his enjoyment of life with all around him," and who still shares that enjoyment with the lovers of his novels.

J. S.

THE MAD SPINNER

HUMMING wheel, oh! humming wheel,
—Hush my heart, for I must not feel—
The wind is driving in from the sea
And it drives the sound of a voice to me.

Flickering flame, flickering flame!
Did you start and whisper a name?
I wait by the fire as I sit and spin
For the latch to lift and the Dawn come in.

Howl and crack! howl and crack!
The waves are strewing the shore with wrack,
But they hold my life and the heart of me
Fast, fast, fast in the heart of the sea.

Whirling wool! whirling wool!
White, white, white, and soft and cool!
God's fingers turn in the whistling sleet
And He spins and I spin for a winding sheet.

Spin, spin! I am Fate who spins,
Spins till the Judgment Day begins
And the great sea, shrinking, gives up her dead
And my Love comes back to me out of her bed.

DOROTHY FRANCES GURNEY.

FICTION

Patricia: A Mother. By "Iota." (Hutchinson, 6s.)

MRS. Mannington Caffyn has written a most moving story, full of feeling and insight into human character. Patricia is the widow of Gervas Portal, a man who can only be described as "slimy." She, on the contrary, is a woman in a million, magnificent in her strength, her striking physical perfection, and her great loyal heart. Portal, who was both the idol and the tool of his exquisite mother, a perpetual poseuse of the most curiously sublimated conventionality, had married Patricia by mistake, while away from his mother's protection. By a will of almost incredible meanness, he contrives to cast an appalling slur on his widow, for he leaves

"To Richard Curtayne Venour the memory of a certain night in June spent in the company of my wife Patricia; also the Malacca cane carried by myself upon that memorable occasion, but which, unhappily, I was prevented by circumstances from putting to its legitimate use."

Mr. Portal also leaves practically everything, including the guardianship of his son, to his mother, arranging matters with fiendish malice so that his widow shall have an allowance of but £100 a year. Under such conditions begin the joint lives of Patricia and her mother-in-law in the Manor house. With a word Patricia could explain that night in June, could tell how she had been forced to receive a cast-off mistress of her husband's and the wretched, neglected baby, and how in her frenzy she had fled to the neighbour, Mr. Venour, whose land marched with the Portal estate, to ask him for money with which to flee away. Mr. Portal had followed her, armed with the Malacca cane, but before he could attempt to use it he had sustained a stroke which ultimately killed him. Through his long illness Patricia had nursed him with heroic devotion, separated all the time from her boy, whose presence irked the invalid. Secretly, too, she provides out of her narrow means for the cast-off mistress and the diseased child. But Patricia would not have been Patricia if she had told a word of this, if she had sought to destroy, even by a hint or a look, the elder Mrs. Portal's sublime reverence and veneration for her dead son. The great struggle between the two women comes over the boy Tom. Patricia, who is a daughter of the Australian bush, can swim, and hunt, and fish better than the schoolboy, but it is the dowager's full purse which is open to Tom when he falls into bad company. Mr. Venour's influence, entirely good as it is, is naturally hampered at every turn by that dastardly will; it is Patricia who has to save her son, and the way she does it and wins him for her own is one of the finest passages in a remarkable book. Enough to add that Mrs. Caffyn has not the heart to deprive Patricia of her just reward. There is a touching picture of a faithful old butler, through whom the dowager ultimately learns the truth, both about her dead son and about Patricia's nobility of silence. Where Mrs. Caffyn has not altogether succeeded is, we think, in the picture she has endeavoured to draw of the county society who strongly disapproved of Patricia, with her red hair, her brilliance, and her independent ways, and who naturally put the worst possible construction on the husband's will. Vulgar people there are, of course, in her society of all counties, but they are not usually vulgar in the rather stupid manner which Mrs. Caffyn represents so mercilessly. We doubt, for instance, if a creature like Philip Gore, with his feline ways and devastating gossip-mongering, would really be tolerated, much less welcomed, by people with any pretensions to good breeding. Still, he gets the thrashing he so richly deserves, and, after all, the real power and originality of Mrs. Caffyn's story are to be found in the principals, not in the subordinate figures. Certainly it is a story that "counts."

Tales of Rye Town. By M. STEPNEY RAWSON. (Constable, 6s.)

"Bourg délaissé au milieu des marais. Delaissé! the word is untranslatable; it is carved upon every stock and stone of Rye. To-day she is like a soldier left by the roadside, who raises himself on his elbow to shade his eyes and watch his troop vanish in the dusk. So does Rye gaze after the sea that has turned his back upon her." So writes Mrs. Rawson in the preface, in which she tries to catch and express in words the evanescent charm of strange restfulness, that broods over the spot which she has chosen for the background of the stories contained in her book. There are stories of all centuries. One tells how on May day when the lads of the old town were wrangling about the choice of their May Queen, the great Queen Elizabeth rode by with her courtiers and settled the choice in her own splendid capricious manner, making the girls vote instead of the lads, and crowning the only one who did not write her own name on the voting tablets. Another story is of modern times; 'How the spring calls to Lawyer Thursby,' who is a landlord, harsh and grasping and hated by all, until his heart is softened by reading letters that he finds, written from his mother to his father in Egypt just before she bore him and died. And then again, there is the old legend of Cantator, the young monk with the beautiful voice who ran off with the rich burgher's daughter that she might not wed Master Diggy; but they are caught and brought back to Rye, and Cantator is punished by a terrible death. And over each of the stories hovers the charm of the old town, among the marshes, abandoned by the sea, with something of its simplicity and beauty; for Mrs. Rawson writes with keen love of Rye town, and knows how to impart to the reader the old-world atmosphere which has fascinated her. After reading her book "The Apprentice," we looked forward with considerable pleasure to the appearance of this volume of stories, and we have not been in any way disappointed.

A Maid at Large. By A. LEAF. (Eveleigh Nash, 6s.)

A MINX at Large would have been a more descriptive title of this novel: a minx with improper eyes and a large red improper mouth. Like Elisabeth, she pays visits in smart country houses, bowls over men of the world as if they were ninepins, and says outrageous things with an air of apparent innocence. But there is a subtle difference between this minx and her clever prototype. Elisabeth came from the clouds. Marjorie Wade had a conventional mother and a governess called Miss Rumbles, who ought to have taught her to behave herself. But perhaps when you are born with improper eyes and a large red improper mouth you are unteachable. Perhaps at seventeen you are so ingenuous that you contrive to get rid of your maid in order to have a tête-à-tête drive with a strange young man and thank him sweetly when he holds your hand and calls you darling. In our opinion there is a little confusion here between ingenious and ingenuous, but we do not wish to complain of a confusion of terms for which we have Shakespeare's authority. Besides, for the biographer of minxes, it is obviously useful. But it was neither ingenuous nor ingenious of Marjorie to consult an elderly and inflammable roué about the risky décolletage of her gown. We suppose she "had to do it," like an Ibsen heroine, and that her birthright of impropriety was responsible. By descent and education the girl is said to be a gentlewoman, yet on various occasions she shows a want of sense and refinement that would surprise us in a respectable scullery-maid. However, she refuses a Marquis and marries an Earl, so her little adventures lead her to the popular paradise. The author's style is not distinguished. He talks of "syrenic" allurements, and "puelline" costume, and his sentences are interminable. But his story is brightly told, and will please people who can be made happy by a minx and a Marquis.

Monarch, the Big Bear. By ERNEST THOMPSON SETON. (Constable, 5s.)

MR. THOMPSON SETON'S is a name with which to conjure in America; and he bids fair to become a popular force in this country among boys. His intimacy with savage life, together with his familiarity with animals of the wilds, renders him an attractive figure to youth. Under his patronage the boyhood of the United States plays at "Injuns," lives in "teepees" and hunts and shoots all manner of game. It may be that we shall witness the introduction of Sabre Indians, cut to circumstances, in our country. Meanwhile Mr. Seton's book gives us something to go on with. "Monarch the big Bear" is very characteristic of the author. It is the life-history of a grizzly, from the time when on the Tallac slopes he was captured as a cub to his last inglorious and pathetic end. Mr. Seton's knowledge is beyond criticism. It would take a bear himself to convict him of error. And (what to our mind is the most valuable point) he does not paint his knowledge with the sentimentality so dear to this kind of book. The bear is a bear, not anthropomorphised out of its feral nature. The bear does not think or remember, except in so far as he thinks with his nose. In vain you will look for the maudlin here; Mr. Seton has no room for it. And his writing gains in dignity by that abstinence. Perhaps it is a little too elaborate at times, a trifle over-adorned; but it is not given to all to resist the fascinations of the purple patch. Howbeit this is a most entertaining and engrossing story and should charm the hearts of old and young alike.

BOOK SALES

SALE OF THE LIBRARY OF THE LATE JOHN SCOTT, C.B., OF HALKSHILL, AYRSHIRE

THE most remarkable feature of this remarkable library was undoubtedly the section gathered together under the heading of Mary Queen of Scots. The lots numbered 392 and the sale of them occupied a day and a half.

Two well known booksellers, Mr. Quaritch and Mr. Pearson, bought nearly every item of exceptional value, blighting the hopes, and obliterating the efforts, of the smaller bookbuyers who expect to buy books for next to nothing.

Mr. Quaritch's name figures for about £2500 worth of Mary Stuart literature and Mr. Pearson's for about £1100 worth. The first item sold brought £100 and is a contemporary manuscript of twenty-four neatly written pages entitled Against the Scottische Queene, that she ought not to live, that mercy in that case is both dreadfull and dangerous. Half a dozen numbers farther on came the most important and the most valuable of the Stuart collection. It is described as follows, and was knocked down to Mr. Quaritch for £900:

Autograph letter of Mary Queen Scots, 14 pp. (unfinished and unsigned), beginning: "Mon Oncle ayant envoié guerir sellon se que dessa par St. Cosme je vous avois adverti que je deliberois faire une grande Partie de la Noblesse et de l'Eglise empescher que a cause du brenl l'Eglise il ne quelque brouillerie." (Jan. 1562.)

An important and valuable document from Dawson Turner's collection. A facsimile of it, with exact typographical reproduction, a translation and illustrative documents, edited by Father Pollen, forms vol. xciii. (1904) of the Scottish History Society's Publications; a copy of which accompanies the lot.

Another book of extreme rarity realised £201. It is by Patrick Cockburn, and was published at St. Andrews in 1555. It seems to be the first book which mentions Queen Mary by name, and is the second known book printed by John Scott in St. Andrews. It is dedicated to the Queen Mother, Mary of Guise.

Other notable Mary Queen of Scots books purchased, were:

Collections relative to the Funerals of Mary Queen of Scots, 1588, edited by Robert Pitcairn, only 125 copies printed. 1822. £75 (Pearson).

Copie of a letter written by one in London to his friend concerning the credit of the late published detection of the doynages of the Ladie Marie of Scotland. [by Geo. Buchanan]. 1571? £14.

Copie of a letter, written by Sir Francis Walsingham, Principall

Secretary to Queen Elizabeth, unto the Chancellor of Scotland, for dehorting the King of Scottes from his suspected intent to revenge the death of the Queene his Mother. Contemporary copy (19 pp.) (1587.) £105 (Quaritch).

Defence of Queen Elizabeth for the beheading of Mary I. of Scots. Contemporary manuscript (1587-1588). £36 (Pearson).

Discours du Grand et Magnifique Triumphe fait au Mariage de tresnoble . . . Prince Francois de Valois Roy Dauphin, et des tres-haute . . . Princesse Madame Marie d'Estreurt (sic) Roynne d'Escosse. Contemporary reprint of the original edition. £85 (Pearson).

Discourse de la Mort de tres-haute et tres-illustre Princesse Madame Marie Stouard (sic) Roynne d'Escosse fait le vint troisieme jour de Fevrier 1587. Original edition. 4 vols. 1587. Of this excessively rare tract issued immediately after the execution of Mary Queen of Scots, only three copies are known. £114 (Pearson).

Documents relating to a Robbery of Jewels of Mary Queen of Scots, 1576. 4 original paper documents with signatures of Cecil, Lord Burleigh, &c. 1576. £108 (Pearson).

La Harangue de tres noble et tres Vertueuse Dame Madame Marie d'estuart. 1563. £101 (Quaritch).

Harryson (James, Scotlisheman) An Exhortacion to the Scottes, to conformme themselves to the honorable expediet, and godly union, between the two realms of Englande and Scotlande. Black letter. 1547. £39 (Ellis).

Lesley (John, Bp. of Ross) A Defence of the Honour of the righte highe mighty and noble Princesse Marie Queene of Scotlande and Dowager of France, with a declaration as well of her own right title and intereste to the Succession of the Crown of Englande, &c. Extremely rare, not more than four copies being known. 1569. £127.

Lesley (J., Bp. of Ross) "A register of the Proceedings in the charge of Ambassadors of a reverend father John Leslie Byshoppe of Rosse, containing the whole Preceedings from his entrees into Englande in September 1568 to December 1573; the double of this booke was sent to the Queene of Scottes in more ample forme of discourse written in November, 1573." Manuscript on paper (113 11), 1573. £164 (Pearson).

Norfolk and Q. Mary. The whole of the proceedings at the trial of Thomas Duke of Norfolk. Contemporary official report in handwriting of the time, written on 9 large folio sheets. 1571.

This interesting MS. reports of the trial the Duke of Norfolk for high treason in designing to marry the Queen of Scots. £126 (Pearson).

Original Letters and Papers relating to Mary Queen of Scots, &c., 1546 to 1572. £355 (Quaritch).

Stubbs (John) The Discoverie of a Gaping Gulf, whereinto Englande is likely to be swallowed by another French Marriage, if the Lord forbid not the Banns, by letting her Majestie see the Sin and Punishment therof. 1578.

The extremely rare original edition of this book against the proposed French Marriage of Q. Elizabeth. The author and the publisher each had their right hand cut off, Stubbs shouting "God save Queen Elizabeth" on the occasion. £101 (Quaritch).

Udall's Historie of the Life and Death of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland, 214 portraits. 1624. £76 (Walker).

During the first six days of the sale, i.e., from March 27 to April 1, 1822 lots (including the Mary Stuart books) were sold at a very satisfactory price—a total of over £13,000. The most notable prices obtained were for:

The Disputation betwix the Praetendit Minsters of the deformed Kirk in Scotland and Nicol Burne Professor of Philosophie. Original edition. 1581. £14.

Caesar Libri Commentariorum de Bello Gallico. The second edition of Caesar's Commentaries and a beautiful specimen of Jensen's Roman Type. £29 10s.

Caxton (Wm.) Chronicles of England. Black letter. Imprinted by Wm. Caxton in the Abbey of Westmestre, 1482. £102.

W. Caxton. Higden (Ranulph) Polychronicon [translated into English by John Trevisa]. Black letter. £201 (Quaritch).

(Westminster, W. Caxton, c. 1483) An Extremely Rare Caxton of which about thirty copies exist, mostly imperfect.

Cologne Chronicle, 1499. £27.

Chronicon Nurembergense, 1493. £26.

The Confessione of the Fayth and Doctrine Beleved and professed by the Protestantes of the Realme of Englande, exhibited in thee States of the same in Parliament, &c. Black letter, imprinted at Edinburgh, 17 Augusti, 1560. The last leaf contains the following imprint: "from Edinburgh, 17 Aug. 1560."

The Acts and Articles ar red in the face of Parliament, and ratified by the three estatis." £126.

Darien. Caledonia, or the Pedler turned Merchant, a Tragi-Comedy as acted by his Majesty's subjects of Scotland in the King of Spain's Province of Darien. Very rare. Sm. 4to. Printed and sold by the booksellers of London and Westminster, 1700. £10.

Darien. Original Documents connected with the Scotch Darien Expedition at the end of the seventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth centuries, with the signatures of Paterson and the other promoters. £52.

The Palis of Honoure, compiled by Gawayne dowglas Bysshope of Dunkyll. Black letter. Imprinted at London at Fletstreet at the Sygne of the Rose Garland by Wylliam Copland, God Save Queene Marye, n.d (1553). £95 (Quaritch).

Ferguson (David, Minister of Dumferline) Scottish Proverbs gathered together and put ordine alphabetico, anno 1598. Edinb. 1642. £14 (Quaritch).

Sir William Fraser's Scottish Family Histories were fairly numerous and brought good prices. The Sterlings of Keir, £21. The Carnegies £18. The Book of Carlaveroch, £15. The Scots of Buccleuch, £12. The Douglas Books, £25. The Melvilles and Leslies, £9.

Glanville's (Bartholomaeus de) De Proprietatibus Rerum. Manuscript on vellum, 265 11 10 by 7 in. written in small much contracted Gothic letters. £11 15s.

Sam: again, 1485. £80 (Quaritch).

GOUPIL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORICAL MONOGRAPHS

Mary Stuart, by John Skelton. £19.

Masson's Cavaliers de Napoleon. £12 10s.

Queen Elizabeth by the Right Rev Mandell Creighton. £38.

Hakluyt's Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffiques and Discoveries of the English Nation. Made by Sea or Overland . . . anytime within the compasse of these 1500 yeeres. 1598-1600. £33 10s.

Hamilton (John, Archbishop of St. Andrews) The Catechesime. 1552. The excessively rare first edition of the celebrated Catechesime, of which not more than four copies appear to be known. £14 (Quaritch).

Hay (George) The Confutation of the Abbots of Crosraguels (Quintin Kennedy) Masse. Original edition, black letter. Edinb. 1563. £27 (Quaritch).

Hollinshed (Ralph) Chronicles of England, Scotland and Ireland. Black letter. 1577. £44 (Maggs).

Hume (David, of Godscroft) The Origin and Descent of the most noble and Illustrious Families of Angus and Douglas. 1633. £60 (Johnston).

James VI. and I. Basilikon Doron, divided into three Books, title within woodcut border, original vellum gilt, a large copy with margins (title written on). Sm. 4to. Edinb. printed by Waldegrave, printer to the King's Majeste, 1599. £174 (Quaritch).

James VI. and I. The Essayes of a Prentise in the Divine Art of Poetry, first edition. Edinburgh, 1585. £68 (Quaritch).

James VI. and I. His Majesties Poeticall Exercises at Vacant Houres. First edition, &c., 1591. £80 (Quaritch).

Johnson (Ben) B. Jon; His Part of King James his Royall and Magnificent Entertainment through his Honorable Cittie of London, Thursday the 15 of March, 1603. £68 (Quaritch).

(Knox's Liturgy). The Book of Common Order. The CL. Psalmes of David in English Metre, with the Forme of Prayers, etc., used in the Church of Scotland, whereunto . . . are added sundrie other Prayers. Edin. 1575. £109 (Quaritch).

Maitland Club Publications. £87 (Steven).

THE DRAMA

"HAMLET" AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE

It may be true that no actor has ever failed in the part of Hamlet—though some must have come perilously near it; but it is at least equally true that very few have really succeeded. The present writer cannot pretend to a long theatrical memory. It embraces only five Hamlets—and he was not present on that great night in October 1874, when the young Mr. Irving of those days threw moribund traditions overboard, leaped into his place as a great actor and stamped himself on the character of Hamlet for all time. Since that night, the task of succeeding Hamlets has been, if not easier, at any rate less drastic. Hamlet was thenceforth established as a prince, a scholar, and a gentleman; it only remained for each succeeding actor of intelligence to see how much of the inexhaustible wealth of meaning in the character he could bring out. Well, of all the five (remembering that this article does not pretend to reach back to 1874) Mr. H. B. Irving seems to us to be the nearest to perfection—to bring out the most.

But before we come to the actor, a word about the play. The version of Hamlet produced at the Adelphi on Tuesday night is a very good version. Parts of Hamlet have necessarily to be cut out, except on the rare occasions when enthusiasts like Mr. F. R. Benson can collect a public at five in the afternoon and keep them, with intervals, till midnight to see the whole of the play. At the Adelphi they cut out Fortinbras and all that concerns him, which is a serious loss. They cut out nearly all the references to Hamlet's voyage towards England, the pirates, and the fate of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, which is a still more serious loss. For the inevitable result of maiming Shakespeare's fourth act is that the audience, willy nilly, lose a certain amount of interest in Hamlet himself. Shakespeare knew very well that the force and beauty of the madness and death of Ophelia were so stupendous as to drive out anything but themselves; and to prevent this he inserted the meeting of Hamlet with the army of Fortinbras, and the letter which the sailors bring to Horatio, so that Hamlet should be kept before the minds of the audience. As it is (and it cannot be helped) he fades away; and to say that when Mr. H. B. Irving appeared again at the graveside we had not lost interest in him, and did not feel him to be something of an interloper, is as great a tribute to the intense impression he had created in previous acts as we know how to pay. So much for the losses. Among the gains we may count the speech to the players, and—welcome retention!—the scene in the King's closet, which is a scene we cannot conceive any one having the face to cut out. A dignified simplicity of scenery and admirable management (all gratitude to people who have everything so smooth and perfect on a first night!) enable a fuller version of the play than most to be played in very reasonable time.

And now for Hamlet himself. At last, in Mr. H. B. Irving, we have a Hamlet who is really young. He is "young Hamlet," a gracious, princely figure, courtier, soldier, scholar. He is gentle, because of his breeding, and because he is, first and foremost, a man of thought; but beneath that gentle exterior lie ardent feeling, and a dignity that can at times be terrible. He loves passionately, and when he loves he idealises: overthrow his ideals, and you shake a sensitive nature almost beyond bearing. You poison the whole world for him, when you thrust ugly facts into his realm of dreams and ideals. Show him that one woman is unchaste, and the whole sex is to him rotten; force on his notice the evil of one or two, and the earth is a steril promontory, the heavens a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. As he can love, so can he hate; hatred drives his ardent soul into fury. But even while he rages he is thinking, always thinking, looking at himself from the outside; and he will break off, to laugh at himself, for he knows, like all men of thought, that there are two sides to every question, that in earthly things the absolute has no place. Yorick is chap-fallen, Queen Gertrude is licentious, and Ophelia can stoop to be a tool in the hands of her father.

But was Hamlet mad? As we read Mr. Irving's performance, he believes that he was not—but with a qualification. The obvious madness, the talk of fishmongers and the rest, which might delude Polonius and Claudius and their like into believing him insane, was a mere pose adopted for their benefit. But Hamlet was nearer to genuine madness than he himself supposed. The case is best explained by an instance. Take the scene with Ophelia in Act III., which in our opinion was one of the finest pieces of acting it is possible to imagine, and see what Hamlet's state of mind is. First, he loves her, as Hamlet could love, with an infinite tenderness of which Mr. Irving lost nothing; then he is determined to prove to her, by bitterness that is at first only put on, that he does not love her; then he finds that, after all, she is but her father's decoy; and then she stands to him for womanhood in general—the thing that his mother had poisoned in his mind for ever; and last, the old ideal is not yet utterly dead:—cannot there be one woman, and that one Ophelia, who shall live to fulfil it? A man with all these thoughts and impulses in his mind at once is, if not mad, at least so overwrought as to be near madness. He loves Ophelia, and he heaps upon her all his scorn of her sex; he will lash her into terror of him, and he takes her face between his hands, yearning over its pure beauty. The striking feature of Mr. Irving's performance of this scene was the way in which he showed every one of these feelings, intentions and emotions racing together through the mind of one, who, pretending to be mad in one manner is, unknown to himself, all but mad in another.

The temptation to follow him scene by scene is great, for every scene was worth dwelling on; but want of space forbids. It must be enough to say that now for the first time the younger generation of playgoers is able to sympathise with Horatio in his love for the prince, to realise that Hamlet is after all, the most appealing, the most human of Shakespeare's tragedies. Dignity and tenderness, sweetness and power, strength and weakness, lofty ideals and bitter disappointments, fresh, gracious youth and the sorrows of the whole world—all these were found to the full in the prince whom we saw on Tuesday night. The audience were right to pocket their handkerchiefs as each curtain fell, and call and call for Mr. Irving till their throats were hoarse. It was the great and deserved triumph of a performance, which was exceptional at first sight, and will prove more interesting at every visit.

For the rest, Miss Lily Brayton has a peculiar gift of unforced but compelling pathos, which made her Ophelia a pure delight. And, in her mad scene, she, at any rate, was really mad—not playing at it with the consciousness that she was being observed. The distortion of that charming face was pitiful, not grotesque; she turned thought and affliction, passion, hell itself, to favour and to prettiness, not to absurd antics. About the whole performance there was something virginal and sweet; she would have made a fit wife for Hamlet. Mr. Oscar Asche is not the usual slimy Claudius, but a rugged, brutal and rather fantastic king, one of those powerful animals from whom the Ophelias of this world would, as this Ophelia did, shrink in horror in the unguarded truth of madness; and the Polonius of Mr. Lyall Swete was a kindly, self-important and pompous old man, not an utter fool. Mr. Walter Hampden as Laertes, Mr. Charles Rock as the First Gravedigger, Mr. H. R. Hignett as Horatio and Mr. Alfred Brydone as the Ghost all deserve praise.

FINE ART

THE LOAN EXHIBITION OF PROCESS ENGRAVING AT SOUTH KENSINGTON

THIS exhibition is the fourth of a series arranged by the Board of Education at the suggestion of the Society of Arts to illustrate the rise and progress of certain of the graphic arts. The last exhibition, held in 1903, consisted of etching and engraving, and illustrated all methods of intaglio engraving by hand.

The present exhibition is devoted to photogravure, photo-lithography, and kindred processes of reproduction by means of photography, including half-tone colour-printing, and comprises works from foreign contributors. It is held in the usual gallery in the Indian section of the Victoria and Albert Museum, and is arranged with the care and completeness that one expects from a body with such resources as the Museum authorities. The only criticism one can make is that it would perhaps have been better if fewer examples had been shown, as the light upon some of the end screens is not nearly good enough to enable small technical points to be studied.

The Historic section consists of some eighty examples of plates and prints, commencing with an impression from a pewter héliograph plate by Monsieur N. Niépce, dated 1824, and will perhaps be found the most interesting part of the exhibition. In studying this, as indeed the whole collection, the introduction to the catalogue supplied by Major-General J. Waterhouse will be found of great interest. It is well done, and the thanks of all those interested in the history of photographic reproduction will surely be due to him for the clear setting forth of what could only be obtained by wide knowledge and careful research. There are instructive and well-arranged exhibits of plates, tools, and materials by the London County Council School of Photographic Engraving, illustrating various stages in photogravure and three-colour block work, with colour-filters, screens, &c., and other exhibits of a like nature illustrating varieties of these methods.

In all, there are some six hundred examples, representing, one must suppose, the best that has been done by photographic methods and therefore furnishing a good opportunity of judging what these methods have accomplished—if anything has been gained, or anything lost.

One section is devoted to the process engraving of maps, exemplified by some thirty specimens lent by the Ordnance Survey Office at Southampton; wherein are shown the manuscript maps or plans, negatives, copper plates, zinc transfers, and finished impressions. All very perfect work photographically considered.

Here one would expect the photographic methods to show to most advantage, but it must be sorrowfully confessed that compared with the "old series" of maps printed from electros of hand-engraved plates, the new series are a terrible falling away. One misses the clear lines and varying qualities of darks that belong only to etched and engraved work on metal—lines of a fineness and precision that no pen or brush-work on paper can ever equal. The new series baffle and repel the eye by a mass of coarser lines, black and lifeless. There is no seeing beyond the flat surface they present; the information they should give is difficult to extract and they are exceedingly tiring to the eyes. In 1901, Mr. Charles Hawksley, President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, in his address to the members, said:

"It is to be regretted that the beautifully engraved 6-inch maps (of the Ordnance Survey) produced in the earlier part of the century have, to accelerate the rate of publication, given place to maps produced by a quicker but coarser method."

There is no doubt that this regret is felt by most people who loved the old maps, and it is to be hoped that in a newer series the question of speed of production will not be considered against perfection of execution, and that the older methods will be revived.

In the more complex matter of the reproduction of paintings and drawings, with which this exhibition is more particularly concerned, the qualities belonging to the photograph are more in evidence. The camera observes facts microscopically, coldly and impartially, recording them (or such of them as the plate is sensitive to) with an optical accuracy and searching conviction that even in the case of distortion is almost convincing. Yet it amounts to no more than a repetition of words without understanding, of forms and tones without knowledge of what they represent.

What a photograph is, that is a photogravure, with the loss of some detail, and a gain in the use of such paper and ink as is used in engraving; and a half-tone block is a lesser thing still.

There are in the gallery fair examples of photogravure from portrait oil painting. In these the first thing insisted upon is the grain of the canvas—next the light and shade of the paint as an applied pigment—then some varying sense of the colour as tone; last—as an accidental conclusion—the portrait. A good engraver never sees the picture he is engraving from as a surface at all. He sees beyond it to what the picture represents to him, be it portrait or landscape; and the impression the picture makes on his mind is transferred to whatever material he is working in just as though he were looking at the real person or scene. The photograph should be as accurate, as regards the forms on the picture, as any hand work could ever make it, but it records things the eye was never meant to see, and misses much that appeals to an understanding brain.

The colour-printing in the exhibition should not perhaps be too closely criticised, as it is admittedly in an experimental stage; but the results that have been obtained cannot be considered very encouraging, and some of them are truly distressing to the eye. The most refined seem to be those sent from Holland. Fine colour, as understood by a painter, has never yet been represented on any print, hand engraved or otherwise: and most likely never will be. It is sometimes said that photography has superseded engraving. It is true that it has practically killed wood-cutting, and in a lesser degree wood-engraving—with some loss to the world, as those who care for the wood-engravings of the sixties well know.

Let it be admitted that photography is an amazing and fascinating business, that the processes of its application to intaglio engraving are a continual source of wonder (and startlin; surprises) to the workers therein; and a never ending incentive to experiment. Yet the results obtained, however good in themselves, can never compare with fine engraving. A good photograph of a picture may be more interesting than a bad engraving, but the best photograph the world will ever see, will never have the same interest as a thing worked with the skill and intention that go with an understanding heart and eye.

In the last paragraph of Major General Waterhouse's introduction he says:

"It may also be noted that with most of the photo-mechanical processes more or less hand work may be required to produce a satisfactory result. Photography is used only as a means of facilitating accurate reproduction."

Well, yes! But what of the accuracy that needs hand work to make it satisfactory? And what is facility as compared with final quality?

MUSIC

SCHOOLS OF MUSIC

WE know that a city seated on a mountain cannot be hid, But the difficulty is to get there. In music, as in religion, this simile holds good. People born to an inheritance of talent are born climbers. Their mountain city—a certain pinnacle of artistic perfection which they apprehend, but do not easily reach—this city of their dreams haunts them like a vision; and however arduous the path, a restless and unconquerable ambition for which they are altogether irresponsible—which indeed we may term one of the morbid conditions of talent—draws them onwards by every fibre of their hearts.

"For every gift of noble origin
Is breathed upon by hope's perpetual breath."

Onwards does not always mean upwards, however, and the proverb, "all roads lead to Rome," has sent many a musical student into the quagmire. This brings us to the vexed question of school in general, and in particular to schools of pianoforte-playing.

Rubinstein, being once questioned on the subject, is reported to have said: "Il n'y a qu'une seule manière de jouer—c'est de bien jouer!"—a remark typical of this genial giant's large and somewhat loose views on matters of detail; and his brother Nicolas showed equal disdain of minutiae to a pupil who stumbled badly over an octave passage, and then asked if it should be played with a stiff or flexible wrist. "Play it with your feet if you like, so long as you do play it!" was the master's impatient reply. We venture to say that Paderewski, or Sauer, or Tausig in his life-time, would have answered differently, and given moreover a physical as well as a musical reason why one movement rather than another was proper to the passage under discussion. But then Tausig was Liszt's most brilliant pupil; Sauer is an exponent of the Deppé method; Paderewski in his youth, though already an artist of standing, withdrew from the public to give two laborious years to Leschetizki.

Here are three schools already mentioned; we may add to the list the English, the German, and the French, besides a curious hybrid known as the Anglo-Schumannesque. All these have their qualities and the faults of their qualities. The French is sparkling, and delicate, and perhaps a trifle thin both in tone and thought; the German, possibly from being over-weighted in the other direction, lacks at times limpidity and vivacity; the English is extremely thorough-going in ground-work and theory, but it is conventional. Those national characteristics on which we plume ourselves —a shame-faced dislike for manifestations of enthusiasm which it seems almost indecent to violate, and a conscious reasonableness amounting sometimes to non-existence of imagination—are misplaced in music, inducing as they do a want of flexibility in the mind which occasionally communicates itself to the wrist and flexors. Remain the Liszt, the Schumann and the Anglo-Schumannesque methods, which have certainly produced some great and good musicians, the best known of whom are Rosenthal, the Vernes and Miss Fanny Davies. These schools have, moreover, inculcated a certain respect for muscle which, when it does not degenerate into that solid thumping so incomprehensibly dear to its perpetrator and so painful to the inactive listener, is one of the first steps achieved in the long climb. Of the Liszt method, as expounded by Tausig and Liszt himself, and the Deppé method, much interesting information has already been given in two delightful books, the "Letters of Miss Amy Fay," and "My Musical Experiences" by Bettina Walker.

These several schools agree more or less amicably to differ on certain points; their belief in each other's laws not interfering disagreeably with faith in their own. But there is one system, the most arduous because, as we would somewhat timorously suggest, it may be the most thorough of all, which when mentioned raises a chorus of disapproval from disciples of almost every other; its home is in Vienna, and its high-priest is Theodore Leschetizki. Leschetizki is a Pole by birth, and music runs in his veins; besides this he was a pupil of Czerny, who was a pupil of Beethoven; hence it is the delight of Leschetizki students to term themselves great-great-grand-pupils of Beethoven. Higher commendation cannot certainly be bestowed in Vienna or elsewhere, and perhaps the feeling of personal resentment manifested by other schools to the Leschetizki school is slightly justified by the attitude of serene superiority assumed by that body itself; what it receives in condemnation it gives back in irritating tolerance. This possibly is excusable in a system which besides its Slivinski, its Mark Hambourg, Paula Szalit, Essipoff, and other notabilities, has bestowed on the world as its noblest gift such an epoch-making name as Paderewski.

Enemies of the school hasten to say that gems of this water need no lapidary; they emerge from beds of earth already polished, faceted, and ready-set. Poets are born, not made, they aver. Tennyson gave it as his opinion that poets were born and made, and Paderewski himself is the first to acknowledge his debt to a system of which his most intimate, most personal interpretations are the crowning lustre. In the whole world of relationships there is no tie so beautiful as that of master and disciple, and that the bond between them should be mind and not matter makes it the more likely to endure.

Obviously though school may be the matrix of young talent, no system, however comprehensive, can create genius, which is indeed the offspring of the "womb beyond the day-star," its origin is wholly divine. But whatever law from outside sources helps genius to the most perfect self-revelation must be accounted its master. "Know thyself," wrote the Greeks who more than any other nation realised that knowledge is power. In school, then, we find, if not the source of power, the best means of putting it into action; and the more laborious the system, the more freedom it affords pure inspiration hereafter. "A pupil from whom nothing is ever demanded that he cannot do, never does all he can," says John Stuart Mill. The first condition demanded by Leschetizki of the pupil, whom, whatever his proficiency, the professor after his initial interview, at once hands over to a vorbereiter or trainer, is absolute concentration. An elaborate, and it must be owned, wearisome set of gymnastics for the arm and hand are imposed upon him in daily routine, with the injunction: "Think of your muscles." Here the uninitiated are wont to raise objections bearing on the danger of all musical sense being thus destroyed. The school replies first, that without complete elasticity of every tendon the musical sense cannot find its proper development; secondly, that the "light finger," often a youthful aspirant's best possession, is not imperilled by these exercises, as there is no touch so limpid as that which is the result of muscles under perfect control. Delicacy does not flower on weakness, rather is it the crown of strength reserved. Thirdly, this routine for beginners is a valuable discipline for the mind. There is a proper muscular or nervous movement for every tone, and every touch, and a satisfactory reason for those movements; and the motto "Brain before fingers" is constantly on the Professor's lips. After a time this habit of consciously directed movements becomes second nature to the neophyte; then begins his grand initiation into the mysteries of tone.

If in this article we appear to have dwelt over-long on the necessity of highly elaborated, highly thought-out technique, let it be remembered that technique is only a means to an end. The text: "It is the spirit that quickeneth—the flesh profiteth nothing," can be literally applied here. In the end the musical soul must dominate all else; its sensibility must increase under severe training, in the same proportion as its virility; and a great master is quick to discover and discard those whose limited store of vitality could not survive. "Le cœur des saints est liquide," wrote one who was a saint himself, alluding to the molten heat of heavenly desires which a long life of discipline only makes more fervid. Art, which is after all simply the religion of the Beautiful, has also its martyrs and devotees. Even under vigorous treatment a truly gifted temperament cannot be blunted or obscured; rather must it gain in concentration and brilliancy by its obedience to restraint. Every real talent may be compared to a sun—fluid fire revolving by its own impetus, but kept in shape and balance by pre-existing laws.

These suggestions are not written for the average musical pupil—a young person whose chief desire is to make art "fit in" with ordinary conventional life; who, being gifted with certain abilities, thinks that perhaps six months study or a course of lessons will "finish" him. We speak to those who already apprehend something of the spur and lash of musical stimulus, whose breath is aspiration, who, alternating between success and failure, know the intoxication of a glorious moment, and "tears from the depth of some divine despair." To such as these we say emphatically: "Go up higher!" Choose your school, and see that you are well schooled. All roads are open to you, but in this article we have with intimate conviction put up a finger-post to one. Never mind the difficulties—the fainting and falling by the way. The freedom of the city lies before you, and the city herself, though so high above, beckons imperatively from her seven hills.

E

CORRESPONDENCE

THE UNIVERSITY EDUCATION OF WOMEN

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—In the Times of April 4 an appeal was published above the signatures of Lord Rosebery and others on behalf of Bedford College for Women. The facts disclosed in that appeal are of deep concern to all who are interested in the university education of women. It appears that the college is now confronted with the danger of having its existence cut short at the very moment when its activities are at their highest point.

The crisis which has arisen is of this kind. The lease of the existing premises expires in the near future, and cannot be renewed. Nor is the freehold to be bought. A new site and new buildings are essential if the college is to continue its work. It is estimated that the site may cost £150,000, and that an endowment of £100,000 will also be required to keep pace with the expansion of the college.

I may remind your readers that the college dates back to 1849. Its numbers have steadily grown; the national value of its work has been recognised by a Parliamentary grant, and it is now one of the colleges of the University of London. It includes in its instruction courses both in Arts and Science, qualifying for degrees. Out of about 280 students, 173 are preparing for degrees, a larger proportion than in any of the other colleges. Nor has any other college so many students in the Faculty of Arts, the number in the last session being 95.

If I venture, speaking for myself, to lay special stress on the Arts side of the college, it is because the claims of science will find many powerful advocates, while there is, to my mind, a peculiar reason why the humanistic training of women is an affair of national concern. From the nature of the case woman's influence in laying the early foundations of literary education has always been great. And the signs in the teaching profession all now point to women having an increasing share in forming the literary taste of the young. While the older literary tradition, resting chiefly on the classical languages, is being impaired or modified, the study of literature and language is taking a variety of new forms. As yet, ideas are fluid and methods experimental. A standard of taste has still to be created. People are casting about and beginning to take fresh bearings. And so it becomes of cardinal importance that literature, for which women have often so marked an aptitude, should be made a sound and solid discipline; that the feeling for it should be developed into a reasoned appreciation; that it should not be looked on merely as a showy accomplishment, and that fluency should not be mistaken for mastery. In making the literary education of women more thorough we shall do much towards transmitting a true tradition and standard of humane letters. This must be my excuse for pleading in your columns the claims of Bedford College as a place where humanistic learning, ancient and modern, holds a prominent place and is conducted on academic lines.

Donations to the fund may be sent to Miss Henrietta Buck, hon. secretary of the appeal fund, Bedford College, York Place, W.

S. H. BUTCHER.

A STOLEN ITALIAN MISSAL

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—I hear this morning from Siena that the stolen pages torn from an illuminated fourteenth-century missal on July 1, 1904, at Pienza have at last been happily recovered.

This glaring circumstance reminds me of a similar theft twenty-five years ago of a very valuable cope (piviale), presented by Pope Pio II. of the Piccolomini family to the Cathedral of this same city of Pienza, in token of love and remembrance for his native place, which ever afterwards altered its name in order to celebrate and carry his distinctive papal title to far distant posterity. I saw this cope (said to be worth some £4000) displayed in open court at the trial of the official thieves in Siena, and, through the friendliness of the presiding judge, examined its embroidery minutely. The treasured piviale was henceforth kept securely under lock and key, but it taught no caution to the Cathedral authorities at Ascoli-Piceno, whose splendid cope, the gift of Pope Nicholas IV. (1288-92), was purloined lately in an exactly similar way.

Both these art treasures, the piviale of Ascoli, and the stolen fragments of this costly mediæval missal of Pienza, have been restored to their careless custodians, through the disinterested probity of two foreign collectors, viz., Mr. Pierpont Morgan and Mr. Goldschmidt—rather, it may occur to some of us, an expensive method to waylay Italian misdemeanants.

Only, before total restitution can be made, the Pienza people must reckon with Signor Orlando* (the Minister of Public Instruction), who, I hear, still retains in pledge the

* Signor Orlando is reported since my writing above letter, to have resigned his office in the late Italian Ministry.

Ascoli piviale, threatening forfeiture of these local heirlooms to the tenderer care of a Government museum.

Let collectors and foreign restorers take warning! Signor Orlando, the special minister who forgot his promises to Mr. Waldstein (see Times, March 28) on the excavation of Herculaneum, has, I am told, proposed to grant an "adequate" compensation (purely honorary, of course) to these two gentlemen who stipulated for no personal reward in exchange for their generous sacrifice to art.

March 29.

WILLIAM MERCER.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

QUERIES

THE MAID OF LOCH LOMOND.—Could any of your readers say if there is anything known of the name or the life of the Highland maid of Loch Lomond, who was the subject of Wordsworth's beautiful poem:

"Sweet Highland Girl a very shower
Of beauty is thy earthly dower?"

R. J. M. (Dunedin, N.Z.).

SMART'S "HYMN TO DAVID."—The theme of one of Browning's "Parleyings with Certain People of Importance in their Day" is Christopher Smart's "Hymn to David," written by him with a key on the walls of a cell in which he was confined when insane. I have been told that this is one of the most remarkable pieces of poetical composition in our language, and judging by the fragment of it quoted in Johnson's "Lives of the Poets," there appears to be some justification for the statement. Can any one say where I can meet with the complete poem?—Litterateur (Sunderland).

A LITTLE WORM.—Romeo and Juliet, Act 1, scene 2, lines 64-66:

"Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat,
Not halt so big as a round, little worm
Pricked from the lazy finger of a maid."

What is the meaning of "worm" in the above passage, and under what circumstances would it be found in the "lazy finger of a maid"?—A. C. Mattheus.

AUTHOR WANTED.—

"The mountain cheer, the frosty skies
Breed pure wits, inventive eyes;
And then the moral of the place
Hints summits of heroic grace.
Men in these crags a fastness find
To fight corruption of the mind,
The insanity of towns to stem,
With simpleness for stratagem."

I have seen these lines quoted. Can any one tell me whence they come, and the writer?—Outis (Liscard).

TAXES ON BEARDS.—In the Burghmote books of Canterbury the following entry appears: "2 Ed. VI. the Sheriff and another person pay their fines for wearing their beards; viz 3/4 and 1/8." What was this tax, and why were there two rates; did it depend on the length of the beard?—Dane John.

INGOLDSBY LEGENDS.—Who is the bard referred to in the following lines from "The Bagman's Dog"?:

"But still on the words of the bard keep a fixed eye,
'Ingratum si dixeris omnia dixi!'"

Mulgar.

AUTHOR WANTED.—The expression "Property has its duties as well as its rights," has been attributed to Thomas Drummond, to Baron Woulfe, and to Lord Mulgrave. Has it been proved authoritatively who was actually the author?—S. T. H.

ANSWERS

CHARING.—It is worth consideration that Charing meant a mere "crossing," at a turn of the roadway in Roman times. We have cross roads in plenty, and at the village of Charing the road splits; one branch bending sharp to the left or south to cross the river for Stangate and Dover; while the straight line, if continued, would reach Staines and Bath. Added to this Charing continued the line through St. Martin's Lane, from the Edgware Road and St. Albans, called Watling Street.—A. Hall.

"GALLEYFOIST" and "BULLION."—A "galleyfoist" was a state barge, or a pleasure barge. In the quotation from Massinger, however (taking it with the context), it appears to mean a kind of dress, probably the costume worn by the gallants of the period when they went on the river. "Bullion" or "bullion-hose" were trunk-hose, puffed-out (bouillonnés) at the upper part. "In Quirpo" signified "without the cloak or upper garment," or "in clothes that fitted the body," as well as "in undress."—G. A. Jamieson (Cheltenham).

ELDER.—The garden shrub called the judas tree—is a mere blunder for quamos tree, i.e., the bean tree; but the corrupt name has given rise to the legend that Judas hanged himself on one of these trees. This legend, however it originated, was generally received. To be crowned with elder, was anciently a disgrace. Ben Jonson, in Every Man out of his Humour, has "he shall be your Judas, and you shall be his elder-tree to hang on." The elder is not mentioned in the Bible; but it is common to all Europe, and also parts of Asia and Africa.—K. S. (Bristol).

GUBBINS, taken literally means fragments, parings; it is spelled "gubbing" in Halliwell; at school a "gub" is an ill-mannered boy. See French gobier, English "gobbet"; as compared with townspeople these old miners were rough, uncivilised; cf. yokels, chaw-bacons, &c., as terms of reproach.—Portinax.

HENRY FIFT.—With this numeral compare "twelf" for twelfth, as in "twelf tyde," quoted by Halliwell. "Arch; Dicty" from "Aubrey's Wilts" ms., or Vernacular in Salisbury.—A. Hall.

BOOKS RECEIVED

Owing to pressure on our space the list of Books Received is unavoidably held over.

The Williams Typewriter

(ACADEMY MODEL)

Six months ago we commenced selling our well-known Williams Typewriter No. 2 at a discount of 40 per cent. from the established price. We not only reduced the price but added some new devices to the machine, which made it a little better than before. To distinguish it from previous models we have called it the "ACADEMY MODEL," and in the United States it will be known as the "WILLIAMS JUNIOR." We believed that a first-class Typewriter at a popular price would sell, and may say that the demand during the first six months has exceeded our expectations.

The public have appreciated the bargain by purchasing machines, and many purchasers have expressed their satisfaction by voluntarily recommending their friends to buy a Williams Typewriter. The fact that we are willing to place hundreds of these machines on hire at 12s. 6d. per month should be conclusive evidence that we have confidence in their durability and capability. We shall continue to sell these machines in the United Kingdom at the following prices:

No. 2 foolscap, formerly £21, now £12 12s. net cash.

No. 3 brief „ £23, „ £14 14s. „

Instalment Plan, 25s. for Two Months, followed by Monthly Payments of 12s. 6d.

This machine may be seen and full particulars obtained at any of our offices.

Williams Typewriter Co. for Europe

LONDON - 57 Holborn Viaduct

ABERDEEN - 115 Union Street	LEICESTER - 80-84 Halford St.
BELFAST - 71 Ann Street	LEIGH - 84 Bond Street
BIRMINGHAM - 28 High Street	LIVERPOOL -
BURNLEY - 9 Grimshaw Street	MANCHESTER - 267 Deansgate
CARDIFF - 8 St. John's Square	MIDDLESBROUGH - Royal Exchange
DUBLIN - 5 Upper Ormond Quay	NEWCASTLE - 21 Collingwood St.
EDINBURGH - 19 Shandwick Place	NOTTINGHAM - Prudential Bldgs.
EXETER - 31 Queen Street	PORTSMOUTH - 154 Queen Street
GLASGOW - 69 Bothwell St.	SHEFFIELD - 72 Queen Street
LEEDS - 3 Park Lane	SOUTHAMPTON - 12 Portland Street

POST THIS INQUIRY FORM (for a halfpenny in an open envelope)

To WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER CO., 57 Holborn Viaduct, London.

Please send me full details of your Discount Offer of The "Academy" Model Williams Typewriter.

Name.....

Address.....

Occupation.....

☐ If you prefer not to deface this page, send us a postcard similarly worded and naming this paper.

APR 15 1905

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1719

APRIL 15, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.

The Third Annual SHAKESPEARE COMMEMORATION DINNER will be held on Saturday, May 6, 1905, at the Criterion Restaurant, Piccadilly, at 8 o'clock, Sir William Collins, M.D., in the chair. For particulars and Dinner tickets apply Mrs. GOMME, Hon. Sec., 24 Dorset Square, N.W.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH. The Council invites Applications for the Post of WARDEN of the Alexandra Hall of Residence for Women Students in succession to Miss E. A. Carpenter. Applications and copies of 70 Testimonials to be sent by May 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.—T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH. The Council invites Applications for the Post of Registrar and Secretary of the College at a Salary of £300. Applications and 70 copies of Testimonials to be sent by May 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.—T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL AND COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN on APRIL 25, 1905.

Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the Collegiate regulations.

The Hospital contains a service of 750 Beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £900 are awarded annually.

Special Classes for the Preliminary Scientific and the other London University Examinations, for the F.R.C.S., and for other Higher Examinations.

There is a large, thoroughly well-equipped Cricket Ground.

For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. W. DOUGLAS HARMER, M.C. Cantab., WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

A Handbook forwarded on application.

8vo, cloth, price 3s. net.

THE FISH RIVER BUSH AND FAUNA.

By W. G. BLACK, F.R.M.S.

Illustrated.

YOUNG J. PENTLAND, Edinburgh & London.

THE AGE OF MARIE ANTOINETTE.

A Sketch of the Period of European Revival, which claims among its representatives Goethe, Prudhon, Gainsborough and Mozart. By CHARLES NEWTON SCOTT. New and revised edition. LONDON: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd., 50 Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3s. 6d.

LADY SEEKS ENGAGEMENT as Private Secretary. Shorthand, Typewriting (own machine), French, German, Indexing, Research Work. London, Country, or Abroad. Excellent Testimonials.—Apply M., c/o ACADEMY.

EDITOR WANTED for High-Class Weekly.

Practical Knowledge of Mechanical pastimes as well as literary experience desirable. Whole or only part time. Apply, with full particulars, to N, c/o ACADEMY.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER seeks engagement. Mornings from 11 or afternoons. English, French, German, Drawing. Help with preparation of home lessons. Good references.—D. K., 63 Froggnal, Hampstead, N.W.

Advertisements for out of print "books Wanted" and "for Sale" are inserted at 3d. for each title (eight words); minimum, 1s.

Books Wanted

GOLDSMITH (O.) Vicar of Wakefield, 2 vols., 1766, or either, or 1 vol. 1843.

Gough's Sepulchral Monuments, 5 vols., folio, 1786, &c.

Gould's Birds of Australia.

Any of his Ornithological Works.

Gray's Poems, 1762.

Gray (J. E.) Genera of Birds, 3 vols., 1849.

Green's Lives of the Princesses, 6 vols., 8vo, 1850-55.

Greenwich Hospital, coloured plates, 4to, 1826.

Greville Memoirs, 3 vols., 1874.

Grimm's German Popular Stories, 2 vols., 1823-6, or either vol.

Grimm's German Popular Stories, 2 vols., 1834.

Grimble (Aug.) Deer Stalking, 1886, 4to.

Gronow (Captain) Reminiscences, 4 vols., 1862-63-65-66, or either vol.

Grosart's Reprints of Unique and Very Rare Books, 37 vols., 1875-81.

Guest (Lady C.), The Mabinogion, 4 vols., imperial 8vo, 1849.

Gulliver's Travels, 2 vols., 1726, or odd.

Guy Mannering, 3 vols., 1815, or odd.

Habington's Castara, 1640.

Habitu delle Donne Venetiane, folio, 1610. Or Fac-simile, 1877.

Hakluyt Society's Publications, any.

Hakluyt's Divers' Voyages, 4to, 1582.

Hallam (A. H.) Poems N D (1830).

Halle's Union of Lancaster and York, folio, 1548.

Hals (W.) History of Cornwall, Exeter, N D (1750).

Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

T. E. BROWN.—Poems, complete edition.

T. E. Brown, Letters, 2 vols.—A. H. Johnson, 1 Regent Terrace, Cambridge.

WORKS by Wilde, O.; Whistler; Beardsley; books in large and small quantities purchased.—J. Jacob, 149 Edgware Road, Hyde Park.

OWEN PUGH'S WELSH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY 1832 in any condition. Swansea Guide, 1802. Rees' Welsh Saints Folio MSS., Liverpool, 1888. Liber Landavensis.—Lloyd & Townsend, 13 Dillwyn Street, Swansea.

THE WORTHIES OF DEVON, by JOHN PRINCE, 1702, Folio. Gerard's Herbal, enlarged by Johnson 1633, Folio.—A. Iredale, The Strand, Torquay.

Books for Sale

ENGRAVINGS suitable for Scrap Books, from the English and Foreign Illustrated Newspapers. 5s. per cwt. well assorted.—W. E. Goulden, 5 St. Paul's, Canterbury.

"STUDIO" EXTRA NOS.—Pen Drawings, 7s. 6d.; Etching and Engraving, 6s.; Cotman, Cox, De Wint, 7s. 6d.; Reynolds to Millais, 6s. 6d.; Jewellery and Fans, 3s. 6d.; English Water Colours, 8 parts, 20s.—Walker, 37 Briggate, Leeds.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF

G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings.

Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from

FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,

No. 140.

Containing a special article, entitled:

"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS."

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP,

Secondhand Bookseller,

100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND 4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. Root & Son, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.

"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookbinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£5.0 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1800; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss Foor, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L. 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING (Smith Premier).—Scientific Legal MSS., Plays, Translations, Duplicates, Novels, 9d. 1000.—Miss HANDLEY, Berkhamsted, Herts.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE. 10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books. Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE. 10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—

The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes, Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events. Science and Art Specially dealt with.

Fullest Reports of all Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere.

THE SPHERE.

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week. Also List of Books Received.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

ADVERTISING IN IRELAND.

THE DAILY EXPRESS, DUBLIN

PREMIER FINANCIAL PAPER OF IRELAND.

"One of the few daily Papers in the United Kingdom showing a distinct interest in Literature."—The Academy.

Most Suitable Medium for Publishers' Advertisements. Special Columns devoted to Literary Matter every Thursday.

THE DUNDEE COURIER.

Has double the circulation of any Morning Paper North of the Forth.

Literary Notes on Monday. Reviews on Wednesdays.

London Office, 109 Fleet Street, E.C.

THE "COUNTRY LIFE" LIBRARY OF SPORT.

Under the General Editorship of Mr. HORACE G. HUTCHINSON.

FISHING.

NOW READY. IN TWO VOLUMES.

With Coloured Plates of Salmon and Trout Flies. Over 250 Full-Page Illustrations with various diagrams.

Price 25/- net. (12/6 net per Vol.)

Published at the Offices of "COUNTRY LIFE," LIMITED, 20 Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

CONNOISSEURS OF COFFEE

RED

DRINK THE

WHITE

DELICIOUS FOR BREAKFAST
& AFTER DINNER.

& BLUE

In making use less quantity, it being so much stronger than ordinary COFFEE.

JUST PUBLISHED. FIFTH EDITION, GREATLY ENLARGED.

"The Indispensable Handbook of Architecture for Students, Travellers, and General Readers."

Thick demy 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE
ON THE COMPARATIVE METHODBy Professor BANISTER FLETCHER, F.R.I.B.A.,
Formerly Professor of Architecture in King's College, London; andBANISTER F. FLETCHER, F.R.I.B.A., University Extension Lecturer on Architecture, and formerly Lecturer on Architecture, King's College, London.

Contains upwards of 800 pages, with about 2000 Illustrations of Views and Details of the chief Buildings of the World, reproduced from Photographs and from a unique Series of Drawings.

"As complete as it well can be."—Times.
 "No student of architecture should be without this standard work, which is itself a triumph of art."—Daily News.
 "We can recall no other book, with anything like the same compass, that furnishes so clear and so large a purview of the subject."—Daily Telegraph.
 "A delightful book for reference and study for the antiquary or for the intelligent general reader."—Antiquary.

OLD ENGLISH COTTAGES AND FARMHOUSES

A SERIES OF VOLUMES DESIGNED TO ILLUSTRATE THE MOST TYPICAL AND BEAUTIFUL REMAINS OF MINOR DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE IN ENGLAND.

Crown 4to (10 in. by 7 in.), handsomely bound in art canvas, price 21s. each net.

Each volume contains 100 Photographic Plates artistically printed in Collotype, accompanied by Descriptive Notes and Sketches.

1. KENT and SUSSEX. Photographed by W. GALSWORTHY DAVIE, and described by E. GUY DAWBER. [Recently published.]
2. SHROPSHIRE, HEREFORDSHIRE, and CHESHIRE. Photographed by JAMES PARKINSON, and described by E. A. OULD. [Recently published.]
3. The COTSWOLD DISTRICT, comprising Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Northants, Worcestershire. Photographed by W. GALSWORTHY DAVIE, and described by E. GUY DAWBER. [Not published.]

"The volumes are attractive in sympathetic letterpress and printing, and wholly delightful illustration."—Times.

B. T. BATSFORD, 94 High Holborn, London.

LONDON LIBRARY,
ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING. President—The Right. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.
 Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. VISCOUNT GOSCHEN; FREDERICK HARRISON, Esq.; GEORGE MEREDITH, Esq.; ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Esq., F.R.S.
 Trustees—EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S.; Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT, G.C.S.I.

Committee—Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Bart., LL.D., Dr. J. H. Bridges, Horace T. Brown, Esq., F.R.S., Prof. Ingram Bywater, Prof. Lewis Campbell, LL.D., Austin Dobson, Esq., LL.D., Sydney Gedge, Esq., Sir A. Geikie, F.R.S., Sir R. Giffen, K.C.B., F.R.S., Edmund Gosse, Esq., LL.D., Mrs. J. R. Green, Rev. W. Hunt, M.A., Litt.D., Sir C. P. Ilbert, K.C.S.I., Sir C. M. Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B., Sidney Lee, Esq., Litt.D., W. S. Lilly, Esq., Sidney J. Low, Esq., Sir Frank T. Marzials, C.B., Sir F. Pollock, Bart., Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., H. R. Tedder, Esq., Rev. H. Wace, D.D., Sir Spencer Walpole, K.C.B., A. W. Ward, Esq., Litt.D., LL.D.

The Library contains about 220,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 3s. a year, with an entrance fee of £1 1s.; Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading Room open from Ten to Half-past Six. The NEW CATALOGUE (1904 pp. 4to. 1903) is now ready, price £2 2s.; 10 Members, 25s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS & NEW REMAINDERS.

OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

The APRIL LIST NOW READY, contains Popular Works on Sport, Travel, Biography, and Fiction.

Sent POST FREE on application to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

80-84 New Oxford Street, London.

"THE ACADEMY" is POSTED FREE (52 issues at 3d.) to every ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER in the United Kingdom prepaying 13s. FOREIGN SUBSCRIBERS by a PREPAYMENT of 17s. 6d. will secure it being sent Post Free to any address throughout the World for a uniform 1d. postage, though the postage payable varies from 1d. minimum to 2½d. per copy. Orders may be sent through any Bookseller or News-vendor, or direct to the Publisher, 5-7 Southampton Street, Strand, W.C.

The English Historical Review.

Edited by REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D.

No. 78. APRIL 1905. Roy. 8vo, price 5s.

1—Articles.

NOTES ON GAIUS GRACCHUS. By W. WARDE FOWLER.

BLAKE AND THE BATTLE OF SANTA CRUZ. By Professor FIRTH, LL.D.

THE NORTHERN QUESTION IN 1717. By J. F. CHANCE. Part II.

2—Notes and Documents.

THE BURTON ABBEY SURVEYS. By J. HORACE ROUND.

THE ST. ALBANS COUNCIL OF 1213. By H. W. C. DAVIS.

THE MANUSCRIPTS AND DATE OF MAR-SIGLIO OF PADUA'S "DEFENSOR PACIS." By JAMES SULLIVAN.

SIXTEENTH-CENTURY MAPS OF IRELAND. By R. DUNLOP.

AND OTHERS.

3—Reviews of Books. 4—Notices of Periodical Publications.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

The Edinburgh Review.

No. 412. APRIL 1905. 8vo, price 6s.

I. THE HISTORY OF TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

II. EARTHQUAKES AND THE NEW SEISMOLOGY.

III. THREE PHASES OF PASTORAL SENTIMENT.

IV. TIBET.

V. LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COLERIDGE.

VI. THE ARAB.

VII. SAINTE-BEUVE AND THE ROMANTICS.

VIII. THE WORK OF JAMES McNEILL WHISTLER.

IX. A LIBERAL FRENCH NOBLE OF THE REVOLUTION.

X. THE PLAYS OF MR. BERNARD SHAW.

XI. THE UNIONIST PARTY AND THE SESSION.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

A WAY OF HIS OWN.

By A. KNOTCUTTER (R. W. ESSINGTON).

3s. 6d.

"A distinctly amusing story."—Spectator.

"The story is original."—Literary World.

H. F. DRANE, Salisbury Square, Fleet Street.

The "Country Life" Library

PREPARING FOR PUBLICATION

To be Issued in Two Volumes, PRICE THREE GUINEAS Net the Two Volumes. A Sumptuous work, handsomely bound in cloth, containing about 300 plates

Being a Series of Illustrations from Photographs of the most Famous Examples of

THE GARDENS OF ITALY

BY

CHARLES LATHAM

Descriptive Text by E. MARCH PHILLIPS

Dedicated by Special Permission to his

MAJESTY THE KING OF ITALY

Messrs. CONSTABLE'S BOOKS

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS. ORDER IMMEDIATELY TO AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT ON THE DAY OF PUBLICATION.

FREE OPINIONS

BY

MARIE CORELLI.

On Sale Everywhere on Monday next, April 17.

Price Six Shillings

THE JAPANESE SPIRIT. By OKAKURA-YOSHISABURO. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

CATHERINE DE MEDICI AND THE FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of "Women and Men of the French Renaissance," "The Household of the Lafayettes," &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15s. net.

"She has displayed in the pages before us the most excellent qualities of temper, industry, and perception, and in her treatment of an enigmatic and elusive figure she has neither ignored the complications of her material nor shrunk from solving its perplexities."—Pall Mall Gazette.

JOHN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT OF DUNDEE, 1648-1689. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Not only well arranged and well written, but based upon an exhaustive study of original authorities."—Academy.

THE KING IN EXILE (CHARLES II.). By EVA SCOTT, Author of "Rupert Prince Palatine." Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"A most welcome contribution to historical literature upon a period in Charles's life of which the average student knows comparatively little."—Daily Graphic.

THE SUN AND THE SERPENT. A Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo, with 33 Full-Page Illustrations, 12s. 6d. net.

"Dr. Oldham speaks from a well-informed mind, and utters his views with such moderation and clearness that they commend themselves to serious consideration."—Scotsman.

PENTHESILEA. A Poem. By LAWRENCE BINYON, Author of "The Death of Adam," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MONARCH, THE BIG BEAR. By ERNEST THOMPSON SETON. With many Drawings by the Author in half-tone and line. 5s. net.

"A more charming and pathetic animal story was never written even by that sympathetic student of wild life, Thompson Seton."—Daily Express.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

JÖRN UHL. By GUSTAV FRENSEN. The most popular German novel of modern Times. [Just published.]

The author, who woke up to find himself famous and his small congregation of Lutheran peasants elbowed out of their tiny church every Sunday by literary pilgrims curious to see the Primitif who had so touched the sophisticated heart of modern Germany, is the son of a village carpenter, and was born within the sound of the North Sea, in the remote village of Barlt, in 1863. The novel has been translated by Mr. F. S. Delmer, of Berlin University.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA. By Mrs. COMYNS CARR, Author of "Cottage Folk," &c.

"Mrs. Comyns Carr has very cleverly worked out an original idea, contriving her picture in a perfect mosaic of picturesque detail. . . . The Baron strongly recommends it to those capable of enjoying a good novel when they get it."—Punch.

TALES OF RYE TOWN. By MAUD STEPNEY RAWSON, Author of "A Lady of the Regency," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best book of short stories we have read for a year or two—one of the best we have ever read."—Morning Post.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Kloof Bride," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Smartly written and witty, and full of character and grim satire."—Daily Mail.

CRITTENDEN. By JOHN FOX, Author of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

"'Crittenden' will be found worth reading, both as a story and as history. . . . It is written in an easy, vigorous style, and the interest never flags."—Academy.

IN SEARCH OF THE UNKNOWN. By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, Author of "The Maids of Paradise," "Cardigan," &c.

"All who care for the fantastic or whimsical will find this book exactly fitted to wile away an hour with unusual entertainment."—Morning Post.

Please write for Complete Catalogue and Announcement List and Prospectuses of all New Books.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., Limited, 16 James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. From the Death of Lord Palmerston in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Previously published.

Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his Wife. In Two Vols. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

VOL. V. READY NEXT TUESDAY.

DIARY AND LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY.

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June 1781. Vol. II., 1781-86. Vol. III., August 1786 to June 1788. Vol. IV., July 1788 to July 1791. Vol. V., July 1791 to April 1802. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

1905 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1905. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY.

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D., Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

Highways and Byways Series.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE LOGIC OF HUMAN CHARACTER.

By CHARLES J. WHITBY, B.A., M.D. Cantab. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

PRINCIPLES AND METHODS OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

By A. C. PIGOU, M.A., F.S.S., Fellow of the Royal Economic Society. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

FOND ADVENTURES. Tales of the Youth of the World. By MAURICE HEWLETT.

THE BELL IN THE FOG, and Other Stories. By GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

THE RED CRAVAT. By A. T. SHEPPARD.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

Oxford University Press.

HYPERION.

A Facsimile of Keats's Autograph MS. With a Transliteration of the MS. of "THE FALL OF HYPERION: a Dream." With Introductions and Notes by ERNEST de SÉLINCOURT. Limited Edition, printed on pure Linen Paper. Prices, £2 12s. 6d. in boards, and £3 13s. 6d. in leather.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS OF SHELLEY, including Materials never before printed in any Edition of the Poems. Edited, with Textual Notes and Bibliographical List of Editions, by THOMAS HUTCHINSON, M.A. With the Bodleian Portrait and two Collotype Facsimiles of Handwriting. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, uncut, paper label or gilt lettered, 7s. 6d. net; vellum back, cloth sides, gilt top, medallion on side, 10s. 6d. net.

SPECIMENS OF THE ELIZABETHAN DRAMA.

from Lyly to Shirley, A.D. 1580-1642. With Introductions and Notes by W. H. WILLIAMS, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

CONCORDANCE TO THE ITALIAN PROSE WORKS & CANZONIERE OF DANTE.

Prepared by Members of the Dante Society, Cambridge, Massachusetts, and Edited by E. S. SHELTON and A. C. WHITE. 8vo, cloth. Subscription price, £1 8s. net. On publication the price will be raised to £1 16s. net. [Immediately.]

DANTE'S DIVINA COMEDIA.

Translated into English Prose by H. F. TOZER, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

ARISTOTLE'S POLITICS.

Translated by BENJAMIN JOWETT. New Edition, with Introduction, Analysis and Index by H. W. C. DAVIS, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE DREAM OF THE ROOD.

An Old English Poem, attributed to Cynewulf. Edited by ALBERT S. COOK, Ph.D. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SELECT DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE HISTORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

The Constituent Assembly. Edited by L. G. WICKHAM LEGG, M.A. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. net.

CÁIN ADAMNÁIN.

An Old-Irish Treatise on the Law of Adamnan. Edited and translated by KUNO MEYER, Ph.D. ("Anecdota Oxoniensia," Mediaeval and Modern Series. Part XII.) Crown 4to, paper covers, 5s.

Also Published by Henry Frowde.

CHAUCER.

Facsimile Reproduction of the First Folio, 1532. Edited, with Introduction, by the Rev. Professor SKEAT, Litt.D.

The edition is limited to 1000 copies, price £5 5s. net, bound in antique boards, or £6 6s. net, in rough calf.

WORCESTERSHIRE PLACE-NAMES.

By W. H. DUIGNAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, 6s. net.

HENRY FROWDE,

Oxford University Press Warehouse,
Amen Corner, London.

MR. MURRAY'S New Books.

A Mother of Czars

A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, Wife of Paul I. and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. By Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT, Author of "The French Noblesse of the XVIIIth Century." Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

Five Years in a Persian Town

By the Rev. NAPIER MALCOLM. With Illustrations by Mirza Abri'l Qasimi Yazdi, Photographs, and a Map. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

From the Cape to the Zambesi

By G. T. HUTCHINSON. With an Introduction by Colonel FRANK RHODES, C.B., D.S.O. With many Illustrations from Photographs taken by Colonel Rhodes and the Author. Square demy 8vo, 9s. net.

The Royal Academy and its Members

A History from 1768-1830. By the late J. E. HODGSON, R.A., and F. A. EATON, M.A., Secretary of the Royal Academy. With Portraits. Large demy 8vo, 21s. net.

Makers of Modern History

Napoleon III. Cavour. Bismarck. By the Hon. EDWARD CADOGAN. Demy 8vo, 8s. net.

THREE NEW 6s. NOVELS

The Hill. By HORACE A. VACHELL, Author of "Brothers," "Pinch of Prosperity," &c. With 8 full-page Illustrations by PERCY WADHAM. [Ready next Wednesday.]

In the Arena. By BOOTH TARKINGTON, Author of "Monsieur Beaucaire," &c.

A Quixotic Woman. By ISOBEL FITZROY.

A CHEAP EDITION, 1s. NET.

Monsieur Beaucaire. By BOOTH TARKINGTON, Author of "In the Arena."

Recent Excavations in the Roman Forum,
1898-1905. By (Mrs.) E. BURTON-BROWN. New and Cheaper Edition. Illustrations and Plans. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. net.

"No one can read this 'handbook' without realising that here, in this work, in this newly revealed knowledge, lies our best guide to the real Rome and her living people of the period. It is a necessary volume for students."—Bookman.

The Sword of Islam. By ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E., H.M.'s Indian (Home) Service. With Illustrations. Sq. demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready next week.]

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	409	Art Sales	424
Literature :		The Drama :
Mr. Binyon's New Poem	422	"Alice Sit-by-the-fire" at the
A Rolling Stone	423	Duke of York's Theatre	424
A Modern Utopia	414	"Othello" at the Shaftesbury
The French Language	425	Theatre	425
Two Psychologists	426	"The Trojan Women" at the
By the River's Brim	426	Court Theatre	425
Ricordi	427	Science :
The Entente Cordiale	427	The Varieties of Optimism	426
The Sense of Humour	428	Music :
A Literary Causerie :		"L'Après-Midi d'un Faune,"
Thomas Fuller	429	by Claude Debussy	427
Fiction	429	Correspondence	428
The Bookshelf	421	Books Received	429
Fine Art :		Queries and Answers	431
Temperament in Painting	422
Etchings Old and New	423

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

LAST Saturday's banquet showed how large is the host of Mr. Frederick Greenwood's friends—how many the men who regard him as their discoverer or "inventor." Perhaps one of the secrets of his popularity has been his readiness to sit down and write a letter with his own hand even to strangers who offered him unacceptable communications. Many of the rejected who have since "arrived" treasure his autograph as their first piece of evidence that editors were actually looking out for good things, and did actually read the manuscripts that came to them with an unfamiliar image and superscription. The writer of this note is one who does so. Long ago Mr. Greenwood returned to him a set of verses which his own maturer judgment recognises as worthless; but he was, in his own handwriting, "sorry," and that removed the sting.

Perhaps "the editor as letter-writer" would be a good subject for a "causerie." Not only individuals but newspapers have their distinctive styles. There is the Times style, for instance, belonging to no individual, but handed on from one editorial secretary to another—a grand style, suggesting the exchange of despatches between rival potentates, and causing the recipient to wonder that his correspondent does not go one step further, and address him as "Dear Cousin." The Standard, for a long time, adopted the same style—but in "oratio obliqua." At the Saint James' Gazette office, Mr. Greenwood established a style which was imitated and developed by two of his subordinates—Mr. Sidney Low, and the late H. D. Traill.

In the case of H. D. Traill, however, one difficulty was always arising. He refused to have his letters copied; and none of his colleagues ever knew exactly what he had written to anybody. Occasionally, therefore, a contribution which he had solicited with flattering uncton got returned to the puzzled contributor with a printed form, and another four-page letter, full of compliments, had to be written to clear the matter up. Even these misunderstandings, however, were preferable to the practice of the editor of whom Besant somewhere relates that his method of signifying his rejection of a proffered manuscript was to scrawl across the front page the cabalistic letters "u.b.d."

To return, however, to Mr. Greenwood: There never was an editor, except W. E. Henley, who gave so much pains as he did to the altering, cutting, and polishing of other people's work. As a rule he re-wrote their prose; and occasionally, as one of his contributors mentioned at the dinner, he re-wrote their poetry. It speaks volumes for the respect entertained for an editor's judgment when contributors of ability put up with that sort of thing. In the case of Mr. Greenwood, they not only put up with it, but regarded his correction of their "copy" as a part of education. We have heard one of the most eminent journalists of the present day relate that when, in the days of his youth, he was writing for Mr. Greenwood, he used to walk about the streets for hours composing sentences with the true epigrammatic ring. For no other editor, he added, did he ever think it worth while to take that trouble.

In answer to a question asked in the House of Commons, Mr. Akers Douglas declined not only to introduce a Copyright Bill for the prevention of musical piracy, but also to secure facilities for any private Bill which might be introduced, dealing with the matter. Such a Bill, he said, "must take its chance with other Bills, very likely of much greater importance." To some extent our comments on this response must be restricted by the fact that the ACADEMY is not a political paper; but strong observations of a non-political character may fairly be made. The chief of them is to the effect that it is deplorable that any decision affecting artistic property should rest with any one so indifferent to artistic interests as the Home Secretary shows himself to be.

The present condition of the law relating to Musical Copyright is nothing less than iniquitous. Any one may pirate anything, and sell it openly in the streets—taking no other risk than that of the confiscation of the copies found in his possession, if the owner of the copyright takes proceedings against him. If shoplifters were allowed to practise their nefarious industry, provided that they restored any goods which they were caught carrying away, the parallel would be almost exact; Mr. Akers Douglas would doubtless be the first to hurry through an Act of Parliament altering such a condition of affairs. Because the property that is being daily stolen is only artistic property, he considers that other Bills are "very likely of much greater importance" than this one, drafted in the interest of common honesty. One wonders what sort of a mind a man can have who talks like that.

The new Headmaster of Eton is not unknown to the literary world. Some lectures that he delivered at Reading on religious subjects have been published, as well as some notes on the gospel of St. Mark and a preface to an English grammar. But his more important works may be divided into two classes, those in which he deals with boys in their relation to the family and those on purely scholastic subjects. To the first belong "Mothers and Sons" in which such varied problems as school religion, the "Tuck Shop" or the size of collars are treated in an easy, simple style. In "Training of the young in the laws of sex," the former Headmaster of Haileybury has made a courageous attempt to grapple with a knotty problem of no small importance.

With regard to subjects that are purely scholastic mention should be made of "Principles and Practice" which appeared in "Thirteen Essays on Education." In this he deals with the relations that exist between schoolmasters, the public, and educational theorists. In another essay on "Compulsory Greek" he points out that the substitution of history, geography and English for Greek is perhaps all that the advocates of culture can hope to obtain, should there be an alliance between the faddists, who want, say, Icelandic taught, and the worldlings, who are never tired of insisting that boys must "get on." "Are we to go on with Latin Verses?" is "an attempt to estimate the value of Latin versification by means of an analysis of its educational effects."

Glancing over publishers' advertisements the casual reader may have sometimes wondered what, if any, is the difference between an "impression" and an "edition." General uncertainty clearly exists on this matter, as may be inferred from a recommendation made at the last general meeting of the Publishers' Association. It was then agreed that an "impression" should signify "a number of copies printed at any one time. When a book is reprinted without change it should be called a new 'impression.' On the other hand an 'edition' should mean an impression in which the matter has undergone some change, or for which the type has been reset." A "re-issue," again, is defined as "a republication at a different price, or in a different form, of part of an impression which has already been placed on the market." Publishers are advised by the Association to adhere to these definitions in their catalogues; and it would certainly conduce to greater clearness if those who talk and write about books would follow suit.

"Arcady in Troy" is the title of a little, thin, precious-looking volume that a day or two since blushed shyly in upon us from the far side of the Atlantic. Intoxicated with the gentle comeliness of its exterior, and the fragrance of its superscription, we brought trembling fingers to the holding of it. Here, we said to ourselves, is some delicate, rare thing, some exotic from a land, where, amid the rush and roar of commerce, the fields of literature find no lack of loving hands to till them—a voice from some innermost corner of the brain of a people which would give its soul could Shakespeare's cottage be bought and conveyed bodily to its midst. So we mused, and musing, vivisected its pages with a paper-knife. And lo! the bitterest disappointment in a life of disappointment—for such, in truth, is the critic's life. We hoped for some sweet, sad story of young loves. We looked to be able to cry with Faustus:

"Was this the face that launched a thousand ships,
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?"

And we got the veriest piece of vain-glorious bookmaking! This Troy is not the Troy of Homer and of our dreams. It is that Troy which is situate in the state of the Union that appears usually in type as "N.Y." Arcady is the back-garden of a residence in Second Street. The matter is three newspaper articles—two of them not even passably well written—reprinted verbatim from the Troy Times, the Troy Record, and the Budget, and dealing in the florescent verbiage of the junior reporting room with the cultivation of wild flowers in a city garden.

Let it not be supposed that we are by way of sneering at the cultivation of wild flowers in a city garden, nor that we regard that as too mean a subject for a book. Nothing could be farther from our thoughts. The cultivation of wild flowers deserves every manner of encouragement—every manner, that is, which does not clash with the art of making books. And "Arcady in Troy" does clash with it. It is issued under the supervision, ostensibly, of the owner of the garden, who signs with his initials a prefatory "Note." That, excepting an excellent quotation at the end, from Sydney Smith, is the extent of his editing. The rest, as we have said, is word for word reprinting. The book begins, for instance, thus: "The June number of 'Country Life in America,' which is the leading periodical of its kind in this country, contains an article by the Hon. George B. Warren of this city on cultivating wild flowers in a city garden." Follow certain bombastic tributes to the "refined taste" of Mr. Warren (the owner of the garden), and several instances of the worst sort of interviewing in existence—the kind in which the interviewer puts his own purely journalistic and wholly unnatural expressions into the mouth of the interviewed. Now, in a newspaper that sort of thing is bad enough, but in a book—a thing of binding and numbered pages—it is technically wrong; and it is so technically wrong that even the person who is least concerned with the stage-craft of literature can hardly come upon it without a sense of irritation. Let us by all means have a book about the cultivation of wild flowers, a book which shall tell the dweller in towns (as this book does not) how to make friends with nature, but may heaven save us from the paltry vanities of one who is drunk with the joy of seeing himself in print.

A correspondent writes: The dramatic critics have been almost unanimous in their praise of Mr. Irving's Hamlet for its naturalness, its absence of pose and affectation, and indeed this is one of its most welcome and effective qualities. It is the more to be regretted that when so many of the bad old conventions of Shakespearean acting have been cast aside, one particularly irritating should be retained. I mean the mispronunciation of the word "my." The tragic actor of the old School, of course, never condescended to call it anything but "mē," "Mē heart!" "Mē sword!" "Mē prophetic soul, mē Uncle!" and the rest of it. But with a Hamlet of the new School, a Hamlet who holds the mirror up to nature, who has thrown over the old tricks and approaches the part simply and sincerely, surely this trick should have gone with the rest? "Mē" for "My" is now a vulgarism. It has no place in the cultivated speech of to-day and it is high time it disappeared from the actor's stock-in-trade.

We have received news of the formation of a society for the reproduction of the drawings of the Masters of the Renaissance. The circular of "The Vasari Society," as it is to be called, ascribes the neglect of the study of drawings in England very largely to the absence of any proper organisation for their reproduction in a form accessible to persons of moderate means. It is the object of the Vasari Society to remove this disability. For a subscription of £1 1s. (5 dollars, 21 marks, 26 francs) the Society proposes to furnish as many drawings as its funds—in other words, the number of its subscribers—will allow it to publish. In return for the first year's subscription the committee calculate that they will be able to issue at least twenty reproductions in collotype, a means by which a very large number of drawings can be reproduced without the loss of any important quality.

The field to be covered is described as the Renaissance, interpreted in a wide sense, and, of course, not confined to Italy. It is intended to make a beginning with drawings preserved in British collections, since there is in this country an enormous wealth of drawings, a comparatively small number of which have been reproduced in a form accessible to students. The reproductions will be executed by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, and accompanied in each case by a brief critical note, discussing the attribution of the drawing and mentioning the more important literature relating to it. They will be suitable either for binding or for keeping in portfolios. The paper is to be 18 inches by 15 inches, and the size of the originals will be adhered to in all cases, except in that of drawings exceeding 12 inches by 10 inches.

The first year's issue is to include drawings in the British Museum by the following masters:—Pisanello, Jacopo Bellini, Piero di Cosimo, Leonardo da Vinci, Titian, Mantegna, Pontormo, Veronese, Timoteo Viti, Guardì, Lucas van Leyden, Hans Holbein I. and II., Ambrosius Holbein, and Rubens. The Chairman of the Society is Mr. Sidney Colvin and the Honorary Secretary, to whom requests for information, suggestions as to the selection of drawings, and subscriptions should be sent, is Mr. G. F. Hill, 10 Kensington Mansions, Earl's Court, S.W.

The poem "Ricordi," by Mr. Laurence Binyon, which appears in our columns to-day, coincident with a review of his new book "Penthesilea," is taken from a number of lyrics which are to appear in volume form on or about May 1. The book is to be called "Dream-come-true," and is to be published by Mr. Lucien Pissarro at his Eragry Press. Since the lamented close of the Kelmscott Press and the Vale Press of Messrs. Hacon and Ricketts, Mr. Pissarro's press occupies a unique position, and his little volumes are eagerly snapped up by collectors.

One of the highest honours ever bestowed by the Italian Government upon a foreigner has just been granted to Professor Charles Eliot Norton by King Victor Emmanuel. Professor Norton, who is perhaps best known in England as the friend and biographer of Ruskin, has been made a Grand Officer of the Crown of Italy in recognition of his distinguished services in translating Dante's works into the English language, and for his studies in Italian art and history. Two other Harvard graduates, the late Mr. William Wetmore Story and Mr. William R. Thayer, were some years ago made Knights of the Order of which Professor Norton has just become a Grand Officer.

A notable event for Scotland was the opening of the new sculpture gallery at Aberdeen on Saturday, primarily due to the efforts of Mr. James Murray of Glenburnie Park, Aberdeen. Every care has been taken to make this gallery worthy of the ideals of its promoters, and the collection of casts illustrative of the history of sculpture cannot probably be equalled in England outside London, Oxford, and Cambridge. Mr. Murray, whose enthusiasm cannot be too highly praised, had the advantage of the services of Mr. Robert F. Martin of South Kensington, and, we may add, the good sense to give Mr. Martin a free hand, subject to the occasional advice and opinion of Sir George Reid, R.S.A. The exhibition is, in fact, a practical argument for the "one man" system of administration—when the one man is a good man.

A propos of our recent note on the identity of the characters in Madame Bovary, a writer in the Globe suggests that further information on this branch of the subject would be interesting. A letter giving very full particulars, written by M. Robert Duquesne, has been published in the Mercure de France. M. Duquesne interviewed the wife of the original of the conductor of the diligence in the novel:

"The woman guessed what we wanted, and greeted us with:
 "'Ah!' (clasping her old withered hands). 'You've come to talk about this Flaubert. Please don't speak of him to my husband. That always makes him angry.'
 "'So we had no need to explain, and she politely gave us the information which we sought.
 "'Yes, he used to fetch Madame Bovary's novels from Rouen for her. That was what turned the poor woman's head.'
 "'Emma, in fact, has left very definite recollections in the country, where all the residents of the period devoured the novel, reading between the lines, putting the dots on the i's and the names to the portraits, and supplementing them from their independent knowledge.
 "'An old neighbour of Madame Bovary tells me the following story, which occurred when she was quite young: 'Emma, one week-day, without rhyme or reason, dressed up her little girl in her Sunday best—in sailor costume, as was the fashion of the time. She also had on her own best dress, and the two went out together.
 "'You are going to a party, no doubt,' asked the neighbour, much impressed, 'as you are not in your week-day clothes?'
 "'Emma drew herself up.
 "'Madame,' she said, 'you should really know that I am not an ordinary every-day woman.'
 "'The same neighbour told me that Madame Bovary was extraordinarily beautiful.
 "'Quite like a wax doll,' she put it."

The editor of the Mercure de France adds the information that the little girl of the novel, Berthe Bovary, who married a pharmaceutical chemist at Rouen, has just died.

These stories are not only the evidence of a revival of interest in Flaubert. He has also been made the subject of a thesis for a degree in medicine by Dr. Felix Dumesnil, who writes of the novelist, not from the literary but from the pathological point of view. In particular he combats the general belief that Flaubert was an epileptic. This story, he says, was spread by Maxime Ducamp, out of malice, when the two had quarrelled. The truth he holds to have been that Flaubert was a full-blooded person who took no exercise, and who died of apoplexy at the age of fifty-eight, as a full-blooded person who took no exercise might be expected to do. He adds—what is interesting—that Flaubert, that enemy of the bourgeois, had himself many bourgeois traits: "Like his father, and probably like his father's fathers for many generations, he spent thirty years in one room, engaged in hard and most methodical work." There certainly the bourgeois heredity told.

Both the Mercure de France and the Revue des Deux Mondes have been reviving the love-story of Lamartine. One thinks of him usually as the man who crushed the Red party at the Revolution of 1848, with an epigram: "Le tricolore a fait le tour du monde; votre drapeau rouge n'a fait que le tour du Champs de Mars." But, at an earlier date, he was known as "the lover of Elvire," and was once even so designated at a session of the Academy of Letters. Elvire was, it seems, a Madame Charles, the wife of a physician, whose acquaintance Lamartine made at Aix-les-Bains, where they were both sojourning for their health, in another physician's house. His room was next to hers. They "cured" together on the balcony, and rowed together on the lake. The finest lines in "Les méditations" derive their inspiration from those meetings.

It was a love-story, however, which came to a sad end. Elvire was consumptive, and grew worse. She was very religious, and, with death in sight, the feeling grew that it was very wicked of her (in spite of the fact that her husband was a savant old enough to be her father) to let her heart go out to the young poet. She refused to see him, and in December 1817 he heard of her death. "For three days and three nights," we read, "he wandered, like a madman, in the woods of the neighbourhood." Then he returned to Milly, and there wrote the immortal stanzas on the crucifix which his mistress had been clasping to her bosom when she died. Her real name was Julie, and when Lamartine married, he called his daughter after her. The Revue des Deux Mondes prints her letters; and, in the Mercure de France, M. Léon Séché relates all that is discoverable about her family history.

The students of Paris have been amusing themselves by persistently hissing one of their professors at the Sorbonne. It is interesting to recall that the same annoyance has previously troubled two professors of the highest literary eminence. One of them was Sainte-Beuve, whose imperialistic sympathies made him "persona ingratisissima" with Republican youth. His remarks on Virgil were drowned by the uproar, and he had to resign his chair. Nor was that all. Though bold as a critic, Sainte-Beuve was a timorous creature in private life; and for weeks after the demonstration he never walked abroad in the streets of Paris without carrying a dagger hidden in his sleeve for his protection against an assault which he believed to be contemplated upon his person.

The other hissed professor was no less a person than M. Brunetière. His offence was that he had severely criticised the works of Zola. The students at that date preferred Zola's novels to M. Brunetière's essays, and they therefore laid themselves out to make things unpleasant for the essayist. He held his ground, however, with the support of the Minister of Education and the Prefect of Police. Student opinion gradually veered round under the influence of the Dreyfus case, and it was the novelist's turn to be "conspewed."

Next week being Holy Week, the ACADEMY will be published on Thursday, April 20, instead of Friday, April 21.

LITERATURE

MR. BINYON'S NEW POEM

Penthesilea. A Poem by LAURENCE BINYON. (Constable, 3s. 6d. net.)

MR. LAURENCE BINYON is one of the most cultivated and the least flamboyant of our younger poets. His work is marked by a finish, a reticence, and a thoughtfulness that are rare distinctions at the present moment. It certainly does not contain many jewels five words long, nor can we imagine that at any time it will become, as Gray's Elegy has become, a storehouse of stock quotations. Exacting criticism would, perhaps, say that Mr. Binyon lacks just that vital touch of fire and enthusiasm that turns out the glowing and immortal phrase. His aim would rather seem to be at a dead level of excellence, where every word has been carefully chosen, every line moulded and pruned with that capacity for taking pains that is said to be in itself genius. He has in the present volume chosen a subject that is picturesque, and is eminently suitable to his methods. The fable of the poem is given briefly at the beginning, and may be even more concisely stated here. Penthesilea, an Amazonian queen, having by misfortune killed her own sister, resolves to lead her troops to Troy, there to throw away her life in battle with the victorious Achilles. She is received by the sorrowful Priam, who begins by doubting her success, but is at length almost persuaded by her enthusiasm. Andromache at first supposes her a goddess, but on finding out that she is a woman, leaps to the conclusion that love of Achilles has brought her. Explanations are offered and taken and the two women become fast friends. Penthesilea finds Achilles eventually in the ranks of the Greeks and is killed by him. Such, leaving out the details, is the story that Mr. Binyon unfolds in this poem. In the making of it he suffers somewhat from the certainty that only one end is possible for his heroine, and in this way he loses any charm of the unexpected that otherwise he might have gained. But the beauty of his workmanship consists mostly in the pictorial quality of the writing. This note is struck in the very first lines of the poem, where the city of Priam and Hector is thus described:

"Dark in the noonday, dark as solemn pines,
A circle of dark towers above the plain,
Troy sat bereaved."

Hector is dead, and the dirges of women sound through the streets of Troy. Sentinels stand idly on the towers, in despair at the loss of their hero: altogether one is made to feel the hopelessness of Troy, and, while the poet is as it were gravitating in this sentiment, the Amazons arrive.

"Now thronging heads appeared
Beneath the temple steps; and they beheld
Framed in the wide porch men and women pass,
And over them, proceeding proud and fair,
Like goddesses indeed, a wondrous troop
That glorified the sunlight as they rode
With easy hips bestriding their tall steeds,
Whose necks shone as they turned this way and that,
Bold riders on bold horses; light mail-coats
They wore upon loose tunics, over which Where to the throat the stormy bosom swelled
A virgin shoulder gleamed."

Among them is Penthesilea, "queenlier than the rest, with steadfast eyes superb." She seeks out Priam, who at first is almost incredulous of her mission.

"What hast thou said? Abuse not these old ears.
Thou know'st that I have suffered—who art thou?
A woman! Art a woman, and would lift
Thy hand against Achilles? Never hand
Of man prevailed against him yet, and thou
A woman made to bear and suckle babes,—
'A woman,' she broke in, 'but not as those Who spin at home and blench to see a sword.
Penthesilea am I called, and am

An Amazon, and Amazons I rule.
They call me queen; but I like them was reared
To suffer and to dare; my body bathed
In cold Thermodon can outrace his speed;
And I have slain the lion in his lair,
Yea, and have fought with men and have prevailed."

It is no wonder that Andromache has taken this splendid woman for a goddess, and she seeks her when they all retire for the night. The Amazon is thus pictured:

"Penthesilea sat beside the bed
Whereon her coat of mail, now laid aside,
Shone keenly crumpled into glittering folds
Next the smooth texture of a coverlet
Embroidered in dim Indian town with shapes
Of golden lions thronged by suns and stars;
A Tyrian rug was soft to her bare feet
When kneeling by her side Harmothoe
Had loosed their sandal-thongs, and bathed them both
In warm clear water from a brazen bowl."

She who had been Hector's wife passionately addresses the supposed goddess:

"O Goddess, help! Ah, surely thou art come
From heaven to avenge me, for the gods in heaven
Loved Hector well; thou hast a woman's shape
But mov'st not like a woman, no, nor look'st.
O certify my heart, my wounded heart,
Fill me, for I am empty; turn again
The water of life into this stony bed
Where my days used to run. I am alone.
Reveal thyself, if to none else, to me."

The interview between the two women is very spirited, though it would be unfair to make any comparison between the Andromache of this poem and the Andromache of the Iliad, the superb and immortal picture of womanhood that Homer drew with a few touches of his pencil. Perhaps the best passage here is that in which Penthesilea repels with scorn the allegation that some romantic passion has brought her into Troy.

"Love, love! Think you I have been wont to bathe
My body in snow-brooks to temper it
True as a sword-blade, slept on forest leaves,
Raced the wild colts to break them, chased the deer,
The lion even, seen the red blood spirt
Of men into whose murderous eyes I looked
And did not quail, think you that such as I
Have hung my life's joy on another's smile,
Pining with fancies such as in close walls
You women fill slow days with feeding on,
Who lie upon soft couches and dream dreams?"

Needless to say Andromache believes her, and in new-born confidence Penthesilea relates the sad story which accounts for all she has done. Naturally enough the Greeks receive the intelligence that women are going to fight them with mockery, which Mr. Binyon renders fairly well, though not with inextinguishable laughter.

"Greek challenged Greek to hurling of the quoit,
To wrestle and race; not a sole trumpet rang,
For Troy since Hector's slaying kept her gates
Fast-barred, nor sent her files forth to the war.
So now the battle-weary Greeks prepared
Their meal beside the trenches, eased at heart,
When single scouts came running from the plain:
'Arm, arm!' they cried, 'for Troy will fight to-day,
The Amazons are come to succour them.'
Then sportful laughter leapt from mouth to mouth
Among the gay-eyed youth, mocking to hear,
And one to another shot a mirthful word.
'The hawk is dead, the twittering swallows come
To harry us! We will go garlanded
To battle and will hale these women home.'"

The battle itself fluctuates, and the Amazons appear to be getting the better of the Greeks, which of course was a literary necessity if the valour of Achilles were to be thrown into relief. He does appear at last, however, and at once changes the fortunes of the battle, which in it has many incidents that at least recall the Homeric style. As for example the death of Antandra—

"Black-haired Antandra there, forced with the rout,
Strove ever like a raging lioness
To turn on her pursuers; on the bank
She stayed her horse, and some Thessalian youth,

Stung by her beauty, caught her by the belt
And dragged her from the saddle; she, so spent,
Let fall the axe from her dead-weary arms,
But with sobbed breath caught him so desperately
That both together in a blind embrace
Fell plunging in the shallows, rolled among Marsh-marigolds; she thrust upon his face
Under the water, laughed and strove to rise,
When even then a javelin bit her breast
And clove her through; so died Antandra."

But fate is not to be evaded; Penthesilea and Achilles meet at last. And it says something for Mr. Binyon's skill that the Greek hero kills the woman without exciting more than a moderate amount of dislike on the reader's part. Nothing could have made the action fine or noble, and even the falling in love with the woman, at the end, scarcely reconciles us to it. On the other hand the battle of sex is cunningly intermingled with the clash of arms, and the poem carries the reader on to the end. There is something, however, not quite satisfactory in the climax, and it might be quite worth the consideration of Mr. Binyon whether it were not possible to obtain his catastrophe by means less open and obvious.

A ROLLING STONE

Tracks of a Rolling Stone. By the Hon. HENRY J. COKE.
(Smith, Elder, 10s. 6d. net.)

It is no small thing to the credit of a book of reminiscences that one should be able to read it without a sense either of tantalisation or of satiety. Diarists and writers of autobiography seldom strike, as Mr. Coke has done here, the pleasant mean between too much and too little. He has so selected and condensed the incidents and memories of a remarkably busy life that very few indeed of his pages are uninteresting. He has come into intimate contact with a great number of men and women whose names count for something in the world's estimation, and of that number there are not many of whom he is unable to give a picture which biographers can ill afford to neglect. Too many writers of memoirs hurry you past the scenery of their lives as the train from Spezia to Genoa hurries you past those glimpses, through windows in the rocky tunnel, of the Mediterranean. Your feeling is one of longing to get out and see more.

Mr. Coke is not of this category. Many of the personal sketches he gives are necessarily small, but they are almost invariably touched in with a very nice sense of the essential detail. Most of them have, moreover, the charm of individuality—that presentment of the subject in relation to the writer which should distinguish the eye-witness from the delver among historical papers. He presents to us Captain Marryat, in the midst of his family circle, spinning with an imperturbable sedateness impossible yarns which grow more and more preposterous as he notes his listener's credulity. He tells how he called upon Leighton in Rome, and found him on his knees, diffident and almost desponding, rolling and buttering, preparatory to sending it to the Academy, his Cimabue procession—the picture which was accepted, and bought by Prince Albert before the Exhibition opened. He shows us Garibaldi, dressed in a red flannel shirt, among the chosen ones of society, and Bulwer-Lytton sauntering apart, envying the Italian hero the obsequious reverence paid to his miner's costume. He paints for us in a very few words a portrait of Sir Richard Burton, which convinces one of the inevitability of the most incredible adventures that befell him. He shows us Tennyson—not only Tennyson the poet, but Tennyson the smoker—whose matutinal indulgence in tobacco inspired Sir William Harcourt's remark on "the earliest pipe of half-awakened bards." Mr. Coke was with George Cayley in the latter's rooms in Parliament Street.

"One night after dinner quite late, we were building castles amidst tobacco clouds, when, following a 'May I come in?' Tennyson made his appearance. This was the first time I had ever met him. We gave him the only armchair in the room; and pulling out his duodeen and placing a foot on each side of the hob of the old-fashioned little grate, he made himself comfortable before he said another word. He then began to talk of pipes and tobacco. And never, I should say, did this important topic afford so much ingenious conversation before. We discussed the relative merits of all the tobaccos in the world—of moist tobacco and dry tobacco, of old tobacco and new tobacco, of clay pipes and wooden pipes and meerschaum pipes. What was the best way to colour them, the advantages of colouring them, the beauty of the 'culotte,' the coolness it gave to the smoke, &c. We listened to the venerable sage—he was then forty-three and we only five or six and twenty—as we should have listened to a Homer or an Aristotle, and he thoroughly enjoyed our appreciation of his jokes."

But one could cite and quote indefinitely. Mr. Coke's experience of men and things ranges from the Emperor of the French, with whom he spent a week at Compiègne, to Heenan and Tom Sayers, whose last fight he witnessed; from Prince Esterhazy, whose diamonds attracted attention at Queen Victoria's coronation, to the conjurer who invented the "Mysterious Lady" illusion at the Egyptian Hall; from a children's ball at St. James's Palace, where he received a sugar-plum from King William IV. and asked questions about Queen Adelaide in very audible stage-whispers, to the public garrotting of a murderer in Havana, or a lynching in Marysville, on the Sacramento River.

On the day the peace was signed after the Franco-German War he called with Sir Anthony Rothschild on his brother Lionel, the head of the firm:

"He took no notice of his brother, but received me as Napoleon received the emperors and kings at Erfurt—in other words, as he would have received his slippers from his valet, or as he did receive the telegrams which were handed to him at the rate of about one a minute.

"The King of Kings was in difficulties with a little slip of black sticking-plaster. The thought of Gumpelino's Hyacinthos, alias Hirsch, flashed upon me. Behold! the mighty Baron Nathan come to life again; but instead of Hyacinthos paring his mightiness's Hühneraugen, he himself, in paring his own nails, had contrived to cut his finger.

"Come to buy Spanish?' he asked, with eyes intent upon the sticking-plaster.

"Oh no," said I, 'I've no money to gamble with.'

"Hasn't Lord Leicester bought Spanish?'—never looking off the sticking-plaster, nor taking the smallest notice of the telegrams.

"Not that I know of. Are they good things?"

"I don't know; some people think so."

"Here a message was handed in, and something was whispered in his ear.

"Very well, put it down."

"From Paris?" said Sir Anthony, guessing perhaps at its contents.

"But not until the plaster was comfortably adjusted did Plutus read the message. He smiled and pushed it over to me. It was the terms of peace, and the German bill of costs.

"'200,000,000!' I exclaimed. 'That's a heavy reckoning. Will France ever be able to pay it?'

"Pay it? Yes. If it had been twice as much!' And Plutus returned to his sticking-plaster. That was of real importance."

Not the least interesting thing in the book is a side-light on Thackeray's methods. At the end of 1849 Mr. Coke went to the West Indies in company with Lord Durham and one Andrew Arcedeckne, a mutual friend and member of the old Garrick, then but a small club in Covent Garden. Arcedeckne, pronounced Archdeacon, and abbreviated to Archy, "was about five feet three inches, round as a cask, with a small singularly round face and head, closely cropped hair, and large soft eyes—in a word, so like a seal, that he was as often called Phoca as Archy." And Phoca is no other than Mr. Harry Foker, of "Pendennis."

"Would you like to hear him talk? Here is a specimen in his best manner. Surely it must have been taken down by a shorthand writer, or a phonograph:

"Mr. Harry Foker, loquitur: 'He inquired for Rincer and the cold in his nose, told Mrs. Rincer a riddle, asked Miss Rincer when she would be prepared to marry him, and paid his compliments to Miss Brett, another young lady in the bar, all in a minute of time, and with a liveliness and facetiousness which set all these young ladies in a giggle. 'Have a drop, Pen: it's recommended by the faculty, &c. Give the young one a glass, R., and score it up to yours truly.'"

"I fancy the great man who recorded these words was more afraid of Mr. Harry Phoca than of any other man in the Garrick Club—possibly for the reason that honest Harry was not the least bit afraid of him. The shy, the proud, the sensitive satirist would steal silently into the room, avoiding notice as though he wished himself invisible. Phoca would be warming his back at the fire, and calling for a glass of 'Foker's own.' Seeing the giant enter, he would advance a step or two, with a couple of extended fingers, and exclaim, quite affably, 'Ha! Mr. Thackry! litary cove! Glad to see you, sir. How's Major Dobbings?' and likely enough would turn to the waiter, and bid him, 'Give this gent a glass of the same, and score it up to yours truly!' We have his biographer's word for it that he would have winked at the Duke of Wellington, with just as little scruple.

"Yes, Andrew Arcedeckne was the original of Harry Foker; and from the cut of his clothes to his family connection, and to the comicality, the simplicity, the sweetness of temper (though hardly doing justice to the loveliness of the little man), the famous caricature fits him to a T."

It is scarcely the part of a critic to sit in judgment on the manner of such books as this. The matter is everything. They stand or fall purely on the question of interest, and it is enough to say that by that test this book stands firm. But Mr. Coke published his first book of reminiscences some fifty years ago, and it is entertaining to note the development of his ideas. The style which irritated the early Victorian reviewers when he issued a little account of his doings in Vienna in 1848—irritated them because they looked for a political treatise, and got instead a delightful personal record—has become matured without losing any of its freshness and charm. Mr. Coke tells a somewhat blunt narrative with vigour and humour. His anecdotes are related with no mincing squeamishness. His moralisings and criticisms, where they occur, are direct and outspoken. They are a combination of blows straight from the shoulder, and blows straight from the head—the result, one may guess, of a naval training tempered by the leisure of a cultured man. That is the kind of material that makes a good book.

A MODERN UTOPIA

A Modern Utopia. By H. G. WELLS. (Chapman and Hall, 6s.)

MR. WELLS has the gift of making his philosophical, or rather sociological, speculations of absorbing interest to the general reader. His literary imagination, which was born in him, works on the positive, scientific education to which his mind was subjected at its most receptive period, and the rare combination gives to his writings a peculiar distinction. Perhaps it is this which causes him to be better appreciated on the Continent, and especially in France, where he has had the honour of appearing in the Revue des Deux Mondes, than by his own countrymen. The English public, it is to be feared, prefer Jules Verne, whose method of utilising scientific facts and scientific possibilities it would be interesting to compare at length with Mr. Wells' method. But that would be too long an inquiry; it must be enough here to point out that M. Verne did not really try to go down into the heart of things, his aim being merely the immediate excitement and amusement of the reader. Mr. Wells' reverence for science is beyond all comparison greater. In his romances, quite as much as in what he calls his sociological essays—"Anticipations," "Mankind in the Making," and this present work—the reader is made to feel the vital importance of science to every conceivable human relation. M. Verne was extraordinarily skilful in merging scientific fact into scientific fiction, so that the lay reader could not tell where the one ended and the other began; but the incidents narrated do not matter to any one except the characters in the story. Mr. Wells would never have overwhelmed Captain Nemo and his submarine ship; he would have shown us a world in which people travelled under the sea or up to the moon with as much unconcern as they do now by underground railway. It may be urged that M. Verne appealed to a wider public, but it is plain that Mr. Wells is not less anxious that what he has to say should reach as many people as possible, as is shown by the mere fact that it is presented always in six-shilling novel form, and not, as would have been the case a generation ago, in a heavy and expensive quarto, which would have been read only by specialists.

"A Modern Utopia" is, he says, in all probability the last of his sociological essays. It has grown naturally out of the two earlier works, in which the treatment of social organisation was purely objective. It has brought him back to his art or trade—he does not care which you call it—of an imaginative writer, a writer who tries to present an ideal which is both possible and more desirable than the world in which we live. It is said of some of George Meredith's works—notably of "Diana of the Crossways"—that the first chapter should be read last, and that it can only so be understood. Mr. Wells has adopted the converse of this; it is his last chapter, called an appendix, which should in our opinion be read first, for it furnishes a most illuminating statement of the writer's whole attitude towards metaphysical speculation. This appendix consists of the principal portions of a paper read to the Oxford Philosophical Society some eighteen months ago, which was afterwards published in Mind. It is amusing to reflect upon the consternation which this bombshell must have caused in those academic groves where the school of Literæ Humaniores is still venerated. How many promising "firsts" Mr. Wells was the means of reducing to the ruck of the third class is a matter between himself and his conscience; certainly the paper is a most disturbing one to "the wretch who collates

"His 'Republic' and Mill;
"Who dreams of the τὸ τί ἦν εἶναι,
"And wakes to discourse of the Will."

The interesting autobiographical passages in which he shows how he approached logic and metaphysics over what he calls the bracing upland of comparative anatomy, prepare us for his frank rejection of the objective reality of classification. His conception of evolution, his conviction of the vagueness and instability of biological species, naturally led him to reject the fixed genera and species of the logicians, and by consequence all the elaborate syllogistic superstructure which has been raised upon such classification. And so he came to regard number, definition, class, and abstract form as regrettable conditions of mental activity rather than as essential facts. He is entirely sceptical of the powers of the mind as the instrument of thought. He regards it as capable only of dealing with ideas by projecting them upon the same plane, a process which leads to an infinity of error. The molecular physicist whose mind is at the level of atoms, is in the presence of a universe which has none of the shapes or forms of our common life. What we call stable and solid is in that world a freely moving system of interlacing centres of force; and what we call colour and sound is there no more than a varying length of vibration.

All this brings us to Mr. Wells' intense conception of the uniqueness of individuals. Nothing is fixed, everything is a little link in a vast chain of evolution, of perpetual modification, adaptation, perhaps degeneration. In his "Utopia" it is profoundly interesting to see how widely he has departed from the Utopia-makers of the past. Perhaps the most essentially modern note is struck in his conception of it as a world-State using a universal language. This is, of course, the necessary result of scientific progress and mechanical invention. We can no longer imagine a Utopia subject to invasion from outside, and confined within the limits of a little city-State of ancient Greece, or even within the limits of a large island or continent. Plato would have been unable to conceive the possibility of mechanical invention profoundly modifying social conditions: and in an interesting passage Mr. Wells shows us the great Greek philosophers as the necessary complement and corrective of our own abundance of machinery and deficiency of thought. Again, Mr. Wells' Utopia is kinetic, not static, as are those of his predecessors; not a permanent state, but a hopeful stage leading to a long ascent of stages. But it is, we feel, unnecessary to describe in detail the social arrangements, the manners and customs of this fascinating other world. Mr. Wells has chosen to present it through the medium of two vividly realised personalities, both Englishmen, of the middle class, and from this present twentieth century. One of them, indeed, has had an unfortunate love-affair at Frognal! We prefer to send our readers to the book itself, which seems to us to mark an advance even on the high level of excellence which Mr. Wells had before attained. We have been particularly struck by the courage and breadth of mind with which he has grappled with some of the great outstanding difficulties confronting every one who essays to formulate an ideal State. His whole State is, of course, based upon the substitution, wherever possible, of mechanical for human labour, but naturally there remains a great deal which not even the most ingenious electrical contrivances can do, and his treatment of this labour problem, including, of course, the question of the distribution of labour, appears to us to be masterly.

The book is illustrated with some remarkable drawings by Mr. E. J. Sullivan, which have to our eye a curious reminiscence of Cruikshank—at any rate, the artist certainly deserves the warm tribute which Mr. Wells pays him in his prefatory note.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE

Histoire de la Langue Française des Origines à 1900. Tome I. De l'époque Latine à la Renaissance. Par FERDINAND BRUNOT. (Paris: Armand Colin, 15 f.)

It is no wonder that M. Gaston Paris—the best representative possessed by any country in Europe, for the last half-century, of that happy marriage of philology and literature which is so often turned into a disastrous divorce—should, when some years ago he had to notice M. Brunot's articles in the great co-operative "History" of M. Petit de Julleville, have expressed an ardent desire and hope that these articles might form the basis of a regular treatise on their subject. Many persons, of all degrees of competence below that supreme one which M. Paris had attained, must have been led by these articles, and by M. Brunot's equally admirable monograph on "La Doctrine de Malherbe" (Paris, 1891), to the same desire, which is now happily gratified or in process of gratification. The study of words in themselves, like the study of things in themselves, is, if not exactly a black art, one which is rather dangerous to meddle with. There is the left-hand Charybdis of sciolist pottering and the right-hand Scylla of pseudo-scientific aridity. The first in old days had more victims, the second has fattened at her sister's expense of late. But in M. Brunot we were pretty certain to find no prey of either: and our confidence is not deceived.

To say too absolutely why it is not would involve laying down general principles, a thing not to be risked in a short review. But we may say that in M. Brunot we find what is the only safe combination in such a book, a clear view of the subject in general together with a liberal and reasonable elasticity in particulars. If he is ever too peremptory on these latter—for instance, on the notion that actual Bas-Breton is not originally Gaulish, but Welsh, imported by fliers from the Saxon invasion—it is in the fringes of his subject where he follows others, not in the main body of it where he speaks for himself. He makes, of course, and could make, no compromise on the cardinal doctrine that "French is spoken Latin," but on almost every page, in reference to persons and things alike, there are to be found tokens of a sweet reasonableness too commonly absent in that extremely "arbitrary gent," the modern philologist. An admirable phrase in a note of M. Brunot's on p. 147, in which he says that his book "doit servir autant que possible à donner le sentiment de la transformation lente et continue telle qu'elle a lieu dans la réalité," expresses the effect which the pistolling ways of these gentlemen of the linguistic road make impossible.

Many incidental good things, such as the defence of Ménage—a person far too commonly slighted—result from the maintenance of this habit; but they are, of course, subsidiary to the exposition of the real subject. The First Book, on the characteristics of the "spoken Latin" itself—that is to say, not the actual lingua Romana, but the stage between the last age of post-classical written Latin not yet quite "Low," and the Romana—is a model handling of a subject as to which every proposition has, so to say, to be a guess founded upon more or less evidence, but in which you must always make it easy for the reader to distinguish the evidence from the guess, and not, as is too commonly done, muddle them up as much as possible so that he may take the whole for evidence. There is necessarily less groping, less hand-and-knee work, when we come to the actual early texts; but M. Brunot, if he walks more confidently, does not walk any the less cautiously. And both here and everywhere there is a welcome abstention from the endless and disgusting effort to prove that all other guides are not to be trusted, which is usual. Knowing M. Brunot's work before, we had not much fear of stumbling on the too common demonstration or insinuation that all persons who have previously dealt with the subject are asses, and that if there is an asinus, pulcher et fortissimus in asinity before all others, it is Mr. So-and-so. But we can assure all readers that they need not be under any such fear at all.

Where all is good it is perhaps rather idle to single out parts for commendation; but a review which is merely general praise is not a very good compliment to the author, and perhaps not the most convincing proof of the reviewer's competence. The chapter on the first texts of French (especially, of course, the venerable and familiar Strasbourg Oaths) could hardly be better done; and both in it and in its neighbours M. Brunot not merely inculcates in principle but illustrates in practice that extreme and, we may almost say, treacherous fluidity of linguistic change which mere linguists are so apt to forget in constructing their grammars and lexicons. The same principle of cautious equity presides later over his handling of the dialects; and, at the close of the volume, over his account of the way in which the fifteenth century, wishing to classicise, really helped to barbarise the admirable language of the Middle Ages proper. But the best part of the whole volume, to our thinking, lies in the eighth and ninth chapters of the Second Book, which treat respectively of the linguistic value of this very language which we have just called admirable, and of the position and influence of French abroad. To the extraordinary richness of the vocabulary, beside which modern French, except for terms of science or terms of slang, is even since the Romantic movement rather poor, and before it was poor to beggarliness; to the significance of the separate pronunciation of forms now merged in speech even if distinguished in spelling; to the flexibility and liberty of the syntax; to all the other luxuriant amenities which were sacrificed to bring about the monotonous clearness and neatness of the late seventeenth and eighteenth centuries—to these M. Brunot does justice after a fashion which is a joy to see. But it is not less of a joy to see, in reading the following chapter, that his enthusiasm for his subject has by no means induced that prejudice which so often comes in its train. It is difficult to exaggerate the influence and importance of French language and French literature in the Middle Ages as regards other literatures and other languages. Yet they have been exaggerated: and that by ignorant or incompetent persons. It is all the more satisfactory to find a man of the competence of M. Brunot taking quite a different line. His account, for instance, of early Middle English, if corrigible in a very few minor points and perhaps amplifiable in a very few more, is on the whole absolutely sound and fair. And when we come to the phrase, "sa riche, on pourrait presque dire son incomparable, synonymie," we recognise yet another of those equitable perspicacities which distinguish M. Brunot so often and so honourably. For there have been critics of language, native as well as foreign, who have actually lamented the riches of English in this way, and have scornfully asked or regretfully panted for a hide-bound lexicon in which every word shall mean one, and only one, and only one narrowly defined thing; and no thing is to be so impudent as to demand, no writer so licentious as to supply, a plurality of word-wives for each thing-husband, each possessed of slightly different qualities and attractions.

M. Brunot's next volume will be expected with particular interest. The history of the further changes, through the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, which resulted in "classical" French, is a subject which requires, in even a higher degree than the subject of the present volume, the qualities of knowledge, patience, and freedom from prejudice. And these, as we have seen, are exactly the qualities which he can bring to bear on it.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

TWO PSYCHOLOGISTS

Physiological Psychology. By W. McDougall, M.A., M.B. (The Temple Primers. Dent, 1s. net.)

The Logic of Human Character. By CHARLES J. WHITBY, B.A., M.D. (Macmillan, 3s. 6d. net.)

THESE two books, which well illustrate the vast range of psychology, since neither even impinges upon the subject-matter of the other, may be welcomed both for their own sakes, and because it is a pleasing sign of the times to find the science of mind passing into the hands of those whose education and training have led them to study those physical facts in which mind unquestionably, if inexplicably, inheres.

Mr. McDougall's tiny little volume, to which he has given the title of Wundt's masterpiece, is sufficient justification for his recent appointment to the Wilde Readership in Mental Philosophy at Oxford. It presents a clear account—somewhat marred, perhaps, by the author's methods in punctuation—of the elements of scientific psychology, and is thoroughly up to date, as is evidenced by the account of the recently discovered distinction between the functions of the rods and cones of the retina. Small and unambitious though it be, this book is worth more than the little space it would fill in the library of the student of mind. We suppose that it is well not to burden the reader of a primer with authors' names, but, on the other hand, we have repeatedly observed the educational value of attaching a personal interest to doctrines and researches. Mr. McDougall, however, has completely suppressed all references with the solitary exception, if we remember aright, of one to a paper of his own. But neither to this, nor to certain of his own speculations in the text does he attach any indication of their authorship. Such modesty is, we think, to be deprecated. Clearly to tell the reader that, on such and such points, the author is speaking for himself, unquestionably endows with saliency the individual and original portions of a book. We would merely maintain that whilst the personality of no author, be he a Plato, is of the slightest absolute importance, or has the remotest bearing on the truths which he enunciates—be they truths: yet in practice it is found that the love of personalities, which reveals itself in gossip, may be turned to excellent account in education.

From Mr. McDougall's solid and unadorned pages—"stodgy," we had nearly called them—we turned to Dr. Whitby's volume with the well-sounding but quite meaningless title. The table of contents further assured us that we were to be entertained. We quote the titles of two chapters: the others are like unto them. "Fifth or Transcendent Category. Individual Character. The Logic of Freedom. Sixth or Absolute Category. Universal Character. The Logic of Creation."

But the reader must not be deterred. In point of fact this book of Dr. Whitby's is very much out of the common. Its style is marked by a dignity and resource, rising at times to the heights, which must impart a singular distinction to the author's papers on hydrotherapeutics in the medical journals where these appear. Locke had a style unmatched for its fitness, Sir Thomas Browne did not know Latin for nothing, and Huxley, who could speak his mind, had a medical degree likewise: but we did not suspect that a living English physician could write as Dr. Whitby does; whose thinks us unkind should spend sixpence on one of the leading medical journals. But this is a matter apart. Though Dr. Whitby's title and table of contents create the presumption that he has more manner than matter, he is indeed a deep and discerning student of character. We venture to say that he displays more real insight into human character in any one of his chapters than your boasted novelist in all his output. In truth, it is sorry trash that passes for psychology in current fiction: bearing much the same relation to the real thing that the ability to identify the moon bears to the knowledge of a Newton. But Dr. Whitby, when he writes of distinction, detachment, tenacity, wisdom, consistency, passion and their congeners, really illumines the matter. We have read this volume through twice, partly for the mere æsthetic pleasure afforded by the author's English, partly for its intellectual interest, and partly because of the pleasant taste it leaves in the mouth. We would suggest that the man who writes this book must surely find the compilation of papers on the use of mineral waters in lithæmia, let us say, rather a bore: but one never knows.

We notice that Dr. Whitby uses the term "ethology," and we wonder whether he is interested in the new Ethological Society, to which such distinguished men as Mr. George Meredith have lately lent their names. Hitherto we have remained unconvinced that this society is meeting the want which undoubtedly exists. There is still room, despite the existence of the Sociological Society, the folklorists and the psychologists, for true amateurs and lovers, like Dr. Whitby, to form a society which shall devote itself to the study of human character and conduct as known to-day. This society would probably not interest Mr. McDougall, who is, so to speak, engaged in the basement; nor the academic philosophers, who are ever trying to soar in a vacuum: but it would attract the many thoughtful folk who are interested in the purely subjective analysis of human conduct, which is the subject-matter of ethology proper. In this high and occult region of inquiry, Dr. Whitby's book would prove as sincere and competent a guide as any we know. Is not this good, for instance?

"Humility is by no means incompatible with self-respect, or even with pride: the vulgar conception of humility as a spirit of craven and abject self-depreciation betrays an entire misunderstanding of its true inwardness. And, in fact, to vulgarity as such, the nature of rational humility is in the last degree unintelligible; for whereas vulgarity is presumptuous, arrogant, self-deluded, fain to assume positions for which it possesses no real qualification, liable to the rebuffs which inevitably ensue—humility, on the contrary, is the sign-manual of true nobility of soul; and since it claims only what rightly pertains to it, and never disdains to justify its claim, can hardly be taken at a disadvantage. Humility is to character precisely what reticence is to art—the condition of all distinguished and adequate expression."

We have italicised what appears to us to be one of the many instances of the inner vision which adorns this modest book.

BY THE RIVER'S BRIM

An Angler's Hours. By H. T. SHERINGHAM. (Macmillan, 6s. net.)

A VOLUME composed of articles that have already appeared in magazines is not always what a book should be. Sometimes, if it be not a mere "miscellany," it begins afresh with every chapter. Then it is limp and tedious. When the theme is Angling the risk is great. In that sport there seems to be some quality prompting a man to write an exordium each time he takes pen in hand. Perhaps it is a feeling that those who do not fish are not to be expected, unless something is done to rouse them, to approach the subject in proper mood; perhaps a consciousness that it requires some genius to convey a vivid sense of the joys to be found on stream or lake. However this may be, Mr. Sheringham has to be complimented. He begins his work once only. He begins it well, too. "At the Dawn of Day," in which an angler, seemingly one of the elders, is breakfasting in a weird old country-house two or three hours after midnight, is very attractive. One is glad that his basket is full when examined by the household at the usual morning meal. True, they are "coarse fish" only he has to show; but we have been much entertained by witnessing his capture of them. Mr. Sheringham, indeed, being a sportsman of catholic sensibilities, imparts a fresh interest to the less-esteemed fish. He is as happy when catching dace or roach or jack as when seeking trout on Exmoor or in the unnamed Midland brook. A three-pound chub caught in the Thames makes excellent play in a merry tale; and Old Billy, on the pike-pool, becomes an agreeable memory. Of course, the book is not flawless. Mr. Sheringham is not at his best when he is most ambitious. He makes a text of the lines,

"Still nursing the unconquerable hope, Still clutching the inviolable shade;"

figures the shade as a grayling, finds the hope "in some danger of being left in its cradle permanently," and is otherwise tortuous and tiresome instead of achieving a success of ingenious fancy. Three things in one chapter are "gargantuan"; a fishing comrade, "indomitable" in almost every paragraph of another paper, made a bag which was almost "phenomenal"; and the perversity of human nature insists on "trying conclusions" with fate. Mr. Sheringham, who has good taste and an observant mind, will admit that these are lapses.

RICORDI

Of a tower, of a tower, white
In the warm Italian night,
Of a tower that shines and springs
I dream, and of our delight.

Of doves, of a hundred wings
Sweeping in sound that sings
Past our faces, and wide
Returning in tremulous rings:

Of a window on Arno side,
Sun-warm when the rain has dried
On the roofs, and from far below
The clear street-cries are cried:

Of a certain court we know,
And love's and sorrow's throe
In marbles of mighty limb,
And the beat of our hearts aglow:

Of water whispering dim
To a porphyry basin's rim;
Of flowers on a windy wall
Richly tossing, I dream.

And of white towns nestling small
Upon Apennine, with a tall
Tower in the sunset air
Sounding soft vesper-call:

And of golden morning bare
On Lucca roofs, and fair
Blue hills, and scent that shook
From blossoming chestnuts, where

Red ramparts overlook
Hot meadow and leafy nook,
Where girls with laughing cries
Beat clothes in a glittering brook:

And of magic-built skies
Upon still lagoons; and wise
Padua's pillared street
In the charm of a day that dies:

Of olive-shade in the heat,
And a lone, cool, rocky seat
On an island beach, and bright
Fresh ripples about our feet:

Of mountains in vast moon-light,
Of rivers' rushing flight,
Of gardens of green retreat.
I dream, and of our delight.

LAURENCE BINYON.

THE ENTENTE CORDIALE

THE following verses with their accompanying "translation" by the same hand appeared last week in a well-known evening paper, and would seem to prove, even more conclusively than recent political events, the warmth of the relations existing between ourselves and our neighbours on the other side of the Channel.

Les cieux pleurent
Tendres larmes,
Les fleurs meurent
Toujours calmes.

Tears of life
Sheds the sky,
Free from strife
Flowers die.

Larmes aux yeux
Sont amères,
Les adieux
Dernières (sic).

Sorrow sends
Tears we weep,
Grief attends
Our last sleep.

The voice is ostensibly the voice of a Gallic Jacob, while the hand which penned these lines is unmistakably that of a British Esau.

Wisely judging that in moments of such friendly enthusiasm it is best to let the heart speak unrestrainedly, the writer disregards the irksome shackles of traditional French versification and pronunciation, ignores grammatical trammels, boldly alters genders to suit the exigencies of the rhyme, and in fact triumphantly demonstrates to the world at large that Britons, even when masquerading in French garb, "never, never will be slaves." The admiring reader's only cause for complaint will possibly be that the poem, like Mr. Weller's valentine, is too short. I therefore venture to subjoin an additional verse or two, adhering as closely as possible to the methods of the original. The "translation," undertaken in the same spirit, may be supposed to be the work of a French author bitten with the like enthusiasm, and following in his own way the notable example set him by the Saxon.

Oui, l'amour
La plus tendre
En un heure
Devra fondre.

Dolour's plough
True love's path
Has made rough—
Weep at that.

Toute le charme
Doit finir—
C'est la palme
Du martyre.

Grieves real
Here I vomit
Yet not all . . .
Some I omit.

Observe that the supposititious Frenchman adheres rigidly to the national pronunciation of the "th" and makes a dissyllable of the word "real." "To vomit," it will be noted, is far the most forcible dictionary equivalent for the verb "s'épancher."

All thinkers must perceive that this new development opens out wide vistas to the inhabitants of both countries. Remembering the old adage that they were created to be friends "parce qu'ils se tiennent par La Manche," the result of such closer hobnobbing as these recent indications seem to forecast will be varied and delightful. Some tender-hearted English "gun" may yet tearfully beseech his friends to spare a female hare in the words of the "Propriétaire," who thus set forth the sporting prospects of his estate:

"I have three hares," said he, "and two of them are at your service—Vous pouvez tuer Albert, vous pouvez tuer Victor, mais ne touchez pas à Mathilde, parce qu'elle est mère!"

Tom and Harry will perhaps embrace each other on both cheeks at railway stations, while Jacques and Pierre assume the kilt, each of the last-named being careful, like a certain cautious compatriot of theirs, to draw the stocking over the knee "à cause de ses caleçons." "Rosbif" and "plum-pouding" will no doubt figure more frequently than before on French tables, while frogs'-legs and snails will lend an agreeable variety to our ordinary.

Some years ago Mr. J. M. Lely, in the pages of "The Author," recommended his country-folk to "english" various familiar dishes, and proposed, to begin with, that "Hors d'œuvres" should be translated into "Uncooked Morsels." Indeed, we have for long been accustomed to draw out our daily ménu in a somewhat curious travesty of the French language; as a result of the Entente Cordiale, let us imagine that the reverse state of things obtains, and set forth the future bill of fare of a French dinner. All Frenchmen with the literary instinct admire the Saxon element of our language more than such words as have a Latin origin, and therefore it seems to me that Mr. Lely's "Uncooked Morsels" might more profitably be rendered "Raw Bits." The word "Soufflé" is a stumbling-block and is best represented by a kind of paraphrase, "inflation" being too bombastic, and "swelling" unpleasantly suggestive.

MÉNU. (Old style : obsolete.)	BILL OF FARE. (New style.)
Hors d'œuvres	Raw Bits.
Pot au Feu	Pot on the Fire
Purée de petits pois	Mash of little Peas
Bouchées aux Huitres	Mouthfuls of Oysters
Chaud-froid de Saumon	Hot-cold of Salmon
Vol-au-vent de Volaille	Fowl Fly-to-Wind
Petits Filets mignons à la Maître d' Hôtel	"Ducky" little Fillets to the Butler
Noix de Veau à la Jardinière	Nut of Veal in the way of the Gardener's wife.
Pommes de terre sautées	Jumped Potatoes
Asperges en branches : Sauce Mousseline	Asparagus in branches : Muslin Sauce
Timbales de Fruits	Mugs of Fruit
Crème renversée	Turned-up Cream.
Petits Soufflés de Foie gras	Little Blow-outs of fat liver.

Such a meal as this, to be thoroughly appreciated, would no doubt have to be prepared by a Chief or a Blue Cord.

BULL-FROG.

THE SENSE OF HUMOUR

EVERY man of woman born believes that, whatever other quality he may lack or possess, he is endowed with an unflinching judgment as to what is the proper object of laughter, what is really funny; but he is convinced that this unerring sense of humour is granted to very few indeed beside himself. Personally, I have frequently been told that I have no sense of humour, because I have always held (and been so injudicious as openly to express) the belief that every humorous tale should be susceptible of analysis, that it should be credible as a possible occurrence, and that it should not conflict with dramatic propriety. When quite a boy I was taken to task rather severely (I remember it still) by a reverend (and honourable) jester who related to me how a cobbler put over his door the motto "Mens sibi conscia recti," and how a rival artisan, not to be outdone, adorned his lintel with the legend "Men's and women's sibi conscia recti." I was injudicious enough to urge that the rival, who apparently thought the Latin words indicated some form of apparel (the joke herein lying), would not have advertised wares which he knew he had not for sale. The reverend anecdotist told me that to look into a funny tale in that way displayed a lamentable want of the sense of humour, and that jokes "never went on all fours." I felt much humiliated at the time, but I have found myself since wholly unable to accept the reverend gentleman's point of view, and, having declared my dissent from it, have often incurred a similar censure spoken or implied.

Difference of opinion as to what is really funny is, as has been remarked by George Eliot, a great dissolvent of friendships, greater than those differences of view which separate Platonists from Aristotelians, Free Traders from Protectionists, even Protestants from Roman Catholics. I have been so formed by nature and perhaps by education that I am unable to welcome with laughter an example of the undeniable fact that in our tongue, as in others, a word has often more than one meaning. But we must not assume that those who seem tickled by that which appears to us to be almost sad, or certainly not laughable, are always feigning an amusement which they do not feel, lest they should seem dull or unappreciative. I am convinced that there are people who are convulsed at the reminder that box has several significations, and who think that a man is dull if he fails to accept a chance of saying: "I like it but it does not like me," or "Last not least." Then there are those who enjoy the Madison-Mortonian genre. Such an one, when his ace is trumped, will say, "May I be permitted by the favour of the chair briefly to ejaculate a monosyllable unmentionable to ears polite?" Those who feel, with Aristophanes, that such attempts at humour make one suddenly feel years older, are thought to lack a sense of humour. I am convinced that the spectacle of a man pursuing his hat which has been blown off his head touches in many a source of laughter which would not flow for the most ingenious quip in Aristophanes, Sheridan or Gilbert. Woe to the dullards who see in it only an embarrassing misadventure! Then, the raconteurs who tell long stories (in dialect) of the type of "How Tim Murphy done the gauger"—to many these are more tiresome than bimetalists, but to some they are merum sal. The good talker resents them most. "Of all the plagues" (I quote De Quincey from memory) "whom God in his inscrutable wisdom has allowed to exist and even to propagate their species, the worst is the professed story-teller." How he must have suffered when the conversation, in the phrase of another great table-talker, "fell into its anecdotage."

Even in the mind of one individual the sense of humour seems to undergo strange changes. It is amazing that the creator of Sam Weller, Mrs. Gamp, Codlin and Dick Swiveller (who, however, begins to show signs of a tendency towards the Madison-Morton type) should have thought it funny to call Veneering's butler the Analytical Chemist; and to make Rogue Riderhood, having designated one person as Tother Governor, call another Tothurest Governor. Yet Dickens had not lost his humour when he wrote "Our Mutual Friend." Silas Wegg is a perfect type of the characteristic humour of Dickens when he speaks of his friend Venus as "floating his powerful intellect in tea," and declares that his trestles, which he is about to sell, were pronounced "by a Irish gen'leman as was a judge of trestles to be beyond price." The appeal to the Irish gentleman is delightfully characteristic of the cunning of Wegg. Irishmen often are (or are supposed to be) good judges of horses, dogs, &c. Besides, it would be very difficult to verify the appeal, as the referee would presumably be in Ireland. It is a pity that Aristotle did not analyse the proper object and occasion of laughter in connection with his doctrine of the Mean. He would have begun with the unquenchable laughter of the Olympian gods at the limping Hephæstos, and would have brought it into relation with the last sally of the Agora or theatre; and Theophrastus would have told us what the funny man was "such as" to do and say. But alas! he has not analysed the when, the where, the how, and the what of laughter, and we do not even know what he thought of puns.

R. Y. TYRRELL.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

THOMAS FULLER

FEW men have been gifted with such a fund of wit and an abundance of humour as Dr. Thomas Fuller, who was able to be a man of learning without a taint of pedantry, a man of the world, a man of shrewd common sense whose wisdom and common sense did not cause him to waver for a moment in his devout allegiance to religion and his Church; he was learned as Lipsius, witty as Sheridan, sane as the self-made merchant, and wrote prose buoyant as his own personality, and varied as his gifts, for like George Herbert he lived and wrote and relished writing. He sat down to write a compendious account of the Church in Britain with all the enthusiasm of a modern novelist who knows that he has in his mind a plot so good that his novel will tell itself; and never through the innumerable pages of the mighty folio does his gusto abate for an instant; but his history runs on sparkling and bright with here a quaint aside and there a witty observation or a turn of phrase, over which one knows the old fellow, as Hazlitt lovingly calls him, was obliged to lay down his quill, rub his hands and chuckle: one sees the twinkle in his eye as he wrote:

"and a palm-tree served Deborah for her Westminster Hall wherein she judged Israel," or:

"Needs then must religion be in a doleful condition in Britain; for he who expects a flourishing Church in a fading commonwealth, let him try whether one side of his face can smile when the other is pinched."

Or, after having recounted the sad experiences of one Bishop Wilfrid at the conclusion of the seventh century, he begins, after the customary dedication, his history of the following century with the sentence:

"Painfull Wilfride was no sooner out of one trouble than he was engaged in another."

He is always on good terms with his "good reader"; not at all the terms upon which a modern writer is almost bound to be. The public was not Fuller's patron; those were the days before Pope introduced the independence of the writer—or to speak more accurately—shifted his dependence from the patron to the public: a reform, like many other reforms, of questionable value. For the public taste is notoriously fickle and vulgar, akin rather to a whim than a judgment, and the individual of wealth or position, though he may have a taste that is precarious, is yet more easily trained or stimulated because he has at any rate the advantage of being one. Fuller had no cause to be bitter about the public: if they were foolish enough not to read and relish his good things, the loss was uncontestedly theirs; and mattered but little to him. And so he wrote happily along, saying what he had to say in his own peculiarly attractive manner, confessing his own limitations, being at no pains to appear wiser than he was or to please any one but himself. Nothing illustrates this sublime attitude of benignity more delightfully than his preface to the second volume of his "Introduction to Wisdom": he begins by a formal preface to the reader in which he offers proof that the collection of wise sayings contained in the volume is quite invaluable, and then "Good Reader," he writes, and he is not starting another preface, rather is it the vocative of affection:

"Good Reader. I suspect I may have written some things twice; if not the same in words yet in sense, which I desire you to pass by favourably, forasmuch as you may well think, it was as difficult and dull a thing for me in so great a number of independent sentences to find out the repetitions. . . . Besides the pains such a search would cost me more time than I can afford it; for my glass of life running now low, I must not suffer one sand to fall in waste nor suffer one minute in picking of straws. And moreover my aged eyes being grown weak and dim I fear they will become quite dark by much perusing and poring; or at least so far as to render me unable to perfect several papers now lying by me, which I would willingly make a present of to you."

"But to conclude this; since in matters of advice, Precept must be upon Precept, and Line upon Line, I apologise in the words of St. Paul, 'To write the same things to you to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.'"

And there are 3152 of these maxims each one worthy of a Rochefoucauld or Solomon, together with an appendix on Sincerity and Deceit. The marvel is how the man who wrote tremendous volumes of history in the spare time left him from the discharge of his parochial duties found opportunities for gaining his extraordinary wisdom and insight into the world at large. Certainly Fuller's ears for all his learning were not

"nailed to his books; and deadened with the sound of the Greek and Latin tongues and the din and smithery of school-learning;"

no man kept himself more fresh and vital: no man was less narrow-minded; nor had many a keener eye to the truth of things. Though a staunch Protestant, he writes of Queen Mary without bitterness or fury but with deliberate judgment—giving a verdict which is not wholly due to his faith in royalty, though doubtless coloured by it.

"Indeed she knew not the art of being popular and never cared to learn it. . . . She hated to equivocate in her own Religion and always was what she was without dissembling her judgment or Practice for fear or flattery. Little beloved of her subjects . . . she had been a worthy Princesse had as little cruelty been done under her as was done by her."

Fuller's style is vivid, and, as might be expected from a scholar of his calibre, elaborate and involved; but his prose is never heavy; it is always leavened by picturesque expressions and epithets of genius: here as everywhere his humour is his salvation. But his style is absolutely suited to his subject-matter; where there is need for simple narration, the embellishments and tricks vanish and he shows a mastery over effect that is memorable. What could be more simple or more telling than this passage, that ends his church history, in which he narrates the burial of King Charles?

"All things thus in readiness, the corpse was brought to the vault, being born by the soldiers of the garrison. Over it a black velvet hersecloth, the four labels whereof the four Lords did support. The Bishop of London stood weeping by, to tender that his service which might not be accepted. Then was it deposited in silence and sorrow in the vacant place in the vault (the herse-cloth being cast in after it) about three of the clock in the afternoon; and the Lords that night (though late) returned to London."

H. DE S.

FICTION

Fond Adventures. By MAURICE HEWLETT. (Macmillan, 6s.)

MR. HEWLETT has gained a considerable reputation and much popularity by his writing, both of which he has undoubtedly deserved: he has a knowledge of his craft and ability: moreover there was charm and beauty in his "Little Novels of Italy," in his "Forest Lovers"; there was vigour of treatment in his "Richard Yea-and-Nay," a certain gusto breathed through his work, like the spirit of youth, and made it vital: something of that splendid blithe-heartedness that makes Stevenson's romances a never-ending source of joy. But in "The Queen's Quair," for all the turmoil of praise it evoked on its appearance, there were signs of decay—not of ability—far from it: the book is a monument of skilled craftsmanship, not of inspiration. It is not easy to gauge the reason of this. Perhaps Mr. Hewlett, conscious of his power of execution, is not at the pains to conceive deeply enough: perhaps he knows that he has taken the public ear, knows its stability and lack of taste and is content; perhaps he is suffering from a transitory staleness; probably it is due in a measure to all these reasons; but from whatever cause it arises, the result is to be deplored most heartily; for artists are not so frequent that the sight of one slipping from the high ranks to the low can be witnessed without a feeling that is akin to dismay. And this we experienced in reading the four stories—Tales of the Youth of the World—contained in the present volume. Three of them have already made their appearance, two in Harper's Magazine and one in the Cornhill, and they certainly do not appear to merit preservation in any more lasting form. "The Heart's Key" is thin in the extreme, and will not bear the weight of cunning writing which has been lavished upon it; moreover, there is a taint of something very like vulgarity that takes away from the effect of fragile beauty which the story might otherwise have contained; a certain insistence upon external points which reminds us of an adroit auctioneer, disposing of a work of art. The story is of a proud lady humbled by the great love of a lowly suitor. The second and third tales are likewise disappointing, though they are written with much cleverness, and a knowledge of the times with which they deal. The last story in the book is "The Love Chase," which has not hitherto been published: it is the longest and by far the best, approaching Mr. Hewlett's own early standard of excellence, though by no means attaining to it. Simone della Prora, the Black Dog of Cittadella, is a splendid romantic figure, and the scene where he is cowed by Gonzaga the Cardinal in his own fortress is as capital as the final scene in the wood where the Cardinal's wiles are discovered. But the story drags, hindered in its progress by a display of erudition which is out of place, and in spite of the excellence of these two scenes and much good writing, leaves the reader unsatisfied. Knowing well the possibilities of Mr. Hewlett's fine ability, we lay down this latest volume with great disappointment.

A Rough Reformer. By ERNEST GLANVILLE. (Constable, 6s.)

THIS is a story of absorbing interest, touching life at many points, and told with equal vigour and feeling. Westmacott Vane descends on the City of London from the backwoods of Canada, and quickly makes himself a great financier, with smart society running after him for "options." We do not know whether Mr. Glanville has done the financial details right, and we do not care, for he has certainly drawn an extraordinarily impressive picture of a real man, simple, brutal, unscrupulous, and yet absolutely compelling in the sheer strength of his character. How he is ultimately induced to make restitution to the shareholders he has defrauded by a colossal "bear" coup is admirably told, and it is true instinct that made Mr. Glanville bring a not unhappy ending out of the purely selfish schemes of organised emigration which the great financier set on foot at the zenith of his prosperity. These schemes are described in too much detail, in spite of their interest for the sociologist and the statesman. But there is much more in the book than a kind of reconstruction of Cecil Rhodes. We cannot remember anything in recent fiction more charming in its way than the idyll of little Tam, the cripple, with his marvellous knowledge of birds and beasts, and his atavistic reminiscences of the manners and customs of the ancient Britons, partly subjective, and partly drawn objectively from books. His friend, the gentle old vicar, is sympathetically drawn. Excellent, too, are Vane's parents, the wise, patient, homely old mother, and the vain and foolish old father, while Mary Lee is a winning type of strong young English womanhood. Certainly in not a few places the book reads too much like a pamphlet, and yet it is curious how Mr. Glanville manages to invest dry figures and details of land settlement and the training of young farmers with that kind of interest which belongs, or ought to belong, to everything that vitally concerns the fortunes of real human beings.

The Bell and the Arrow. By Mrs. W. H. CHESSON (NORA HOPPER). (Laurie, 6s.)

THERE is a freshness and sincerity about this book that is decidedly agreeable, while the story conveys the impression that it is drawn from personal experience, and is the outcome of strong individual opinion upon certain subjects and emotions. It is a quiet family chronicle with two love-stories running through it—their complications are many, and arise from perversities of mood and developments of character. To Margaret Butler and Tony Ward we are chiefly attracted. Tony is the son of a tramp adopted by Margaret's father, and he falls in love with her, for a time. They are both fascinating, fickle creatures, not unlike in temperament, and beloved beyond their deserts by their little world. When we finish the story we are inclined to suspect that Margaret was nursed all through her waywardness for the sake of the last few pages, and so to end upon a note that will ring true or false according to the ear that listens. Most of the characters are lifelike, photographically distinct, but they do nothing—and that is the fault of the book; there is little that is strong or definite. The reader wanders, as it were, through a gently undulating country, picturesque enough, but never presenting a bold or striking feature, or even one fine point of view; yet it is a pleasant ramble too, in cheerful company, which yields some pretty fancies, amusing turns of phrase, and occasional shrewd observations on men and things.

The Master Mummer. By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM. (Ward-Lock, 6s.)

MR. OPPENHEIM knows how to keep his readers thoroughly entertained, and his present story will be counted among his most successful mysteries. It has an ingenious plot, and a steady stream of romantic and dramatic incident; he writes well, too, without exaggeration, and with pretty touches of sentiment. Here the story opens with the rescue of a charming child from a wicked baronet. The scene takes place in a restaurant, and there's murder in it. Thereafter the rescuers have work enough for their hands and wits in defending Isobel de Sorrens from her enemies, who are persons in high places, entirely unscrupulous and audacious. Why they resort to desperate measures to obtain possession of an apparently friendless girl it would be unfair to disclose here. The description of Isobel's happy life in the studio with her three self-appointed guardians, the mystery that surrounds her, her strange experiences, and her ultimate fate, are all skilfully set forth; and will be found of absorbing interest to those who love a story of action and romance. In construction, management, style, and variety of incident, we can recommend "The Master Mummer" as one of the best stories of its kind that has appeared for some time.

The Letters of Theodora. By ADELAIDE L. ROUSE. (Macmillan, 6s.)

THIS is the story of a girl who has some of her manuscripts refused and some accepted and who finally marries John. We consider it wrong to tell the plot of a novel in a review, but it will be seen from what we have said that this novel does not depend on plot. The girl is an American and she naturally writes in her own language. She says one of her friends has "considerable to do" in her house, and she refuses to "enthuse" over children. We cannot understand any one with Theodora's ear "enthusing." For Theodora has the literary temperament and can write. Therefore, though she really has nothing much to write about, her letters make pleasant reading. They bring to this country a picture of New York life that leaves out the hustlers and the millionaires: and, by the way, they let us peep at country interiors that are fragrant and old-fashioned. The girl herself is clever, natural and pleasing. She is wrapt up in books and writes as if she expected the world at large to share and understand her interests. This has the effect of narrowing her outlook and will assuredly narrow her audience. We cannot explain why manuscripts should make duller ware in fiction than, for instance, the vegetables on a hawker's barrow; but there is no doubt about the fact, at any rate as it stands in the minds of people to whom, through practical acquaintance, manuscripts have ceased to be things of a charming mystery. The struggles of Theodora hardly touch us, while Crainquebille stirs us to the depths. Perhaps we know from the beginning that Theodora will marry John and wear "come-into-the-garden-Maud" hats.

THE BOOKSHELF

MR. JOHN WARD'S advice to the readers of Our Sudan: its Pyramids and Progress (Murray, 21s.) is, "skip the letterpress, the pictures will teach you all you need to know." The book is indeed copiously illustrated, but the author's suggestion ought not to be followed for two reasons: first, the photographs are often too small to be instructive, and, secondly, they are accompanied by a most interesting and useful narrative. Mr. Ward is a conscientious student of antiquity and a thoroughgoing admirer both of Lord Kitchener and of the able officers who are carrying on the work he set afoot. Unfortunately, he errs in the matter of arrangement. An official despatch or a really sound treatise on irrigation elbows something that approaches perilously near the manner of the guide-book, but that obstacle being surmounted one comes upon a delightful discourse about the pyramids of Nuri and Jebel Barkal, the temples at Ban Nogo with their singular but attractive carvings, and passes from such pleasant subjects (which show Mr. Ward at his best) to a historical narrative of Lord Kitchener's campaigns. Here, then, is fine confused reading. Mr. Ward has collected his facts with such thoroughness that a careful reader of his book will be thoroughly equipped for a visit to the Sudan, and he who perforce must stay at home will be provided with as sound a knowledge of the country as can be acquired without personal observation. The index is rather scrappy, and the despatches and précis ought to have been put into an appendix, which might well have been strengthened by the essential statistics.

The Brooches of Many Nations, by Mrs. Harriet A. Heaton, edited by Mr. J. Potter Briscoe, F.R.Hist.S., &c. (Murray, Nottingham, and Simpkin Marshall) is dedicated to the lovers of art in miniature—an unnecessary differentiation, for those who have some knowledge of the spirit of art can appreciate it in the monument of a Ptolemy or the tiny bronze pin that engages the tangles of Neæra's hair. As a matter of fact, Mrs. Heaton's book should make a wide appeal at the present time in England, for, after two generations of degraded taste in personal ornament, the dawn of better things is visible. The study of antique examples is as great an advantage in regard to brooches, earrings and the like, as in any other branch of applied art, and the present book collects within its covers much of the history of many of the most interesting periods and places connected with the subject. Beginning with a general review of the brooches of many nations, the author passes to the jewellery of Assyrian workmanship and so on to the designs, largely sacred of course, of Egypt, and thence by an easy step to Greek fibula and Græco-Roman brooches. The considerable varieties included in this survey are in many cases illustrated by the writer with clear and bold drawings from examples in the museums or from the works of well-known authorities such as Wilkinson's "Manners and Customs" and Birch's "Fac-similes." It is a far cry from the fibula with which Hecuba put out the eyes of the children of Polymestor to the brooches of Scandinavian men and women, but Mrs. Heaton traces the connection with an easy mastery of her subject and follows the gradual influence of Roman motifs upon the purity of the far-off northern style. The forms of ornament at one time peculiar to the north are well illustrated here and might be imitated to-day; some of the snake fibula, too—such, for example, as those shown in Figures 43 and 45—would form excellent models for modern reproduction. Indeed, this recommendation also applies to the interesting Celtic brooches, such as the fibula which the writer reproduces, and to the Scottish and Anglo-Saxon work with which she deals in a full and fitting fashion.

"To London town from Babylon
The pageant of the world goes by . . ."

and the author of "The Brooches of Many Nations" notes the procession of each dynasty as it passes and traces, with acute observation, the genesis of the particular ornament in which she is interested. So careful and full a piece of work, in whatever department of art it is carried out, will certainly be of value alike to the student and the amateur.

Among the masses of reprints which the publishers are vying with each other to produce, there is none so well planned or with so much promise of continued excellence as Messrs. Methuen's "New Standard Library." We have before us five little volumes: Graves's translation of The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius; The Pilgrim's Progress; vol. i. (containing the first fourteen chapters) of Gibbon: Sense and Sensibility, the first volume of a complete set of Jane Austen; and Bacon's Essays and New Atlantis, which is the first volume of Bacon's English works. We have only two small complaints to make: the type occupies a little too much of the page, and the tops are carelessly cut. For the rest, we can offer this enterprise nothing but praise and good wishes. The type is clear, the volumes are light and handy, the paper reasonably opaque, and the red bindings, which may be had for sixpence extra, neat and pleasant in colour. More important still, it is practically guaranteed by the publishers that the text is complete and exact. Mr. Sidney Lee is the general editor of the series and contributes a short introduction to each book; and when, on casting our eye down the list of promised volumes, we find the names of Dr. J. B. Bury, Mr. A. R. Waller, Dr. Paget Toynbee, and Mr. E. de Selincourt as editors of separate items in the series, we can rest assured that as much scholarship will be devoted to the preparation of these little sixpenny and shilling volumes as if they were éditions de luxe in large paper quarto. It would take too much space to give a list of all the most interesting features of "The Standard Library"; but it looks as if, at last, the happy time were coming when any one who wants an English classic of any kind will know exactly where to go for it without fear of disappointment or deception.

Lhasa and its Mysteries, by Lieut.-Colonel L. Austine Waddell, LL.D., C.B. (Murray, 25s. net), is the fourth book recently published on Tibet, and it is undoubtedly the book. Colonel Waddell has devoted many years to the study of Buddhism in Burma, India and Tibet, and the result is, as has already been pointed out elsewhere, that he knows more about the religion of the Tibetans than the Tibetans themselves know. His account of the expedition is full and graphic; but the real value of his book lies in the account of the Buddhism of Tibet. He shows how immeasurably inferior it is to the Buddhism of India; how minor details (as will happen when religion becomes debased) are magnified into things of the first importance, and how the whole system of the religion, and therefore of the politics, of the country has been diverted into a means of aggrandisement for one individual, the Dalai Lama. It is good to be able to see the truth, the sordid truth, of what once was an impressive mystery; if only because it raises one's hopes that light and air may be let into a corrupt and effete system. Colonel Waddell's book must long remain the classic work on Tibet. He writes not only with learning and scholarship but with a delightful literary style and a sense of humour strong enough to enable him to draw plenty of amusement out of the corruption which must, at the same time, have been keenly disappointing to so ardent a student and keen admirer of the best in Buddhism. His book is admirably illustrated, and has some excellent maps; and the appendices of scientific results and notes to the text are most valuable.

For three and a half years Sir Charles Eliot acted as H.M. Commissioner for the East African Protectorate, and these years were, in his own words, "perhaps the happiest and most interesting years of my life." Into the reasons for his resignation it is unnecessary to enter; it is quite sufficient to assert that the administrator was entirely in the right and the Foreign Office entirely in the wrong. His book, The East Africa Protectorate (Arnold, 15s. net), is in no way a vindication of a perfectly justifiable revolt against red-tape; on the contrary, it is a fair and honest statement of the prospects and possibilities of a vast tract of country, much of which is still imperfectly known, and which yields, even to those who have special knowledge, a series of continual surprises by the discovery of new districts, healthy, fertile, and suitable as a residence for Europeans. The Uganda Railway, trade, and missionary work, and the imminent political possibilities and dangers, are treated in a thoroughly workmanlike and honest fashion. There is no indaba of unnecessary trivialities, but a clear, plain statement of fact, at once illuminative and enlightening. The dominant note is rightly that of East Africa as a European colony, its adaptability and products, food-supply, minerals and climate. Sir Charles Eliot had of course exceptional opportunities for a thorough examination of such part of the vast tract of country as came under his immediate purview, and he has been aided by the reports of sub-commissioners in the various districts. As a result we have a trustworthy, sane, and carefully edited account of a country which ere long is bound to loom large in colonial history. The book is provided with good pictures, interesting maps, and a careful index.

BOOK SALES

CONCLUSION OF THE SALE OF THE LIBRARY
OF THE LATE JOHN SCOTT, C.B., OF HALKSHILL, AYRSHIRE

To the six days' sale recorded in the ACADEMY last week, numbering 1822 lots bringing over £13,000, remain to be added four more days of selling comprising 1701 lots, realising £5210, making a grand total of £18,262, an unexpectedly large one.

The notable books sold were as under:

Ovid. Aldus, 1502-1503. £10 10s.

Parker. Annales Typographici, &c. 1793-1803. £11 15s. (Pearson).

Passe (Crispin de). Regiæ Anglicæ Majestatis Pictura et historica declaratio (Germanice), fine engraved title and portraits of Queen Elizabeth, King James I., Queen Anne (of Denmark), and Prince Henry, and genealogical tree. 1604. £23 (Quaritch).

Petrarcha. Sonnetti, Canzoni et Triumph, edizione prima. Venet (Vind de Spira). 1470. £12 10s.

Shakespeare. Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories and Tragedies. Published according to the true Originall Copies, the first folio edition, all the preliminary ll. and the last leaf in facsimile, lower right hand corner of first 2 ll. mended, text perfect and in good and genuine state (12½ by 7½ in.), crimson morocco extra, ornamental gilt panels, in the Harleian style, g.e. by R. de Coverly. Folio. Printed by Issac Iaggard and Edw. Blount, 1623. £255.

Phillips (John). A Commemoration of the Right Noble and Vertuous Ladye Margrit Duglas Good Grace, Countess of Lennox, daughter to the renowned and most excellent Princesse Margrit, Queene of Scotland espoused to K. James the fourth of that name, in the daies of her most puissant and magnificent father Henry the Seaventh of England. Original edition, black letter (at end: "Yours at Commande (in the Lord) John Phyllips"). 1578. £15 (Quaritch).

Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society of London, from the commencement in 1665 to 1861. 102 vols. Various bound (1841 to 1861 in parts), and Maty's General Index to vols. 1-70, numerous plates. 4to. 1665-1861. £138 (Wesley).

Plinius Secundus. Historia Naturalis lib. xxxvi., editio princeps. Large folio. Venet. Joannes de Spira, 1469. A very fine, large and sound copy of this beautifully printed editio princeps of Pliny. £168 (Bland).

Plinius Secundus. Historia Naturale, tradocta di Lingua Latina in Florentina per Christiforo Landino. Venetiis, opus Nicolai Jansonis (Jenson) Gallici impressum. 1476. £58 (Maggs).

Prayer. Henry VIII.'s Primer. Grafton, 1545 (1546 on title). £21 (Quaritch).

Prayer; and Psalters in English, Greek and Latin, Originally belonging to Sir Robert Naunton, author of "Fragmenta Regalia." N.D. £36 (Quaritch).

Psalterium Davidis Regis, Cantica, Hymni (with the Commandments), Latine, cum Versione Scotica et Paraphrasi. Manuscript on vellum. Latin and Lowland Scotch. Folio. Saec. XV. An interesting manuscript representing probably the earliest rendering of any portion of the Bible in Lowland Scotch. £38 (Quaritch).

Purchas, His Pilgrims, in Five Bookes, containing Voyages and Peregrinations in all parts of the Globe. With the Fine Engraved Title (dated 1625). 1625-1626. £45 (Hopkins).

Rodericus Sancius de Arevalo; Episc. Zamorensis; Speculum Humanae Vitae. Paris. 1475. £12 5s. (Leighton).

Rolle (Richard, de Hampole), The Pricke of Conscience (a Poem); and a Wycliffian Exposition of the Paternoster (Prose). Middle English Manuscript on Vellum. (From the Ashburnham Collection.) Saec. XIV. £32 (Hopkins).

Rowlandson. The Dance of Life by Wm. Combe. 26 coloured plates by Thos. Rowlandson. First Edition, complete in the 8 original nos. 1817. £14 (Spencer).

The Buke of John Maundevill, being the Travels of Sir John Mandevill, Knight, 1322-56, a hitherto unpublished English Version, from the Egerton MS. in the B.M. 1889. £15 15s. (Ellis).

Thirty-two Miniatures, from the Book of Hours of Joan II., Queen of Navarre, a MS. of the 14th Century, 32 autotypes, 2 vols. half bound. Chiswick Press, 1899. £11 15s. (Maggs).

Saxton (Christopher), Maps of England and Wales, frontispiece of Queen Elizabeth enthroned, "Index Comitatum," "Index Operi," and 35 maps, coloured by a contemporary hand, original issue, 1579. £36 10s.

Abbotsford Club Publications, 33 vols. £23.

Scottish History Society Publications, 42 vols. £22.

Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, complete set to 1900. 40 vols. £39.

Sinclair (Geo.), Satan's Invisible World Discovered: a Choice Collection of Modern Relations, proving evidently . . . that there are Devils, Witches and Apparitions, etc., with the Marvellous History of Major Weir and his Sister, etc. Original edition. Edinb. 1685. £13.

Siezer (Capt. John), Theatrum Scotiae; containing the Prospects of Castles, Palaces, Towns and Colleges, Ruins of Abbeys, Monasteries, etc., in Scotland. Original edition. 1693. £10 5s.

Spalding Club Publications. Complete set, in all 37 vols. 1839-1871. £12.

Suetonius. De Vita XII Caesarum. Finely printed in Roman letter. Venet. Nicolaus Jenson, 1471. £29.

Tacitus. Annalium et Historiarum Libri. Editio princeps. Finely printed in Roman letter. (c. 1470.) Extremely rare. Perhaps the first book printed in Venice by Vindelin of Spire; and the first book printed with catch-words. £63 (Quaritch).

Thomas Aquinas (S.), Secunda Secundae, cum Tabula. Editio princeps. 1466-1468. £50.

Thomas Aquinas (S.), Secunda Secundae. Editio Prima, per Petrum Schoiffer de Gernsheim. A.D. 1467. £81. This is the second on his list of books for sale which Peter Schoiffer issued in or about 1469.

Thomas Aquinas (S.), De Veritate Catholicae Fidei et Errores Gentilium. Lib. IV. Venet. Nic. Jenson. 1480. £11 15s.

Thomas Aquinas (S.), Super Primo Libro Sententiarum. Venet. Antonius de Strata, 1486. £78. Printed upon vellum, probably unique. A contemporary MS. slip denotes it as originally belonging to the Monastery of St. Leonard in Venice.

Valturius (Robertus), De Re Militari. Lib. XII. MCCCCLXXII. Editio princeps, printed on vellum (five leaves are supplied from a paper copy). It is the second book printed at Verona and the first with woodcuts executed in Italy in a dated book. £200.

Valturius (Rob.), De Re Militari. Lib. XII. Verona. 1483. The second edition of Valturius. £33.

Virgilius. The XII Bukes of Encados of the Famose Poete Virgill, translated out of Latyne Verses into Scottish Metir, be Mayster Gawin Douglas, Bishop of Dunkel, etc., every buke havin hys peticular prologe. First edition, black letter. 1553. £48.

The tenth and eleventh days' sales comprising books on shipping and navigation only were disposed of in a few minutes on the tenth day.

The Catalogue said that:

"All the Lots forming this and the following day's Sale will be first offered together as a collection at the Reserved Price of £1000. If this sum be not realised, they will be sold separately as catalogued."

The 969 lots realised 1500£, paid by Mr. Johnston, Edinburgh. So ended this very fruitful sale.

The sale of the fourth section of the late Bishop Hurst's valuable library, in New York recently, dispersed a large number of important books and manuscripts. Six items brought over $1000 each, the largest sum being paid for the original manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's History of Scotland in three volumes, the first being entirely in the author's handwriting and the remaining volumes in another hand. Hawthorne's copy of Shakespeare's works in fourteen volumes, with the novelist's autograph in each volume and pencilled notes by his son and daughter, was sold for $1400, while the original manuscript of Washington Irving's Bracebridge Hall written on 155 octavo leaves, brought $1315. Among the important manuscripts sold were Coleridge's Orsino ($125), Moore's Epicurean ($725), Walt Whitman's war diary ($150), a portion of the manuscript of Poe's Tamerlane ($801), and Cowper's Legal Commonplace Book ($80). The entire library brought the sum of $56,000, probably double the amount originally paid for it by its owner.

FINE ART

TEMPERAMENT IN PAINTING

To any one interested in the question of nationality in art there is now an excellent opportunity for research work. For following the Whistler Exhibition at the New Gallery, comes an interesting little loan collection of paintings in oil and water-colour by Mr. Sargent at the new Carfax Gallery, off Jermyn Street. That Whistler and Mr. Sargent are the two greatest and most distinctive painters America has yet produced, few will be prepared to deny; and many may be willing to go further and concede that Mr. Sargent's art bears the impress of his nationality. To speak in the language of his countrymen Mr. Sargent is a regular "hustler" in paint, who gets "right there" without the slightest hesitation. In his painting are all the qualities we admire in the American man of business. He is sure, wonderfully sure; he goes straight to the point, and he is rarely reticent as to the result. There is exuberant self-confidence in every one of his dashing brush-strokes. He is quick, alert, forcible, decisive. We watch him rapidly striding from success to success with something of the wonder and respectful envy with which we follow the career of a New York multi-millionaire.

How far this thing which Mr. Sargent and his compatriot millionaires have in common is nationality or personality, is a matter not easy to decide. The analysis of national character is largely a question of arithmetic, an attempt to find the greatest common multiple of a number of varying, distinct, and contradictory individualities. Let one look diligently enough and he will find all sorts of nationalities in any one nation. We should be chary, then, of branding as American, characteristics which distinguish only a small section of the inhabitants of New York and Chicago. If we say that Mr. Sargent is a typically American painter, we merely mean that parallels may be drawn between his art and the characteristics of the type of American with whom we in England are most familiar. With a little more trouble one might hope to show that Whistler also was a typically American painter, to draw a parallel between his art and the characteristics of an American with whom we are less familiar, the reserved, dignified, low-voiced seigneur from the Southern States.

Seriously, it may be doubted whether the difference between Whistler's art and the art of Mr. Sargent is greater than the difference between a Northerner and a Southerner. Two qualities, at least, they have in common, courageous daring and nervous energy, the energy is rigorously restrained in a Whistler as it is emphatically expressed in a Sargent. These qualities may possibly be found in most Americans, but the difficulty of arriving at the American national character is that the nation itself is a mixed race. Underneath the question of nationality there always lies the question of race, and this is the more important. A man may change his nationality, but he cannot change his race. A young nation, a conglomerate of distinct and different races cannot in three or four generations evolve a national type. In the United States the Teutonic, Celtic, Latin and Slavonic elements have hardly as yet fused sufficiently for an American nationality to be born of their union. Consequently it is easier to classify her greatest sons as Celts and Teutons than as Americans. The American temperament is an unknown quantity, the Teutonic and Celtic we know and recognise. The former we recognise in Mr. Sargent, the latter in Mr. Whistler.

It is not necessary, of course, for a man to be a pure Celt in order to possess the Celtic temperament; still it is interesting to know that Whistler inherited a strong strain of Irish blood from his father, of Scotch from his mother. But without knowing anything of his parentage, one might have discerned his Celtic temperament in his art. Celtic art and Celtic thought have ever been characterised by a certain reticence. The Celt does not demand attention; he waits for it to be given. And when that attention has been given, he often makes a deeper impression on the memory than the Teuton with his more stentorian voice. Never in his portraits, his nocturnes, or in his etchings, does Whistler force himself upon our notice. He does not shout across a gallery to us. If we like to pass him by, we may. He will not stretch a finger to stop us. But if we wait—then, like a true Celt, he gives himself to us wholly, and transports us into a fairy land of common things transfigured. All that he sees, be they the commonest objects imaginable, he invests with a halo of poetic mystery, and expresses in a language at once simple and subtle, simple by reason of its direct emotional appeal, subtle by reason of its profound penetration. In all this Whistler shows his Celtic temperament, and his painting has the virtues of Chateaubriand's prose. Finally, Whistler has that sense of the world's sorrow from which the Celt is rarely free. A sweet melancholy pervades all his paintings as it does the greatest Celtic literature. He can never indulge in unrestrained gaiety as a painter of the Netherlands. There is pathos in the Battersea nocturnes, pathos in the portraits of the "Mother," the "Carlyle," the "Miss Alexander," always pathos and a recognition of the "Sorrow more beautiful than Beauty's self."

Wholly different is the temperament of Mr. Sargent, who is as emphatic as Whistler is reticent. He calls us with the trumpet notes of the great Teutonic thinkers, and we cannot choose but come. There is no denying his vehemence; we can no more escape looking at his paintings than we can escape hearing of Goethe and Schopenhauer. His art is as militant as Whistler's is mystical, as analytic as Whistler's is intuitive. One does not deny intelligence to Whistler, or emotion to Mr. Sargent, nevertheless one is convinced that Whistler's painting is governed by his heart, Mr. Sargent's by his head. Mr. Sargent knows: Whistler felt. Nobody doubts that Mr. Sargent feels what he sees intensely, or that Whistler knew perfectly well what he was about. But there is this difference between them, a temperamental difference. When Mr. Sargent finds himself confronted by a scene, he seems to know exactly how he will record it; and record it he does, with sure touches and unerring skill. On the other hand, when Whistler was confronted by a scene, one thinks that he felt how it ought to be recorded, and that after much labour and much taking of thought, suddenly, it happened! and exactly how it happened Whistler himself could not have told. To call Mr. Sargent facile, would be to underestimate his strength; but one might say that his genius works consciously. Whistler's, for all his consummate knowledge of his craft, worked unconsciously, and his greatest achievements were the result of moments one believes to have been inspired.

ETCHINGS OLD AND NEW

THE intelligent appreciation of original etching is undoubtedly becoming more general, not only in Germany, where a keen interest is taken in English etchers of to-day and their works, but also in our own country. It is a sign of the times that exhibitions of etchings are held with increasing frequency at galleries hitherto associated mainly with pictures and water-colours, and that one dealer after another is adding etchings by contemporary artists to his stock. Two or three years ago the number of painter-etchers whose work could be found at any West End gallery at all was very limited; those who were not among the favoured few had but one chance in the year of bringing their work to the notice of the public, and there was little likelihood of any inquiry being made for their etchings in the interval between one exhibition at the Painter-Etchers and the next. Now the tide has turned; collectors are beginning to discover that etchings exist elsewhere than on exhibition walls, and the enterprising organisers of such great provincial exhibitions as were held in two successive years at Wolverhampton and Bradford have done much to educate public taste by the prominence they have given to the best black-and-white work of the day. There are even signs that provincial print-rooms of a permanent character may be established at no distant date.

Meanwhile such an exhibition as Mr. Paterson has just opened at 5 Old Bond Street is to be commended for the catholicity of taste to which it bears witness. There are living masters and dead, native and foreign, among the thirteen etchers represented; one of them is entirely new and several are scarcely ever to be seen at exhibitions. This does not apply to Rembrandt, Méryon and Whistler, but it is long since Norblin saw the light; it was rather unkind to place him, when resuscitated, so near to Rembrandt, for he was merely one of the best of Rembrandt's belated imitators who abounded in the eighteenth century. Keene is fairly represented; Gaillard and Bracquemond very scantily, the latter, in fact, by one example only, for the portrait of Méryon is not the exceedingly scarce original, but the good photographic reproduction which the etcher himself retouched. Sir J. C. Robinson, as we said on the occasion of this year's exhibition at the Painter-Etchers, has hardly met with due recognition, and we are glad to see another group here of his stormy skies and gleams of sunshine; the finest, perhaps, is "October Rainfall in Spain." The Manet etchings, selected from a set of thirty just published in a portfolio, will excite curiosity now that many of his pictures have so recently been seen in London. They are saturated with Spanish influence; Manet has seen Velasquez through the eyes of Goya, and never lets us forget his hero-worship. "The Dead Toreador" (1864) marks a stage half-way between Goya's "Desastros" and Mr. Strang's Kipling series. M. Théodore Roussel is one of the most accomplished followers of Whistler, and he has exhibited so rarely that we are glad to see him well represented on this occasion. "Pierrot en Pied" and some of the Chelsea etchings are delightful. There are eleven Camerons, chiefly of recent date, including three of his Paris set, the beautiful "Montvilliers," some other French subjects and "John Knox's House." Mr. D. S. MacLaughlan, a Canadian artist who has made his home in Paris, has exhibited little in London except at the International Exhibition. Some recent etchings done in Italy show him at his best; two of these, "Pavia" and "Ponte Ticino," are on the walls, and others, including a very beautiful "Bologna," may be seen in a portfolio; alike in technique and in selection of subject these are among the best etchings of recent years that we have seen, and we shall expect great things of Mr. MacLaughlan if so satisfactory a progress continues. Compared with these his earlier Paris etchings are uninteresting and confused. "La Flèche, Rouen" is a fine piece of careful drawing; the artist has spared no pains in dealing thoroughly with a difficult subject, but false biting, in this as in some other plates, detracts a little from the final effect. Mr. Stone's Copenhagen etchings, of which "The Canal" is the most successful, show very good intentions, hampered by a certain timidity; if this be, as we believe, his first appearance, a tentative method need not be harshly judged; this goodly company of famous etchers places a beginner at a disadvantage.

C. D.

ART SALES

THE collection of pictures of the English and Continental schools and water-colours of the late Mr. Abraham Mitchell of Bradford and the pictures of Mr. Joseph Mitchell of Bradford were sold by Messrs. Christie on Saturday, April 1. The highest price was fetched by a road scene with a cow and some sheep, by C. Troyon, 880 guineas. Other pictures sold were: J. Linnell, sen., "Harvest Time," 1869, 530 guineas, and "Driving Cattle and Sheep Through a Valley," 1830, 280 guineas; Josef Israels, "Dutch peasant-woman sewing," 520 guineas; Peter Graham, "Driving Sheep over the Moor," 1875, 410 guineas; Sir L. Alma-Tadema, "Under the Archway," 380 guineas; S. Nasmyth, "A View in Surrey," 1831, 330 guineas; Auguste Bonheur, "Homeward Bound," 1864, 330 guineas; P. J. Clays, "Vessels at the Mouth of a River," 1874, 280 guineas; C. Fielding (water-colour), "The Wreck," 1835, 270 guineas.

At a recent sale of early English engravings and old sporting colour prints at Messrs. Christie's, Meyer's mezzotint after Romney of "Lady Hamilton as Nature" (his earliest portrait of Emma) first published state, wide margin, fetched 340 guineas. A similar proof fetched 385 guineas in 1903, and a colour print of the same fetched £470 in 1899.

At the sale of old English Silver at Messrs. Christie's on April 6, the highest price was fetched by a Charles II. porringer with flat cover and formal handles, with a decoration of a band of cut card work, 1676, £209 8s. This was at the rate of 240s. per ounce; but a Charles I. plain goblet with V-shaped bowl, on baluster stem and circular foot, 1633, which was sold for £81 5s., fetched 325s. per ounce. A Charles II. plain peg tankard, with flat cover, hollow scroll handle and double billet, York, 1670, was sold for £200 5s. 3d. (=185s. per ounce); a pair of Charles II. silver-gilt goblets, embossed with spiral fluting round the lower part, 1683, £159 12s. (=84s. per ounce).

On April 7, Messrs. Christie sold the collection of porcelain, faience, &c., of the late Mr. Henry Willett of Brighton. The most important lots were a bronze relief by Peter Vischer of Aristophanes, on carved plinth 9 in., 600 guineas; and a pair of early sixteenth-century French relief bronzes of Louis XII. of France and his third wife, Princess Mary of England, the reliefs applied upon verde-antique marbles in frames of gilt and painted wood, 380 guineas.

At the sale of Mr. Herbert G. Huggins's engravings on Tuesday, some record prices were fetched, and in three cases of engravings after Reynolds—Countess of Harrington, whole length, by Valentine Green, first state, wide margin, 650 guineas; Lady Elizabeth Compton, whole length, by Valentine Green, 500 guineas; and Mrs. Pelham feeding chickens, whole length, by W. Dickinson, untrimmed margins, 390 guineas—the engravings fetched more than was paid for the original pictures. Of the remainder of the lots we have only space to mention those that fetched 50 guineas and over; which were as follows: After Sir Joshua Reynolds: Lady Elizabeth Foster, by F. Bartolozzi, in colours, 82 guineas; Lady Smyth and children, by the same, also in colours, 52 guineas; Mrs. Braddyll, by Samuel Cousins, 50 guineas; Colonel Tarleton, by J. R. Smith, first state, 62 guineas; Warren Hastings, by T. Watson, first state, with wide margins, 50 guineas; Lady Beaumont, by J. R. Smith, first state, 68 guineas; Miss Mary Horneck, by R. Dunkarton, 58 guineas; Mrs. Carnac, by J. R. Smith, second published state, 66 guineas; Lady Bampfylde, by T. Watson, second state, 86 guineas; the Countess of Salisbury, by V. Green, second state, 63 guineas; the daughters of Sir Thomas Frankland, by W. Ward, first published state, with the title in open etched letters, 560 guineas; Countess Cholmondeley and son, by Charles Turner, first state, with wide margins, 220 guineas. There were also the following portraits: Lady Rushout and daughter, as "Content and Innocence," after A. Kauffman, by Burke, in colours, 66 guineas; Mrs. Gwynne and Mrs. Bunbury, after Gardner, by W. Dickinson, 88 guineas; the Beauties of Windsor, after Sir P. Lely, by T. Watson, the set of six, proofs before letters, 64 guineas; Lady Acland and children, after Sir T. Lawrence, by S. Cousins, 52 guineas; and Lady Charlotte Legge, after G. Romney, by J. Grozer, first published state, 100 guineas.

There were also the following: "The Sleeping Nymph," after J. Hoppner, by W. Ward, in colours, 68 guineas; "The Gamblers" and "The Fortune-Tellers," after the Rev. W. Peters, by J. R. Smith, a pair of open letter proofs, 78 guineas; "The Promenade at Carlisle House," by and after J. R. Smith, 72 guineas; "Selling Rabbits" and "The Citizen's Retreat," after J. Ward, by W. Ward, in colours, 62 guineas; a set of "The Cries of London," after F. Wheatley, by various engravers, the thirteen printed in colours, 390 guineas; and the following, in colours, after G. Morland: "The Return from Market," by J. R. Smith, 78 guineas; "A Party Angling" and "The Anglers' Repast," by Ward and Keating, 78 guineas; "The Farmer's Stable," by W. Ward, 55 guineas; and "Innocence Alarmed," by Smith, with wide margin, 80 guineas.

At the Henry Willett sale at Messrs. Christie's on Monday the most important lots were as follows: Head of a Highland lassie (Mrs. Ruskin), drawing by Millais, 130 guineas; An early German triptych on panel, with an Emperor and Empress on horseback and a procession, 130 guineas; a Madonna by Gaudenzio Ferrari, 185 guineas; Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, by Hans Holbein, 165 guineas; another portrait ascribed to Holbein, 100 guineas; B. van Orley, the Madonna, 175 guineas; a head of a girl by Romney, 95 guineas; Miss Elizabeth Gunning, by Reynolds, 70 guineas; and a series of twenty-five portraits by Bramantino, which formed part of a frieze in a room in the Gonzaga Palace of San Martino, Mantua, 540 guineas.

At a sale of modern pictures on Saturday last at Messrs. Christie's two pictures of roses by Fantin-Latour fetched 440 guineas, and a picture of ewes and lambs by E. Verboeckhoven, 1871, 190 guineas.

THE DRAMA

"ALICE SIT-BY-THE-FIRE" AT THE DUKE OF YORK'S THEATRE

THIRTEEN years ago Robert Louis Stevenson wrote to Mr. Barrie a letter in which occurred this piece of excellent literary criticism:

"The Little Minister ought to have ended badly; we all know it did. . . Now, your book began to end well. You let yourself fall in love with and fondle and smile at your puppets. Once you had done that, your honour was committed. . ."

So The Little Minister ended happily. Alice Sit-by-the-Fire ends happily, too. That is to say, Mr. Barrie has "lied about" the real ending with the same "grace and good feeling" for which Stevenson was "infinitely grateful" to him when he hid the true end of The Little Minister. The curtain falls on a "happy ending" that must inevitably breed strife and misunderstanding in the sequel. Let us take a surreptitious peep at this "Page from a Daughter's Diary," as Mr. Barrie calls it, and learn the true situation from the private copy-book of Amy Grey, aged seventeen.

"Father and mother came home from India to-day," runs the first entry. "Father's a dear and not so yellow after all. But it isn't safe to talk to him about rupees. As for mother, I can't make her out at all. She's so cold and reserved. I wanted to fling myself in her arms, but she held me at arm's length and gave me a cold little peck. I can never love her."

Scarcely was the ink dry on this when Amy saw her mother kiss Stephen Rollo, the old Anglo-Indian, and heard him say: "Then you'll come to-night." Horror of Amy, who grasps the situation with the intuitive knowledge of life born of witnessing five popular plays in one week. "I must save her," she confides to her diary. "I shall go to his rooms in evening dress, demand her letters back, and if I am discovered, step forth and say: 'He is my affianced husband.'"

Thus properly attired for the part, Amy confronts the bewildered Rollo, when—the irony and the humour of it—enter Colonel Grey and his wife! In an instant the situation which has been developed with such splendid dexterity passes from the realm of fantastic satire to unabashed melodrama. "He is my affianced husband," cries sacrificial Amy, and goes home to write in her diary: "To-night I have saved my mother's honour." Even when all is explained and the Colonel and his wife laugh over their daughter's folly, the stage-struck child is left to wallow in the priggish complacency of her selfish delusion that henceforth she is directly responsible for her mother's right conduct in life. Why has the author ended his play thus? The answer is simple. Mr. Barrie is constitutionally unable to discern the line of demarcation between Sentiment and the dangerous expanse of Sentimentality that lies beyond. Again he returns to the fascinating theme of the mother heart, and handles it with that exquisite surety of touch, that almost feminine tenderness and that diaphanous humour which are his unique gifts. No more poignant or gracious picture of womanhood can be imagined than that of Alice Grey, the wayward woman, young at heart, who, fresh from the frivolities and gallantries of Anglo-Indian life, cannot reconcile herself to new facts—who, while yearning for her children's love, cannot justify them by demeaning herself as a staid and sober matron. That this sweetly sane and adorable woman should submit to the impertinent dominion of her daughter seems neither true nor humorous. The raison d'être of the situation is that excess which makes humour vassal to sentimentality. In order that Mrs. Grey may become Alice Sit-by-the-Fire—a rôle there seems no reason she should adopt—the author heaps anti-climax on anti-climax and quite à propos des bolles makes her indulge in superfluous confession of minute sins to her somewhat stolid husband. The injudicious end, the flood of sentimentality, and the prolix dialogue return upon Critic Sit-by-the-Fire, as he ponders on the play some days after its performance. He recalls too the conflict of dramatic themes—the delicious satire on drawing-room melodrama and the human comedy of Alice and her children—opposites which Mr. Barrie has failed to harmonise into unity, imperilling thus the interest and value of this brilliant amalgam of methods. As he watched the play, however, its manifold virtues, its originality, its charm were more apparent. Convention has hallowed the epithet “whimsical” to describe Mr. Barrie’s work. The present writer yields and employs the word. “Whimsical” it is—but how much more? It is impossible to reflect its gay insouciance, its spontaneity, its keen irrelevancies, its fantastic spirit. These qualities are less evident than in The Admirable Crichton and Peter Pan. Indeed, the whole work moves on a lower plane than either of these, how much lower than Crichton we will not gauge. Its effervescent gaiety, however, inspires Miss Ellen Terry, whose bubbling good-humour and exquisite womanliness make an irresistible combination. Miss Irene Vanbrugh is innocent mischief incarnate; no shade of Amy’s character, however fine, escapes her; she revels in the subtlety of the satire. In an excellent cast, Mr. Aubrey Smith deserves especial praise for a wholly natural and unforced study of sober Colonel Grey. Nevertheless, pleasurable as is the general effect of Alice Sit-by-the-Fire, our physicians are not likely to prescribe “an evening with Barrie” as a cure for the pessimism engendered by the zeitgeist of modernity, so long as Pantaloön precedes the main piece at the Duke of York’s Theatre. This is a Barrie experiment, a clever but sinister study of the egotism of the histrionic temperament which scarcely attunes the mind for what comes after. Mr. Gerald du Maurier finds a happy opportunity in it for some versatile and finished acting. Thus Pantaloön is justified of its existence.

“OTHELLO” AT THE SHAFTESBURY THEATRE

A CRITIC must approach with some regret the task that awaits him here. Not insensible of the high claims of courage, wishing to voice his admiration of an earnest spirit and sincere, longing to encourage youth in a splendid venture, he must yet be either silent or speak in accents of dispraise. Miss Tita Brand, the young actress who has undertaken that thirteenth labour of Hercules, the control of a theatre, has commended herself to the discerning by clever work, informed with unusual intelligence and power, in various plays, ranging from the restrained intensity of Everyman to the unrestraint of The Edge of the Storm. Presumably of her own free will, she has elected to play the rôle of Desdemona, a fact that affords the curious an interesting glimpse of the workings of the histrionic mind. Than the wife of the noble Moor, one finds no gentler, more submissive creature in the wide galaxy of Shakespeare’s womankind. Yet here is an actress, framed by nature for the portraiture of bodily and mental power, who must needs try to shrink herself to the dimensions of the timorous, clinging Desdemona. Nature is not so easily foiled, even by an ambitious actress, eager, in the pride of her youth, to subdue physical and intellectual difficulties, to reconcile the irreconcilable. Not once, in spite of her expenditure of much intelligence and much striving, does Miss Brand lull us to illusion; each line of her figure, meet for the enactment of the deep-bosomed mother of heroes, each note of her voice, tuned to the utterance of heroic words, rebels against it. Miss Brand cannot diminish herself to “fair Desdemona’s” proportions. Generous of her own powers, Miss Brand has also shown herself generous as manager. Mr. Hubert Carter, the Othello, is but little known to London. Here then is his chance. Alas that no triumph may be recorded! Credit him with a fine physique, intelligence and sincerity one can, but—“the rest is silence.” Or at least it should be, were it not the implicit duty of criticism to analyse the causes of failure. Those who recall Mr. Forbes Robertson’s Othello—a conception open to dispute—can never forget the superb nobility of the Moor, his dignity, his sweet charm. These are the essential notes of his character. In Mr. Carter’s Othello they are absent, and the rôle is consequently bereft of those qualities which win the sympathy of the onlooker. Mr. Carter’s elocution, too, smacks of the class-room, jerky, over-insistent, and monotonous. Sound and fury there are; raging but no passion; the grandeur, the beauty and the pathos of Othello are beyond Mr. Carter’s present powers of expression. For these chief disappointments, compensation, inadequate but gratifying, is to be found in certain individual performances—in Mr. Barnes’ plausible, guileless picture of Iago, a portrait lacking due emphasis of the subtle and complex nature of the “ancient’s” villainy; in the pathetic figure of Mr. Anson’s Brabantio, in Mr. Ainley’s delicately-tinted study of Cassio, in Miss Granville’s triumph over her modernity as Emilia, a rôle in which she almost reaches tragic greatness, and certainly achieves fine heights of power and pathos. For these things and the sober elegance of the mounting one is duly thankful. Our admiration, too, goes out to the young actress-manager for her spirit in ignoring the “star” system—but we could have hoped that she had found a new genius for Othello, and had not lost herself in Desdemona.

“THE TROJAN WOMEN” AT THE COURT THEATRE

THE Troades of Euripides is one long wail. Troy has fallen; and the women of Troy, with Hecuba in their midst, stand in the keep, wailing for what has passed, and for what is to come. From this wailing there is little relief; a few bursts of passion from Queen Hecuba; the wild prophecies of Cassandra, as she goes forth to the ship of Agamemnon, soon, as we know, to share his death at Clytemnestra’s hand in Argos; a sharp encounter between Helen and Hecuba in the presence of doubting Menelaus, and the awful tragedy of the death of little Astyanax, hurled from the walls of Troy by order of the Greeks, and buried in the great shield of his father, Hector. These are all the episodes that amount to anything like action. The rest is all wailing. For the action lies behind. Fuit Ilium et ingens gloria. The men of Troy are all dead, lying naked, most of them, and unburied under their own walls: only the women are left—to wail for the sons and husbands they have lost, for the city that is being burned beneath their eyes, for the captivity and shame that await them, when once the long ships of the Greeks shall have reached their haven. Men are few in the play; and it is not distinctively the manly side of those who appear that the dramatist dwells on. Menelaus, once the great warrior, is here torn between love and loathing of Helen; he wavers like any woman, and takes Helen alive to his ship with an excuse of deferred vengeance which is worthy of Hamlet—or a woman. Talthybius, the Greek herald, the bearer of hateful tidings, breaks down under the horror of his lords’ commands, and wails, in his own way, like the captives he herds before him. It is a play of women.

We know of no so forcible expression in literature of the sense of desolation, of loneliness, of a void. The great tide of action has rolled away from Troy for ever. The noble deeds of arms, the feasting, the love, the heroes in breast-plates and plumed helmets—all are gone; what remains is a handful of women huddled together in a half-ruined tower. The poignancy of that feeling is all but undurable. It is the emotional essence of the play—a sentiment that grips one more and more, as one after another the great names depart, and leave yet a smaller handful in cowering loneliness. We found it proof even against the suspicion of weariness which, perhaps inevitably, attends, in these hurried days of ours, the long-drawn-out wailing of the women. The wailing seems excessive; and yet, The Trojan Women being what it is, it is difficult to see what else the actors could have done.

All who have sufficient interest in the Greek drama to visit these Vedrenne-Barker matinées of the play (and those who have not will miss what they should not miss) will, no doubt, have seen Professor Gilbert Murray's admirable introduction to the translation which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of March 11, and which forms the text used in the performance. There is no need, therefore, to dwell on what the poet-translator points out as the chief message of the play, the "rebel passion" pity, here seen for the first time in European literature exalted into a moving principle. We must close an all too brief account of the performance by calling special attention to a very fine, if not always unexceptionable rendering of the trying part of Hecuba by Miss Marie Brema, Miss Edyth Olive's most pathetic and beautiful Cassandra, and the Talthybius of Mr. James Hearn, which, indeed, it would be hard to praise too highly. For the rest, Miss Wynne-Matthieson plays Andromache, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Helen, and Mr. Dennis Eadie, Menelaus; and all play well.

SCIENCE

THE VARIETIES OF OPTIMISM

THE observed varieties of optimism may be classified, I think, according to their origin, or according to their measure. In attempting such a classification one is perhaps likely to meet with more success than if it were essayed to answer the question: "What is optimism?" This, I believe, would be almost profitless; for I have heard two admirers of Mr. George Meredith, each thoroughly conversant with his work, declare respectively that he is an optimist and a pessimist. In this and a hundred other cases it is probable that the argument is not about facts but about names. It is better, therefore, to forego any definition, and to ask ourselves what are the states of mind that may be included in the widest meaning of the term optimism.

Probably the most common and certainly the most practically important variety of optimism—to begin with the classification by origins—is not so much a state of mind as a state of body. This variety one may call organic, constitutional, visceral, or—if you like—gastric optimism. It invariably presupposes a good digestion. Though entirely non-rational, it is capable of a rational explanation. It is now known that the most important of the various "senses" which supplement the familiar five, is dependent upon the innumerable sensory nerves which proceed from the internal organs to the brain. In health, these nerves combine to produce the "organic sense of well-being," the perversion and reversal of which are the characteristic feature common to all forms of melancholia. In other states, such as certain forms of mania, and in ecstasy, this sense may be heightened, but not reversed. In health, then, every man has an organic bias towards optimism. The overwhelming majority of people, whose normal health is not qualified even by the "malady of thought," are therefore optimists in virtue of their "organic sense of well-being." This variety of optimism is, as I have said, entirely non-rational, and thus may be compatible with a belief in hell, which no sympathetic person could realise without loss of his sanity, not to mention his optimism. But so powerful is the control exercised by the organic sensations over the higher faculties of most of us, that, given healthy viscera, it may be doubted whether the imagination is capable of realising and explicitly appreciating the unspeakable ghastliness of such a belief. In describing gastric optimism as non-rational, however, I do not mean to stigmatise it. Granted that not one per cent. of the population thinks about the things that permanently matter, it is indeed well that gastric optimism should exist and exercise such power. Its genesis is obvious to the evolutionist, who sees in it a factor that makes for fitness and survival. We therefore note its existence, congratulate ourselves thereupon, admit its inestimable practical worth, but dismiss it as of no rational or philosophic weight, save in so far as its existence is itself an argument for rational optimism.

Next in order of importance, perhaps, is the optimism which has a very different origin—not in the abdomen, but in the acceptance of some comforting creed. The reader certainly does not need my assistance in recalling the innumerable creeds—all, of course, of Oriental origin, Western man never yet having achieved the making of a religion, unless we except Christian science and the like—which postulate a happy and illimitable hereafter to compensate for these present ills, "which are but for a moment." It is a common characteristic of these many creeds, ancient and modern, that they emphasise the ills of this life in contrast with the promise of the next. They thus inculcate a terrestrial pessimism, but a celestial optimism. Herein is a distinction to be noted in comparing this, which is the optimism of faith, with the third species now to be named, which is the optimism of reason. But again I protest that I am attempting to classify—not to pass judgment. And though it would be easy, and might on occasion be expedient, to jeer at gastric optimism, or at the optimism of the faith which anticipates a happy hunting-ground, or a harem, or a harp, yet I believe that writer and readers in good health would probably each acknowledge some share in each of these varieties of optimism—that of the abdomen, that of faith (or hope), and that of reason. Most will offer some measure of some sort of assent to the optimism of faith as expressed by Socrates—"To the good man no evil thing can happen."

If I may be allowed yet another array of terms, I will name these three varieties of optimism, according to their origin, sensory optimism, emotional optimism, rational optimism.

Let us now attempt another classification, according to the measure of optimism. Obviously this classification will include various beliefs which may be referred, in their origin, to one or all of the causes named.

We must begin with the most thorough-going optimism—to which alone the term can properly be applied: for all the others are no more than greater or less degrees of meliorism. This, then, I take it, is the most universal form of the doctrine which used to be known as universalism, and which teaches that there is an eternally happy future for all men. [It is interesting to observe that modern theological teaching seems to be tending towards this position. I knew a child who was officially taught that though there is a hell, yet there is probably no one in it but Judas Iscariot.] But the most universal form of Universalism would extend its optimism to every sentient thing: "admitted to that equal sky, his faithful dog shall bear him company." The broken bird whom Mr. Thomas Hardy has described as crawling away to die, with the "sportsman's" missile in its soft tissues; the albatross shot by the ancient mariner; the coster's donkey—all alike are to be recompensed, and much more than recompensed. No pang of pain, no distress of mind or soul, ever felt by any sentient thing, since the dawn of sentience, but shall be paid for with "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over." This alone can literally be called optimism. The next approach to it is Universalism proper, which postulates salvation and compensation for all men, just and unjust—but not for a "missing link," an ape, a bird, a kitten, or a worm. Whether these doctrines are sensory, emotional or rational in origin the reader will consider.

Pope, who has already given me one quotation, will serve to illustrate another form of optimism. [One must use the word despite its inaccuracy.] This teaches that all partial evil is universal good: "One truth is clear, whatever is, is right." This, as Dickens somewhere remarks, involves the assertion that nothing that ever was, was wrong. Perhaps that is not a very profound criticism; but, at any rate, here is another variety of optimism well defined. A variant of it, much more poignant and affecting in expression, as well as more philosophic and intelligible, is to be found in Browning's "Abt Vogler": "There shall never be one lost good"; "Why rushed the discords in, but that harmony should be prized?" This, I think, is more in consonance with the teaching of evolutionary science than is Carlyle's "The great soul of the world is just;" or the vague corresponding line from the "Essay on Man,"—"All Discord, Harmony not understood." If we hear only discord and are racked therewith, what avails it to us that some one may be listening to the music of the spheres? Whereas Browning teaches that the Discord is the condition of the Harmony. Pope's lines, indeed, are more ponderous than weighty.

Browning's sublime lines naturally suggest another variety of optimism of which we may regard Leibnitz as a type, with his "best of all possible worlds." This, of course, did not mean, as is sometimes thought, that no improvement on this world is conceivable; a doctrine which, like the most universal Universalism, would indeed be properly entitled to be described as optimism. Leibnitz by no means meant to deny the existence of any kind of evil: his conception was nearer Browning's. Given certain conditions inherent in things—by whom given, we are not told—the Deity has done his best. This may be a vale of tears, but that is not the Deity's fault—no more could fairly have been expected of him in the circumstances; this is the best world that was possible. Doubtless we can imagine a better, but if we remember how seriously he was handicapped, we must admit that he is not to blame. The reader will acquit me of any intention to be irreverent; and perhaps he will agree that so puerile a conception of the Eternal is as well and seriously met by ridicule as by ostensibly serious argument. This saying of Leibnitz excellently illustrates the result of trying to trim Truth to the taste of theologians. Nowadays we are hardly likely to worship, in place of the Unconditioned Condition of All things, a supposititious person who is conceived as "making the best of a bad job."

From these and many other variants of so-called optimism we pass by slow degrees, through such opinions as that which belittles present and personal evil by saying "it will be all the same a century hence," to attitudes which are optimistic only in so far as they repudiate explicit pessimism. Language is plainly in need of a word which shall express the doctrine that good and evil are balanced or that "things might have been better and might have been worse"—an opinion which is usually, and most improperly, regarded as optimistic, as if any denial of pessimism were optimism; but at present we ask whether a man is an optimist or a pessimist, as if there were no choice save between two antithetic superlatives.

After this attempt to classify the varieties of opinion usually called optimistic, first according to their genesis, and secondly according to their measure, it remains to be considered what measure of rational optimism or meliorism may be based upon scientific considerations. We must ask ourselves whether all forms of optimism, even though digestive or emotional in their origin, are not in some measure their own justification; and whilst attempting to discount the bias of health towards "looking on the bright side of things," we must inquire into the truth of such sayings as that "the darkest hour comes before the dawn," and that "when things are at their worst they begin to mend." Last we must ask whether the true rational optimism is not, "whatever is, is right"—but, "whatever is wrong may be righted."

C. W. SALEEBY.

MUSIC

"L'APRÈS-MIDI D'UN FAUNE," BY CLAUDE DEBUSSY

ON April 1 the Queen's Hall might not inaptly have borrowed the title of Erckmann-Chatrian's fascinating story, and called itself "La maison forestière," so subtly did the spirit of a vernal nature's solitudes dominate its musical atmosphere. On that afternoon the first half of an interesting programme began with Mendelssohn's delicate overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and ended with the prelude "L'après-midi d'un Faune," by Claude Debussy.

The works of this young French composer are comparatively little known here, with the exception of a few charming songs and one or two weird and tortuous piano-pieces. In the latter M. Debussy's methods forcibly bring to mind those of his compatriot Fauré, of whom Leschetizki once remarked that, if he simply wanted a glass of water, he would apparently be forced to twist himself backwards, clasp it with contorted wrist, slide it over one knee, under the other, round the waist, beneath the arms, up the back, past the ears, and so to his lips, changing hands a dozen times on the way. Debussy is however a composer of renown in his own country, where, besides an orchestral suite and a quartet for strings, he produced in 1892 at the Opéra Comique an opera entitled "Pelléas and Mélisande," which excited much furious dissension among the critics of the day. The merits or demerits of this opera cannot be discussed and determined here; we prefer to judge M. Debussy by his orchestral prelude "L'après-midi d'un Faune," which certainly claims for its author one of the first qualifications of an artist, namely the power of creating atmosphere.

The prelude, which we are told has as its basis a poem of Stéphane Mallarmé, representing the meditations of a faun resting at sultry noon in thick woodland shades, is in fact no more than a musical study in suggestiveness. A few scattered lines of Mallarmé's are given in the analytical notes, to illuminate the languorous and nebulous atmosphere of the music itself. We read that "the Faun meditates on the nymphs he has pursued, some of whom were 'cold as a fountain in tears,' while others were dissolved in sighs. He dreams of 'the thicket bedewed with the chords' of his pipes, of the 'horizon not ruffled by a wrinkle,' and of the 'Sicilian borders of the peaceful pool,' silent beneath the 'flowers of dancing light,' while everything 'burns beneath the tawny hour.'"

He dreams that under

"the shadow of Etna he holds in his arms Venus herself. Then he abruptly breaks off, for punishment will surely follow such presumption. The soul, vacant of words, and the heavy body slowly succumb to the haughty silence of midday. Without delay I must sleep in forgetfulness of this blasphemy."

M. Debussy illustrates the wanderings of his Satyr's mind in five themes, which we may compare to five green woodland paths, subtly interwoven and leading us through solitude on solitude of mysterious enchantment. It is perhaps regrettable that the first theme, given out primarily by the unaccompanied first flute, should be unmelodious, and more suggestive to the ear of the "colt-like whinny," bursting from evil shapes, in Tennyson's "Simon Stylites," than the "wild thrilling liquidity of dewy piping" of which Keats sang in cadences of unsurpassed felicity. The honey-throated Sicilian poet of olden day, praying to the Muses: "Begin, ye Nine, the sweet bucolic lay!" would, we imagine, have been considerably startled by some of the flute-playing extemporised by a modern Gallic Pan. This is perhaps the chilling effect of more Northerly breath on Southern inspiration, for Keats himself invokes the god as a "Strange ministrant of undescribéd sounds," and furthermore describes him as sitting through "whole solemn hours" to hearken "the dreary melody of bedded reeds"—by which illusion we mean no disrespect to Mr. Wood's orchestra, be it understood. But in their imaginative conception of the sylvan deity M. Debussy's ideas coincide rather with those of Theocritus, than Keats. To the French composer, as to Theocritus, he is the lumbering being, half-god, half-beast, horned, bearded, and limbed like a goat, leering of visage, bestially passioned, divine only in his supremacy over rural things. Theocritus, through his shepherd, fears the rage of Pan "who always sleeps at noon." Debussy's Faun in his drowsy hour, meditates on the "victims that have escaped him;"—"the god pursuing, the maid pursued" stamp a Swinburnian emphasis on his complex rhythms; one is vaguely conscious that through the composer's visions of flying, floating nymphs, his sympathies cry out with Tennyson's Lucretius: "Catch her, goat-foot!" In a sense seeing how deeply an erotic spirit flavours literature in France, it is not surprising that some of it should find its way into her national music. But in point of truthful suggestion, how much nearer the real spirit of nature are Keats' lines in the famous hymn to Pan, already quoted:

"Be still the unimaginable lodge
For solitary thinkings; such as dodge
Conception to the very bourne of Heaven,
Then leave the naked brain; be still the leaven
That spreading in this dull and clodded earth
Gives it a touch ethereal."

The italics are ours.

Or let us consider that masterpiece of antique art, the Faun of Praxiteles, as it stands among the cold immortalities of the Capitol—a piece of crystallised movement, radiating sunshine and memories of golden hours from its yellowing marble,

"as if the substance were warm to the touch, and imbued with actual life. Here are no goat-legs, no horned and bearded face, disfigured by a detestable leer."

"It is," says Hawthorne, "the marble image of a young man, leaning his right arm on the trunk or stump of a tree; one hand hangs carelessly by his side, in the other he holds a fragment of a pipe, or some such sylvan instrument. His only garment, a lion's-skin, with the claws upon the shoulder, hangs half-way down his back, leaving his limbs and the entire front of the figure nude. The form thus displayed is marvellously graceful. . . ."

Here is the god indeed, as he stood upright beside the brook Molpeia, with a pipe of young green rushes cut from its crystal eddies in his hand, his hair waved by woodland winds above those pointed ears—ears, as we would fain believe, grown long through listening to the ground, rather than indicative of animality in this fresh and joyous creature. He is nearly naked as a type of unabashed innocence, and has shouldered a lion's skin to signify dominion over forest beasts.

It is related of Praxiteles that he once invited Phryne to choose among his works. Anxious to discover which he himself thought finest, she caused him to be falsely informed that his studio was on fire, upon which the sculptor immediately called out: "Save my Faun, and my Eros!" Eros has since disappeared, but the Faun remains, to the eternal glory of Greek art. And so it is with the Greek myths in general. Many have perished, but in sculpture, in literature, in music, above all in human thought, the Faun survives. There was in our midst, a few years ago, a young American dancer who frisked her way not only into fashion, but into fame, by her marvellous representation of one of these beings, as suggested by an early Italian picture. The very spirit of unfettered Nature leaped in her fantastic steps; her movements, extraordinarily graceful, and all copied from wind-blown boughs, flowing rivulets, the flight of a bird, a swaying flower, were animated apparently by the most gleeful irresponsibility—she seemed neither wholly human, terrestrial, or divine, but a blend of all three. The Faun again. Alone of Greek deities he preserves his immortality through the eternal suggestiveness of Nature in her solitudes. Is it we, or is it Pan himself who follows those mysterious paths, leading to secret brakes, in which all lovers of the soil delight?—paths whose dewy branches still seem to hold the dawn at noon. Who does not know them? And who, when alone pacing their loneliness, is not haunted by dreams of unseen, unknown presences, and yearnings to give these mystical impressions concrete shape? Beauty ever whispers to us thus.

"A book of verses underneath the bough," cries Omar Khayyam,

"A loaf of bread, a jug of wine, and thou
Beside me, singing in the wilderness—
O wilderness were Paradise enow!"

The word "thou" is here addressed to a human love. But we may make the same invocation in spirit, to the spirit, which, singing beside us in the wilderness, turns that wilderness into Paradise. "And thou!—and thou!" cries Debussy's Faun, to the nymphs that evade his clasp in turn, till at last quitting one elusive shape for another, he dreams that he holds in his arms the archetype of all loveliness—Venus herself. And there thought fails him. He sleeps.

We prefer not to take the voluptuous suggestions of the French music and poem too literally. Let us rather believe they represent the noble impulses of human nature towards Nature in her veils—mysterious impressions of that divine passion of being, underlying her seasonable manifestations, towards which our own being leaps and is baffled; as a sudden gush of scent from a hyacinth rushes out under pressure of unknown influences, and is as suddenly arrested and dispersed. "Conceptions" that evade us "to the very bourne of Heaven" indeed!

Yet, however elusive she seems, Nature holds one gift in reserve for her pursuers—the gift of fame. Perishable as is her vesture, those who have touched the hem of her garment are consecrated unto immortality. The old myth of Pan and Syrinx justifies itself even in this workaday world. We hope that Claude Debussy, who, in company of his Faun, has made Sicilian thickets his own, will one day find that, along with Theocritus, with Praxiteles, with the great body of poets, and the rarer and beloved pastoral writers of our own time, he too has pursued an immortal being, and behold, as he touches it, it turns to a flowering laurel in his hands.

E #

CORRESPONDENCE

MONTCALM AND WOLFE

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—In your notice of the third edition of "the Fight with France for North America," your reviewer speaks of my defence of Montcalm's immediate attack on Wolfe as something novel and untenable. On the contrary, it has been a matter of open discussion ever since the "Battle of the Plains" was fought. One of Montcalm's obvious reasons, namely, that Wolfe would entrench himself and draw further men, guns and supplies from the fleet below, he controverts by a most extraordinary suggestion, which I read over many times to be sure I read it aright: to wit—that Montcalm's Indians would have made the path up the cliff impassable! With the fleet at the foot of the cliff and the British army on the top—nay, with even the one British regiment that did remain unengaged above the Foulon while the battle was fought, how could any sharpshooters, much less Montcalm's not very numerous or enthusiastic Indians, quietly take and keep a position enabling them to fire on the path? I confess to utter mystification, and indeed comment would seem superfluous.

However, fully admitting that Montcalm's action is a matter of old contention, which I endeavoured to approach with the modesty becoming a civilian, and nothing but a knowledge of the ground and the circumstances of the opposing armies to guide me, let us see what the latest and most exhaustive accounts of this immortal struggle say.

Major Wood is a soldier and a resident in Quebec. He has had the advantage of many recent disclosures, to say nothing of an intimacy with Dr. Doughty, who recently published a six-volume work on the siege. He is also President of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec. In his lately published "Fight for Canada," half of which is occupied by the Quebec campaign, he has this to say about Montcalm's decision:—

"The unanimous opinion, then, was in favour of an immediate attack, and even though the infantry advance should not be prepared by the 25 guns, as it should have been, this decision was undoubtedly the right one. Indeed there was no choice at all. For with a hostile fleet on the St. Lawrence above Quebec and a hostile army on the promontory itself, the French position was quite untenable. And as famine was imminent, prompt action was necessary. Nor was it of any use to wait for Bougainville, because whatever might be gained by this would be counterbalanced by the additional strength of the British position."

Your reviewer is of course entitled to the other point of view, but his argument against the main part of ours is incredible, and his presentment of my view as original and even eccentric would rather argue an aloofness on his part from the mass of work and criticism that has been expended on this famous exploit, and a lack of knowledge of the ground. Regarding the term "Wolfe's infantry," your Reviewer would probably find, throughout the book, the expression: "Wolfe's Grenadiers," or "Wolfe's Artillery," not used in the particular sense he applies to it. And, moreover, there is a full account of Howe's initiative in light infantry matters—to which he apparently alludes—on page 237.

A. G. BRADLEY.

[Our reviewer writes in reply: "Mr. Bradley supports his contention by references to authorities; may I do likewise? I can claim no knowledge of the ground, as Mr. Bradley can do; but I can claim an acquaintance with the work of the best military history of the present day, Mr. Fortescue's History of the British Army—a book from which it would appear that Mr. Bradley has kept aloof. If I was under a misapprehension about "Wolfe's Light Infantry" I apologise: I find a page with that heading, on which is described the formation of a corps of light infantry, and in view of Mr. Bradley's letter I confess that the page now becomes meaningless to me. There is, no doubt, if the author says so, another, and a hidden, meaning in the page from which the reviewer had better remain aloof."]

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The ACADEMY of to-day refers in two interesting paragraphs to the impending sale of Walter Savage Landor's villa outside Florence. They speak of his residing in it from 1829 to 1859, occasionally. Poverty, or as the ACADEMY writer puts it "his unfitness for family life" drove him "to take refuge in apartments in Florence, where he remained until his death."

Desirous of marking these "apartments" by a Memorial Tablet, certain Englishmen and Americans in the 'eighties consulted Henry Savage Landor (the Tibet traveller) for information concerning the exact house and locality. Except his vague notion that it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of the Church of the Carmine, our united efforts altogether failed to identify the "apartment" hallowed by the last hours of this great if eccentric character.

I received long afterwards a letter from Henry Savage Landor; but never acquired further satisfactory notice of the special knowledge sought for through his instrumentality, which remains, as far as I possess any clue, buried for all our time in complete oblivion.

The ACADEMY relates that Ralph Waldo Emerson once "found the gigantic schoolboy in a cloud of pictures at his villa." I am unable to fix the particular year when Emerson visited Florence, but in 1870 or 1871 I spent a memorable and exclusive evening alone with the eminent American philosopher at an hotel situated in Santa Lucia, Naples, where he alighted for a few hours before embarking for Egypt with an invalid lady, I believe, his daughter.

April 8,

WILLIAM MERCER.

ENGLISH WORDS ON THE CONTINENT

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Your correspondent H. E. F. is inaccurate. In both French and Italian raid means "raid"—incursion, incursione are its correct synonyms. The term was adopted in French military circles at the time of the American civil war, when Mobsby's guerillas and other wandering bands left no doubt as to what a raid was. Later, its use slumbered, and the event which gave the word life and popularity on the Continent was the Jameson incident. Before that, the use of the term was as uncommon as it has become general since. Of late years its meaning has been extended. First it was employed to describe long-distance cavalry races—imitation raids—and now it is applied even to cycling events. The somewhat naïve suggestion that "raid" is, in fact, nothing but the English word "ride" hardly needs confutation. The proper French pronunciation is not "ra-id" but "rèd"—quite different from our English "ride," quite similar to our "raid." Nor is it used to signify any kind of ride, but only that kind of ride which resembles a raid. Has H. E. F., or any other correspondent, ever heard a Frenchman propose to take a "raid" in the Bois de Boulogne?

It is as well that the matter should be cleared up, because many Frenchmen and Italians, as well as Englishmen, are ignorant of the precise provenance of the word. Littré, Hatzfeld and Darmesteter, Edgren, Boielle, and, in brief, nearly all editors of French dictionaries, omit it. In the latest edition of "Larousse," however, the matter is definitely dealt with.

THE WRITER OF THE NOTE.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

- The Masterpieces of Rembrandt*. Brimley Johnson. 6d. net.
 Chaffers, William. Hall Marks on Gold and Silver Plate, illustrated with revised tables of annual date letters employed in the Assay Offices of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to which is added a History of l'orfèvrerie Française. Ninth edition, extended and enlarged, and with the addition of 260 new date letters and marks, and a bibliography edited by Christopher A. Markham. Reeves & Turner, 21s.
 The Connoisseur's Library. General Editor, Cyril Davenport. Heath, Dudley.
Miniatures. Methuen, 25s. net.
 De Sélincourt, Basil. Giotto. Duckworth, 7s. 6d. net.
 Little Books of Art. General Editor, Cyril Davenport. Illuminated Manuscripts. By John W. Bradley, with twenty-one illustrations. Methuen, 2s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

- Sherard, Robert H. Oscar Wilde: The Story of an Unhappy Friendship. Greening, 5s. net.
 Robertson, John M. Chamberlain: A Study. Watts, 6d.
 Grant, Mrs. Colquhoun. A Mother of Csars: A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, wife of Paul I., and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas. Murray, 12s.

DRAMA.

- Lange, M. R. Yseult: a dramatic poem. Digby Long. 2s. 6d. net.
L'Avocat Patelin. A Comedy in Three Acts. Adapted by the Abbé Brueys from the famous farce of the fifteenth century, and performed at the Théâtre Français in 1706. Translated by Samuel F. G. Whitaker. Unwin, 3s. 6d. net.
Mr. Pecksniff's Pupil. A Comedy in Five Acts. Adapted by I. M. Pagan from "Martin Chuzzlewit," by Charles Dickens. Dent, 1s. net.

EDUCATIONAL.

- Finnemore, John. The Story of the English People. Illustrated. (Black's School Text-books. 1s. 4d.)
The Royal University of Ireland: Examination Papers, 1904. A supplement to the University Calendar for the year 1905. Dublin: University Press.
 Morgan, R. B. Introductory Mathematics. With over 100 Diagrams. Blackie, 2s.
 Robinson, Alice J. English Language Notes and Home Work. Blackie, 6d.
 Dumas, Alexandre. Adventures in Switzerland. Edited by Alexander Wright, M.A. Blackie's Little French Classics, 4d.
 Blackie's English School Texts. Edited by W. H. D. Rouse, Litt.D. Macaulay's Second Chapter. Plutarch's Life of Alexander. 8d. each.
 Jones, W. H. S., M.A. The Teaching of Latin. Blackie, 1s. net.
 Atkins, H. G., M.A. German Exercises. Specially arranged to accompany the Skeleton German Grammar. Blackie, 1s.
 Tucker, M. A. Murray's History of England, an outline History for middle forms. Murray, 3s.
 Payen-Payne, De V. French Idioms and Proverbs. A Companion to Deshambert's "Dictionary of Difficulties". Nutt, 3s. 6d.

FICTION.

- Mitford, Bertram. A Frontier Mystery. White, 6s.
 "Rita." Queer Lady Judas. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Gay, Nowell. A Fox in the Family. Digby, Long, 6s.
 Dean, Ellis. A Raw Probationer. Digby, Long, 6s.
 Cattuchlan. Jack Verschoyle's Wife: an Antiquated Novel. Gay & Bird, 6s.
 Oppenheim, E. Phillips. The Master Mummer. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Ward, Lock, 6s. (See p. 420.)
 Sims, George R. Li Ting of London, and other stories. Chatto & Windus, 1s. and 1s. 6d.
 Fitzroy, Isobel. A Quixotic Woman. Murray, 6s.
Friends and Angels: a story of the living dead. Stockwell, 5s.
 Chesson, Mrs. W. H. (Nora Hopper). The Bell and the Arrow: an English Love Story. T. Werner Laurie, 6s. (See p. 420.)
 Roberts, Morley. Captain Balaam of the "Cormorant," and other Sea Comedies. Nash, 3s. 6d.
 Crawford, E. (Mrs. J. A. Crawford). Sorreltop. Drane, 6s.
 Schreiner, Olive. Dreams. New Edition. Unwin, 1s. net.
 Cahan, A. The White Terror and the Red: A Novel of Revolutionary Russia. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.
 Ward, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Trixy. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.
 Swan, Annie S. Christian's Cross, or Tested but True. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.
 Courlander, Alphonse. Seth of the Cross. Nash, 6s.
 Herbertson, Jessie Leckie. The Stigma. Heinemann, 6s.
 Wood, Michael. The Fire of the Rose. St. Mähel Workshop, Bushey, Herts, 6d.
 Tolstoy, Leo. Resurrection. Translated by Louise Maude. Complete and final revision. Constable, 2s. 6d.
 Hewlett, Maurice. Fond Adventures: Tales of the Youth of the World. Macmillan, 6s. (See p. 419.)
 Gunter, Archibald Clavering. The Conscience of a King. Illustrated by Archie Gunn. Ward, Lock, 6s.
 Brown, Vincent. The Disciple's Wife. Duckworth, 6s.
 Marchmont, Arthur W. A Courier of Fortune. Illustrated by Cyrus Cuneo. Ward, Lock, 6s.
 Kelly, M. Harding. Showing the White Feather. Drane, 3s. 6d.
 Raine, Allen. Hearts of Wales. Hutchinson, 6s.
 Gocky, Maxim. The Outcasts, and other Stories. Second impression. Unwin, 1s. net.
 Wells, H. G. A Modern Utopia. Chapman & Hall, 6s. (See p. 414.)
 Wilson, Mary J. The Knight of the Needle Rock and his Days, 1571-1606. Elliot Stock, 6s.
 J. G. P. Tales from Spain. Greening, 6s.
 Houmas, Mount. A Dreamer's Harvest. Greening, 6s.
 Fitz-Gerald, S. J. Adair. Fame the Fiddler: A Story of the Stage. Cheap edition. Greening, 6d.
 Sykes, J. A. C. The Macdonnells. Heinemann, 6s.
 Merriman, Charles Eustace. A Self-Made Man's Wife. Her Letters to Her Son: Being the Woman's View of Certain Famous Correspondence. Illustrated by F. T. Richards. Putnams.
 Driscoll, Clara. The Girl of La Gloria. Illustrated by Hugh W. Ditzler. Putnams.
 Pemberton, Max. Mid the Thick Arrows. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.
 Stewart, Charles D. The Fugitive Blacksmith. Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.
 Warden, Florence. The Youngest Miss Brown. Chatto & Windus, 6s.
 Harrod, Frances. The Taming of the Brute. Methuen, 6s.
 Dodd, Catherine I. A Vagrant Englishwoman. Smith, Elder, 6s.
 Ransome, Arthur. The Stone Lady. Ten Little Papers and Two Mad Stories. Brown, Langham, 2s. 6d. net.

GARDENING.

- My New Zealand Garden*. By a Suffolk lady. Elliot Stock, 3s. 6d. net.

HISTORY AND ARCHÆOLOGY.

- Godard, John George. Racial Supremacy, being studies in Imperialism. Simpkin Marshall, 6s.
 Cadogan, The Hon. Edward. Makers of Modern History: Three Types, Louis Napoleon—Cavour—Bismarck. Murray, 8s. net.
 Murray, Rev. James, M.A. Life in Scotland a Hundred Years Ago, as reflected in the Old Statistical Account of Scotland, 1791-1799. Second edition. Gardner, 3s. 6d. net.
Transactions of the Glasgow Archaeological Society. New Series. Vol. V. Part I. Glasgow: MacLehose.
 Caggese, Romolo. Un comune libero alle porte di Firenze nel secolo XIII. (Prato in Toscana) Studi e Ricerche. Florence: Seeber, 4 lire.
 Mariéjol, Jean H. Histoire de France depuis les origines jusqu'à la Révolution. Tome Sixième. Partie II. Henri IV. et Louis XIII. (1598-1643). Paris: Hachette.
 Scott, Charles Newton. The Age of Marie Antoinette. Revised edition. Simpkin, Marshall.
 Lamprecht, Karl, Ph.D., LL.D. What is History? Five Lectures on the Modern Science of History. Translated from the German by E. A. Andrews. Macmillan, 5s. net.
Indexes of The Great White Book and of the Black Book of the Cinque Ports. Elliot Stock.

LITERATURE.

- The Oxford English Dictionary*. A new English Dictionary on Historical Principles; founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society. Edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray. REE-REIGN, Volume VIII. By W. A. Craigie, M.A. Clarendon Press, 2s. 6d.
Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature of the United Kingdom. Second Series. Vol. XXV. Asher.
The Lord's Prayer in five hundred languages. Comprising the leading languages and their principal dialects throughout the world, with places where spoken. With a preface by Reinhold Rost, C.I.E., LL.D., Ph.D. New and enlarged Edition. Gilbert & Rivington.
 Trench, Richard Chenevix. English, Past and Present. Edited with Emendations by A. Smythe Palmer, D.D. New Edition. Routledge, 2s. 6d.
 Ochsenbein, Dr. Wilhelm. Die Aufnahme Lord Byrons in Deutschland und sein Einfluss auf den jungen Heine. Bern: Francke.

- Herford, C. H. Robert Browning. Blackwood, 2s. 6d.
 Krans, Horatio Sheafe. William Butler Yeats and the Irish Literary Revival. Heinemann. Contemporary Men of Letters Series. 1s. 6d. net.
 Brunetière, Ferdinand. Histoire de la Littérature Française Classique (1515-1830). Tome premier: de Marot à Montaigne (1515-1595). Deuxième Partie. La Pléiade. Paris: Delagrave, 2 f. 50 c.
Arquivo Bibliographico da Bibliotheca da Universidade de Coimbra. Publicacao Mensal. Vol. V. Nos. 2 and 3. Coimbra: Imprensa da Universidade.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- Scharlieb, Mary, M.D., B.S. The Mother's Guide to the health and care of her Children. Routledge, 1s.
The Jewish Encyclopedia, Vol. IX. Funk & Wagnalls.
 Macnamara, Dr. School-Room Humour. Arrowsmith, 1s.
 Barrett, C. R. B., M.A. The History of the Society of Apothecaries of London. Illustrated by the Author. Elliot Stock, £1 1s. net.
 Hirst, Francis W. A. Preface to the Budget: how to save, how to spend, how to tax. Alston Rivers, 1s. net.
 Cochrane, Charles H. Modern Industrial Progress. With numerous illustrations. Lippincott.
 Carpenter, Edward. Prisons, Police and Punishment. An inquiry into the causes and treatment of crime and criminals. Fifield, 2s. net.
The Official Year-Book of the Church of England, 1905. S.P.C.K., 3s.
 Hancock, H. Irving. The Physical Culture Life: A Guide for all who seek the Simple Laws of Abounding Health. Putnams.
 Collins, F. Howard. Author and Printer. A Guide for Authors, Editors, Printers, Correctors, and Typists. An attempt to codify the best Topographical Practices of the Present Day. Frowde, 5s. net.

MUSIO.

- Daly, William H. The Concert-Goer. A handbook of the Orchestra and Orchestral Music. Paterson.

NATURAL HISTORY.

- Step, Edward, F.L.S. Wild flowers month by month in their natural haunts. Illustrated from Photographs depicting the various flowers as they are found growing. In 12 parts. Part I. Warne, 8d. net.
 Snell, F. C. The Camera in the Field: a practical Guide to Nature Photography. Unwin, 5s.
Garden Colour. Spring, by Mrs. C. W. Earle. Summer, by E. V. B. Autumn, by Rose Kingsley. Winter, by the Hon. Vicary Gibbs, &c., &c. Notes and Water Colour Sketches by Margaret Waterfield. Dent, 21s. net.
 Simpson, A. Nicol, F.Z.S. Familiar Scottish Birds. Gardner, 2s.

ORIENTAL.

- De Sacountala d Griselda: Le plus ancien des contes Aryens*. Rome: Forzani.

PHILOSOPHY.

- Perrin, Raymond St. James. The Evolution of Knowledge: A Review of Philosophy. Williams & Norgate, 6s.

POETRY.

- Wilcox, Dora. Verses from M. riland. Allen, 2s. 6d. net.
 Rudland, E. M. The Love of H. wise and Abeland. Kegan Paul, 2s. 6d. net.
 Binyon, Laurence. Penthesilea. Constable, 3s. 6d. net. (See p. 412.)
 Borrow, George. Wild Wales: People, Language and Scenery. Lane, 1s.

POLITICAL.

- Townsend, Meredith. Asia and Europe. New edition. Constable, 5s. net.
 Jebb, Richard. Studies in Colonial Nationalism. Arnold, 12s. 6d. net.
 Chesterton, Cecil. Gladstonian Ghosts. Brown, Langham, 2s. 6d.

REPRINTS.

- The Thoughts of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus*. Translated by George Long. With an essay by Matthew Arnold. Bell, The York Library, 2s. and 3s.
The Decameron of Giovanni Boccaccio. Faithfully translated by J. M. Rigg. With an Essay on Boccaccio as man and author by John Addington Symonds. The Heptameron, or Tales and Novels of Marguerite, Queen of Navarre. Translated by Arthur Machen. With an introduction. Routledge: Early Novelists, edited by E. A. Baker. 5s. net each.
The Novels of the Sisters Brontë. In ten volumes. Jane Eyre. Dent, two vols., 2s. 6d. each.
 Thackeray, William Makepeace. Roundabout Papers. With an introduction by Charles Whibley. Poems by John Milton. With an introduction by Walter Raleigh, Professor of English Literature in the University of Oxford. Blackie, Red Letter Library, 2s. 6d. net. each.
 Carlyle, Thomas. Heroes and Hero Worship. Allenson, 6d.
 Langland, William. The Vision of Piers Plouman. Done into modern English by Professor Skeat, Litt.D. The de la More Press, 1s. 6d. net.
The Simplification of Life. From the writings of Edward Carpenter. Selected by Harry Roberts. The Vagabond's Library, No. III. Treberne, 1s. 6d. net.
The Ministration of Public Baptism of Infants. Bijou size. Eyre & Spottiswoode.
 Carlyle, Thomas. Sartor Resartus. Heroes and Hero Worship. Allenson, 6d. each.
The Dream of the Rood. An Old English Poem attributed to Cynewulf. Edited by Albert S. Cook. Clarendon Press, 3s. 6d.
 Hazlitt, William. Characters of Shakespeare's Plays. Dent, 1s. 6d. net.
The Thoughts of Blaise Pascal. Translated from the text of M. Auguste Molinier. Bell, The York Library, 2s. net.
 A Kempis, Thomas. The Imitation of Christ. The Astolat Press, 3s. net.
 The Works of Shakespeare. The Merchant of Venice. Edited by Charles Knox Poole. Methuen. The Arden Shakespeare, 2s. 6d. net.
 The Poems of Lord Tennyson. English Idylls and other Poems. In Memoriam. Idylls of the King. Vols. I. and II. Maud, and other Poems. Heinemann. "Favourite Classics." 6d. net per volume.

SCIENCE.

- Tuckwell, J. H. Miracle and Law: a Study in Scientific Religion. Fowler, 6d. net.
- White, George. A Practical Course of Instruction in personal Magnetism, Telepathy and Hypnotism. Routledge, 3s. 6d. net.
- Heath, Thomas Edward. Our Stellar Universe. A Road-book to the Stars. King, Sell & Olding, Knowledge Office, 5s.
- Henry, James, and Hora, Karel J. Henry and Hora's Modern Electricity: A Practical Working Encyclopedia and Manual of Theories, Principles and Applications. Hodder & Stoughton.

SOCIOLOGY.

- Studies in History, Economics and Public Law. Edited by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University. Vol. XXII. The Historical Development of the Poor Law of Connecticut, by Edward Warren Capen, Ph.D. New York: Columbia University Press. London, P. S. King, 12s. net.
- Stepniak. The Russian Peasantry. Their Agrarian Condition, Social Life and Religion. New Edition. Routledge, 3s. 6d. net.
- Ingram, John K., LL.D. The Final Transition: A Sociological Study. Black, 3s. 6d. net.
- Towards a Social Policy, or Suggestions for Constructive Reform*. By various writers. Alston Rivers, 1s. net.

SPORT.

- Sheringham, H. T. An Angler's Hours. Macmillan, 6s. net. (See p. 416.)
- Vaile, P. A. Suerve, or the Flight of the Ball. Illustrated by explanatory Diagrams. Tamblin.

THEOLOGY.

- Worship Song with accompanying tunes*. Edited by W. Garrett Horder. Novello, 5s.
- Smyth, William Woods. Divine Dual Government. A Key to the Bible, to Evolution, and to Life's Enigmas. Marshall, 6s.
- Flint, Robert, D.D., LL.D., &c., Emeritus Professor of Divinity in the University of Edinburgh. On Theological, Biblical and other subjects. Blackwood, 7s. 6d.
- The Library of Liturgy and Ecclesiology. Edited by Vernon Staley, Provost of the Cathedral Church of St. Andrew, Inverness. Ordo Romanus Primus. With introduction and notes by E. G. Cuthbert F. Atchley, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. The de la More Press, 7s. 6d. net.
- Robertson, F. M., of Brighton. Eleven Sermons. Second Series. Allenson, 6d.
- Wright, Rev. T. H. The Shrine of Faith. Our Lord's Human Experience. Melrose, 3s. 6d. net.
- Oxford Bijou Edition of the Gospels*. Henry Frowde.
- Sime, James. Samuel and the Schools of the Prophets. The Temple series of Bible Handbooks. Dent, 9d. net.
- Christian Missions in the Far East*. Addresses on the subject delivered by the Right Rev. H. H. Montgomery, D.D., and Eugene Stock, Esq. S.P.C.K., 6d.
- The Law of the Concordat (Loi du 18 Germinal, An. X, April 8, 1802)*. Translated with Introduction and Notes by L. G. Wickham Legg, M.A. "The Church Historical Society." S.P.C.K., 4d.
- Holy Week in Jerusalem in the Fourth Century*. Being a translation of the portion of the "Peregrinatio Etheriæ (Silviæ)" printed in Mgr. Duchesne's "Christian Worship." S.P.C.K., 4d.
- Purves, The Rev. Peter Charles. The Divine Cure for Heart Trouble, and other Sermons. Dent.
- Skrine, John Huntley. The Christ in the Teacher. Four Addresses given in the Chapel of Keble College, Oxford, January 14th and 15th, 1905. Simpkin, Marshall, 1s. 6d. net.
- The Creed of Christ*. Lane, 5s. net.
- Souter, Alexander. A Study of Ambrosiaster. Vol. VIII. No. 4 of "Texts and Studies." Cambridge University Press, 7s. 6d. net.
- Momerie, Alfred Williams, M.A., D.Sc., LL.D. Belief in God. Cheap edition. Allenson, 6d.
- Momerie, A. W., M.A., D.Sc., LL.D. Immortality: A Series of Thirty-five Chapters. Cheap edition. Allenson, 6d.
- Welsh, R. E., M.A. In Relief of Doubt, with Introduction by the Right Rev. A. F. Winnington Ingram, D.D., Bishop of London. New edition. Allenson, 6d.
- Robertson, F. W., of Brighton. Eleven Sermons. Ten Sermons. Cheap editions, 6d. each.
- Warschauer, J. Anti-Nunquam: An Examination of "God and My Neighbour," with a Prefatory Note by Prof. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. Cheap edition. Allenson, 6d.
- Millard, Benjamin A. The Quest of the Infinite, or the Place of Reason and Mystery in Religious Experience. Allenson, 3s. 6d.
- Fairweather, Rev. W. The Pre-Exilic Prophets. Dent. Temple Series of Bible Characters and Scripture Handbooks. 9d. net.
- Powell, Helena L. Religious Teaching in Schools. A Paper read before the Cambridge District Association of Church School Managers and Teachers, February 4th, 1905. Macmillan & Bowes, Cambridge, 3d. net.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

- Hart, Jerome. Two Argonauts in Spain. New Edition. Longman, 5s. net.
- Thirlmere, Rowland. Letters from Catalonia and other parts of Spain. Hutchinson, two volumes, 24s. net.
- Ward, John, F.S.A. Our Sudan, its Pyramids and Progress. Murray, 21s. net. (See p. 421.)
- Ward, H. Snowden, and Ward, Catherine. Shakespeare's Town and Times. Second edition. Dawbarn & Ward, 6s. net.
- Rome*. Painted by Alberto Pisa. Text by M. A. R. Tucker and Hope Malle-son. Black, 20s. net.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

QUERIES

THE WILLOW.—In Hebrew the willow, or salix, is named "oreb," a word equating the Latin arbor, and rendered as "trees" in the "P.B." version of Psalm 137, 2. No doubt the willow is meant (see Isaiah 44, 4): "Willows by the water-courses"; but the very pathetic poetry of the Book of Psalms states that the exiles hung their "harps upon the willows." Now the salicacea are trees or shrubs; here a solid tree, German Säule, or pillar, would be needful to suspend the harps; Hebrew Kinnor put in the plural, it being a portable instrument, perhaps of guitar fashion. As to the shrub willow, or osier, take Shrewsbury to whit, from scrub or scrobber-berie; a mere "scrub" such as we see by English water-courses utilised for palm-branches at Eastertide; such plants would not sustain a quantity of such musical plant when they rested to weep; whence we derive our idea of a "weeping willow" from sympathy, called salix "babylonica;" but the white willow is a large timber-tree, and the allied "poplars" do run high.—A. Hall.

JOLLY.—Although we are apt to look upon the use of this word in some of its conjunctions as slang, yet very good authority for it is to be found in a serious theological work of two hundred and fifty years ago, namely John Trapp's Commentary on the Old and New Testament (London, 1656-7), in which this quaint expression appears: "All was jolly quiet at Ephesus before St. Paul came thither." This seems quite a modern application of the word. Are there any other like instances?—L. L. R.

O PHYSICS, BEWARE OF METAPHYSICS!—In Comte's Positive Philosophy (Miss Martineau's translation), vol. 1. p. 266, it is said that this was "a favourite saying" of Sir Isaac Newton. Can this be verified in any way? Is there any authority whatever for the assertion?—W. M. T.

AMAZON STONES.—According to Humboldt, the South American traveller, these stones are scarcely distinguishable from Persepolitan cylinders or seats. They are said to be longitudinally perforated and covered with inscriptions and figures. Are any of these stones to be seen in England, and in what modern books of travel, or otherwise, is reference made to them? I can find no trace of these Amazon stones at the British Museum.—W. M. T.

TO CRY ROAST MEAT.—In Charles Lamb's essay on "Christ's Hospital five and thirty years ago," he tells the story of a Blue-coat boy who kept a donkey on the leads of the dormitory which he fed upon bread extracted from forty of his schoolfellows. "This game went on for better than a week; till the foolish beast, not able to fare well, but he must cry roast meat. . . ." What does this mean?—J. H. D.

ELIA'S "QUAINT POETESS."—In Charles Lamb's "Detached Thoughts on Books and Reading," the following lines are quoted by "a quaint poetess of the day," descriptive of a penniless boy eagerly devouring a book at a stall, and being ordered by the owner to put the book down because he never purchased anything:

"You Sir, you never buy a book,
Therefore in one you shall not look."

Who was the "quaint poetess"?—B. W. W.

ANSWERS

SMART'S "HYMN TO DAVID."—This poem was republished in 1819 by the Rev. R. Harvey. Forty-six out of the eighty-six stanzas are to be found in T. H. Ward's "The English Poets," vol. iii. (Addison to Blake), published by Macmillan. See also Chalmers's "English Poets," vol. xvi.—H. E. J. (Narberth).

SMART'S "HYMN TO DAVID."—This is to be found in Nichol's "British Poets," vol. 42 of the series; vol. iii. of the "Less-known" poets. It has eighty-six six-lined stanzas, portions of which, says the Editor (George Gillfillan) "a Milton or a Shakespeare has never surpassed."—S. W. G.

SMART'S "HYMN TO DAVID."—This poem was reprinted in 1901 by Mr. Elkin Matthews in his Shilling Garland. My copy is from the library of the late Professor F. York Powell.—A. R. Bayley (Malvern).

SMART'S "HYMN TO DAVID."—An edition of Christopher Smart's "A Song to David," edited by Mr. J. R. Twin and containing the complete poem with notes, was published in 1898 by Wm. Andrews and Son, 5 Farringdon Avenue, E.C. The poem has been frequently reprinted. It was printed in its entirety in the earlier editions of Chambers' "Cyclopedia of English Literature," and is given with the omission of a few verses in the new edition. It is to be found in a somewhat more abridged form in Palgrave's "Treasury of Sacred Song," in Mr. Quiller Couch's "Oxford Book of English Verse," and in other collections. See Chambers' "Cyclopedia of English Literature," vol. ii, and the "National Dictionary of Biography," for further information.—M. A. C. (Cambridge).

SMART'S "HYMN TO DAVID."—Litterateur (Sunderland) will find a complete copy of Christopher Smart's "Hymn to David" in Chambers' "Encyclopedia of English Literature," vol. ii. p. 474. Judging from the length of the poem it is hardly possible that it could have been "written with a key on the walls of a cell."—E. Enid Lloyd.

ELDER.—See Professor Skeat's edition of "Piers Plowman," B text, Passus I., lines 67, 68:

"Iudas he iaped with iuwen silver,
And sithen on an eller bonged hym after,"

and Professor Skeat's notes on this passage.—H. E. J. (Narberth).

MONARCH OF THE NORTH.—See "Piers Plowman," B text, Passus I., line 118: "Ponam pedem in aquilone, et similis ero altissimo," an inexact quotation of the Vulgate Isaiah xiv. 13, 14, and Professor Skeat's notes. Lucifer, who presided over one of the ten orders in heaven, became proud (moody) and said that he would sit in the north part of heaven, and be equal to the Almighty. Compare Milton, "Paradise Lost," v. 775-760:

"At length into the limits of the north
They came; and Satan to his royal seat,

The palace of great Lucifer."

See also Skelton's "Colin Clout":

"Some say ye sit in trones
Like princes aquilonis."

See also the Anglo-Saxon poem called "The Fall of the Angels" (once attributed to Caedmon), v. 29, 30:

"Cwaep paet hine his hige spēone paet hē west and nora, wyrcean ongunne."

H. E. J. (Narberth).

PROPERTY has its duties, &c. On the authority of Mr. Friswell, this saying may be attributed to Lord Mulgrave, who whilst Lord Lieutenant of Ireland dictated it to his secretary, Mr. Drummond, in a letter to a Welsh friend. Its occurrence in a letter from Captain Thomas Drummond is no doubt a misstatement of the above. Nevertheless it is doubtful whether the apophthegm, "Property has its duties as well as its rights," is an original remark of Lord Mulgrave; something very nearly akin thereto is, if I mistake not, to be found in Plato, although I cannot quote chapter and verse.—J. M. C.

The Williams Typewriter

(ACADEMY MODEL)

Six months ago we commenced selling our well-known Williams Typewriter No. 2 at a discount of 40 per cent. from the established price. We not only reduced the price but added some new devices to the machine, which made it a little better than before. To distinguish it from previous models we have called it the "ACADEMY MODEL," and in the United States it will be known as the "WILLIAMS JUNIOR." We believed that a first-class Typewriter at a popular price would sell, and may say that the demand during the first six months has exceeded our expectations.

The public have appreciated the bargain by purchasing machines, and many purchasers have expressed their satisfaction by voluntarily recommending their friends to buy a Williams Typewriter. The fact that we are willing to place hundreds of these machines on hire at 12s. 6d. per month should be conclusive evidence that we have confidence in their durability and capability. We shall continue to sell these machines in the United Kingdom at the following prices:

No. 2 foolscap, formerly £21, now £12 12s. net cash.

No. 3 brief „ £23, „ £14 14s. „

Instalment Plan, 25s. for Two Months, followed by Monthly Payments of 12s. 6d.

This machine may be seen and full particulars obtained at any of our offices.

Williams Typewriter Co. for Europe

LONDON - 57 Holborn Viaduct

ABERDEEN - 115 Union Street	LEICESTER - 60-64 Halford St.
BELFAST - 71 Ann Street	LEIGH - 64 Bond Street
BIRMINGHAM - 28 High Street	LIVERPOOL -
BURNLEY - 9 Grimshaw Street	MANCHESTER - 267 Deansgate
CARDIFF - 8 St. John's Square	MIDDLESBROUGH - Royal Exchange
DUBLIN - 5 Upper Ormond Quay	NEWCASTLE - 21 Collingwood St.
EDINBURGH - 19 Shandwick Place	NOTTINGHAM - Prudential Bldgs.
EXETER - 31 Queen Street	PORTSMOUTH - 154 Queen Street
GLASGOW - 69 Bothwell St.	SHEFFIELD - 72 Queen Street
LEEDS - 3 Park Lane	SOUTHAMPTON - 12 Portland Street

POST THIS INQUIRY FORM (for a halfpenny in an open envelope)

To WILLIAMS TYPEWRITER CO., 57 Holborn Viaduct, London.

Please send me full details of your Discount Offer of The "Academy" Model Williams Typewriter.

Name.....

Address.....

Occupation

☐ If you prefer not to deface this page, send us a postcard similarly worded and naming this paper.

IND. UNIV. LIB'Y
MAY 4 1905

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1720

APRIL 22, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,

ALBEMARLE ST., PICCADILLY, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS AFTER EASTER, 1905.

Tuesdays. Lecture Hour, 5 o'clock.

Professor L. C. MIALI, D.Sc., F.R.S., Fullerian Professor of Physiology, R.I., and Professor of Biology, Leeds University. Three Lectures on THE STUDY OF EXTINCT ANIMALS. On Tuesdays, May 2, 9, 16.

Rev. HENRY G. WOODS, D.D., the Master of the Temple. Three Lectures on VELAZQUEZ: 1. THE YOUNG VELAZQUEZ; 2. THE COURT PORTRAIT PAINTER; 3. THE IMPRESSIONIST. On Tuesdays, May 23, 30, June 6.

Thursdays. Lecture Hour, 5 o'clock.

Professor Sir JAMES DEWAR, M.A., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., M.R.I., Fullerian Professor of Chemistry, R.I. Three Lectures on FLAME. On Thursdays, May 4, 11, 18.

Professor J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., M.R.I., Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London. (The Tyndall Lectures.) Three Lectures on ELECTROMAGNETIC WAVES. On Thursdays, May 25, June 1, 8.

Saturdays. Lecture Hour, 3 o'clock.

Professor MARSHALL WARD, D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. Two Lectures on MOULDS AND MOULDINESS. On Saturdays, May 6, 13.

JAMES GEORGE FRAZER, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D., Litt.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Two Lectures on THE EVOLUTION OF THE KINGSHIP IN EARLY SOCIETY. On Saturdays, May 20, 27.

A. HENRY SAVAGE LANDOR, Esq., M.R.I. Two Lectures on EXPLORATION IN THE PHILIPPINES. On Saturdays, June 3, 10.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all Courses of Lectures (extending from Christmas to Midsummer), Two Guineas. Subscription to a Single Course of Lectures, One Guinea, or Half-a-Guinea, according to the length of the Course. Tickets issued daily at the Institution, or sent by post on receipt of Cheque or Post-Office Order.

Members may purchase not less than Three Single Lecture Tickets, available for any Afternoon Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

The FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will be resumed on May 5, at 9 P.M., when Professor HENRY E. ARMSTRONG will give a Discourse on PROBLEMS UNDERLYING NUTRITION. Succeeding Discourses will probably be given by Professor E. FOX NICHOLS (of Columbia University), Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G., Professor J. W. BRÜHL (of Heidelberg University), Mr. GEORGE HENSCHEL, Sir WILLIAM H. WHITE, K.C.B., and other gentlemen. To these Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the Secretary. When proposed they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge. Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL AND COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN on APRIL 25, 1905.

Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the Collegiate regulations.

The Hospital contains a service of 750 Beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £900 are awarded annually.

Special Classes for the Preliminary Scientific and the other London University Examinations, for the F.R.C.S., and for other Higher Examinations.

There is a large, thoroughly well-equipped Cricket Ground.

For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. W. DOUGLAS HARMER, M.C. Cantab., WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

A Handbook forwarded on application.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

8vo, cloth, price 3s. net.

THE FISH RIVER BUSH AND FAUNA.

By W. G. BLACK, F.R.M.S.

Illustrated.

YOUNG J. PENTLAND, Edinburgh & London.

THE AGE OF MARIE ANTOINETTE.

A Sketch of the Period of European Revival, which claims among its representatives Goethe, Prudhon, Gainsborough and Mozart. By CHARLES NEWTON SCOTT. New and revised edition. LONDON: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd., 50 Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3s. 6d.

TYPEWRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1000 words. Specimens and references.—Address, Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS., 10d. per 1000, all descriptions; neat, prompt, accurate; duplicating a speciality. Shorthand, testimonials.—Mrs. MICHEL, 23 Quarrendon Street, Fulham, S.W.

Advertisements for out of print "Books Wanted" and "For Sale" are inserted at 3d. for each title (eight words, including address); minimum, 1s.

[See back page.]

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF

G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings.

Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from

FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,

No. 140.

Containing a special article, entitled:

"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS."

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP,

Secondhand Bookseller,

100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND 4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

FIRST Editions of Modern Authors, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOF & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.

"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookfinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £50 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £5 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1809; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss FOOT, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L., 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

Chatto & Windus, Publishers.

In preparation. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s. each. Three Volumes containing hitherto uncollected Essays and Stories by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The volumes will be entitled respectively :

1. Essays of Travel. 2. Tales and Fantasies. 3. The Art of Writing.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

The Phantom Torpedo-Boats. By ALLEN UPWARD, Author of "The Secret History of To-day," &c. [Shortly.]

Stingaree. By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "A Bride from the Bush." [Shortly.]

The Youngest Miss Brown. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh."

The Millionaire Baby. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, Author of "The Leavenworth Case." "Fascinating is a poor word with which to express its hold upon the reader—it is simply engrossing."—NEWARK JOURNAL.

A Spoiler of Men. By RICHARD MARSH, Author of "The Beetle."

"There is no fainting or failing in the audacity, the power of invention. . . . This new story is as fresh and full of life as if the author had had a year's holiday."—BOOTS MAN.

The Error of Her Ways. By FRANK BARRETT. [April 27.]

The Missing Elizabeth. By ADELINE SERGEANT. [May 11.]

The Wild Marquis: LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF ARMAND GUERRY DE MAUBREUIL. By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A Rainy June, AND THREE OTHER STORIES. By OUIDA. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Li Ting of London. By GEORGE R. SIMS ("Dagonet"). Fcap. 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

Handley Cross. By ROBERT SURTEES. Illustrated by JOHN LEECH. Cheaper Issue. Post 8vo, 1s.

Summer Cruising in the South Seas. By C. WARREN STODDARD, Author of "The Island of Tranquil Delights." A New Edition. Post 8vo, cloth gift, 6s. net. [Shortly.]

Infatuation. By B. M. CROKER. Cheaper Issue. Post 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

Taken from the Enemy. By HENRY NEWBOLT, Author of "Admirals All." A New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. [Shortly.]

MR. SWINBURNE'S POETICAL WORKS. The COLLECTED LIBRARY EDITION in Six Volumes is COMPLETE, and a SECOND IMPRESSION is now on Sale. 36s. net for the Six Vols. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt tops.

THE LIFE OF CHARLES DICKENS as Revealed in his Writings. By PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A. With Portraits and Facsimiles. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

THE POET AND THE PIERROT. By DOROTHEA DEAKIN, Author of "The Smile of Melinda." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

RECOLLECTIONS OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON IN THE PACIFIC. By ARTHUR JOHNSTONE. With Portrait and Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net. [Preparing.]

THE ADVENTURES OF JONES. By HAYDEN CAR-RUTH. With Illustrations. A NEW EDITION. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

WHEN A GIRL'S ENGAGED. By HOPE MERRICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.

Printed in clear type on fine paper; full size of page, 6½ by 4½ inches. Post 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

IMPORTANT SERIES OF ELEVEN NEW VOLUMES IN THE PRESS.

Macaulay's History of England. In 5 Vols. [Vol. II. April 27.]

Justin McCarthy's The Reign of Queen Anne. In 1 Vol.;

A History of the Four Georges and of William IV. In 2 Vols.; and A History of Our Own Times, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to 1897. In 3 Vols.

By Sir WALTER BESANT.

LONDON.

ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS. [Shortly.]
SIR RICHARD WHITTINGTON. [Shortly.]
GASPARD DE COLIGNY.

By HALL CAINE.
THE DEEMSTER.

By WILKIE COLLINS.
THE WOMAN IN WHITE.

By DANIEL DEFOE.
ROBINSON CRUSOE. With 37 Illustrations
by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

By THOMAS HARDY.
UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE.

By BRET HARTE.
CONDENSED NOVELS.

By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.
THE AUTOCRAT OF THE BREAKFAST-
TABLE. With Illustrations by J. G. THOMSON.

By RICHARD JEFFERIES.
THE LIFE OF THE FIELDS.
THE OPEN AIR. | NATURE NEAR LONDON.

By CHARLES LAMB.
THE ESSAYS OF ELIA.

By CHARLES READE.
THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH.
With 32 full-page Illustrations.
"NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND."

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

MEMORIES AND PORTRAITS.

VIRGINIBUS PUERISQUE.

MEN AND BOOKS.

NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS.

ACROSS THE PLAINS.

THE MERRY MEN.

THE POCKET R.L.S.: Favourite Passages from Stevenson's Works.

By MARK TWAIN.
SKETCHES.

By WALTON and COTTON.
THE COMPLETE ANGLER.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. net each; leather, gilt top, 1s. 6d. net each.
TWO LITTLE WOODEN SHOES. By OUIDA. | THE FROZEN DEEP. By WILKIE COLLINS. | THE WANDERING HEIR. By CHARLES READE.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	435	The Bookshelf	449
Literature:		Book Sales	450
The Author of "John Inglesant"	437	The Drama:
Catherine de' Medici	439	"Everyman" at the Shaftes-
The Reformation	440	bury Theatre	450
Heine and Byron	441	Fine Art:
The Life of Lives	442	Tradition and Modern Schools	451
Madame Waddington Again	443	Science:
Old Unhappy Far-off Times	444	The Grounds of Rational Opti-
The First Farce	445	mism	451
"No, by the Rood, not so!"	445	Music:
Hands	445	"Caractacus" and "Every-
Sayings of Children—II.	446	man"	453
A Literary Causerie:		Wagner's "Parsifal"	453
The Dublin School	447	Correspondence	454
Fiction:	448	Queries and Answers	455
		Books Received	455

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

THE number of biographical works, under which for some time past our table has been groaning, suggests a few not very pleasant reflections. In the first place it would conduce to the general comfort if that monstrosity, the family biography, were done away with; the surviving kinsfolk of a distinguished man or woman are extremely apt to look upon the inevitable Life not as a possible work of genius to be added to the literature of the country, but as an authoritative exposition of family affairs. They generally fix upon a near relative to do the work, and as to his or her competency they have no means of judging. They have no literary taste themselves, and are quite unable to distinguish between the possessor of a genuine gift of style and one who is in no way fitted for the calling of letters.

If experience were taken as a teacher, the bulky, heavy biography would cease to be written; but just as the old three-decker novel kept on being issued long after it had ceased to answer to the public taste and requirements, so the two- or three-volume biography keeps emerging from the press long after the need of it has passed away. For it is not only their dimensions that make these Lives forbidding: the writers do not possess an elementary notion of the means that should be adopted to give a biography lasting interest and value. The one virtue they can claim is that of industry, and it shows itself in the collection of great masses of documents, whose only claim to value lies in their authorship. In a recently issued Life, of a man of great importance in his day, the very notes he wrote to his tailor are printed. And in the case of a famous man of letters it is the commonest thing in the world to print the purely business letters that have passed between him and his publisher.

Sometimes one is almost tempted to believe that a malicious frankness is the motive power. Nearly every writer, being a more or less emotional person, is more than usually vain of himself and his work; and to exhibit him in his moments of anxiety about press notices and of exaltation or depression at the praise or blame of some small Sir Oracle of the day is not the best way to strengthen our notions of his dignity. Besides, it is a very stupid and idle superstition to think that whatever a great man has written with his own hand is worth preservation. In a general way about nine-tenths of what he has himself deliberately composed and offered to the public is dead matter before his death takes place, and fortunate he certainly is if the remaining tithe finds its way into the literature that endures. As to the casual letters and notes that have come from his pen, they are usually less interesting than the writings of one who follows a different calling, because naturally the writer for the public keeps his very best for the work by which he earns a livelihood, and his private letters are no more than the scraps from his table.

But to look at the question in a practical manner: what can be done to lighten this heavy burden of biography that is being foisted upon our libraries? Biography in itself is, we need scarcely say, one of the noblest forms of literary creation, filling the place in letters that portraiture does in painting. Even as the most skilful limner could never make an immortal picture out of the portrait of some fat alderman, whose commonplace features are to be preserved merely because he has the luck to wear the chain and eat the dinners of office, so in the intellectual world there are not a few who have attained conspicuous positions but whose commonplace lives could not be made interesting by genius itself. A first and essential step, therefore, is to put a stop to all this biography of people who are unworthy of it. In the second place we want to get rid of the superstition that masses of letters and documents are necessary parts of a good Life. Used sparingly and skilfully, no doubt, they are the best illustrations a good narrative can have, but in most cases they form the bulk of the book and the narrative is only a running commentary on them. Of course the prodigal use of this kind of material is largely due to the influence of Froude and Carlyle, who held the doctrine that a man should be painted exactly as he is. A very good ideal it is, but scarcely to be attained by printing the letters of a man to his tradesman. The truth is that a good biographer ought himself to be a writer of sympathy and imagination; and not a mere collector of facts. He should be able to look through and understand his subject as well, for instance, as Mr Sargent understands his models; and, having imagined the individuality he has to do with, it is his place, line upon line, and precept upon precept, to paint that figure for us, never allowing himself to be overwhelmed by his facts, but ever selecting illustrative material from them.

It is of little use, however, to lecture a shadowy and imagined biographer. There is but one method of turning him from his evil ways, and that method, needless to say, lies in the hands of the critic and the public. If they will apply crucial tests and insist upon some approach to their standards being achieved, the writers of biography will soon have to amend their methods. But the difficulty here is that public taste at present is in one of its moments of reaction. It is not nearly so exacting, nor so fastidious in many respects as it was, say, in the 'sixties. The critics who ought to lead public opinion, find it easier to reflect it. They are still, as in the days of the late laureate, "Idle, irresponsible reviewers," and the only way to improve the authors is, to use an expressive piece of ordinary slang, to buck up the critics. There is scarcely a writer of experience and knowledge living at the present moment who has not come to the conclusion held by the oldest and ablest of our novelists, that criticism for some time past has been much too lax and slovenly.

The Society of Arts, which may or may not amalgamate with the London Institution, was founded in 1754 for the encouragement of every department of science in connection with the Manufactures, Arts and Commerce of this country, and has not been without influence if it be true that it originated the Exhibition of 1851. Its Cantor Lectures are well known, and it has an examination scheme intended to assist students in the technology of arts and manufactures as well as in modern languages. To the ordinary mortal it is interesting mainly for its connection with James Barry, most picturesque and quarrelsome of men, who, to illustrate his peculiar views on art, painted in the great room of the society six pictures free of charge, though when he began he had but eighteen shillings in the world. Here, after his death in squalid lodgings, his body lay in state, surrounded by the pictures, before it was removed for burial to the crypt of St. Paul's.

Oxford is for obvious reasons peculiarly rich in historical portraits, and the collection which was opened last Monday, to remain open till June 1, is exceptionally interesting. We hope to deal with it at greater length in a future number. It is enough for the present to say that it includes portraits of English historical personages who died between 1625 and 1714, lent by the University, Colleges, Cathedral Chapter and the City, with a few belonging to private owners.

Have our readers heard the story of the old lady who walked into a shop and asked to buy a "circulating library"? Inquiry revealed that she wanted a revolving book-case.

A correspondent sends us an appropriate quotation from Hudibras, Part I., Canto II.:

"He was, by birth, some Authors write
A Russian, some a M[u]scovite,
And 'mong the Cossacks had been bred,
Of whom we in Diurnals read,
That serve to fill up Pages here,
As with their Bodies Ditches there."

Another correspondent points out that the substitution of the possessive pronoun "me" for the personal "my," here called a vulgarism, may probably be an Irishism, familiar to the readers of Punch. Mr. Toby, in his parliamentary reports, intimates that this error is still current in the House of Commons. As a grammatical popular misuse of language, it may pair off with the confusion between "shall" and "will," a distinction unintelligible to foreigners; as in the anecdotal, "I will be drowned and nobody shall save me!"

The official announcement that Mr. George Alexander will himself play both John Chilcote and John Loder in the forthcoming adaptation of Mrs. Thurston's now famous novel, will, we venture to think, be received with keen disappointment by a very large number of playgoers. The question as to the possibility of one man so exactly resembling another as to be able constantly to impersonate him with success before his wife and household is quite a minor consideration when the tale is presented as a novel. At any rate, since everything hinges upon it, it must be accepted. If the hinge occasionally creaks, a little imagination is a quite proper and effective lubricant. But as soon as ever the thing is visualised as a play, the point becomes vital. Everything now depends upon our seeing the two men actually before us. So that it was with a feeling of pleasurable anticipation that we read in a contemporary some months ago of the discovery of a practically perfect double to Mr. Alexander in the person of the editor of a well-known magazine. Here, at all events, was a great chance for the artistry of illusion. Photographs of the two gentlemen appeared side by side, views and interviews were obtained, anecdotes anent their mutual resemblance were related, and the possibility of their acting in concert was keenly discussed. Well, it all seems to have fallen through, more's the pity. For with one clever actor, forced by peculiarly subtle conditions to accentuate differences of personality in a play the very essence of the conception of which lies in the accentuation of a chance resemblance, the whole point and charm of the thing from the point of view of actual vision seems likely to evaporate.

It seems probable, after all, that Carnarvon Castle will be the home of the Welsh National Museum. The Constable has consented, and the President of the Society of Architects and the Director of Museums to the Corporation of Liverpool have reported that the building is, or could easily be made, very suitable for the purpose. North Wales is "solid" for Carnarvon, and the influence of Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham will go for a great deal. Carnarvon is ready with £5000 and a generous scheme for restoration, and there can be no question of the sentimental value of the historical associations of the place.

The "Hotel des Balances," which they are about to pull down at Geneva, had its hour of literary renown. The University students used to play comedies there in the seventeenth century, and one of them, a young Frenchman named Rémond de la Croix, dared to produce an anticlerical farce. His chorus was the Consistory, and it thundered the following refrain:

"Et pourquoi ne boirons-nous point ?
Avons-nous fait geler les vignes ?
Nous boirons tant que nos pourpoints
Ne pourront tenir nos poitrines. . . ."

For thus making a mock of his spiritual pastors and masters, Rémond de la Croix was sentenced to death "in order that his body might be destroyed and his soul saved." The sentence was, however, commuted. The dramatist was required to ask the pardon of the community on his knees, and when he had done this, he was banished from the city.

Even in a convict prison, it seems, literature may be understood and appreciated. Nine hundred inmates of the House of Detention at Ocaña in Spain have petitioned the Government to celebrate the tercentenary of the first publication of "Don Quixote" by giving them their freedom. The petition quoted from the romance the passage which relates how the Don himself delivered a number of galley-slaves from custody because, as he remarked to Sancho Panza:

"It seemed to him an act of cruelty to enslave those whom God and nature had made free, and he did not think it right that honourable men should be the executioners of their fellow creatures."

The authorities replied by pointing to the sequel of the story, which relates that the convicts had no sooner got their liberty than they turned upon their benefactor, and, to his great astonishment, robbed him of all his valuables.

M. Paul Meurice, of whose new "national edition" of the works of Victor Hugo we lately spoke, has been making some inquiries as to the profits earned by the great writer's plays. The most successful of his pieces was Ruy Blas. It ran for 49 nights in 1838, and for 48 nights when revived in 1841. Then followed an interval of 31 years, at the expiration of which, in 1872, it was again staged at the Odéon and ran for 145 nights. It has since been played at intervals, and, by July 1904, the total receipts amounted to 2,351,693 francs or, in English money, £94,070 13s. 6d. Hernani has up to date earned nearly £80,000, and Les Burgraves £12,800. The worst failure was Esmeralda, written for the music of Mlle. Louise Bertin, of the family of the Bertins of the Journal des Débats. Altogether M. Meurice calculates that, between 1828 and 1904, Victor Hugo's plays produced about £280,000, of which about £40,000 went to the author in royalties. The royalties are now drawn by the poet's surviving daughter, Mlle. Adèle Hugo.

A Victor Hugo book to which it is interesting to call attention is the collection which M. Paul Gruyer has just published of the photographs taken, when photography was in its infancy, by the poet and his friends in the Island of Guernsey. The poet himself was taken in many attitudes by his faithful companion, Auguste Vacquerie. One striking portrait shows him with folded arms, defying Napoleon the Little from the vantage-ground of an English beach. There are also portraits which he himself took of Madame Hugo, of Vacquerie, of M. Paul Meurice, of Delphine Gay, of General Le Flô, and of the philosopher Pierre Leroux. "Victor Hugo Photographe" is the title of the album.

Madame Bernhardt has revived Racine's Esther with the costumes and stage settings of the original production of the piece before Louis XIV. by the "demoiselles de Saint Cyr"; and an interesting chapter in French literary history is thereby recalled. The "demoiselles de Saint Cyr," it should be premised, were school-girls, the daughters of officers, in whose welfare Madame de Maintenon, then at the height of her influence, took a particular interest. Amateur theatricals were among their recognised recreations; and Madame de Maintenon went to see a piece written for them by Madame de Brinon. She found it so feeble that she advised them to play either Corneille or Racine instead.

Andromaque was accordingly produced; but then fresh trouble arose. The passionate love-scenes were too passionately rendered by the young ladies for Madame de Maintenon's approval. She wrote to Racine on the subject. They had played the piece so well, she told him, that she could not think of permitting them to play it again. Would he not write something on purpose for them—something really suitable for an academy of young ladies? The poet was not at first disposed to accept the commission. Much as he desired the favour of the Court, he feared the ridicule of the critics if any milk-and-water production came from his pen. On reflection, however, he decided that on the history of Esther he could write something at once strong and decorous. He did so, and Esther, in which Madame de Maintenon saw herself subtly flattered, was an immense success. The girls played it again and again all through the winter, and the King and the Court several times applauded it.

The agitation for the reform of French spelling is interesting because all the arguments in its favour apply with tenfold force to ourselves. It originated in a wish to simplify orthography on behalf of the lower classes in the schools, and perhaps from a republican enthusiasm for equality, which would put idle and industrious pupils on the same footing, but it seems likely that the opposition will be strong. A Flemish review, Le Beffroi, has founded a league for the maintenance of the status quo; the Academy has declared itself hostile to reform; and Rostand has pierced the scheme with the arrows of his wit. It is not impossible, however, that certain French plurals will be simplified, especially those of words in "ou," in which case the famous and ingenious sentence: "Les poux sont les bijoux et les joujoux des sapajous" will no longer be taught to the youthful student of French grammar.

Lovers of geography will be pleased to hear that M. Elisée Reclus, after a silence of ten years, has taken up the pen. His new work will be entitled "L'homme et la terre" and will be an attempt to explain the evolution of nations from a scientific, philosophical and historical point of view. It goes without saying that the author of "The Universal Geography," which is too little known in this country, though undoubtedly the first work of its kind in the world, is eminently qualified for this stupendous task. M. Reclus, who has had a chequered and picturesque career, fought for the Commune. He is now a philosophic Anarchist, who lives up to his opinions, but does not endeavour to promote them by throwing bombs.

Among recent and forthcoming French books are Albert Crin, Le Livre, Vol. I., Historique (Flammarion, 5 fr.) to be complete in five volumes and form an encyclopédie au livre; Paul Vitry, Tours et les Châteaux de Touraine, relié (Laurens, 5 fr.); Marcel Prévost, L'Accordeur Aveugle, illustrated with thirty water-colours by F. Courboin, reproduced in colours (Lemerre, 6 fr.); Maxime Gorky's new work, En Prison (3 fr. 50 c.); Paul Crafond, Le Musée de Rouen, with thirty-five photographic reproductions (Larousse, 2 fr.) and the illustrated Catalogues of the Salon de la Société nationale des Beaux-Arts, and the Salon de la Société des Artistes français (3 fr. 50 c. each).

Queen Marguerite of Italy has decided to erect a library in memory of King Humbert on Mount Ollen, one of the peaks of the Monte Rosa group, at the head of the Gessoney valley and some nine thousand feet above the level of the sea. The library will be the highest building of its kind in the world, and will be devoted exclusively to photographs of the Alps and to Alpine literature. Books on the subject have flowed in from all parts of England and America.

A lectureship in English has just been instituted at the University of Jena; Dr. Anders, the author of "Shakespeare's Books," has been appointed to the chair.

The municipal library of Düsseldorf, Heine's birthplace, has received the gift of a valuable Heine-library containing a complete collection of works by and about Heine. It is to be kept together in a separate room.

Gustave Frenssen, the author of the successful novel, "Jörn Uhl," an English translation of which has lately been published by Messrs. Constable, has received for it in all £12,500, an unprecedented sum in Germany. He is now at work on a new novel which he hopes to finish in the course of the year. The scene is again laid in his native Schleswig-Holstein, and the title is to be "Aus einer kleinen Stadt."

Franz von Schönthan, the well-known playwright, has written a comedy in three acts entitled "Klein Dorrit," based on episodes from Dickens's novel "Little Dorrit." It will be played at the Hofburg theatre in Vienna in the autumn.

LITERATURE

THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN INGLESANT"

Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of J. H. Shorthouse. Edited by his Wife. In two volumes. (Macmillan, 17s. net.)

OF the men of one book who cut a great figure towards the end of last century, Mr. J. H. Shorthouse is one of the most remarkable. "John Inglesant" carried him into fame at a bound, and most interesting is it now to have those who were his familiars showing how the curious personality was framed which made it possible for him to be the author of that book. In the two volumes before us, Mrs. Shorthouse, his widow, has collected abundant material for the student. In the first volume we have a critical introduction written by the Rev. J. Hunter Smith, a great variety of letters written by and to the novelist, and a Life that errs, if at all, in being too full of detail. The second volume is devoted to the preservation of his Literary Remains, and these form a supplement without which his character cannot be properly understood. Shorthouse used to be referred to as a kind of wonder, who, in middle life and without any previous training, had suddenly shown himself the master of a peculiarly fine English style, and produced a chef-d'œuvre at the very first attempt. But Goethe's answer to some one who complimented him on his great gift of style: "It did not come to me in my sleep," holds good of Shorthouse also. From this Life we learn that though his family had been engaged in trade for several generations, his home was one of culture and refinement. Here is a little picture of the household which is more eloquent than a set dissertation:

"Mrs. Shorthouse read stories to her little sons while they worked in their little gardens, and also while they drove to the farm which their father possessed, and where a boat was provided on the large pool for their amusement. Among the books which charmed his childhood were many of Mrs. Sherwood's stories, her 'Infant's Progress,' the 'Fair-child Family,' etc. Mary Howitt's verses and stories, especially 'My Own Story,' 'Peter Parley's Evening at Home,' and Miss Mitford's 'History of Greece' are some of those which he not only loved in those early days, but liked to collect and add to his library in later years.

"His father once told me that when my husband was only four years old his parents were reading Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress' aloud; they were obliged to stop on seeing the intense excitement of their little son, who had been eagerly listening to the wonderful story."

In the early part of his life he was, as is well known, a Quaker, and this sect has always been noted for its admirable aspirations towards self-improvement. These found expression at Birmingham in a literary society where the young men met and read essays. The Remains now published consist largely of these early tentative efforts, and the very titles are interesting as showing the topics on which the youth was led to think. There are essays on Books versus Books, Chivalry, the Successor of Monsieur le Sage, and so forth. The comparison between "Gil Blas" and the "Bible in Spain" is acute and clever.

"The style of 'Gil Blas' is more polished than that of the 'Bible in Spain,' the sentences are more carefully rounded. In this respect it reminds one more of that of Goldsmith, it is so excessively simple, flowing, and easy. Where then does its resemblance to the 'Bible in Spain' lie? In the excessive simplicity of the words and the ideas. There is no attempt in either of the books at what is called fine writing, there is a perfect absence of any attempt at a stilted or grand class of ideas and thoughts. The most everyday incidents, the most common thoughts, are expressed in the simplest and easiest way. This gives both books an indescribable reality and charm."

We only allude to this part of his life for the purpose of showing that the author of "John Inglesant" had been during the first forty years of his life, as was said of Scott, making himself without knowing it.

The portraits prefixed to these two volumes are very suggestive of the character of the man, in the quiet strength and reserve of the features; a glance at them makes us believe quite easily what Mr. Hunter Smith says:

"He was, I believe, ten years in writing 'John Inglesant.' During the whole of that time no one but his wife saw the manuscript, nor did he ever trouble his friends with any mention of the book. I think I supped with him nearly every Sunday evening for ten years, but I was very dimly aware that he was writing a book, and certainly never dreamt it was so big a thing or likely to achieve so high a reputation."

We can well understand also how this lifelong friend of Shorthouse after passing in review the life of the latter, should use these stern words, in regard to the middle classes of which he was so distinguished a member:

"It is a life that is as noble a protest as could be made against the banality and frivolity that are too apt to characterise the lives of the English Middle Classes, against the corruption of taste that cannot discern the demerits of such works as those of Corelli and Hall Caine, and makes Farrar's 'Life of Christ' more attractive than the Gospels."

If we wish to define the several characteristics of our author's mind we cannot do better than consider what was his attitude towards those whose character we know. His was a religious temperament and therefore to some extent a mystic one, yet he was utterly out of sympathy with the professed mystics, he himself being—if we may be permitted the use of a paradox—a mystic positivist. He disliked "Carlyle and the whole German school," and took them to task for talking about "the mysteries of our existence" when "it is by their overlooking those very truths which they despise that they are unable to penetrate this mystery, if so it can be called." He clung hard to the orthodox doctrines of Christianity, and it is noteworthy that one who had such wide intellectual interests should never by any chance have introduced the name of Darwin into any of his letters. His admiration for Matthew Arnold was almost inexplicably great, and to tell the truth it leaves the impression behind that the good Matthew found it somewhat embarrassing. He wrote a letter to Arnold of which the theme in his own words was:

"Hellenism v. Hebraism, Literature v. Dogma; while they will (especially the first) be immortal by reason of the exquisite clearness with which they have formulated truths, eternally interesting to the race, seem to me to be leading up to a third formula, by which this truth is to be brought home to our very doors and streets; this formula I will not call Revelation v. Humour, because what I want is the synthesis of Revelation (on the divine principle) with Humour, not their opposition."

Mr. Arnold, in reply to the long effusion, briefly but politely remarked that his duties as a school inspector kept him from writing long letters, but did not touch at all upon the theme started by Mr. Shorthouse. For the rest Mr. Shorthouse lived in a sort of back eddy or side stream of literature. His stammer made intercourse with society painful and difficult and went to increase his natural reticence and reserve. Thus we do not find him figuring in the literary circles of his age or taking part in their movements. All that can be said is that his celebrity brought him into occasional contact with the more illustrious of his contemporaries. He was once or twice on a visit to Tennyson and his widow gives a charming account of the experience. He met Browning, but seems to have had no long intercourse with him. From a casual reference we learn that he knew something of Stevenson, and other prominent names come up at rare intervals; but the natural habitat, as it were, of Mr. Shorthouse was his study at Moseley, where he wrote and thought within his own range, and extended his hospitality to all whom he deemed worthy of it. His tastes in literature might very well be arrived at by inference from his novel. George Herbert we knew beforehand to be a poet according to his own mind. Cervantes seems to have greatly interested him, but for a reason that would not be apparent to the man in the street, though of recent years several critics have expressed the same kind of admiration. An older generation was content to be amused with the humour of Cervantes and quite refused to believe, or rather did not think of believing, that the author had any other intention than that expressed by Shakespeare in his epilogue to The Tempest, when he declared his project was but "to please." Mr. Shorthouse, however, took "Don Quixote" much more seriously, as the following passage will show:

"This, as it seems to me, masterpiece of philosophic humour is, as I understand it, nothing but a representation (I am at a loss whether to call it allegorical or not) of the struggles of the divine principle to enter into the everyday details of human life; and the master work of it appears in this, that in it we have nothing but what is real life, and the divine is represented to us under no clumsy machina of preaching or of author's comments, but so far otherwise that the reader himself is made to enter into the struggle, and in most cases sides, as he does in life, with the commonplace and the material against the enthusiastic and the divine; and, so magnificently unflinching is the genius of Cervantes, this is carried to the grave itself; before which, talked down by commonplaces, and crushed by worldly good sense, Quixote acknowledges his madness, and confesses his life to have been a mistake; this is unspeakably sad, but it is true."

We do not pretend to have done more at the present moment than cast a bird's-eye view over the intellectual character of Mr. Shorthouse, showing how cultivated and fine were his tastes, and yet how he was able to carry sound business principles in a different compartment of his mind. His philosophy of life was sincere and noble though somewhat old-fashioned. Many of his beliefs are not reconcilable with those held by the most thoughtful minds of to-day, and yet it is possible that at bottom they are essentially the same; he breathed, so to speak, a different atmosphere, spoke a different language, and thought in different terms. However that may be, he lived a full and worthy life, in which what was public and what was private were in perfect harmony, and when, on March 4, 1903, he had to answer the beckoning call of him whom he named "the most beneficent angel of all," a strong and noble figure passed out of the intellectual life of Great Britain.

CATHERINE DE' MEDICI

Catherine de' Medici and the French Reformation. By EDITH SICHÉL. (London: Constable, 188s.)

It is an excellent effect of modern research that we are ceasing to believe in the villainies of the great. The kings and queens, whom an older fashion ticketed with opprobrious names, are gradually emerging from the dusk of their dishonour. And the amiable light, which has thus been cast upon their characters, is not the result of a fanciful whitewashing; it is a flash of truth in the darkness of exaggeration. In history, as in life, monsters are no more common than giants. But it was (and is) far easier to abuse your opponent than to convict him of error, and, as abuse increases with energy, the sins set down to the supposed villains of the sixteenth century are far blacker than those wherewith we besmirch our own contemporaries. Dr. Creighton once pointed out that "the frequent ascription of crimes to high personages was a proof not of their guilt, but of the low morality of their day," and the optimist may rejoice that the wicked ones of the past were, like the devil, never so black as they have been painted.

There is no one whose character has been more loudly decried than Catherine de' Medici. According to the superstition of historians, she was animated always by a grim and sinful lust of blood. She has been represented as loving murder for its own sake, like an artist. Popular painters have shown her to us gazing over Paris and gloating with a nameless joy over the slaughtered thousands of St. Bartholomew's Eve. The picture, of course, is overcharged, and now comes Miss Sichel to mitigate its crudity and to show us the Queen Regent of France in her true colours. Like other queens, and other women, she was a mixture of good and evil. Before all things, she was ambitious and guided, in the words of the Venetian Ambassador, "by a most powerful desire—the desire to reign." No sooner did she come to France, as the wife of the Dauphin, than she made herself an influence at the Court. To capture Francis I. was an easy matter to so gifted a princess, and she was not long in proving that in wit, learning, and in knowledge of affairs she had few rivals near the throne. But her husband did not appreciate her beauty and talent, and the people of Paris, always jealous of a stranger, dismissed her with the contemptuous title of "the Florentine." Three years after her marriage, the Dauphin transferred his affections to Diane de Poitiers, a lady seventeen years older than himself, who took his education in hand, and had no difficulty in keeping his devotion until his death. History cannot show a more remarkable instance of ascendancy than this. From the first moment the Dauphin was Diane's slave, enslaved not by beauty, not by a romantic temperament, not by wit, but merely by an interested sympathy, which brought out the excellent qualities which shyness and inaction had obscured. As Miss Sichel says, "he was inarticulate and she taught him speech; awkward and morose from diffidence, and she gave him self-confidence and success." And thus Diane's intuition and knowledge of the world achieved more than Catherine's love could compass. Upon Catherine the effect of the Prince's intrigue was bitter and lasting. Yet she was too proud to betray her feelings, and she suffered all her life with the restraint of a strong and self-willed nature. So long as her husband lived, she said nothing, content to watch his actions, and to walk masked and disguised in the streets of Paris that she might hear what he did and what the people said of him. When he died, she took her revenge quickly and coldly. She ordered Diane to leave Paris at once, and to return the crown jewels and presents that the king had given her. There was as fine a dignity in the revenge which she took upon her rival, as in the silence in which she endured the king's neglect. But the king's neglect had left its mark upon her, and her skill in the management of affairs, her insight into the cunning of men grew all the keener in the hours of her adversity.

It was with the death of Henri II. that her real life began. Henceforth either in fact or in name she was the ruler of France; and the problems which confronted her were not light. The country was torn by faction, and reduced by religious fanaticism to civil war. Neither the Catholics nor the Huguenots fought with gloved hands, and both parties were too intent upon their own advancement to temper their ferocity or to spare their adversaries. If the Catholics were savage in persecution, the Huguenots knew well how to make reprisals. "Sometimes they forced their way into the churches," writes Miss Sichel, "and, driving out the congregation, began services of their own; and it was their constant habit to hold Prêches just outside the church door, so that the noise of their psalm-singing might disturb the celebration of the Mass." This trait in the Huguenots was neither wise nor amiable; and, however deeply we may deplore the savage revenge that was wreaked upon them, we cannot find them wholly guiltless in the matter. It is never prudent to wound the susceptibilities of religion, and he, who in a Catholic country publicly eats meat on Fridays and fast days, must not expect to be treated with politeness or consideration.

Montaigne could not understand how any man could hold an opinion so fiercely as to burn another at the stake because he did not agree with him, and nowadays we are all of Montaigne's opinion. Nobody seriously wishes to relight the fires of Smithfield in the interest of either party. But when Catherine de' Medici held the reins of France, another view prevailed. Religion, moreover, was not merely a matter of faith; it was a matter of policy, and no doubt Catherine would have espoused either side, had she thought that by so doing she would bring peace and unity to France. The factions, however, were too strong for her, and for one another. She dared not offend the Guises, while she was willing (if possible) to conciliate the Bourbons. The result was that both parties grew in strength, and that street brawls, heightened oftentimes to civil war, were constant and inevitable. Now Catherine's temperament was always political rather than religious. Had she been without prejudice in the matter, she would have professed the tenets of the Huguenots, because they gave a greater scope to the play of the intelligence, and for many years she was not hostile to their pretensions. At the same time she was guilty of no apostasy, when in the end she took up the Catholic cause. She seems to have believed that in the extermination of the Huguenots lay France's hope of union, and she ordained the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Eve without cruelty and without rancour. The massacre, in truth, was dictated neither by religious fanaticism nor by the lust of blood. It was a piece of savage policy deliberately designed to achieve a certain end. We must not forget that in the sixteenth century the battles of statecraft were fought with other weapons than those which are popular to-day. Life was held cheaper than words, and our robuster ancestors thought that it was more profitable to put a sudden end to an adversary than to insult him. After St. Bartholomew's Eve the Spanish Envoy said of Catherine: "She has grown ten years younger, and seems to me like one who has come out of a bad illness." This observation does not prove the callousness of the Queen. She seemed younger, let us hope, not because she was gloating over the butchered Huguenots, but because she hoped that out of unanimity peace might at last come to her distracted country. In brief, Catherine was a politician unto the end. Had she lived to-day, she would have been a Primrose Dame. Living in the sixteenth century, she used the weapons which came nearest to her hand, and she has been involved ever since in an indiscriminating obloquy.

It is difficult to praise Miss Sichel's book too highly. Well written, authoritative, and sincere, it is a model of biography. Above all, the author has made a patient attempt to brush aside superstitions, and to arrive at the truth. In her eyes Catherine is a woman, full of faults, no doubt, but not a bogey, painted red, and tricked out in the fearsome rags of convention. Now and again we are not able to agree with Miss Sichel. When she tickets the age in which Catherine lived as "decadent," she seems to be making a concession to the ancient method which delighted to detect decadence and progress in alternate epochs. Nor is she altogether happy in discussing literature. For instance, she says that Ronsard lacked the quality that ensures immortality. Yet Ronsard was never more read than to day, and rarely exercised a deeper influence. And then she proceeds to discover in a lesser degree the moral insight of Shakespeare joined to genius for expression in Drummond of Hawthornden, a poet of mere artifice, if ever there was one. And we do not think that the over-rated potter, Bernard Palissy, the tragedy of whose life has given a fictitious interest to his art, was worth a chapter in a serious work. But these are small blemishes, and we gratefully recommend Miss Sichel's biography of a great queen to all students of the sixteenth century.

THE REFORMATION

History of the Reformation in Germany. By LEOPOLD VON RANKE. Translated by SARAH AUSTIN. Edited by ROBERT A. JOHNSON, M.A. (Routledge, 5s.)

Thomas Cranmer and the English Reformation. By FREDERICK ALFRED POLLARD, M.A. ("Heroes of the Reformation" Series. Putnam, 6s.)

WHEN Leopold von Ranke began his History of the "Reformation in Germany" with the words: "For purposes of discussion and instruction, it may be possible to sever ecclesiastical from political history; in actual life they are indissolubly connected, or rather fused into one indivisible whole," he founded a new school of the history of religious movements, the latest fruit of which is Mr. Pollard's sketch of the English Reformation in his "Life of Cranmer."

Ranke set to work by industriously examining such manuscripts as he could discover in the various archives in Germany which might shed the light of contemporary political action upon the period he had undertaken to describe. His work had all the labour of the pioneer. He discovered at Frankfurt ninety-six volumes containing the Acta of the Imperial Diet from 1414 to 1613 and went over them carefully. The student of history has advantages now which were lacking to Ranke. These Acta have now been published with instructive notes. The second volume of the Acta of the Diets of Charles V.—the one which deals with the Diet at Worms before which Luther appeared—is a masterpiece of careful and erudite editing. He explored the Royal archives of Prussia in Berlin and the archives of Saxony at Dresden. He accumulated all the details he could find from contemporary evidence bearing upon his period and made from his stores selection of the most salient facts.

As an example of the way in which he made the dry bones of statistical research live, we may take the use he made of Panzer's "Annalen der ältern deutschen Literatur." He quotes figures to show that before 1518 the number of German books issued yearly was, on an average, about forty.

"In 1518 we find 71 enumerated; in 1519, 111; in 1520, 208; in 1521, 211; in 1522, 347; in 1523, 183. If we inquire whence this wonderful increase emanated, we shall find it was from Wittenberg, and the chief author, Luther himself. In the year 1518 we find 20 books published in his name; in 1519, 50; in 1520, 133; in 1521, when he was interrupted by his journey to Worms and hindered by a forced seclusion, about 40; in 1522, again 130; and in 1523, 183. In no nation or age has a more autocratic and powerful writer appeared."

Of course Panzer's statistics, as the author confesses, were not complete. It is extremely unlikely that, notwithstanding the subsequent researches of Weller ("Repertorium Typographicum") and of Kuczynski ("Thesaurus libellorum historiarum Reformationum illustrantium") a complete bibliography of these years has yet been formed. Nor has Ranke noticed that publishers in Nürnberg, Strassburg, Basel, Augsburg, Leipzig, Erfurt and Zwickau reproduced almost all Luther's writings, almost immediately after they were issued from the Wittenberg presses, with the consequence that the figures he quotes do not represent the actual number of Luther's writings, but usually include four or five reprints by different firms in the one year. He has also missed the wonderful fact, which would have strengthened his argument, that almost the whole of the first or Wittenberg edition of Luther's writings was absorbed by the public within a period of three months (compare de Wette, "Dr. Martin Luther's Briefe," vi., 70ff; Enders, "Luther's Briefwechsel," v. 244; and Kapp, "Geschichte des Deutschen Buchhandels," p. 246). The information, however, was correct enough to give an adequate general impression which lent vividness to the history, and is an illustration of that industry of research which was characteristic of Ranke as a historian.

The edition before us is unfortunately incomplete. It is a reproduction of Mrs. Austin's translation which only included the first six of the ten books into which Ranke divided his complete work. It includes the history of the German Reformation down to the year 1534. It excludes the last twelve years of Luther's life, the period of the earlier religious wars, the Interim, and the Religious Peace of Augsburg. It does not contain the mass of extracts from original documents which Ranke printed in his concluding volume. For the period it covers it is still the best introduction to the history of the German Reformation, with perhaps the exception of von Bezold's contribution to Oncken's series of histories ("Geschichte der deutschen Reformation," 1890).

The editor remarks rightly enough that the book is no more than an introduction to one of the most complex periods of human history, that for many aspects and for numberless details the reader must have recourse to other authors; he adds that what may be called the "documentary age" was only beginning when Ranke wrote. That is true; but perhaps something more ought to be said. Ranke combined the political and the religious history of the times and made the one explain the other; but other combinations were needed to make a thoroughly good and complete introduction to the history of the times. The period was one of great economic changes, and these were quite as powerful as the political. Ranke has very little to say on this subject—nothing corresponding to von Bezold's admirable chapter entitled "Die Gesellschaft"—and that is one of the graver defects of his work. No picture of the period is at all adequate which omits to discuss the economic difficulties and changes which were creating great rifts in society at the close of the mediæval period. The book has another grave defect. It says little or nothing about the religious life dominating well-disposed persons in the decades before the Reformation. In the earlier chapters of Book II. the author discusses the origin of the religious opposition to the Papacy and in his sketch of the early career of Luther he traces the history of protests against the Pelagianism of the prevalent theology and against the sale of indulgences; but if Luther be taken as the master-spirit of the German Reformation the sources of the religious side of the movement must be sought elsewhere than in speculative protests against the theology and practices of the mediæval Church. It is a somewhat singular thing that few writers on the German Reformation have sought to investigate the conditions of the family and popular religious life which made the spiritual atmosphere breathed by the future reformer in his childhood, boyhood, and years of student life. Yet it is there where the roots of the German Reformation have to be sought. Here again von Bezold excels Ranke in his insight into what the historian must investigate who deals with the religious movement of the sixteenth century. There is nothing in Ranke corresponding to the former's chapters on the popular religion, on reform and heresy, and on the premonitions of revolution as seen in such movements as that of Hans Bohaim of Niklashausen. Von Bezold himself has missed the quiet family religious life which is revealed in fragments of autobiography left by many of the men who were leaders in the movement for reform on the lines laid down by Luther; and he has not noticed the many indications which appear, long before Luther's revolt, that the laity were beginning to find out that a religious life might be lived to a large extent without the continual domination of the Church. All this very important side of what grew to be the German Reformation is passed over in silence by Ranke, and the omission detracts greatly from the value of his book as a general introduction to the period he describes. It has to be said in excuse that the materials scarcely existed when Ranke was engaged in writing and that we still lack a good monograph on the religious confraternities which were so prominent a feature in the religious life of the close of the fifteenth century.

In Mr. Pollard's "Thomas Cranmer" we have the work of a writer who has proved his intimate acquaintance with the history of the period covered by the life of the first Protestant Archbishop of England. The book is, as it must be, a brief history of the English Reformation in its earlier stages and it differs from most recent works on the same subject in this, that the author has a competent knowledge of what was then going on throughout Europe and is safeguarded against the insularity or provincialism which marks the authors of the volumes in Stephens and Hunt's "History of the Church of England." Its impartiality and lack of partisan writing is also to be commended. Mr. Pollard recognises, as every one must, that the English Reformation was indigenous to the soil; but he also sees that the great continental movement could not but have a marked effect on the severance of England from the Papacy.

He makes it plain that many more things went to make the breach between England and Rome than the desire of Henry VIII. to get his marriage with Catharine of Arragon annulled. There was Lollardry, which had never died out since the days of Wiclif, and which had a strong hold on many of the English people in the early decades of the sixteenth century. Mr. Pollard follows Dr. Rashdall in pointing out in how many particulars the English Reformation followed the lines of reform laid down by Wiclif. The fourteenth-century reformer denounced the papal supremacy because of the political injury it did to the English people; he declaimed against the sloth, the immorality, and the wealth of the English clergy; he condemned the lazy and luxurious habits of monks sworn to poverty; he insisted on and created a preaching ministry; and he looked to the secular power to reform the manners of the clergy and to rule and govern the Church within the realm. In all these particulars the ground-plan of the English Reformation was sketched by the pastor of Lutterworth. We find a confirmation of this, if any were needed, in the acquaintance that men like Cranmer, Hooker, Ridley and Bale had with the writings of Wiclif, and in their acknowledgment of their indebtedness to him. It is interesting to remember that Henry VIII., always curious about theology and interested to know about the books which influenced his subjects, sent to Oxford in 1530 for a copy of the articles on which Wiclif had been condemned. Of course it is easy to exaggerate this influence, and it is probable that Dr. Rashdall does make too much of it when he says that "the Reformation had virtually broken out in the secret Bible-readings of the Cambridge Reformers before the trumpet call of Luther" had been heard. Similar Bible-readings had been common enough both in France and in Germany long before the close of the fifteenth century; and yet we can scarcely say that the Reformation movement in these countries had begun.

We venture to think that Mr. Pollard might have alluded to the work of the Christian Humanists. Although one of them, Sir Thomas More, grew more and more reactionary as the years passed, he was still able to say in 1520 (February 28) that if Pope Leo withdrew his approbation of Erasmus' New Testament, Luther's attack on the Holy See would be piety itself compared with such an act. These Humanists had expected much from Henry VIII., whom they regarded as imbued with the New Learning; and one has only to examine the "Bishop's Book," and even the "King's Book" to see how much of the spirit of Colet and Erasmus inspired the earlier English Reformation.

Mr. Pollard also lays stress justly on the popular dislike of the Pope and of the clergy which was as manifest in England as it was in Germany in the early decades of the sixteenth century. Whatever judgment we may pass on the conduct and motives of Henry VIII. in his demand to be freed from Catharine of Arragon, the proceedings of the Pope in the matter of the divorce—now favouring the English monarch, now thwarting him, as the Pontiff's Italian policy veered one way or another—was an object-lesson to the English people that the Papacy had abandoned its position as the European arbiter in moral questions in order to pursue its rôle of a petty Italian State.

A country so prepared could scarcely avoid being interested in the movement headed by Luther in Germany, and the eight volumes of "Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic," relating to the times of Henry VIII. furnish abundant proof of this.

Mr. Pollard tells, succinctly enough, the attempts of Thomas Cromwell to induce Henry to enter into an alliance with the Lutheran Schmalkald, and it may be interesting to note in this connection that Dr. Mentz, Professor of History at Jena, has a few weeks ago published from a MS. in the archives at Weimar the explanations of the Schmalkald Articles prepared at Wittenberg for the information of the Divines who were sent from England to learn the doctrinal standpoint of the Lutheran leaders. "Die Wittenberger Artikel von 1536 (Artickel der christlicher Lahr, von welchen die Leggatten aus Engelland mit dem Herrn Doctor Martino gehandelt Anno 1536)" is the title of the booklet.

Space forbids doing more than saying that the chapter on Cranmer's theological views seems an admirable piece of writing, although perhaps Cranmer owed more to the teaching of continental theologians than Mr. Pollard is prepared to admit.

HEINE AND BYRON

Die Aufnahme Lord Byrons in Deutschland und sein Einfluss auf den jungen Heine. Von Dr. WILHELM OCHSENBEIN. (Bern: Francke.)

It is an obiter dictum that Scott and Byron are the only English writers universally read on the continent. Now, however, when the comparative study of literature is becoming the order of the day, it is well to examine carefully such generally received opinions. Dr. Ochsenbein has therefore made minute investigation into the way in which Byron's work was actually received in Germany, and as to the influence it exercised on the poet Heine.

In the years during which Byron's poems were appearing, the romantic type of literature was the favourite reading of the German public, and that fact alone would have made Byron's work acceptable in Germany. Yet certain critics, jealous of their country's honour, were careful to point out that he had had forerunners there. The "Hebrew Melodies" reminded them of Klopstock, "Parisina" of "Don Carlos," and "The Corsair" of "The Robbers"; "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers" might almost be called a sort of "Xenien"; "Childe Harold" was related to Wieland's "Oberon," and "Manfred" and "Cain" to Goethe's "Faust."

Enthusiasm for Byron both as man and poet ran high in Germany: from about 1817 till 1835 it was at white heat, and if critics have since gradually discovered the artistic weaknesses and faults of their quondam idol, the fire still burns in the hearts of less exalted mortals. In a recent novel of importance the heroine, when a young girl, falls in love with a portrait of Byron that hangs in the picture gallery of her native town, and feels sure that she could have been to him all that the woman he loved failed to be. Every German you meet—no matter what his age or rank—on the shores of the Lake of Geneva will begin reciting (in the German translation) stanzas from "Childe Harold" and "The Prisoner of Chillon." Goethe, writing in 1817, said:

"The more the originality of Byron's work becomes known, the greater is the sympathy it attracts, so that men and women, youths and maidens, seem almost to forget their nationality."

Byron's domestic affairs were as eagerly discussed as his poetry. It is said that Goethe's attention was first drawn to him by the farewell verses to his wife. And that the headquarters of the discussion was to some extent Goethe's house at Weimar is sufficient proof that it was not due to a mere love of gossip and scandal, but was rather sincere sympathy with the untoward fate of a great man. As a poet Goethe set Byron nearly as high as Shakespeare and the poets of classical antiquity, and forgot the faults and failings of the man in the æsthetic greatness of his poetry. The youth of Germany looked upon Byron as the model of the man of deep, fine feeling, who, proud of his personal griefs and wrongs, turned in contempt from the philistine outer world. As Börne wrote in 1832:

"I cannot help laughing when people pity him [Byron] because he is so melancholy. Is not God also melancholy? Melancholy is the joy of God. Can any one who loves be joyful? Byron hated men because he loved humanity, life, eternity. . . . I would give up all the joys of my life for a year of Byron's sufferings."

The German translations of Byron are countless. From 1816 when there appeared an anonymous translation of "The Corsair," until the publication in 1828 of a complete edition of the works in thirty-one volumes, no year passed without the issue of German renderings of one or more of the poems. Thirteen authors contributed to the 1828 edition, and it was published by August Schumann, father of the great musician. The volumes were small and handy, designed for "travellers, pedestrians, young students, educated persons of all ranks and both sexes, as well as for gifts of love or friendship." They might be seen in the windows of every bookseller, from Brussels to Vienna, from Florence to St. Petersburg. Yet another translation of the complete works appeared in 1830-31.

Heine's first poems were published just when Byron's name was in every one's mouth, and the volume contained several translations from Byron. Dr. Ochsenein has collected all the various criticisms which refer to Byron's influence on Heine. Some hold that the similarity rests on deliberate imitation; others that the two men chanced to be kindred spirits; others again that the time-spirit was responsible for the likeness. Criticism is still greatly at variance as to the extent of Heine's debt to Byron. The comparison rests chiefly on the fact that they were both subjective poets, and on the pessimism and the desire of political freedom expressed by both in their poems. But the point of view of the two men was never exactly similar, and a study of criticisms and opinions is fraught with danger for the result, unless it is accompanied by a first hand comparison of the poems.

The youth Heine associated on terms of close intimacy with Byron's greatest admirers in Germany. Doubtless to that fact are due in part the four translations ("To Inez"; "Fare thee well!"; some scenes from "Manfred"; and "Good-night") that appear in his first published volume. Frequent references to Byron in his private letters, and the classical passage in the "Harzreise" where he relates how he ascended the Brocken with two ladies, and how they talked of Angora cats, Etruscan vases, Turkish shawls, macaroni, and Lord Byron, show that the English poet was constantly in his thoughts. When Byron died he wrote of him as "my cousin," and declared that:

"he [Byron] was the only man with whom I felt myself of kin. . . . I always felt at home in intercourse with him as with an entirely congenial comrade."

But nevertheless Byron's influence on Heine is chiefly seen in the work of the years 1820-22 on his two tragedies

"Almansor" and "Ratcliff." Those tragedies are little read, especially in this country, but they contain some of Heine's finest poetry. Henceforth by his own confession he "read Byron seldom," and his little poem "Childe Harold," published in 1844, which describes the transport of the poet's corpse from Greece, is more a beautiful, fantastic picture than a passionate lament.

Every one must admit that there are many points of likeness in Byron and Heine. Some are due to a similarity of temperament, some to a similarity of environment, some to the literary spirit of the age. But, all said and done, Byron was the greater poet; his was the more passionate and intense nature. Egoist as he was, he died fighting for the freedom of an oppressed people. Despite his cynicism and scoffing, Heine was the sweeter singer, and his songs, along with those of Burns and Béranger, rank as the greatest the world has received. But Heine's range was narrower than Byron's, his outlook on life more confined, his sympathies less wide. Heine could never have written the third and fourth Cantos of "Childe Harold." There can, however, be no manner of doubt that Byron strongly influenced Heine in the beginning, and youthful impressions last long, if indeed they are not eternal.

It is a pity that German scholars who busy themselves in researches like those in the book under consideration do not take the trouble to present the valuable information they are at such pains to collect in a more attractive and symmetrical form. Dr. Ochsenein's volume contains everything we can possibly need in order to form a fairly correct notion of Byron's influence in Germany and on Heine. But the process of digging and delving necessary to discover the particular facts is so laborious that we become almost inclined to give up the business and to make the researches at first hand on our own account. The use of varied types to distinguish the quoted passages from the author's own comments and a more compact arrangement of the facts presented would render such works far more useful and widely employed.

THE LIFE OF LIVES

The Quest of the Infinite. By BENJAMIN A. MILLARD. (H. R. Allenson, 3s. 6d.)

THE author of this eloquent and suggestive little book shares the conviction of the wisest in all ages that man, "the cause-seeking" creature, is still more radically the worshipping creature.

"The quest of the average man to-day is to find a simple but sufficient ground for faith. He has no real preference for unbelief, by nature he inclines to Faith."

but:

"The average man has really done with authority as a ground of faith."

Whither, then, shall he turn?

In our opinion, Mr. Millard's title is misleading, for he is concerned not with the philosophic, but with the practical question. His answer is the answer of a thousand tracts and sermons; but whereas these touch us not at all, save possibly to disgust, Mr. Millard's presentation impresses and even enthalls us. His answer is to point to the Crucified One. He forces upon us the conviction that there is a future for what may truly be called Christianity, so glorious and so potent that we who live in an age of decaying dogma can scarcely imagine it. The life and personality of the Man Jesus are almost inseparable to-day from the system of dogmatic theology which is associated with His name. Yet Mr. Millard writes as if he had had an experience which must be very rare, but is surely the most happy that can befall any man. The experience we mean is this. A youth brought up in a Christian home finds cause, as he thinks, to abandon, one after another, the main dogmas of the traditional creed. Like the advanced theologians of Germany and England, he can no longer believe in the Virgin-Birth or the Resurrection. He ceases to go to Church or to read his Bible, though he retains a copy of that Book in his library for the æsthetic pleasure which the reading of Isaiah or Job affords him. The New Testament he entirely ceases to read. Years later, when he has attained manhood and the philosophic temper which has declared immitigable warfare against Bias—Reason's deadly and only foe—some course of inquiry leads him to study, this time as an independent mind, the Gospel narrative of Him who died upon the tree. Ignorant, perhaps, of the higher criticism, and, in truth, independent of it, he makes what is really his first acquaintance with the "Life of Lives." For some time he suffers from the constant comments of his naturalistic training upon the narrative: when he comes to the boy whom the evil spirit threw into the fire, he cannot rid himself of the word epilepsy; when to the Gadarene swine, of the teaching of Huxley and Gladstone. Later he determines to make a fresh start, with one aim and one only, to inquire "what manner of man was this." And then he makes the capital discovery of his life. His mental history permits him to read the narrative as if he were a Greek gentleman—a friend of Socrates, let us say. He can read the story, as a simple narrative, without reference to dogmas which he keeps for criticism in another corner of his mind, and without vivid remembrance of hearing it read in tones which would be an impertinence to the alphabet. He finds it impossible to doubt that there did verily exist, at a time and in a place which his knowledge of geological epochs and of stellar distances makes him regard as very near to him—at a distance in time so small that the conformation of man's body and of the continents has scarcely altered therein, and at a distance in measureless space so near that light would traverse it sixty times in one second—a Being, a Personality, so immeasurably great, so transcendently complete, that the unintelligible phrase, an Infinite Personality, almost comes to have a meaning for him and to cease to be a contradiction in terms.

Such has been the experience of the present writer, and it qualifies him for sympathy with Mr. Millard's little treatise. The author's own creed is not explicitly stated, but doubtless that is because he knows that no creed can be more than symbolic, and that now we see through a glass darkly.

It is the human Christ, the superhumanly human Christ, the Son of Man, that men can love: not the second Person of the Trinity, or the λόγος made flesh. For it is in Him, the closing tragedy of whose life—which robbed failure of its victory and its sting, and threw into its proper mud the ideal of material success—has added Rapture to the "pity and terror" of the Greek concept of tragedy, that we see incarnate, each in such perfection as only hereby is made conceivable, the sublime union of the Good, the True and the Beautiful. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Myself."

C. W. S.

MADAME WADDINGTON AGAIN

Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife. By MARY KING WADDINGTON. Illustrated from drawings and photographs. (Smith, Elder, 10s. 6d. net.)

IN these letters Madame Waddington describes to her mother and sister the incidents of two winters spent in Rome, the one with her husband in 1880 and the other in 1904 after his death. It must be admitted that they have not quite the same interest as those of her first volume, "Letters of a Diplomat's Wife," which showed us the great worlds of London and Moscow. And yet Italy is to the cultivated Englishman and Englishwoman a second fatherland, one that draws us by the thousand invisible threads of art and poetry, of remembered life and beauty, and of associations which have become part of our very selves. To many of us, therefore, the present volume is likely to be a more intimate friend than its predecessor, more of a "bed-side book" in fact, and that for the very reasons which make it a less suitable subject for the reviewer's dissecting-knife. Madame Waddington gives excellent drawings of her parents—President Charles King, of Columbia College, looking very handsome and stately in his official robes, and Mrs. King, in a Quakerish cap, with a face of mingled shrewdness and sweetness. They certainly look like people who would have appreciated such a daughter, and perhaps it is not fanciful to attribute to their upbringing and influence her liveliness, her originality, her humorous observation, and her delight in everything beautiful. For these letters are the perfectly spontaneous expression of a particularly charming personality. The little details which they contain might seem trivial to a superficial or to an ignorant reader, and any one who takes the book up in the hope of finding light shed upon the dark places of high politics will be disappointed. Their value is that of mémoires pour servir; they show us the great ones of the earth in their habit as they lived, and we prophesy that posterity will refer to them when many a pretentious historian is forgotten.

The letters begin with M. Waddington's resignation of the French Premiership at the end of 1879. Madame Waddington describes with keen enjoyment the classic visite de condoléance paid to her by Madame Grévy as the wife of the ex-Minister:

"... the footman appeared with his eyes round to announce that 'La Présidente' (Madame Grévy) was coming upstairs to pay Madame a visit. I flew to the door and the top of the stairs (I couldn't get any further) and received 'ma Présidente' in proper style. I ushered her into the salon where I had left my friends (mad Royalists both). They were much disgusted—however they were too well-bred to make things disagreeable for me in my own house—and rose when we came in. I named Madame Grévy—and as soon as she had taken her seat, and declined a cup of tea, they went away. Of course they hated getting up for Madame Grévy, but there was nothing else to be done as she and I were both standing."

The fact that President Grévy married his cook gives point also to the story of how that good lady encountered Madame de MacMahon at one of Madame Waddington's Fridays at the Quai d'Orsay. Marshal MacMahon had just resigned the presidency, and his wife, when Madame Grévy was announced, was rather curious to see her successor.

"She was quite at her ease—Madame Grévy rather shy and embarrassed—however Madame de MacMahon talked at once about some of the great charities, artists, etc., and it really wasn't too stiff—Orloff [the Russian Ambassador] of course always helping and making jokes with the two ladies. One or two visitors came in and gasped when they saw the situation. . . ."

Not pages of solemn historical disquisition could give such a vivid idea of the social divisions in France, accentuated by the Republican régime.

Madame Waddington's recollections of the last three Popes are extremely interesting, and of each she gives an admirable drawing. Pio Nono, who according to M. Minghetti was the most absolutely liberal man he had ever known—"but what could he do, once he was Pope?"—took a great interest in the social life of Rome.

"They used always to say he knew everything about everybody, and that there was nothing he enjoyed so much as a visit from Odo Russell, who used to tell him all sorts of 'petites histoires' when their official business was over."

She recalls the last benediction of Pius IX. from the balcony of St. Peter's, when everybody was cheered, even Montebello, who commanded the French army of occupation. Of Leo XIII. she says that he was "a very striking figure: tall, slight, a fine intellectual brow and wonderfully bright eyes—absolutely unlike Pio Nono." He talked freely to M. Waddington, showing his anxiety to bring about a better state of feeling between the clergy and the people in France. His Holiness, when Bishop of Perugia, had known M. Waddington's uncle, Evelyn Waddington, who had married an Italian lady and been sindaco of Perugia for years. Of the present Pope Madame Waddington says:—

"He has a beautiful face—so earnest, with a fine upward look in his eyes; not at all the intellectual, ascetic appearance of Léo XIII., nor the half-malicious, kindly smile of Pius IX., but a face one would remember. . . . He was much interested in all Bessie [Marquise de Talleyrand-Périgord] told him about America and the Catholic religion in the States—was rather amused when she suggested that another American cardinal might perhaps be a good thing. . . . He gave me the impression of a man who was still feeling his way, but who, when he had found it, would go straight on to what he considered his duty. But I must say that is not the general impression; most people think he will be absolutely guided by his 'entourage,' who will never leave him any initiative."

This mention of "Bessie" reminds us that these letters incidentally show how many American ladies have married into the great French and Italian nobility, or into the diplomatic and official world of Europe, as Madame Waddington herself did. Everywhere she receives pretty compliments on the score of her nationality, save from two appalling Englishwomen, for whom we beg respectfully to blush. One of these, a certain Lady S.:

'remarked she supposed I couldn't understand her ideas—she came from a big country where one took broad views of things. I said I thought I did too, but perhaps it is a matter of appreciation—I think, though, I have got geography on my side."

Here we must quote a delightful passage:

"Do you remember one of A's stories? He was secretary to the British Embassy at Washington, and at one of the receptions at the White House (which are open receptions—all the world can go) all the corps diplomatiques were present in the full glory of ribbons and plaques. He heard some one in the crowd saying, 'What are all these men dressed up in gold lace and coloured ribbons?' The answer came after a moment's reflection, 'I guess it's the band.'"

In the interval between Madame Waddington's two visits to Italy, her husband had filled with distinction the French Embassy in London and had died, sincerely lamented by the two great nations to which he belonged in almost equal degree. Her comparisons between the old and the new Rome, her shrewd observation not only of the topographical changes but of the subtler alterations in the social milieu, are full of interest, and demand quotation for which we have no space. But we must mention her reception by Queen Elena who 'talked very prettily and simply about her own children, and the difficulty of keeping them natural and unspoiled; said people gave them such beautiful presents . . . the present they liked best was a rag doll the American Ambassador had brought them from America."

She had seen the present King of Italy a quarter of a century before, with his mother, Queen Margherita. Then

"the child looked intelligent, but delicate. They say his mother makes him work too much, is so ambitious for him; and he has rather that look. The Princes of Savoy have always been soldiers rather than scholars, but I suppose one could combine the two."

We have delightful glimpses of Roman society, old and new, of Madame Mohl, the Storys, Brancaccios, Ruspolis, Teanos, Wimpffens, Massimos, Fields, and many more. And through all the vivacious pages there runs a deep appreciation of the beauty of Italian skies and gardens, exquisite little vignettes of word-painting, over which the reader lingers with all the subtle pleasure of reminiscence. We feel we cannot have too many books like this—the expression of a cultivated, well-bred, cosmopolitan, and always kindly and good-natured mind.

OLD UNHAPPY FAR-OFF TIMES

The Vision of Piers the Plowman. By WILLIAM LAGLAND. Done into modern English by Professor SKEAT. (De La More Press, 1s. 6d. net.)

THANKS are due to Professor Skeat by the general reading public for his labour of love in editing for modern readers the graphic and picturesque poem of Piers Plowman. This admirable modernised transcript realises for the ordinary reader all the advantages and easements of an editio ad usum Delphini. It saves time and patience and makes of the rugged old English classic agreeable reading. In Chaucer we have the rosy happy view of the masses in Anglo Norman England as seen from above by the royal esquire, entitled to his pensions and his grants of wine—an England full of mirth and jollity. In Piers we have the same England viewed from below by one of the down-trodden, hard-worked land tillers, or by one in close contact with them. Piers in his wonderful vision, "meatless and moneyless, on Malvern hills," by that delightful burnside where he fell a-dreaming, essays to limn in sad realistic lines, with here and there touches of satiric humour, the very form and body of his time. William Langland, "Long Will" as he calls himself, and "a lunatic and lean man," was a quick-witted, keen observer, and had a happy knack of seeing through the shams and falsities of those above him. The inspired mantle thrown round his peasant shoulders revealed to him, as to Burns, that the rank was but the guinea stamp, the honest man the eternal gold. He was a moralist and satirist, and society, from the king and his barons down to Jack Short, came under the lash of his wit and shrewd sense. The tiller of the soil had just emerged from the thralldom of villenage. He had not yet been shaken down into his proper sphere or acquired the right to sell his labour as he pleased. The times were out of joint, and it was Langland's hard task to try to set them right. The final publication of the poem only preceded by a year the famous "Peasant's Revolt." Langland, like Aristophanes and Bunyan, had a quaint gift of coining long descriptive names for his characters. There is Chattering-out-of-reason and Suffer-till-I-see-my-time, and the laboriously labelled Tom True-tongue-tell-me-no-fores-nor-lies-for-to-laugh-at-I-loved-them-never, and the long list of alliteratively named workers. There is Cicely the shoe seller, the warrener Wat, Timothy the tinker, the hackney-man Hick, Clarice of Cock Lane, Davy the ditcher, and a dozen others. The canvas lives and palpitates before us with living men and women and the incidents of every day, and the guile also, which we suppose to belong more particularly to our less guileless age. Tradesmen and advertising are for ever the same. In the case of the character he calls Liar:

"The grocers besought him to sell men their spices
And tout for their trade."

The features of London life have apparently remained unaltered. The workmen who did bad work and wasted their time kept drawling some popular stave: "Dieu vous save dame Emme!" They did not have flaring advertisements of cheap dinners, but resorted to deafening entreaty of passers-by.

"Cooks and kitchen-lads cried—'Hot pies, hot!
'Good geese and good bacon!—Good dinners! come, dine!'"

Taverners touted: "A taste here, for nothing"; somewhat in the manner of that originally-minded publication which generously allows the public "to pree" its first number gratis. The burly inn-keeper who called:

"Here's Rhine wine! Rochelle wine, your roast to digest," anticipated the vendors of patent medicines who assist the digestion of a corpulent British public. There is no new vice since the melancholy singer of "placebos and diriges" observed the ways of London town. In the courts money, not love of right, moved the eloquent lips of counsel, and he notes it with a remembrance of his early life and the free wanderings he exchanged for Babylon.

"Sooner measure the mist upon Malvern hills
Than see a mouth mumble ere money be shown."

The author of "Piers the Plowman" was an honest down-right Englishman like that other great dreamer Bunyan, and he nothing extenuates nor sets down aught in malice. Professor Skeat has already done good work in editing Chaucer on modern lines, and we owe him gratitude for this rendering of the work of a great Englishman who exhibits those traits and ideals in the midst of despair, which will always make the foundation of a true people and lasting empire.

THE FIRST FARCE

L'avocat Patelin. The famous fifteenth-century Farce.
Translated by SAMUEL F. G. WHITAKER. (Unwin, 3s. 6d. net.)

L'avocat Patelin—or rather "Maître Pathelin"—anonymous and undated, but unquestionably written about the middle of the fifteenth century, is the earliest of modern farces. It was re-written by Abbé Brueys, and produced at the Théâtre Français in 1706. It is this revised version which Mr. Whitaker has translated, and his description of it as "the famous fifteenth-century farce" is a misuse of language—much as it would be if a French translator were to present the version of The Tempest which Mr. Tree lately produced at His Majesty's Theatre as Shakespeare's original text. One is the more surprised at his selection of the Brueys version because a modernised version of the fifteenth-century text, edited by M. Edouard Fournier at the time of the revival of the farce at the Comédie Française, about five and thirty years ago, was available; and one is further astounded at his statement that the piece is "here introduced to the English reader for the first time"—the italics are his. Before making this very confident statement, Mr. Whitaker would have done well to look the matter up—the italics this time are ours. A very little research would have led him to the discovery that The Village Lawyer: A Farce in One Act adapted from L'avocat Patelin by "Mr. Lyons," was produced at the Theatre Royal, Haymarket, on Tuesday, August 28, 1787, and was subsequently published by Thomas Hailes Lacy of 89 Strand, in his popular edition of acting plays. It is not, of course, a literal rendering of the farce. It takes liberties alike with the text and with the names of the characters, presenting the lawyer as "Scout," the draper as "Snarl," the judge as "Justice Mitimus," and the shepherd as "Sheepshank"; but, as its origin is acknowledged on the title-page, Mr. Whitaker's claim to have broken fresh ground falls through.

We would not insist upon this if he had done his work well; but he has in fact done it so badly that one cannot imagine how he could have done it worse. The limitations of his acquaintance with the language which he is translating are sufficiently indicated by his habit of abbreviating "Madame" as "Mdme" and "Mademoiselle" as "Mdle." His awkwardness in handling his own language is illustrated on almost every page, in sentences of this sort:

"When fathers nothing give, children must help themselves."
"My late father's papers proof provide of a debt—"
"To no one aught I owe."
"At eighteen years I knew to read and write."
"On 'r return not lose a moment."
"The pity not to have applied yourself to greater matters,"
"Know then, in brief, he hath been taken with the manner in the night time, killing a sheep, for the which I've beaten him and summoned 'fore the judge."
"Once give me of prosperity the outward show, and then my daughter—"

Finally there is the introduction, which can only be described as a wasted opportunity. There is nothing in it about the place of the piece in French dramatic literature; nothing about the Abbé Brueys—a most interesting man who combined dramatic authorship and dogmatic theology with unusual if not unique success; nothing about the bibliography; nothing, in short, but idle talk. Why Mr. Whitaker should have troubled to produce the book at all if he was not prepared to devote some pains to the making of it is what we are unable to understand.

"NO, BY THE ROOD, NOT SO!"

The Dream of the Rood. Edited by Professor ALBERT S. COOK of Yale University. (Clarendon Press, 3s. 6d. net.)

A LEARNED attempt is here made to prove that Cynewulf and not Caedmon was the author of the Anglo-Saxon poem, "The Dream of the Rood." Professor Cook's little volume is full of curious, painstaking, and extensive learning, and illustrations culled from far and near, from the Bible, the Latin and Greek classics down to Wordsworth and Tennyson, to explain and support his theory. The world-famous Runic Cross at Ruthwell in Dumfries-shire is carved all over (15½ feet high) with vine tracery intermingled with birds and beasts, but the supreme interest of the monolith rests in the legends running round the tracery. The runes—voces vere runicæ, mysticæ et occultæ—were a profound mystery, and puzzled the learned of Europe till the discovery of an old neglected codex at Vercelli, a convent in Piedmont, in 1832, and the true reading of the runes dawned on Mr. Kemble, the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar, who had previously made a special study of the cross when translating one of the poems: "The Holy Rood: A Dream," in the ancient codex. Professor Stephens of Copenhagen discovered that the runes on the top of the cross read "Caedmon me fawed"—Caedmon made me. Mr. Cook refuses to believe that the name Caedmon can be read at all! It was a common and not unusual way of making a monument tell its own tale. The famous Alfred jewel in the Ashmolean at Oxford repeats, in similar fashion, the story of its birth. Caedmon has therefore been credited with the authorship of the poem from which the verses on the cross are taken. Professor Cook's thesis is to dispute this and to contend that the author is Cynewulf and that the cross, instead of dating from 680 A.D., can only date from about 950 A.D. The argument is based on linguistic and archaeological considerations. Professor Cook, however, overlooks the fact that the Bewcastle and Ruthwell crosses were erected at the same time, probably from designs by the same artist. The Bewcastle cross is a personal monument in memory or in honour of Wilfrid, the "kingly bishop of the Northumbrians," who had visited Rome, and no doubt explored the catacombs, which makes the erection of the cross about 680 A.D. The same mason's marks and symbols are said to be clearly recognisable on both crosses. The forms of decoration are exactly reproduced on both monuments, only on a slightly smaller scale on the Ruthwell cross. The latest structural theory is that the sixth century was a period of great activity in Christian missions, and guilds of masons soon followed in their wake, and no doubt builders from York were employed at Hexham soon after Wilfrid brought members of the masonic guild from Canterbury to renew the minster buildings. These foreign masons are said to have carried over with them designs copied from the symbolic tracery in the catacombs at Rome. If this explanation, based on structural design, is worthy of credence, Professor Cook's abstruse and learned argument falls to the ground. The case for either side is interesting, and this little book is full of valuable and all but convincing facts. The Ruthwell cross (is the first syllable a softened form of the word rood?) will ever remain the most splendid and matchless monument of antiquity on the Scottish border and continue to whisper in its mysterious runes the fateful and solemn message of the great sacrifice:

"Tire not to tellen
Of the Tree of Glory
Where the Prince of Peace
Tholèd his passion."

HANDS

SING, for with hands,
One thumb and four fingers a-piece,
They built the temples of Egypt and Greece!
Sing, for in many lands
Are things of use and beauty seen,
That without hands had never been—
Without skilled hands!

White hands, deft hands,
No lily is more lovely, no,
Nor can the swan more graces show

Than lady's arm commands!—
O strength as of a giant's grip!
O firmness meet to steer a ship!
O swart, male hands!

Frank hands, free hands,
When shall my little ones grow great
And clasp such huge ones for their mate?
Who thinks, who understands,
How hands of soldiers and of kings,
And all those by princesses waved,
Were once a baby's hands and craved
For jangling toys and shining things?

T. STURGE MOORE.

SAYINGS OF CHILDREN—II

"Do people ever die without a cause?"

"There is always a cause."

"I mean, does a man ever say: 'I think I'll go and get my hat' and fall down dead?"

"It may happen so."

"What is the cause then?"

"The heart stops beating. . . ."

"You know the heart in your body is like the gardener in a garden" . . . (he often asks for an explanation, only to cut it short and expound the matter for himself) . . . "you see the gardener digs, and digs, and goes on digging, and the flowers open and the garden grows. And then when the night comes the gardener puts away his spade—that's the heart—and goes home, and the garden dies. Well, not dies exactly, but the flowers shut up, you know, and it's all very quiet. No one moving about. I'm not telling you what's real, you know, only making a sort of Pilgrim's Progress thing of it."

"An allegory, you mean."

"Is that the word? Tell me another quite new word what I don't know at all."

"Hypochondriac."

He rampaged the room in his enjoyment. "Say it again. Say it again."

"Do you know one night, Moth', I saw Japan?"

"What was it like?"

"O . . . dear little men dressed all in red, golden giraffes, and gardens of shells. . . ."

But not always is he so in tune with the exquisite.

"I wonder why it is Wynken always likes things that are so gentle, you know, and beautiful. Now I like things vulgar and strong."

No doubt there have been many conceptions of Heaven, beside that which gives us the clamour and jostle of harps and halos. And if the kingdom lies within ourselves, as it is written, shall not we each of us have our own idea?

Blynken has his. "Isn't that like Heaven through there, the trees and all?"

"Is that your idea of Heaven?"

"O, my idea is a cottage I think . . . with an old tramp coming out of the door, for God." Yet his mother reads here, in this sudden change to farce from fancy, something of an evidence of the sensitiveness of a child.

Uneasiness may be covered by a laugh.

"I don't much like that; do you, Moth'?" pointing to an old Italian mirror, carved and gilt. "It's pretty, I think." "Well, it's pretty; but . . . I don't like smart things in ordinary places."

It was this voice that reached his mother from a distance:

"Come! I want to tell you something! I want to tell you some horrible news! When I was digging, I found, in a hole, a rather round, green, worm. I'm afraid I killed it."

"You know, Moth', how people weigh their slippers down? The walls of them, I mean?"

One day a china lobster was left out all night by the stream. It was discovered amid acclamation on the morrow. "Look at this poor thing! 'It says, here am I, parching all night, looking wondrously at the water.'"

The early sun shone yellow, on grey cobwebs drenched in grass: "It's such a lovely day! as shiny as gold, and everywhere just a little foggier than silver."

It was Nod who remarked on the cowed chimney-pots in London. "Look at the plenty of those."

"And what do you think of them?"

"Well, I think they're a sort of monkey, having some hats on."

Sometimes a child answers a child's question with admirable finality.

"But where does the milk come from?"

And Wynken, with decision. "It comes from the grass, inside the cows, I tell you."

Her answers need amendment sometimes, however.

"What means 'rebellious,' Moth'?"

"O, don't interrupt the reading, Blynken! Can't you guess? Always ringing the bell of course. Go on, Mummie."

One day Blynken was looking at a picture of Thomas Carlyle. "Why does he look so unhappy?"

"He was ill; and while he thought of big things, little things worried him."

"What did he think about?"

"The world, and the meaning of it. And all that goes on in the world."

"Well, but Moth'" (spreading expostulating hands before her) . . . "ferrets must eat eggs."

There was a scramble under the table, and pows came in collision. "Nod! your head seems to be made of poison, you bump so."

One night a lady went to the nursery to say good-night dressed in her evening dress, and there was a whispered aside of admiration: "Slender arms, slender neck, quite a giraffe."

"I must have some more jelly." And in the pause that followed while the nurse waited for the saving "please": "I appreciate that word must."

"Are goblins true?"

They are in fairy tales.

"Ar'n't there witches?"

In the stories there are.

"Then has nobody got any charms at all?"

Blynken was having his writing-lesson, and a letter was formed, misshapen at the top. "It's done, Moth'." "It's not very bad. But the O has got rather a hat, I'm afraid." And at the spelling lesson. "C. A. T. cat, D. O. G. dog; and P. U. ench, Punch, I suppose; isn't it?"

Wynken couldn't sleep one night. She said she was afraid of evil. "Because even if we're good, and evil can't hurt us, it would stand looking spitefully at us, I suppose? Couldn't God damage Satan if he wanted to?"

"You shouldn't speak in a whining tone of voice, Blynken."

"But it isn't me doing it, when I whine. It's my heart, crying."

About the hour of sparrow-chirp, then Nod awakens up. "So then I get into Nannie's bed, you see, and when she wants to get up, I won't let her. I hug her down."

It was Nod who was trying on hats one day. No, it was no good, they would none of them fit. At last he made an effort towards explanation. "You see, every time I put one on, pieces of hat go into my head." Or again, on running headlong down the stairs: "And even if I choose the flattest pieces of my feet, still Nanny says it's dangerous."

But surely only a Mahatma has achieved such detachment from the body as this?

"Do you know, Moth', while I lay resting this morning, my mouth ate a piece of my lip."

It is Nod too, who is so fond of narrative. But as his words are not so many as his thoughts, his story proceeds often within the arena of his own imagination, and the listener must bridge, as best he may, the frequent and impressive pause. It is filled with nods, charged with meaning, and lit by the lightning flash of a flying eyebrow.

"Once you know, Moth', there was a fight between a little pony and a lion. And the lion sprang upon the pony and the pony put his back against a stack and bited at the lion. And the lion rolled over, and the pony jumped up . . . and he ran up . . . and the pony turned round . . . and the lion—

His mother felt she had lost the thread, somehow.

"But which won?" she asked him, "which won?"

Nod stopped in the full tilt of his story.

"Which won?" he said. "O, the little bear."

PAMELA TENNANT.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

THE DUBLIN SCHOOL

FOR the last ten or fifteen years the Dublin school of writers has given its friends many little flutters of pleasurable excitement. To quote from some of its English critics, it has given us a poet "equal to Keats"; "a book of perfect lyrics," according to an admirer of the period; a book of essays which was popular enough for the Punch parodist; some stories, some translations from the Irish; and, last, some little plays, which all seem to unite in praising and—for the present, at least—forgetting. Ten or fifteen years is a large bite out of even the most generous youth. As the Syracusan idylist has it: "We all wax grey from the temples downward: a man must do somewhat while his knees are yet nimble." It is high time the Dublin school did somewhat for its friends.

Comparisons are odious, especially when one's friends suffer by them; but one cannot help thinking of some contemporary young men elsewhere whose beards were fresh on their chins about the same time. Those still youthful giants, Mr. Barrie and Mr. Kipling, were also definitely emerging ten or fifteen years ago. The Dublin school once looked like having a voice as distinct and persistent as theirs; a quite different voice, but still an authentic one. That voice was Mr. Yeats's, who practically stood alone for Dublin in 1889:

. . . "Away with us he's going
The solemn-eyed—
He'll hear no more the lowing
Of the calves on the warm hill-side;

Nor the kettle on the hob
Sing peace into his breast;
Nor see the brown mice bob
Round and round the oatmeal chest." . . .

It was near enough to simple earth, and the peace and poetry of it, for favourable augury. In literature, in poetry above all, the simpler the early note, the nearer earth the rhymers goes, the safer seems prophesy about him. And in Mr. Yeats's first two books one found so large an amount of work as good and well-sustained as "The Stolen Child," so many pieces of even greater merit—the "Michael Dwyer Fairy Song," the "Lake Isle of Innisfree," for example—that there was little violence to judgment in admitting him to a place in English poetry beside Keats. 1889 and 1902 dated these books. As one sure of himself, he seemed to take time. Then, just as his friends were expecting another book of lyrics to be due, the unexpected happened. Another book of lyrics—the "book of perfect lyrics," to which the admirer referred—did appear; but it was not by Mr. Yeats. For him and his readers there then entered the most unexpected thing of all; for the very next year (1895) he suddenly "collected" his little sheaves of published verse into one volume, practically ceased to write lyrics in his early simpler vein, and turned his attention to prose.

What was the new voice like?

"Dark head by the fire-side brooding,
Sad upon your ears
Whirlwinds of the earth intruding
Sound in wrath and tears . . .

"Keep the secret sense celestial
Of the starry birth,
Though about you call the bestial
Voices of the earth" . . .

Such was its dominant note: material beauty of every kind but a snare for souls; spiritual "beauty" all. There was much in this little book of fifty "Songs by the Way" (back "to God who is our home") to justify high praise, though to call it a book of "perfect lyrics" was to give way to enthusiasm. It was a real thing, however; fatally real. It put back the clock and re-charged the electric Dublin air with thoughts and spiritual questionings. Its author, suddenly finding himself the central figure among the younger pagans just then rallying round Mr. Yeats, was not long without seeing the fatality of it. Artist, literary man, spiritual agonist, "A. E." had suffered much, as young men of genius always suffer, subjectively. An Eastern legend tells of a thirsty traveller who finds by a well in the desert a bowl from which he drinks. The water tastes bitter from the bowl, yet the water of the well itself is sweet; for the vessel had retained the bitter flavour of mortality. "A. E." had drunk deeply of Eastern wisdom, but had not yet been to the well. And so there was to be no continuation, no development, in this direction either. His "Earth Breath" (Lane, 1897) was a palinode, an apologia to Mother Earth and her "voices," to whom he felt he had scarcely done the wider justice. That effort exhausted him. The "Divine Vision" (Macmillan) of last year is hardly worthy of mention; and the "Mask of Apollo" (in prose) of this does not count, as he himself sadly avows. So much for the poets.

And what of prose, the appeal of which is to the reason and intelligence; which, unlike the vehicle of the imagination, admits of so little licence without unclassing itself, or, at least, weakening its appeal?

Here it becomes necessary to distinguish. On the one hand were the men of exact scholarship: Professors Mahaffy, Tyrrell, Bury (then at Dublin), and Dowden. These distinguished men are, so to speak, world scholars. They might as well—or even better—have been born to Oxford or Cambridge as to Dublin. Scholarship, criticism, scarcely becomes localised more than once in a century, unless it be of the sterling variety, as at Tübingen. It belongs to world progress; its business is not with mushroom-school growths, so often springing up in a night and ending in smoke; and it is slow to recognise them. From the University, excepting its Chair of Literature, the Dublin school has scarcely yet won favourable recognition.

On the other hand there was what is called the "Celtic school" about which one may say that there is no such body. A "Celtic spirit," perhaps: but not a school. Most of the so-called "Celts" might just as well have been born—like Mr. Kipling—in Bombay, so diversified are their activities and abiding-places. Dublin claims but a small portion of their fame. Even the "Celtic spirit"—that evaporating mystery for the puzzled journalist—declines definition. It is more profitable to ask: Had Dublin at this time produced a single book of prose attracting, by some distinctive or daring note of originality like "Plain Tales" or "Auld Licht Idylls," a large English audience? The answer is, of course, in the negative.

Yet any one seeking, a decade ago, for an almost violently original note in Dublin's prose literature to place beside its poetry could have found it only in a now almost forgotten little book called "Two Essays on the Remnant." This book was a revelation in the way of style even to readers of the passing generation of Arnold, Newman, Ruskin and Pater. It was rapidly running into editions when "O. S." in Punch and the Oxford humourists took it in hand and made great play with the notion of a "remnant" (Isaiah's "remnant," Matthew Arnold's "remnant") of chosen people going off into the wilderness and leaving cities, "and sorrow barracadoed ever more within the walls of cities," to take care of themselves. Yet when the worst was said this little book admittedly contained one of the best eulogies of Wordsworth ever penned. "John Eglinton" the author called himself. Six years elapsed before he was heard of again, lending a sort of reluctant hand to a certain section of Irish idealists by allowing them to print his next book in Kilkenny. Some of the essays in "Pebbles from a Brook" would not have hurt the reputation of Schopenhauer, but Goliath the Philistine was none the worse for them. There seemed to be only one objection to the publication of such a book in a place like Kilkenny. There were no readers there. In Dublin there were few enough. In London or Oxford there would have been some. "Kilkenny" wrote its epitaph.

Thus, up to 1897, a Dublin school had made three distinct bids for attention. The first was by Mr. Yeats's wonderful lyrics, with their note of morning freshness and naïveté, as of a soul newly opening eyes on a young world into which sorrow had come only as a picturesque accident. The second voice was A. E.'s. He seized upon the lyrical form for expressing himself and gave a terrible note to it, making it express the travail of the individual spirit in the midst of universal illusion. The third voice was that of the critic, "John Eglinton," who brought philosophic insight, deep scholarship, and a consummate style, to bear upon Dublin's seven devils of patriotism, politics, religion, theosophy, mysticism, magic, and metaphysics. Separately considered, progress, continuation, development, might have been argued from any of the three. Taken together the result was non-cumulative, negative, snapping off abruptly and seeming to end there. So that, a few years ago, it was safe to say that from Mr. Yeats a new book of lyrical wizardry like "Oisín," from "A. E.," another book of those early spiritual songs, and from "John Eglinton" another clear confident statement, as of the born stylist in the first happy exercise of his powers—all these things were again impossible. They manifestly belonged to the past. It was safe to say that if the emergence of the Dublin school ever took place it would be in some other direction.

Doubtless some instinctive thought of this kind assisted at the sudden birth and growth of the Irish National Theatre. The younger talents of the Dublin school, beholding the sacrifice of their pioneers who had now made independent thought possible for them, were doubtless instinctively casting about for some means of expression which should be free of Dublin's contentious enemies and destroyers of quiet literary activity, religion, politics, patriotism. It was inevitable that they should light on the splendid neutral ground of the Drama, where the showman should be mute and one's precious creed and personality counts for little or nothing. The theatre was, so to speak, in the air. Mr. Yeats had already had some plays performed in London. The Irish National Theatre was established with him at its head.

At first the little plays produced (in hired concert and lecture-halls) were of the politically contentious sort, and they provoked controversy. But the theatre is the most rapid of educative influences, and we shortly hear less of it as an axe-grinding institution and more of it as a centre of thoroughgoing artistic aims. Last year, through the beneficence of a private donor, it acquired a house of its own. This house has a special patent restricting it (through the opposition of the older Dublin houses) to plays produced by Irishmen on Irish subjects or to foreign works other than English. The production of Irish plays has gone forward with such surprising speed that, to judge from Mr. Yeats's report of progress, given in the organ of the Society, Tamhain (Unwin), most of the young Irishmen and women are rapidly becoming either actors or playwrights. They need not be ashamed of an enthusiasm which they share with greater minds and older heads.

And how do the plays themselves rank? Up to the present the best plays of the Society have excelled rather in characterisation than in what we call "construction" plot. Even in the work of the most notable of the younger men, Mr. J. M. Synge, plot is almost entirely absent, but the characters are absolutely true to life—the life of present-day Irish peasant and fisher-folk. Mr. Yeats tells us that the aims of the Society are summed up in "good playwriting, good speaking, and good acting" (scenery is almost disregarded). Good speaking and acting the members of the Society seem to have rapidly attained, perhaps because the demand for what was wanted admitted of little doubt. But the requisition for "good playwriting" is more ambiguous. Mr. Yeats lays stress on "poetry," which is natural enough in him. Poetry is important; and, indeed, poetry in abundance the lives of the poor folk depicted in these Irish plays are seen to have. But a play cannot live and insist upon itself by poetry alone: something of strength, much of cohesion, will inevitably be lacking to it. That something is just what the Irish Theatre now seems to lack for its due emergence. We can only say for the present that the foundations—going down to life itself—are well and truly laid; and that the augury for the future is good. Mr. Yeats at least looks forward in the right spirit. We are yet as children, he says, groping our way: "but we may grow up, for we have as good hopes as any other sturdy ragamuffin." It is, perhaps, never too late to speak of "growing up" if one feels about it in this way.

C. W.

FICTION

The Disciple's Wife. By VINCENT BROWN. (Duckworth and Co., 6s.)

It is a somewhat bold experiment to make the central figure in a sensational melodramatic story a woman of the type of Marie Durnford as seen in Mr. Vincent Brown's latest novel "The Disciple's Wife." A woman who before marriage could go for a six-weeks trip to Paris and Monte Carlo with a foul-mouthed, foul-minded scoundrel as her only companion: who, after her marriage with a paragon of virtue who trusts her implicitly, encourages by a half-hearted show of resistance the vile attentions of the said scoundrel and apparently feels no shame for her early escapade: whose every word and every act proclaim her vulgar and selfish: such a woman will win little sympathy except from readers of extraordinary charity. Yet such a woman has the love of a devoted husband and of a friend who would fain have married her himself and in default assumes the rôle of brother! But though she is the central figure, it was not for her that the story was written: the first chapter introduces another woman, a "remarkable" woman with "a look of greatness": she is the real heroine, and Marie Durnford is shown up in all her unloveliness of character, lest she should draw to herself any of the admiration which ought to be reserved wholly for Bertha Zonal, the refined, unselfish, poetical wife of the village carpenter. Mr. Brown puts his best work into the portrait of this wonderful creature of his own genius, and his skilful execution will probably prevent his readers from questioning, as they otherwise might, the reality of his conception. The comic relief, provided by Martha Ann, the cook, is unnatural and carelessly constructed; and the dialogue is sometimes artificial, as when the brotherly friend tells the villain that "all his world is a saturnalia of self": that is not the language of a man on the verge of horsewhipping another man. It is a book that must not be read too critically, but it may well be read for all that.

Hearts of Wales. An Old Romance. By ALLEN RAINE. (Hutchinson, 6s.)

ALLEN RAINE's latest book tells a tale of Wales "once upon a time, and that a long time ago." It is not easy to say exactly how long ago, nor, indeed, is the question worth asking. Broadly speaking, the story is laid in the Middle Ages—that accommodating period which seems as vaguely potent to the romantic novelist as the Greek digamma to the youthful philologist—but the author makes no claim to accuracy of date. She has, as she says, merely strung together into a narrative some of the floating legends and traditions connected with the Castle of Emlyn. In bare outline it is the history of a pair of cousins—Eleri of Garth and Deraint ap Rhys of Emlyn—who, being lovers, are eventually made happy by the self-denying heroism of another cousin (are all Welsh people so related?) whom stress of circumstances has compelled to adopt the guise of a Sin Eater—an outcast who for a small pittance is willing to eat the food that has lain on a dead body, and thus take upon himself the sins of the dead, with their consequences in after life. To this framework is attached a good deal that is essentially Welsh, mingled, we must add, with a good deal that is merely Wardour Street mediævalism. On the whole the blend is very readable, though the characters talk not infrequently in a high-flown archaic style that is apt to drop into blank verse. They are inclined, too, to drag in rather too much of their native tongue. Ultra-sensitive readers may prefer that such expressions as “myn Duw” should remain untranslated; but there seems to be very little gained by the repeated use of “fforwell” for “farewell.” Still, Allen Raine undoubtedly has Wales at her pen's point, and her descriptions of its scenery and her characterisations of its people are agreeably true to life. Perhaps the latter are a little too true. One could wish, at least, that the Welsh (or should we say the author?) had a thought more humour.

The Taming of the Brute. By FRANCES HARROD. (Methuen & Co., 6s.)

THIS is an eighteenth-century story. Therefore it is hardly necessary to say that the scene is laid partly in Bath, that the heroine is a beautiful heiress, and that one at least of her admirers is a dandy and a profligate. We have the other conventions too—hoops, powder, patches, a duel, and an adventurous journey in a coach. The journey was taken from Bath into the wilds of Wales, and the object of it was to reclaim the brute. His name was Evan Rhys, his eyes were as blue as the mountains, his hair was like a raven's wing, and though he had grown up a savage he talked like a don. When some children of the country take to hurling great rocks at his English cousin and she asks him why they do it, he says: “I do not know—some unreasoned emotion; their parents' dislike of foreigners carried to a logical end, and the tremendous temptation of such a target.” Of course, when he talked like this he was sober. On Cecilie's arrival in the house where, in his brother's absence, he plays host, he is so drunk that at his suggestion his cook, his light o' love and the first wench fetched from the hedges, throw dice for his beautiful person as husband. Cecilie, dragged in by his boon companions, throws double sixes, and immediately flings a tankard in his face to keep him off. But as she says soon after to her chaperon, the circumstances in which she finds him are only what she expected, and there seems every necessity for her presence. She has come to Telgarth to save him, and we have the author's word for it that she succeeds. The tradition still lives, then, that a girl by the power of her youth, her beauty and her ethereal goodness can turn a man in the course of a few weeks from the weak and vicious habits to which he has given way for years. Evan Rhys is twenty-five, he has led the life of a boor, his face is bloated with drink, he cannot keep from drink though the lady he loves is his guest. Yet we are to believe that Cecilie and he live happily ever after. It is too much to ask. We wish Cecilie safely back at Bath because we think the artificial life of the world, with all its drawbacks, is less revolting than the natural life of Welsh hooligans. Mrs. Harrod has studied the masters of elaborate style: studied them too well. When we had laboured through three hundred and eleven pages of these tortured sentences we wanted a chapter of Miss Austen's English.

THE BOOKSHELF

Modern French Masters, by Marie von Vorst (Paris, Brentano, 6s. net). This little book belongs to a class which is more common in France, Germany and Holland than in England, being a collection of laudatory essays on a few contemporary artists arbitrarily selected, with a quantity of rather poor half-tone reproductions of their work. English publishers are generally more cautious, and wait for the indubitable sanction of universal popularity or death before issuing a work of this kind, and the result shows that their reticence, if not so generous, is more judicious. No English publisher has yet issued a book on the life work of Mark Fisher, for instance, or of Wilson Steer, Charles Conder and others, whose claim to such distinction has as much validity as Cazin's or Besnard's. The other artists, Puvion de Chavannes and Rodin, here treated, have of course a more assured position, whilst the inclusion of Steinlen, known only through prints and posters, shows a courage which is thoroughly justified by this fine and powerful artist's work. We had to wait for Charles Keene's death before it was recognised that a Puvion artist could be as great as Gustav Bethel or Honoré Daumier. It was impossible, we suppose, to do justice to Steinlen's work on the small scale available and without colour. Indeed, this could only be done as it was done in the originals that appeared in Gil Blas, which were marvels of achievement on the part of the printer as well as of the artist. Nevertheless, some of the best drawings from that paper, such as the funeral cortege with the workmen on a scaffolding high above their heads, or the best illustrations to Aristide Bruant's poems, like the itinerant pencil-seller, would have given a better idea of his trenchant nervous line than some of the drawings here, which are woolly and vaporous in comparison. The inclusion of Besnard is not justifiable on any grounds. He is just the clever populariser of other people's ideas that you would expect in a Prix de Rome man, of great ability and enormous productiveness, and with the spur that is urging, fatally, we think, all French artists to be “dans le mouvement” and to “épater le bourgeois.” To couple his name with genius of the first rank like Degas and Whistler is sufficient to dismiss any idea of critical pretensions in the book. Puvion and Rodin were already celebrated, and only really first-rate reproductions of their work could warrant any more matter. The Rodins are ludicrously inadequate, as the photographs have been taken with the accidental surroundings of an atelier intruding on and breaking up the line of a sculpture which is difficult enough to follow in any case. As for the letterpress, if it was worth while writing at all, it might as well have been written in English. “To franchiser le threshold” and “posers for portraits” are not English phrases, though they may be “posers.” The short preface is by Mr. Alexander Harrison, and whilst his own achievements as a painter are entitled to respect, the application of the term “great” to Bastien-Lepage and the intrusion in an august category of such second-rate painters as Lorn and Jules Breton do not enhance our respect for his critical faculties.

In The Life of Christ: A Continuous Narrative in the Words of the Authorised Version of the Four Gospels (Murray, 6s.), Canon Scott has produced a volume which should be of the greatest value to students and teachers of the Scriptures. Adopting a chronology based on a critical survey of the achievements of modern research, he has collated, so as to form a singularly vivid picture, the various contributions made by the four Evangelists to our Lord's biography. St. Mark's Gospel was written probably between 60 and 64 A.D., St. Luke's about A.D. 70, St. Matthew's between 65 and 80, and St. John's, which is less of a history of Christ's work than an interpretation, perhaps shortly before A.D. 100. St. Luke, who in every case where a text is possible has been proved to be minutely accurate, has been taken as the main guide in the portion that is common to the first three gospels, and where St. Mark and St. Luke differ it has been assumed that St. Luke intended to correct St. Mark. From a literary standpoint there are disadvantages in a system of collation as applied to the four Gospels. As Canon Scott suggests, one cannot fail to note, on studying the separate books carefully, that when undertaking the work of writing, each Evangelist had in view the presentment of a different aspect of Christ's office and functions, and that each so used his material that this aspect should be developed and shown in the best possible light. Thus any scheme which detaches and re-arranges accounts of incidents must tend to deprive each Gospel of something of its value as a personal memoir. St. Mark, for instance, shows the Saviour as the working man. His Gospel is the shortest of the four—a sort of handbook of our Lord's life, if one may so describe it without irreverence, for the use of the busy person. Yet though it was doubtless written from information supplied by St. Peter it is a masterpiece of vivid portraiture, and there is hardly a scene in the history to which it does not add some fresh and characteristic detail. Canon Scott, however, minimises this tendency to eliminate the author's individuality. Aware of the danger of biographies of Christ being studied in place of the Gospel narrative itself he has put his work in the form of a diatessaron with a short introduction full of the fruits of wide reading. In the text the actual words are always given. This is good, but we would suggest that more than the rather piecemeal perusal of the original to be obtained thus should be insisted upon. Canon Scott's book in itself is wonderfully interesting, but the interest, it seems to us, is enhanced in an extraordinary degree when one uses it as an analytical commentary to be read side by side with the parent volume.

The New Lace Embroidery (Punto Tagliato), by Mrs. Louisa A. Tebb (Chapman and Hall, 2s. 6d. net) is a handbook for those who wish to carry out this particular kind of needlework, and as such it is perfectly clear and straightforward and usefully illustrated. But apart from its value to those who intend to learn how to apply this peculiar form of stitchery in rather coarse floss silk upon various materials, there is a freshness and courageous self-appreciation about Mrs. Tebbs' work which makes it very welcome in an age of literary self-analysis and fine shades. In the introductory pages the note is boldly struck—"Since bringing out this exquisite and unique embroidery," says the author, "the result of many months—I might almost say years—labour and thought, I feel myself amply repaid by the universal welcome and admiration it has received from all lovers of needlecraft; and this appreciation, together with the numerous letters and requests I am constantly receiving from all parts for a book on the subject, has led me to make this attempt." Happy author to be sure of so universal a welcome, and happy public, happy lovers of the art and craft of the needle to whom this boon is so readily granted! Our own view is that the new lace embroidery is skilful and likely to be popular but will not put the older forms of lace, pure and simple, out of the market. Venetian rose-point or Brussels point de gaze may still hold their places, but if the interest in Bridge wanes we can well believe the ladies of Society might turn with delight to Punto Tagliato.

BOOK SALES

ON Wednesday, April 5, at the Hôtel Drouot in Paris, commenced the sale of the third portion of the library of M. E. Dugain, comprising the works of French authors from the twelfth to the eighteenth century. Dugain interested himself more particularly in the time of Louis XIV., and especially in Corneille, La Fontaine and Racine.

The sensational price of £912 was bid by Mr. Pearson of London for a copy of Le Cid, of Corneille, Edition A, 1637, bound by Cuzin père. The duplicate copy of this work with the same date, but described as Edition B, was sold for £388.

Horace, original edition of 1641, £96; Mélite, original edition of 1633, £48; Clitandre ou l'Innocence Délivrée original edition of 1632, £56. £76 was bid for Suite du quatrième livre de l'Odyssée d'Homère, by Fénelon, the original edition of 1699 in 5 volumes. M. Durel was the purchaser, at £200, of Œuvres de Régner of 1608, in a modern binding by Trantz-Bauzonnet—an extremely rare and precious edition, purporting to be one of the only three in existence. Phèdre and Hippolyte, by Racine, the original edition of 1677, of seventy-eight pages, in an old calf binding, a very beautiful example, and with the additional interest of being presumably a presentation copy from the author, as there is written on the back of the frontispiece, in the penmanship, as it is supposed, of Racine, "Pour Monsieur de Saint Amant," fetched £172. Five plays by Racine, La Thébyade, Alexandre le Grand, Andromaque, Britannicus, and Bérénice, in an old binding, went for £108. £176 was given by M. Rahir for the original edition of 1660, of Molière's Sganarelle, in a modern binding by Cuzin père. An amateur paid £140 for a copy of the original collective edition of Corneille, of 1644. Bossuet's Réfutation du catéchisme du Sieur Paul Ferry, original edition of 1665, fetched £14; a very rare copy containing an autograph inscription by Bossuet.

The three volumes, forming the four parts of the Contes de La Fontaine, in the original editions of 1665–1671–1674, in calf of the period, M. Rahir bought at £240. The original edition of the Essais of Michel de Montaigne, of 1580, in a modern binding, went to £180. L'Histoire des Amantz Fortunes, the rare and precious edition of 1558 of the Contes de la Reine de Navarre, fell at £136. A very beautiful example of Marguerite de la Marguerite (Queen of Navarre), in a fine Lyonesse binding of the sixteenth century, fetched £108. Le Temple Jehan Bocace, by Chastelin, Le Chapelet des Princes—et Lepistre de la Reine Marie à son frère Henry, roi d'Angleterre, by Jean Bouchet, edition of 1517, £120. It was to a considerable extent from Rouquette père that this valuable library was secured. The superb collection of French Gothic Literature, dating from the commencement of the sixteenth century, included an unknown edition of Clement Marot, entitled Les Opusculs et petits Fraictz, and was sold for £112. As has been seen the prices realised for volumes of the seventeenth century were absolutely unprecedented.

THE DRAMA

"EVERYMAN" AT THE SHAFTESBURY THEATRE

THEY say that in the proverb "cleanliness is next to godliness," the last word is properly only "goodliness," that is beauty. The saying is equally true in either form. In all modes of life, from the daily detail to the timeless aspiration which is religion, the secret of excellence is but to be clean. The ritual laws of all religions worth the name are laws of cleanliness; their practical commands, including the ten commandments, have that, at least, as one of their leading ideas—the cleanness, internal and external, that is the fitness, of the body. The cleanness and fitness of the "soul" lies at the heart, not only of such rules as that of fasting and of all self-denial, but of the most remotely spiritual exercises of the churches. Religions come and go; the idea has been and will be expressed in a thousand different ways; but it will always be with us. The body and the soul become soiled; they must be cleansed, purified. The powder of childhood, the training of the athlete, the esoteric religious purification of the most spiritual of religions, all are different expressions of the same truth, of a truth that is continually present.

Everyman, which Miss Tita Brand has revived for Holy Week at the Shaftesbury Theatre, is a symbolic exposition of this truth. Whether its symbols be accepted as partaking of eternal verity, or as modes of expression that have lost their practical significance, at least they express this truth very forcibly, and in a manner which all men and women of our time are still able, through training and reminiscence, to appreciate. Something of the mighty power of association, a stronger power in determining judgment and emotion than many are aware, has, no doubt, its place in forcing the appeal. Be our present opinions what they may, there was a time when these sacred things had more than a symbolic meaning—and even if it were not so, a symbol is still the most potent means of bringing home a truth to many minds. If Everyman were constructed on the lines, not of the Christian, but, say, of the Buddhist faith, it would lose half its force, because we were none of us brought up as Buddhists—but only half. So long as it remains an expression of that need of purification from defilement, it must remain a statement of a truth that all men know, in their different ways, to be unshakably true. The interest of it is not purely archæological, for who cares for archæology but a few? It is not purely the emotional tickling, if we may use the phrase, which delights certain minds that rejoice in "sacred" songs sung in music-halls, or Gounod's "Bethlehem" played in a restaurant. It holds people fast whom such things disgust. It is a quaint, solemn, and beautiful expression of an eternal truth. Everyman, bating its symbolism, is still the story of every man.

And it is, from another point of view, a most engrossing play. The slow growth of Everyman's conviction that Death is serious in the message he brings, his change from laughing lightness to fear and so to despair is surely the work of a man who had a keen literary instinct. The very contrast between the grim, grotesque figure, with its jointless shufflings and rasping voice, and Everyman himself, spruce to the bonnet, nippé et fardé to the nines, with a song on his lips and blood in his hot veins, is unforgettable; and as the story goes on, and Everyman passes through the dark waters of despair to lose there his gay self-reliance, to learn humility and gratitude, to suffer and stretch out meek hands for aid, and so to come forth, purged and clean, into hope and peace, we feel that here is no bungling sermoniser, but a man who had a dramatic sense, and the dramatic vision. His simplicity, as contrasted with, say, the far-fetched curiosity of Parsifal is still a lesson in play-writing; and the difference is not only that the author of Everyman, were he Dutch or English, priest or layman, lived in an age of faith and took his story from days when faith was even stronger than in his own.

The performance at the Shaftesbury struck us as being better than those given last year under another management. That trying "sing-song" intonation, which used to worry us in the Kinswoman, Beauty, Strength, Discretion and Five Wits, has been toned down to a reasonable quaintness. Miss Wynne-Matthison's very beautiful performance of Everyman himself needs no comment, and Miss Tita Brand, the regal, the superb, has a chance, in the part which in the English version is called Knowledge, of using her striking personality as it should be used. For the rest, Death is as Holbeinesque as ever, and Good Deeds as plaintive; but we were disappointed in the Doctor, who seemed scarcely to realise the difference between a performance of Everyman and a revival meeting at the Albert Hall.

FINE ART

TRADITION AND MODERN SCHOOLS

ON the eve of our great Academic exhibition of paintings at Burlington House and the opening of numerous minor shows which are the necessary concomitants of our art season, it may not be without usefulness to consider the trend of modern art in its relation to tradition. If it were possible, we might endeavour to strike some sort of balance between the extremes that are to be found in the methods and inspirations of modern painters, discover a common ground on which these extremes meet, and attempt to harmonise their relationship with tradition; but this task would, we think, be altogether out of scale with the scope of this article.

In these days the names of the great painters and their works are familiarly on our lips and before our eyes. The advantage of this, it might be thought, would help a painter to shape his inspirations into some measure of conformity with those of the greater painters; or are we to admit that familiarity breeds contempt and indifference to the teachings of tradition? Certainly it would seem, that whatever powers of technical expression or dramatic instinct a modern painter possesses, he lacks the dignifying architectural sense which ennobles the works of the masters of any period.

At the Dowdeswell Galleries there are to be seen a few Flemish and Dutch old masters which recall to our memory that marvellous exhibition of Netherlandish Primitives at Bruges three years back. At the Fine Art Society there are being shown some excellent etchings after Meissonier, the French painter of pictures "in little," who was so consummate a master of all the pictorial stagecraft of his profession; and the Royal Society of Miniature Painters have opened their tenth exhibition at the Modern Gallery's attractive new home in New Bond Street. It should be easy to discover some historical sequence between these three exhibitions. We know that the great Flemish school of the Van Eycks and Memling was created on the foundation of the illuminator's art, and possessed all the constructive, decorative and architectural motive which made the Gothic period so immeasurably greater than that which preceded it. These Gothic principles were the accepted standard of all other Continental schools. The gaining of technical freedom and facility rapidly matured these standards and traditions in the Masters of the Renaissance, but finally this facility was the cause of greater liberties and greater licence. As the Gothic painters gradually divorced themselves from religion, so the later Renaissance painters finally disassociated themselves from architecture, and, unrestrained either by the inspiration of the one or the constructive elements of the other, drifted into mere picture-makers. The student who saw that wonderful collection at Bruges to which we have referred, must surely have asked himself whether it would not be nobler to discard the multitudinous technical tricks which beset his path to-day frittering away his more serious energies, and revert to that simple language of direct and primitive expression which adapted itself so harmoniously to the Gothic principles of architecture.

Meissonier, notwithstanding his great power of expression, has little of the romanticism of his fifteenth-century progenitor, Fouquet. He stands for the consummate and skilful exponent of the cabinet picture, the product of an effete development of the art of painting. The picture-maker's art is no longer the inevitable or constructive part of a recognised standard. It has completely separated itself from architecture, as architecture has alienated itself, in a great measure, from sculpture and the applied arts. It is a law unto itself and recognises no allegiance to the sister arts. And yet, in spite of this breaking away from what we must feel to be the healthy restraint of an all pervading architectural sense, there exists much in the present day schools of painting that shows vitality and inspiration. There is a restless striving after a new convention, an endeavour to discover some fitness of expression between our modern social dismembership and freedom of thought, and the canons of art.

With the elevation of the Society of Miniature Painters to the rank of a Royal institution, and the evident prevailing fashion for portraits of diminutive proportions, it is reasonable to suppose that one might discover some sort of recognition amongst miniature painters of the magnificent traditions behind them. Or at least it might be supposed that it would be easy to find a vitality in their technical expression corresponding to that which is apparent in other branches of painting. But as history has shown, the art of the miniaturist lags appreciably behind the achievements of the greater arts, and to-day there is little exception to this rule. At the Modern Gallery, amidst much laboriousness of execution, it is not easy to find any affiliation to the processes that have helped to give the art a dignified place in the history of painting. It is, however, exceedingly interesting to see that the Society has included in its exhibition such excellent examples of the illuminator's art as are shown by Miss Jessie Bayes. "Trois Poèmes du XVme Siècle" is a manuscript volume that but for the newness of the vellum might well have come from the hand of a French miniaturist of the fifteenth century. The Gothic miniatures are beautiful realisations of the technical methods of the best period of illumination, and the characteristic ivy leaf borders are handled with but little less delicacy than the early illuminations. Another interesting contrast to the methods of to-day is shown in the archaic Flemish portrait of Philip the Good. When we turn from these reminiscences of the past to the realisation of the present, we are struck by a sense of depression at the trivialness of the inspiration. But there are exceptions, and the work of Miss Gertrude Massey, Miss Aimée Muspratt, Miss Jeannie Reynolds and Mr. Lionel Heath are conspicuous points of interest. The latter painter's Phyllis seems to us to be in closer accord with the finer traditional qualities of miniature art than any other example. There are one or two single miniatures by non-members of the Society that are excellently painted portraits "in little," though perhaps they do not possess the peculiar characteristics that help to make a small painting a miniature.

D. H.

SCIENCE

THE GROUNDS OF RATIONAL OPTIMISM

HAVING analysed our concept of optimism, we found three varieties: oldest and most general, the animal optimism which has for its most complete expression: "Fate cannot touch me, I have dined to-day"; secondly, the optimism of faith, which has for its most sublime and quintessential expression, not the insane cry of Tertullian, "Credo, quia impossibile," but the insuperable conviction of Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." It now remains to consider the grounds of the third variety of optimism, which we call rational: and it goes without saying that here Evolution is the "master-light of all our seeing."

But ere we consider the manner in which optimism may be grounded in Evolution, it is necessary first to stigmatise as fallacious the popular notion that Evolution teaches the necessary perfecting of man and man's lot in time coming. Science knows no law of progress, but a law of change. Progress is obviously an anthropic term, denoting merely an ideal of ours; and if this ideal is to become real it is we that must make it so. Evolution teaches us that the task is possible: but that it is our task.

But if we must regard as inadmissible the inference that we are being borne forward, in supine certainty, upon a wave of progress which is none of our raising, we must also abjure the contrary error, which consists in rehearsing the base degrees by which we did ascend, and assuming our bestial origin to condemn us to irredeemable bestiality. This, as has well been said, is like setting forth to tell a good story and leaving out the point. The sound inference is surely that if the beast can become human, man may become superhuman. What the beast has done, man can do.

If, now, having noticed these errors, we proceed more precisely to inquire into the grounds of a rational meliorism—to use the correct term—we must begin by making the convenient, though philosophically untenable, distinction between physical and moral evil. Let us then proceed to define the grounds for expecting an amelioration of physical evil—which we may compendiously define as death and disease. (Pain is obviously dis-ease.)

Though it need not be doubted that scientific discovery—which teaches us to dose bacilli with carbolic acid, and so forth—can be subsumed under the law of evolution, and though much might be written concerning the probable disappearance, in time not far distant, of disease as an important factor in human life, my concern here is with the all-embracing biological generalisation which its discoverer called the law of multiplication. Disease is due either to imperfect adaptation of man to his environment (a term which includes bacilli), or to competition between man and man—as is abundantly taught us by the coincidence between the curves of death-rate and overcrowding. Biological theory and actual observation, however, teach us that the law of Malthus is only a half-truth. True, in its measure, it certainly is that if the population increases in geometrical ratio whilst the means of life increase only in arithmetical ratio, the weakest must go to the wall; so true that this statement suggested to Darwin and Wallace independently the theory of natural selection: but another truth of equal importance was unrecognised by Malthus. This truth, which immediately abrogates the horribly pessimistic inference from the Malthusian proposition, is that the population does not increase in geometrical ratio, but that its rate of increase constantly tends, with the development of the individual organism, to diminish. In other words, the higher the organism, the lower the birth-rate. This is a fact demonstrable not only à priori, by consideration of the fact that if the individual expends more energy upon his own individualisation he has less to expend upon reproduction, but also à posteriori, by consideration of the observed facts of animal and human reproduction. The falling birth-rates of civilisation are unquestionably, to my mind, related in some measure to this biological law.

And so, also, are the falling death-rates of civilised peoples. We are evidently approaching a period of adequate adaptation, when the abominable infantile mortality which now disgraces civilisation will be abolished—as it might be to-morrow if we cared enough—and when the number of births and of deaths will fall to a minimum; almost every birth being the beginning, and almost every death being the conclusion of a complete life: instead of, as now, an immense proportion of births being the prelude to, and deaths the expression of, failure. In those days men will see shame and not humour in the question attributed to the dead infant: If I was so soon to be done for, what was I begun for? That question should be addressed to and answered by, not Deity, but Man and his humanity.

But those who have not come to see that moral evil is so called only because it implies physical or mental evil or disease to its subject or to others, may argue that the practical abolition of disease, and of any deaths save such as peacefully close a rounded life, are matters of no moment if moral evil is to survive. Let us then ask whether, in this relation also, science permits us to call ourselves meliorists.

We still suffer from a disastrous aberration of opinion which may be traced to Nietzsche, and of which the accredited philosopher of the many-headed in this country is a typical representative. The Nietzscheans take the law of the survival of the fittest—the struggle for life, the law of egoism—as the basis of the scientific morality, or, rather, denial of morality; and close their eyes to the equally salient correlative law of altruism—the “struggle for the life of others,” to use the phrase of Drummond. This their myopia and their prejudice against Christianity enable them to do, despite the fact upon which I propose to insist until I wear out, that without altruism no human being ever survived or ever will survive for one week after birth. Thus, using the word in two senses, we say that to abolish humanity would be to abolish humanity. When I hear of a single baby, past, present or to come, that lived or shall live for seven days without the care of another human being (or another animal, if you care to cite the Romulus-Remus fable), then I shall be prepared to retract the opinion that Nietzscheanism is the grossest, the most blasphemous and the most grotesquely imbecile of all lies whatsoever, conceived or conceivable.

The untutored daily observation of all men, in all times, then, and the generalisation of evolution, which is the highest product of the tutored observation of all times, alike teach us that altruism is an inalienable factor in human life, older than all religions and ethical systems, independent of them, and destined to outlive not indeed Truth, which “fails not, but her outward forms that bear the longest date.” Or, to turn from Wordsworth to St. Paul: “Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.”

But even this is not an adequate expression of the faith that is in the evolutionist; for he believes not only in the permanence of altruism but in its ultimate triumph. The student of the “Principles of Ethics” finds cause to believe—human nature, thank Heaven, not being the same in all ages—that men will one day become so adapted to the social environment that right conduct will be as natural as is the act of breathing by reason of the adaptation of the respiratory apparatus to the atmospheric environment. The unbounded prejudice which attends the efforts of academic criticism has caused Herbert Spencer’s prediction to be called “somewhat dreary”; and exponents of the free-will theory and the punishment-reward morality see little to please them in the prospect which dissociates right-doing from an accompaniment of effort. To do justly and to love mercy is no “merit,” they think, unless, in one’s heart of hearts, one hates mercy and would rather do unjustly. Nevertheless, the evolutionist, who is not concerned with imputing merit or with passing such judgments, is well content to believe that human nature, which is at bottom responsible for nearly all evil, may one day attain to such heights that men shall do as they would be done by, not for extrinsic and (ultimately) egoistic reasons, but because that is their inevitable mode of self-expression. And if our opponents maintain that inevitable virtue is no more worthy of merit than cloistered virtue, and indeed that doing the right is not really to be called virtue if one likes doing it, we, whose study of the human will leads us to refrain from passing any such judgments upon anybody, will not quarrel with them. It suffices us that, seeing virtue already expressive of the innermost nature of our holiest to-day, we may believe it possible that, in time to come, the many shall be raised to their level, so that sanity and virtuousness shall be synonymous, and wrong-doing be regarded as the mark of a rare and terrible disease.

The profoundest thinker amongst English poets anticipated this vision of Spencer’s: and perhaps the critics who would deny and decry this most radiantly optimistic of all the inferences from the law of universal evolution, will be surprised to hear that their abuse is directed against Wordsworth’s “Ode to Duty.”

“There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them . . .
Glad Hearts! without reproach or blot;
Who do thy work, and know it not.”

The evolutionist is an optimist because his study of sociology and ethics has led him to regard as more than possible the realisation—though only after many centuries—of the ideal which Wordsworth saw just one century ago:

"Serene will be our days and bright,
And happy will our nature be,
When love is an unerring light,
And joy its own security."

C. W. SALEEBY.

MUSIC

"CARACTACUS" AND "EVERYMAN"

THE reappearance of these two works so close together as the concerts of the London Choral Society and the Bach Choir of last week recalls the similar circumstances of their first appearance. Both were the first Leeds festival works of their respective composers, and by them did Edward Elgar and Walford Davies first receive general recognition in London as leaders of English musical thought. "Caractacus" was produced in 1898, "Everyman" in 1904, so that the two works may be taken as marking the same points in their composer's careers. There has been a tendency amongst critics to compare "Everyman" with "The Dream of Gerontius," and this is natural from the similarity of the subject, but if this is done with a view to comparing the powers of the two composers it is only fair to take their work at similar points in their careers, and then "Caractacus" and "Everyman" are the two works to be weighed against one another. They seem at first sight to have very little in common. "Caractacus" is a series of dramatic situations in the life of the ancient British hero of that name. Some of them are strong and full of human feeling, notably his lament over his fallen comrades; some are weak, especially the feeble anticlimax of the last of all in the forum at Rome, where, after tremendous scenic preparations, a triumphal procession, the votes of the people given for Caractacus's death, and his own refusal to plead his cause, he is without any apparent reason pardoned by the Emperor Claudius. By the way, there seems here some confusion between the ceremonies of a general celebrating his "triumph," a gladiatorial show, and the legal proceedings of Rome. "Caractacus" is, in short, an opera, composed to a rather bad libretto, and it only happens to be performed without stage scenery and action because Elgar received a commission to write it for the Leeds Festival and not for Covent Garden.

"Everyman," although adapted from an old play, is far different. The task of adaptation was made easy by the fact that in the original the dramatic elements were reduced to a minimum. The interest is centred, not upon the fact of Everyman's sudden death and his desertion by all he holds dear in kindred, fellowship, and riches, but the states of feeling produced by such a situation. In fact, it is with the soul of man not with his outward life and death that "Everyman" has to do, and consequently the whole work is in a higher realm than "Caractacus," and any musical setting of it must breathe this finer, clearer atmosphere to carry any conviction with it. What Caractacus can only do at moments, as in the lament, Everyman must do throughout; and so in his first Leeds work it appears that Walford Davies aimed far higher than did Elgar, and achieved a success of a far greater kind. He has still to write his "Gerontius" and "Apostles," and until they appear it would be impossible to judge of the permanent position his work will hold, but with "Everyman" for a beginning all things are possible.

Coming back to "Caractacus," after forming the better acquaintance of the composer's later works, it is interesting to notice how all the qualities which we have learnt to associate with Elgar make themselves apparent from the first. There is his splendid command of the orchestra, which, together with a certain freshness of idea, expressed in short fragments of melody, rarely extended, gives all his music a picturesque colouring, which in "Caractacus" is very happily adapted to describe the scenery of his own home country, the Malvern Hills, and the banks of the Severn. The subject is indeed favourable to him, and gives ample scope to the most attractive qualities of his music, while its operatic form hides to some extent the weakness which is so apparent in his later works, especially "The Apostles," I mean the lack of power consistently to develop his ideas.

The force of "Everyman" all lies in the opposite direction. Its composer shows himself, like Elgar, a man of original ideas, but what gives the work its peculiarly strong individuality, is the power which Walford Davies displays of sticking to the point, of driving home each point until it cannot fail to make its impression upon the minds of the listeners; and this is done without the vain repetition of the old masters which is often so wearisome to unlearned modern ears. "Everyman" is classical in that it is built upon slender material, not, evidently, because of any lack of material in the composer's brain—he is never at a loss where a new idea is required—but because, in order to exhaust all the possibilities of development, he had to limit himself in its amount. There is nothing irrelevant or superfluous, but there is a logical system and order of arrangement, which, in spite of its very modern character, enables it to make a peculiarly clear and distinct impression at a first hearing. This, no doubt, accounts for the fact of its unprecedented immediate success, and should lay the foundations of a permanent hold upon the affections of music-loving people, such as only really solid, well-built work can possess.

The performance by the Bach Choir was of special interest since the chorus received the benefit of personal training by the composer, and there was an element of enthusiasm which lent inspiration to the whole. It was also marked by the first performance of an overture to "Everyman." This is a fine piece of orchestral composition in which the dreary and monotonous note of Death's horn is heard, and during most of the work the mental strife which Everyman has to undergo to conquer his worldly affections seems to be depicted in the development of a theme, which holds an important place in the Cantata itself. In the end the strife clears away and the overture ends with a beautiful extension of the peaceful death theme, with which in the Cantata Everyman "cometh to his grave." It is an open question whether "Everyman" needs an overture to be performed with it, but the work need not be laid aside on that account; it could be heard in a purely orchestral concert with pleasure.

Mr. Fagge's performance of "Caractacus" was marked by the qualities of earnestness and painstaking care which characterise all the performances of the London Choral Society. He is doing noble work for music in London, and deserves, and indeed generally gets, better support from the public than was the case on this occasion. The bad weather perhaps accounted for an empty house to some extent, but "Caractacus" in spite of its patriotic sentiment is not a work to arouse enthusiasm.

H. C. C.

WAGNER'S "PARSIFAL"

THE orchestral year rolling round to spring, floods every Eastertide with religious music from Wagner's Parsifal. This is the more curious as the great revolutionary genius spent his seventy years in open revolt against most accepted teachings of God and man, and ever strenuously denied that he advocated Christianity.

The bare idea of dogma infuriated one who, being an iconoclast by obligation of his own nature, deemed the Tables of the Law quite as good material for his hammer as any other popular idols which it suited him to destroy. But if it be true that one cannot touch pitch without being defiled, it is equally true that one cannot handle flour without contracting some of its whiteness. The large ethical ideas so persistently enforced in his dramas, as the best means of reaching the hearts of the people, unconsciously influenced their creator. "At the end of his life he laboured away at the score of Parsifal, drifting off," says his biographer, "into that religious mysticism which has affected so many composers in their old age."

The central idea of all legends in all literatures concerning Parsifal, is of course the "Holy Grail," which according to most interpretations means the hallowed cup blessed by our Saviour at The Last Supper, and given by Him to Joseph of Arimathea, who afterwards held it beneath the wounds of the dying Christ, to receive the Sacred Blood. Another legend supposes it to be a precious stone fallen from Paradise. At the time of the struggle between embattled angels for and against the supremacy of God, sixty thousand rebel spirits made a crown for Lucifer, which the Archangel Michael struck from his head. A jewel, bounding from the impact, reached earth and became the Grail.

These conflicting myths have led to disputes on the etymology of the name itself. It is supposed by some that "san-grail" is a corruption of two words "sang real," "blood royal," owing to the disciple having treasured in this vessel the blood of Christ. Another writer endeavours to prove that coral is derived from "cor-alere," which would seem to support the precious stone theory. But as the earliest known writer on the subject, according to Wolfram von Eschenbach, was one Kiot of Provence, and as the word "grial" is used for vessel to this day in that part of France, the most simple explanation seems to be a literal translation from the old French, san-grial—Holy grail, or Holy vessel.

Wolfram inclined to the precious stone theory which he took from a mediæval epic known as the Wartburgkrieg. But Wagner, though largely indebted to the twelfth-century writings of this Wolfram for the main thread of his sacred drama, preferred the legend of the Arimathean's cup. Round this mystic chalice he has grouped the movers in the play. Parsifal, the blameless knight—in Wagner's own words "der reine Thor," the chaste or guileless fool, type of ignorant innocence; Klingsor, the magician representing the power of evil; Gurnemanz, wise and aged knight, who plays the part of Greek chorus to the whole; Titurel, guardian of the Grail, with his son Anfortas, and Kundry, the temptress, whose dual nature is one of Wagner's most striking creations. According to tradition, Kundry laughed at the suffering Christ, and in punishment of this hideous offence is condemned to laugh on through Eternity. She wanders about the world in search of redemption, till Parsifal, touching her with the holy spear of Longinus, changes this ghastly mirth into purifying tears. Another legend speaks of her as Herodias, and supposes her fury against John the Baptist to have arisen from unrequited love. When the head of her dead enemy was proffered to her on a charger, she bent to kiss the lifeless lips, but there issued from them a breath so stormy as to whirl her thence, a wanderer for ever. This version also supposes the Grail to be the vessel which contained the Baptist's head.

We have seen that Wagner preferred the other tradition. The story of his Parsifal is so well known as to need no comment here. Its chief interest, ethically, lies in its being the great composer's last creation, and representing the last influences at work in that mighty, storm-tossed mind. Despite his earlier assertions, he ended life as an unconscious preacher of Christianity. A deeply religious emotion pervades both text and score, and in his Parsifal he has delivered, says his biographer: "a sermon on the necessity of purity in the service of God, the beauty of renunciation of sensual delight, on the depths of the curse of self-indulgence, and on the nature of repentance."

E #

CORRESPONDENCE

"THE SEA-BLUE BIRD OF MARCH"

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—I have always maintained "the sea-blue-bird of March" to be the wheat-ear. I entirely agree with Sir H. Maxwell. The wheat-ear only answers exactly to the description. It does arrive in March, being a migrant, which the kingfisher is not—it does flit from bush to bush, and from stone to stone, and the kingfisher does not—and lastly, it is of a sea-blue, or rather sea-grey colour—whereas the kingfisher is of a deep blue. Two things to be noted here. Alcedo Halcyon does not "flit" (i.e., "flutter"), but its flight is smooth as a dart and as rapid. And whereas he is always with us, the distinctive name, "sea-blue-bird of March" is utterly inapplicable to him. In Notes and Queries (8th S. vi. 367, 414) there was a correspondence on this subject, and I was congratulated by Mr. Dixon on identifying the bird "so closely and concisely" as the wheat-ear. That Tennyson did mean the kingfisher there is no doubt (as the present Lord Tennyson wrote me once to that effect), but I regard it as a palpable misnomer. Was not the phrase suggested by a passage in Æschylus?

F. B. DOVETON.

ENGLISH WORDS ON THE CONTINENT

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—I have lived in France a good many years—though I cannot go back to the time of the American civil war—and I have never yet heard a Frenchman pronounce "raid" as red. As for its meaning, the "writer of the Note" seems to be in agreement with me—in fact practically quotes me. I certainly never suggested that it was a synonym for "promenade à cheval." Unluckily I have no documents here to refer to, but I do not think that I have ever seen the word printed without the diæresis over the i. It is certainly always pronounced as if it had one.

April 17.

H. E. F.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The question raised by your correspondent Mr. William Mercer, as to the house in Florence where Landor spent the last years of his life, is not incapable of solution. I have about a hundred letters from Walter Savage Landor, written at various times between 1853 and 1864. Some of them are printed in "Letters and Unpublished Writings of Landor" (Macmillan). Though, in nearly all, the aged writer has omitted the place, and, in many, the date, there is one which contains on the spare half-sheet a copy of verses signed:

"Walter Savage Landor

Feb. 23, '60

Florence, 2671, via Nunziatina."

This agrees with Mr. Forster's statement that Landor lodged in a house "under the wall of the city directly back of the Carmine"; a little two-story casa, No. 2671, Forster adds, half-way down the street.

In "Letters of Walter Savage Landor, Public and Private" (Duckworth), which I also edited, one is dated "Florence, via Nunziatina, 267," and the last cypher may have dropped out in the press.

I have, however, in my possession another letter, postmarked "Florence, April 22, 1863," which Landor dates "April 22, '93, via Nunziata" (sic), but this may be a mistake of his own.

As regards the date of Emerson's visit to Landor, that is easily settled. Emerson says, in "English Traits," that on May 15, 1833, he dined with Mr. Landor. "I found him noble and courteous, living in a cloud of pictures at his Villa Gherardesca."

April 17.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

QUERIES

MOONWORT.—Where can I find reference to the subject of Moonwort as a herb, which in some parts of England is termed Honesty or Old Honesty? In Devonshire, I believe, it is or was known as "Unshoe the horse," because of its attributed power of attracting shoes from horses' feet; and on the White Downs, where the best grows, it is said to be recorded that after a number of horses had pastured there, thirty horse-shoes were found on the Downs the next morning. Can any one enlighten me on the subject?—William H. Seales.

FOX-KILLING.—In the churchwarden's accounts of a very small parish in the Cotswold Hills, the following entries of payment occur for foxes destroyed:—

	s.	d.
Anno 1776, paid for foxes	9	0
" " " for another	1	0
" 1777, two foxes	2	0
" " for fifteen foxes	14	0
" 1778, sixteen foxes	16	0

and so on continuously until the year 1804. Is it to be deduced herefrom that the killing of foxes was a laudable and remunerative practice (at one shilling per brush), until the year 1804? And may one assume that the modern aspect of fox-hunting dates from that year?—O. V. W. H.

ANSWERS

A LITTLE WORM.—Nares quotes, under "Idle Worms": "Keep thy hands in thy muff, and warm the idle worms in thy fingers' ends."—Beaum. and Fl. "Woman Hater," iii., l. 1, Works, vol. ii. pp. 437-8. What these idle worms really were, or what they were supposed to be, seems a mystery. The passage quoted by Nares is the only one besides that in this text, wherein any reference is made to this supposed parasite. Dr. C. M. Campbell says that neither the Acne punctata or "maggot pimple," nor the Demodex folliculorum (which is a common parasite found in the sebaceous follicles of the skin), ever occurs in the fingers. He also says that among the Lowland Scotch the toothache is still called the worm; and that in China the native charlatans profess to cure toothache by extracting a live maggot from the hollow of a decayed tooth. Dr. Campbell thinks it probable that, in order to encourage the belief that lazy fingers bred worms, the thrifty housewife might have smartly pricked the finger of the maid who indulged in idleness, and produced a live maggot as coming from it.—Winifred A. Horwood (Brockley). [Replies also from M. A. C., Cambridge, and M. E. M., Molesey.]

THE MAID OF LOCH LOMOND.—The Highland Girl to whom the poem is inscribed was the sister of the ferryman. It was in the ferry-house at Loch Lomond that Wordsworth and his sister took shelter to await the return of the boat which had crossed laden with a large party for church. Wordsworth's own note at the head of the poem (Professor Knight's edition) is "The delightful creature and her demeanour are particularly described in my Sister's Journal"; and in Dorothy Wordsworth's Journal, vol. ii., the description may be found.—S. C. (Hove).

[Reply also from M. A. C., Cambridge.]

DIOGENES AND ASPASIA. (Reply to K. C. B., Feb. 18).—Was not Kingsley thinking of a passage in the Vera Historia of Lucian? In the island of the Blest the travellers find Diogenes. He is translated indeed—married to Lais, and revelling like an Anacreon. Claude Melnotte would certainly have refrained from asking a newly-married man "Has Diogenes found his Lais?" But Aspasia might pass muster.—B. M. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

Vorst, Marie Von. Modern French Masters. With a Preface by Alexander Harrison. Paris: Brentano, 6s. net. (See p. 449.)
Bréal, Auguste. Velazquez. Duckworth. Popular Library of Art, 2s. net.
Strong, S. Arthur, the late. Critical Studies and Fragments. With a Memoir by Lord Balcarras, M.P. Four Portraits and numerous Illustrations. Duckworth, 16s. net.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Courtney, William Prideaux. A Register of National Biography. With a Selection of the chief Bibliographical Books and Articles printed in other Countries. Vols. I. and II. Constable, 31s. 6d. net, 2 vols.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

Waddington, Mary King. Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife, January-May, 1880, February-April, 1904. Illustrated from Drawings and Photographs. Smith, Elder, 10s. 6d. net. (See p. 443.)
Dr. Momerie: His Life and Work. Written and edited by his Wife. Blackwood, 12s. 6d. net.
Life, Letters and Literary Remains of J. H. Shorthouse, edited by his wife. In two Volumes. Vol. I. Life and Letters. Vol. II. Literary Remains. Macmillan, 17s. net. 2 vols. (See p. 437.)

CLASSICAL.

Brown, Henry S. J. Handbook of Homeric Study. Longmans, 6s.

EDUCATIONAL.

Syngé, M. B. The World's Childhood. Stories of the Greek Gods and Heroes simply told, for young children. Part II., suitable for Standard II. With Illustrations by Brinsley le Fanu. B. C. Wood, 10d.

FICTION.

Wielbrandt, Adolf. A New Humanity, or the Easter Island. Translated from the German by Dr. A. S. Rapport. Maclaren, 6s.
Green, Anna Katharine. The Millionaire Baby. Chatto & Windus, 6s.

Haggard, H. Rider. Jess. With twelve Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. Smith, Elder. New edition, 3s. 6d.
Tarkington, Booth. Monsieur Beaucaire. Illustrated by C. D. Williams. Murray. New edition, 1s. net.
Braddon, M. E. The Rose of Life. Hutchinson, 6s.
Hume, Fergus. The Secret Passage. Long, 6s.
Pollock, Walter Herries, and Pollock, Guy C. Hay Fever. Longmans, 3s. 6d.
Doyle, A. Conan. The White Company. With Illustrations. Smith, Elder. New edition, 3s. 6d.
Tarkington, Booth. In the Arena: Stories of Political Life. With Illustrations. Murray, 6s.
Meade, L. T. The Burden of Her Youth. Long, 6d.

GARDENING.

Hobart, Elizabeth. Leaves from a Suffolk Garden. Keith Thomas.

HISTORY.

Macpherson, Hector. Scotland's Battles for Spiritual Independence. Hodder & Stoughton, 3s. 6d. net.
Paul, Herbert. A History of Modern England. In five volumes. Vol. III. Macmillan, 8s. 6d. net.

LITERATURE.

Everett, William. The Italian Poets since Dante. Accompanied by Verse Translations. Duckworth, 5s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Duncan, Norman. Dr. Grenfell's Parish. The Deep Sea Fishermen. Hodder & Stoughton, 5s.
The Statesman's Year-Book. Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1905. Edited by J. Scott Keltie, LL.D., with the assistance of L. R. A. Rawlin, M.A., LL.B. Macmillan, 10s. 6d. net.
Corelli, Marie. Free Opinions freely expressed on certain phases of Modern Social Life and Conduct. Constable, 6s.
Collinson, Joseph. Facts about Flogging. Revised edition. Piffeld, 6d. net.

POLITICAL.

Trotter, William. The Government of Greater Britain. Dent. Temple Primers, 1s. net.

POETRY.

Jacob, Violet. Verses. Heinemann, 3s. 6d.
MacManus, Seumas. Ballads of a Country Boy. Dublin: Gill.

REPRINTS.

Coryat, Thomas. Coryat's Crudities. MacLehose (Glasgow), 2 vols.
The Return from Parnassus, or the Seavage of Simony. Edited with Introductory and Glossary by Oliphant Smeaton. Dent. Temple Dramatists, 1s. net.
The Little Quarto Shakespeare, with Introductions and Foot Notes by W. J. Craig. Macbeth. Othello. Methuen, 1s. net each.

SCIENCE.

Loeb, Jacques. Studies in General Physiology. Parts I. and II. The Decennial Publications. Second Series, Vol. XV. Chicago University Press. London: Unwin.
Reid, G. Archibald, M.B., F.R.S.E. The Principles of Heredity: with some Applications. Chapman & Hall, 12s. 6d. net.
Haeckel, Ernst. The Evolution of Man: a Popular Scientific Study. Vol. I. Human Embryology or Ontogeny. Vol. II. Human Stem History or Phylogeny. Translated from the fifth (enlarged) edition by Joseph McCabe. Watts, 2 vols. 42s. net.
Moncalm, M. The Origin of Thought and Speech: Translated from the French by G. S. Whitmarsh. Kegan Paul, 9s.
Davey, E. C. The Neocomian Sponges, Bryozoa, Foraminifera and other Fossils of the Sponge-Gravel Beds at Little Coxwell, near Faringdon. Dulau, 5s. net.

SOCIOLOGY.

Pigou, A. C., M.A., F.S.S. Principles and Methods of Industrial Peace. Macmillan, 3s. 6d. net.
Maine, Sir Henry Sumner, K.C.S.I., LL.D., F.R.S. Ancient Law. Cheap edition. Murray, 2s. 6d. net.

SPORT.

Geen, Philip. What I have seen while Fishing, and how I caught my Fish. With seventy-three Illustrations. Second impression. Unwin, 7s. 6d. net.

THEOLOGY.

Headlam, Stewart D. The Meaning of the Mass. Five Lectures with other Sermons and Addresses. Brown, Langham, 2s.
Warehauer, J., M.A., D.Phil. Jesus saith: Studies in some "New Sayings" of Christ. Allenson, 2s. 6d.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

Hutchinson, G. T. From the Cape to the Zambesi. With an Introduction by Colonel F. Rhodes, C.B., D.S.O. With many Illustrations from Photographs by Colonel Rhodes and the Author. Murray, 9s. net.
Bullen, Frank T., F.R.G.S. The Cruise of the "Cachalot." With Illustrations. Smith, Elder. New edition, 3s. 6d.
Malcolm, Napier. Five Years in a Persian Town. Murray, 10s. 6d. net.
Fraser, John Foster. Canada as it is. With forty-seven full page plates from Photographs. Cassell, 6s.
Firth, J. B. Highways and Byways in Devonshire. With Illustrations by Nelly Erichsen. Macmillan, 6s.
The "Queen" Newspaper Book of Travel. With eight maps and twenty-nine Illustrations. Cox, 2s. 6d.
Nuremberg. Painted by Arthur G. Bell. Described by Mrs. Arthur G. Bell. Black, 7s. 6d. net.
Jungman, Nico. Norway. Text by Beatrix Jungman. Black, 20s. net.
A Pictorial and Descriptive Guide to London and its Environs. Twenty-sixth edition. Entirely re-written and re-illustrated. With maps, plans, and illustrations. Ward, Lock, 1s.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE. 10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books. Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE. 10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—

The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes, Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events. Science and Art Specially dealt with.

Fullest Reports of all Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere.

THE SPHERE.

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week. Also List of Books Received.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

The Morning Newspaper for Aberdeen and the Northern Half of Scotland.

Reviews of Books appear on Mondays and Thursdays, and on other days as required. Book Advertisements are inserted on Literary Page.

NEW BOOKS ARE PROMPTLY REVIEWED.

LONDON OFFICE: 149 FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE WESTERN MORNING NEWS

Is the most widely circulating paper in the four Western Counties.

LONDON PRIVATE WIRE OFFICE: 49 FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telegraphic Address: "PLYMOUTHISM, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 165 HOLBORN.

ADVERTISING IN IRELAND.

THE DAILY EXPRESS, DUBLIN

PREMIER FINANCIAL PAPER OF IRELAND.

"One of the few daily Papers in the United Kingdom showing a distinct interest in Literature."—The Academy.

Most Suitable Medium for Publishers' Advertisements. Special Columns devoted to Literary Matter every Thursday.

THE DUNDEE COURIER.

Has double the circulation of any Morning Paper North of the Forth.

Literary Notes on Monday. Reviews on Wednesdays.

London Office, 109 Fleet Street, E.C.

THE LIVERPOOL COURIER.

ESTABLISHED 1808.

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

"The Liverpool Courier" is a first-class newspaper having a very large circulation in Lancashire, Cheshire, and North Wales.

SPECIAL PUBLISHERS' PAGE EVERY FRIDAY.

Books for Sale

"THE STORY OF SOMERSET," by Richmond. 90 Illustrations, 4s. 6d. post free.—John D. Baillie, Grand Pump Room, Library and Reading Room, Bath.

Books Wanted

HAMERTON (P. G.) Etchings and Bickers, 1858.
Hamilton, Elements of Quaternions, 1876.
Handley Cross, in monthly parts or cloth, 1842, or any odd parts.
Handy Andy, in monthly parts or cloth, 1842, or any odd parts.
Hardy (Thomas) any first editions of Desperate Remedies, 3 vols., 1871, or either vol.
Under a Greenwood Tree, 2 vols., 1872.
A Pair of Blue Eyes, 3 vols., 1873.
Far from the Madding Crowd, 2 vols., 1874.
Any odd vols.
Harleian Society Publications
Harris (S.) The Coaching Age, 1885.
Old Coaching Days, 1882.
Harris's History of Kent, folio, 1719.
Harris (W. C.) Wild Animals of S. Africa, 2 vols., folio, 1840.
Harris Coverdale's Courtship, in monthly parts, or cloth, Virtue, 1840, or any odd parts.

Harvey (Wm.) Anatomical Exercises, 8vo, 1653.
Hassell (J.) Life of George Morland, 1806.
Excursions on Thames, coloured, 1823.
Rides and Walks round London, 2 vols., 1817, coloured plates, or 1820.
Hasted's History of Kent, 4 vols. or 12 vols.
Haunch of Venison, 1771.
Havell's Views on the Thames.
Hawbuck Grange, 1847.
Hints to Young Sportsmen.
Hawker's Instructions to Sportsmen, 1844, or any edition.
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

WANTED to purchase Books and Pamphlets in any Language on the Jews.—J. Jacob, 149 Edgware Road, W.

BUCK'S VIEWS OF CITIES & TOWNS, set.—The Chaucer Book Co., 37 St. Martin's Court, W.C.

"CHAPLET OF LOVE POEMS," by Mrs. Arthur Harter (M. de Fonblanque); Haubury and 5 St. Paul's, Canterbury.
Wanted by W. E. Goulden,

ENGRAVED PORTRAITS of Bishop Synges and Bishop Hutchinsons. Betham's Bonnetage. 1840. A. Iredale's.

HOLD FAST TO MERIT.

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen.

The Mainstay of the Writing Man.

L. & C. HARDTMUTH, 12 Golden Lane, London, E.C.

THE MOST PERFECT
PEN IN THE WORLD.

Last year 750,000 Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pens were sold. This means that 750,000 people were convinced that it is the best Fountain Pen made. The opinion of so many must go for something. It is so! Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen is the actual best. Does not leak, blot, or spurt. Simply writes, and keeps on writing.

BY BEST

WE MEAN
BETTER THAN
ANY OTHER.

Of Stationers, Jewellers, &c., from 1840
In Silver and Gold for Presentation.

Illustrated Booklet post free from

Is your Pencil a Koh-I-Noor or is it only an imitation?

Of Stationers, Artists' Colourmen, and Photographic Dealers.
Dainty Illustrated Booklet on Koh-I-Noor Pencils post free from
L. & C. HARDTMUTH, 12 Golden Lane, London, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS opened at any date for THREE,
SIX and TWELVE Months.
Town Subscriptions, 21s.
Yearly. Books of past
Seasons, 10s. 6d. Yearly.

Terms for Country, Suburbs, and Parcel Post, on application to

MUDIE & CO.,

11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1721

APRIL 29, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

THE LONDON SHAKESPEARE LEAGUE

Aims at forming a bond of union between all who cherish the association of Shakespeare with London, as the scene of his life-work. The main object of the Society is to organise an annual commemoration of the Poet in London.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE COM-MEMORATION 1905 (MAY 1-13).—For PROGRAMME, including Performance of a Shakespeare Play, Public Dinner, Lectures, and Conversazione, address Miss ELSPET KEITH, Secretary, London Shakespeare League, 49 Southwold Mansions, Elgin Avenue, W.

Third Annual Shakespeare Commemoration Dinner. May 6. Applications for tickets to be addressed to Mrs. GOMME, 24 Dorset Square, N.W.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

For the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows and Orphans.

President—SIR EDWARD J. POYNTER, Bart., P.R.A.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the Whitehall Rooms, Hôtel Métropole, on SATURDAY, May 6, at 7.15 o'clock. The Right Hon. LORD ALVERSTONE, P.C., G.C.M.G., Lord Chief Justice of England, in the chair.

Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea. Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by SIR ASTON WEBB, R.A., Treasurer.

WALTER W. OULESS, R.A., Hon. Sec.
DOUGLAS G. H. GORDON, Secretary.
41 Jermyn Street, S.W.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27 King Street, St. James's.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT Britain, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.—Monday, May 1, at five o'clock, Annual Meeting of the Members; Tuesday, May 2, at five o'clock, Professor L. C. Miall, D.Sc., F.R.S., first of three Lectures on "The Study of Extinct Animals." Half a guinea the course.

Thursday, May 4, at five o'clock, Professor Sir James Dewar, M.A., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., first of three Lectures on "Flame." Half a guinea.

Saturday, May 6, at three o'clock, Professor Marshall Ward, D.Sc., F.R.S., first of two Lectures on "Moulds and Mouldiness." Half a guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, two guineas.

Friday evening, May 5, at nine o'clock, Professor Henry E. Armstrong, Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., on "Problems Underlying Nutrition."

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.
THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

AMICABLE LIBRARY, LANCASTER.

Founded in 1768.
All the books, 14,000 volumes, TO BE SOLD BY AUCTION by Mr. G. H. PETTY, at the Library, on May 8, 9, 10, and 11.
Catalogues, price 6d., can be obtained from the Auctioneer, 62 Market Street, Lancaster.

THE AGE OF MARIE ANTOINETTE.
A Sketch of the Period of European Revival, which claims among its representatives Goethe, Prudhon, Gainsborough and Mozart. By CHARLES NEWTON SCOTT. New and revised edition. LONDON: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd., 50 Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3s. 6d.

Advertisements for out of print "Books Wanted" and "For Sale" are inserted at 3d. for each title (eight words, including address); minimum, 1s.

Books Wanted

HAYLEY'S Life of Romney, 4to, 1809.
Hayward (A.) Biographical Essays, 2 vols., 8vo, 1858, or 1 vol., 1872.
Hazlitt (W. C.) Venetian Republic, 4 vols., 1860.
Heals of the People, 2 vols., 1840-1, or any odd parts.
Heath (W.) Military Duties, 1824.
Any Illustrations by him.
Hector O'Halloran, Bantley, N D, or odd parts.
Helen's Tower, privately printed, N D, (1851), 4to, pink wrapper.
Hellas, a Lyric Drama, 1822.
Helps (A.) Spanish Conquest, 4 vols., 1855-61, or vol. 4.
Hennepin's New Discovery of a Vast Country in America, 8vo, 1698.
Heppelwhite's Cabinet Makers' Guide.
Herbert (George) The Temple, 1633, or imperfect.
Herrick (Robert) Hesperides, 1648.
Hervy (Lord) George the Second, 2 vols., 1848.
Hervy (T.) Book of Christmas, 1836.
Hesiod, Georgics, translated by Chapman, 4to, 1618.
Hewitson, Eggs of British Birds, 2 vols., 1856.
Exotic Butterflies.
Hewlett (Maurice) Earthwork out of Tuscany, 1895.
Pan and the Young Shepherd, 1898.
Any of his works.
Heywood's Works, 1550-90.
Heywood (T.) Hierarchie of Angels, folio, 1635.
Spider and the Flea, 1556.
Higgins (G.) Celtic Druids, 1829.
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

HOUSE OF POMEGRANATES, Intentions, Plays.—H. Boland, 101 r Ritner, Phila., Pa., U.S.A.

WILDE, OSCAR, Books, Pamphlets, Manuscripts, and Letters purchased by J. Jacob, Bookseller, 149 Edgware Road, London, W.

ANY BOOKS from the Library of M. Johnson of Spalding, with dated Bookplate.—The Chaucer Book Co., 37 St. Martin's Court, W.C.

Books for Sale

ANDREW LANG'S James VI. and the Gowrie Mystery, portraits and illustrations; 8vo, cloth, new, 12s. 6d. net for 4s. post free. Smit's Mary Rich, Countess of Warwick, 1625-1678, portraits and illustrations. 8vo, cloth, new, 18s. net for 4s. post free.—Walker, 37 Briggate, Leeds.

INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY OF LITERATURE (in oak bookshelf), 20 vols., as new. Red morocco, cost over £14; what offers.—Write Lloyd and Townsend, 13 Dillwyn Street, Swansea.

BUNYAN, JOHN, The Water of Life, 1760, price 5s.; also Come and Welcome to Jesus Christ, price 5s.; or the two together, price 9s.—X., 1 Regent Terrace, Cambridge.

VILLON'S SOCIETY'S Edition of the Arabian Nights, 9 vols., Tales from the Arabic, 3 vols., Aladdin, 1 vol.: 13 vols. Vellum, as published, £13 13s.—W. E. Goulden, 5 St. Paul's, Canterbury.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF
G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti, Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings, Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from
FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR.

No. 140.
Containing a special article, entitled:
"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,"

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Book-sellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP, Secondhand Bookseller, 100 St. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND 4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (postfree) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. Roor & Son, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.

"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookfinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1809; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss Foot, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L. 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—All descriptions.—Translations, duplicates; careful work. Novels, 9d. per 1000. Smith Premier.—Miss HANDLEY, Berkhamsted, Herts.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

SPECTATOR.—"The most attractive and brilliant of all Mrs. Humphry Ward's novels."

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE

NEW YORK WEEKLY POST:

"William Ashe is the strongest male character Mrs. Ward has thus far drawn."

THIRD IMPRESSION.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.

With Illustrations by ALBERT STERNER.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

The WORLD'S WORK.—"The book is a never-failing delight. . . . Every page contains some separate thread of interest drawn from many sources, woven into a singularly harmonious and effective whole."

"A marvel of research. . . . Never before has learning been brought to bear upon Shakespeare's biography with anything like the same force."—TIMES.

NOTICE.—A Fifth & thoroughly revised Edition is now ready of A LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

By Sidney Lee.

Editor of "The Dictionary of National Biography," Honorary Doctor of Letters in the Victoria University. With two Portraits of Shakespeare, a Portrait of the Earl of Southampton, and Facsimiles of Shakespeare's known Signatures. Large crown, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Also the LIBRARY EDITION, in 1 volume. With 6 Photogravure Portraits, 1 Coloured Plate, and 84 Illustrations and facsimiles in the Text. Medium 8vo, 16s.

And the STUDENT'S EDITION, entitled "SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE AND WORK," with a Photogravure Portrait of Shakespeare and 5 facsimiles. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

ATHENÆUM.—"There is no doubt that for some time to come, probably for a long time, it will be a general text-book."

SPECTATOR.—"Unquestionably one of the most remarkable achievements of modern English scholarship . . . The mass of obscure and tangled controversies which he has unravelled out is immense."

Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife.

By MARY KING WADDINGTON.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Fresh, original, and attractive . . . The volume has all the charm and vivacity of detail which characterised the letters of Madame de Sévigné, Mary Montagu, Gibbon, or Cowper."

EVENING STANDARD AND ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"The volume is both entertaining and pleasant. . . . It is never ill-natured."

A VAGRANT ENGLISHWOMAN.

By CATHERINE H. DODD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"The anonymous Englishwoman who recounts her adventures sees life through somewhat roseate and whimsical spectacles, but she has the gift of observation and can think."

DAILY NEWS.—"Miss Dodd has the power of suggesting an atmosphere. The whole volume forms a record, not only very readable in itself, but also challenging thought along many lines of suggestion."

Messrs. SMITH, ELDER & CO. have pleasure in announcing the publication of a Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. SERIES, under the title of

THE WATERLOO LIBRARY

This Series will comprise some of the best works of modern authors. The volumes will be well printed, and issued in a neat cloth binding of special design.

The following Volumes of the Library, among others, are ready:

THE ORUISE OF THE "OAOHALOT." With 8 Full-page Illustrations and a Chart.

By Frank T. Bullen.

By A. Conan Doyle.

By H. Rider Haggard.

THE WHITE COMPANY. With 8 Full-page Illustrations.

JESS. With 12 Full-page Illustrations.

Other Volumes to follow.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For MAY.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS.

ROSE OF THE WORLD. Book III. Chapters VI.-VIII. By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE.

THE REDISTRIBUTION OF THE FLEET. By Admiral Sir CYPRIAN BRIDGE, G.C.B.

FRENCH REFUGEES TO ENGLAND IN 1871-72. By Mrs. FREDERIC HARRISON.

A HOME OF DIAMONDS. By Professor T. G. BONNEY, D.Sc., F.R.S.

THE LITTLE YELLOW MAN.

ARTHUR STRONG. By SIR ROWLAND BLERNERHASSETT, Bart.

THE ROCK GARDEN. By LEONARD HUXLEY.

A PLEA FOR THE USELESS. By W. H. D. ROUSE, Litt.D.

SEA-PAINTING AND SEA-MYTH. By ARTHUR F. WALLIS.

PORT ARTHUR, ITS SIEGE AND FALL. A Contemporary Epic. By RICHARD BARRY.

THE FOURTH TIME. By W. PHILIP GROSER.

FROM A COLLEGE WINDOW. I.

THE KING'S REVOKE. Chapters X.-XI. By Mrs. MARGARET L. WOODS.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15 WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his Wife. In Two Vols. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

Illustrated Pocket Classics.

NEW VOLUME.

JOHN INGLESANT.

By J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net.

VOL. V. NOW READY.

DIARY AND LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY.

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June 1781. Vol. II., 1781-86. Vol. III., August 1786 to June 1788. Vol. IV., July 1788 to July 1791. Vol. V., July 1791 to April 1802. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. From the Death of Lord Palmerston in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Previously published.

Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

Highways and Byways Series.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

GLOBE.—"All who love the country of romantic and pastoral beauty will thank publishers and author and illustrator for their successful efforts to do it justice. Pages replete with local lore, well chosen and well told; and illustrated by Miss Erichsen in most graceful style."

MAURICE HEWLETT'S NEW NOVEL.

FOND ADVENTURES. Tales of the Youth of the World.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY.

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D., Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

MACMILLAN'S EDITIONS

OF

SHAKESPEARE.

THE GLOBE SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. G. CLARK and W. ALDIS WRIGHT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.; limp leather, gilt edges, 5s. net.

THE VICTORIA SHAKESPEARE. In 3 vols. Vol. I., COMEDIES; Vol. II., HISTORIES; Vol. III., TRAGEDIES. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A., LL.D. 9 vols. 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

THE EVERESLEY SHAKESPEARE. In 10 vols. With Short Introductions and Footnotes by Prof. C. H. HERFORD. Globe 8vo. 4s. net. each volume.

The Plays may also be had in separate volumes, price cloth, 1s. each; roan, gilt tops, 2s. each.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONGS AND SONNETS. Edited by F. T. PALGRAVE. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The Century Magazine.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, 16s.

The MAY Number contains:

NEW PORTRAITS OF A GROUP OF BRITISH AUTHORS.

George Meredith, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Austin Dobson, Andrew Lang, Edmund Gosse, George Bernard Shaw, Gilbert K. Chesterton. From photographs by ALVIN LANGDON COBURN.

THE CHATEAUX OF TOURAINE. II. Loches and Langeais. By RICHARD WHITEING, Author of "No. 5 John Street," "The Yellow Van," &c. Pictures by JULES GUÉRIN (four in colour) and by ANDRÉ CASTAIGNE.

And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

* Also ready Vol. LXIX., Nov. 1904 to April 1905. Price 10s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	459	Fiction	472
Literature :		The Bookshelf	473
Pierre Loti's New Book	462	Book Sales	474
Mr. Paul's "Modern England" . .	463	The Drama :
Jörn Uhl	464	"Romeo and Juliet" at the Im-
Art in the Garden	465	perial Theatre	474
The Greatness of Constantine . .	465	"King Richard II." at His
Ave, Imperator !	467	Majesty's Theatre	475
The Solemn League and Cove-		"Her Own Way" at the Lyric nant	467	Theatre ; "What Pamela
Bird-Chatter	467	Wanted" at the Criterion
Broad Church	468	Theatre	475
Colonial Nationalities	469	Fine Art :
The Scansion of Space	469	The Picture-Market and Con-
The Founts of Song	470	temporary Art	475
A Book of Tongues	470	Music :
A Literary Causerie		Handel's "Messiah"	476
Boccaccio	471	Correspondence	478
		Books Received	479

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

IN an American magazine, The Critic and Literary World, to wit, there has been going on for the last two months what the editor describes, in the choice language of our transatlantic cousins, as "a symposium on the slump in poetry." The collocation of these words "symposium," "slump," "poetry," would in itself be sufficient to demonstrate that the discussion was not uncalled for, since, both by precept and example, it shows the falling away in taste which has given rise to this lament. One's first inquiry, however, is why this cry should have been raised in America. To use the language affected by our contemporary, we were not aware that poetry ever was much on the boom there. Has America really added one to the great poets of the world? The answer must be negative, unless a place beside Homer, Shakespeare, Milton, and Dante, is claimed for Edgar Allan Poe, William Cullen Bryant, or Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. The United States has developed many qualities that are entitled to be described as magnificent, but among them is not to be numbered the art of writing either prose or verse. Not that by any means we wish to depreciate the many eminent essayists, historians, and versifiers, who have sprung from America. Many of them are in a high rank, but not one has been absolutely supreme.

No doubt these opinions will be resented in the United States, because the tests applied there are not such as we would use. For example, there is a gentleman called Frederick Lawrence Knowles who contributes to the symposium a little essay which evidently is meant to be final. A friend of his has made more than $30,000 from verse alone, and who can talk of a slump after that? He is a great poet who contributes occasional verse to the newspapers, who makes humorous rhymes, and composes lyrics for the librettos of comic operas, to say nothing of his magazine verse and published books. We can very well imagine this bard opening his letter-bag in the morning and reading with great satisfaction the orders that come in for poetry; so many songs for a new comic opera, a few lines for the leading newspaper, and several feet for a popular magazine. A happy bard one would think him, but alas! even his bed is not one entirely of roses. In spite of all this indisputable success he has his own grievances and worries; as for instance, that "his name is unmentioned in Miss Rittenhouse's recent volume on Younger American Poets, or even in Stedman's 'Encyclopædic Anthology.'" To a man of his eminence this neglect must be disgusting. The true laurel in America is the almighty dollar, and after it has been bound round his brows by the publishers it is most arrogant of these paltry anthologists to omit him from their roll of fame.

There are others besides this commercial gentleman who deny that there is any slump in verse. A test question proposed to be set to pessimists by one contributor, is, "What do they really know about the poetry of Woodberry, and Moody, and Edith Thomas?" It would appear that these are the names of three illustrious poets who might as well be living on another planet for all that we know on this side of the Atlantic of what we presume to be their deathless verse. But the allusions form a most perplexing element in this "Symposium on the Slump." For example, one of the writers, Richard Burton his name, remarks in a most casual manner: "If the poet deal with homely, simple humanity, like Riley, or if his note be strongly social or socialistic, like Markham's, he still gets some hearing." Now who is Riley and who is Markham? or are these but pseudonyms for our old friend Mrs. Harris? They well might be for aught we know. In dead earnest, our reason for mentioning their names is to show the exceedingly low standard which is set up by those who presume to be guides and critics. The contributors to this symposium, with one or two brilliant exceptions, give no evidence whatever that they know what fine poetry is.

Wordsworth used to say that a great poet must make and educate his own audience. The herd of minors, so loudly exalted, owe their popularity mainly to the fact that they are not pioneers but merely followers of an old convention—not voices, but echoes only. The true voice appears but seldom, and when it does appear is so strange and new that it almost invariably fails to attract attention. But if the owner of it be a true poet, then slowly and steadily he will conquer his own allotted territory in the world of art. Looking back at the history of literature, how easy is it to see that a great poet has appeared scarcely once in a hundred years, and that the period between looks now like an arid waste, though at the time it produced in abundance popular versifiers who no doubt imagined they were going down the ages to immortality. We are afraid that this dictum will sound strange and foreign to those who have taken part in the controversy. The statement should rather have been in these terms—that each of these little bards had his boom and was not aware of the slump that awaited him.

The annual meeting of the Cowper Society, held on Tuesday, the anniversary of Cowper's death, at East Dereham, Norfolk, brought to light some interesting unpublished letters relating to the "Abbott Portrait" of the poet. John Johnson (Johnny of Norfolk) writes to his sister Catherine from Weston Underwood on July 19, 1792:

"Mr. Abbott . . . has actually painted a most enchanting likeness of our great poet. Nothing can be more like. . . . He has been the best sitter Mr. Abbott ever had in his life. I am now relieving him by sitting for the lights and shades of the leg, and am therefore cross-legged and sitting at his desk, but he will resume again for the finishing part."

On March 7, 1793, Lady Hesketh writes to John Johnson:

"Let me tell you I have seen the picture; admire it full as much as you do; think it by much the strongest likeness I ever saw."

On May 15, 1793, John Johnson says, referring to Lady Hesketh:

"She complains vehemently that the picture was not in the exhibition. All the circle she moves in are outrageous about it, she says."

We seem about to witness a great extension of the work done by the book canvasser, who already flourishes exceedingly in the colonies and the United States. "Book agent" he is called in America, and when he is given a good book which cannot be obtained from the libraries or the booksellers—that is essential—he sometimes produces marvellous results. Grant's "Memoirs" were sold in that way in the States. The whole Union was mapped out into districts, and every possible purchaser, from Maine to Texas, and from Florida to Oregon, was canvassed, with the result that hundreds of thousands of copies were sold at a high price, and the President's widow made a large fortune—not less, we have heard, than £100,000. The copyright was the only property that the President, who had lost his savings in an unfortunate business speculation, was able to bequeath to her. He wrote the book on his death-bed expressly to save her from destitution, and only just lived long enough to finish it.

A little while ago we were all congratulating ourselves on the adherence, welcome though tardy, of Sweden and Norway to the terms of the Berne Convention. Now, however, the Secretary of the Incorporated Society of Authors points out, in a circular letter to editors, that "although Sweden adhered to the Berne Convention of 1886 it did not adhere to the additional Act of Paris of 1896." The difference is important to all owners of literary property, as two quotations will show. Article 7 of the Berne Convention contains the following:

"Articles from newspapers or periodicals published in any of the countries of the Union may be reproduced in original or in translation in the other countries of the Union, unless the authors or publishers have expressly forbidden it."

The additional Act of Paris altered this so as to run:

"Serial stories including tales, published in the newspapers or periodicals of one of the countries of the Union, may not be reproduced, in original or translation, in the other countries, without the sanction of the authors or their representatives."

The practical effect of this is that the Swedish copyright will be lost unless the formal notice "All rights reserved" is given either generally in the periodical or particularly with the article. Let all whom this concerns give heed. The value of the Swedish copyright in a serial is seldom more than a ten pound note; but it is "found money," and should not be carelessly thrown away.

The Blackpool Watch Committee, with the help of the Public Libraries, has decided to "do something" to combat the influence of the "penny dreadfuls." All the schools in the town are to be supplied with libraries from which the scholars may take out books which it is hoped they will like better than these obnoxious popular pennyworths. It is an excellent idea—always supposing that the scholars can be persuaded to use the libraries; but it raises the question: What exactly is a "penny dreadful"? How does it differ from any other boys' book of adventure to which the epithet "dreadful" does not apply?

Our paragraph on Mr. Pissarro's Eragny Press last week has brought us a protest against our use of the phrase "unique." The Eragny Press, it appears, is not unique—"in the sense that it exists alone"—and we devoutly hope no one suspected us of misusing the word in any other sense! There are, besides, the Pear-Tree Press at Petersfield, the Dove's Press at Hammersmith and the Essex House Press—"and possibly others" adds our correspondent. There are others. There is the St. Mähel Workshop at Bushey, and there is Miss Yeats's Dun Emer Press at Dundrum.

It is the Pear-Tree Press which sends us the first number of a new series of "The Elf, A Magazine of Drawings and Writings by James Guthrie, printed by Hand at his own Press." "The Elf" is a thin quarto, of which only one hundred copies are printed, and its first (March) number comprises a frontispiece, a title-page, and other illustrations by Mr. Guthrie, two designs for book-plates by Mr. R. B. Lodge, and a small quantity of poetry and prose. But it is the printing with which we are here concerned. The type is excellent and the printing faultless; but there is nothing new about either. And there is room for improvement in modern type. It is a matter of regret that Mr. Ricketts has never continued his experiments in the designing of type. His "King's Fount" went far to overcome some standing faults, in the matter, for instance, of t's and r's, though the s's and a's remained, as s's and a's always have been, feeble and unsatisfactory.

Mr. E. V. Lucas refers in his Preface to the Letters of Charles and Mary Lamb to "the fatality that indissolubly associates editors of Lamb with inaccuracy." Pity 'tis, 'tis true. This undesirable state of affairs however does not seem to be confined altogether to editors, others sharing with them this failing, as will be seen from the following extract which we copy from a recent catalogue of second-hand books offered for sale by a Midland book-seller. It runs thus: "The London Magazine for 1820-21-22, edited by Chas. Lamb, Leigh Hunt, De Quincey, and others. Contains Lamb's Essays of Eliza" (the italics are our own). Lamb in the editorial chair appeals strongly to the imagination. What, we wonder, would have been his mode of reply when returning rejected articles? We cannot fancy that he would have used any stereotyped expression but would have found an opportunity of being, as he always was, truly original.

In spite of the rapidity of progress in the United States it does not appear from Mr. Henry James' article in the North American Review that he finds New England greatly altered from what it was in Hawthorne's time. In the picturesque description of "quiet provincial Salem" that he gives in his monograph on the author of the "Scarlet Letter," the squire and the parson are conspicuous by their absence; and to-day Mr. James still laments that they have no place in the New England landscape. For the ivy-mantled church, with its venerable associations, there is still the New England meeting-house, "vast and vacant;" for the sense of poetry given by the presence of an ancient building dedicated to religion, "the small substitute, the mere multiplication of the signs of theological enterprise."

Similarly with the squire—his absence makes the traveller appreciate his value. In his stead there was, in Hawthorne's time, an aristocracy of wealth, formed of "enterprising ship-owners who despatched vessels to Indian and Chinese seas." This did not prevent Salem from being one of the most democratic and virtuous of communities. But it was deadly dull—especially for a growing genius. Mr. James appears to think that the difference between New England and some European countries is that, in the former there is no point at which feudal influences have begun, whereas "on this side" there is no point at which they have obviously ceased.

A prison with a literary association is about to be pulled down in Paris. This is the Cherche-Midi, where the Dreyfus Court Martial was held. Once upon a time there was a Clerk of the Court, who had apartments in the prison, and who had a daughter. A young poet came courting his daughter, and ultimately carried her away, and married her. The daughter's name was Adèle Foucher. The poet's name was Victor Hugo.

It was a marriage which had been, in a sense, predicted, and fore-ordained. The Clerk of the Court and the poet's father, General, then only Major Hugo, had been old friends, and the Major had been best man at Foucher's wedding. At the wedding-breakfast, if we may believe what we read in "Victor Hugo raconté par un témoin de sa vie," he filled his glass and gave the following toast: "You shall have a daughter, I will have a son, and we will marry them. I drink to the prosperity of their ménage."

The ménage was not, in all respects, so prosperous as it might have been. There came a time when Madame Hugo, instead of loving her husband, loved his critic, Sainte-Beuve and when the poet, instead of loving his wife, loved the actress, Juliette Drouet. Some correspondence bearing upon this latter romance has been discovered, and is about to be published.

While we are speaking of Victor Hugo, let us take the opportunity of printing an unpublished letter, just discovered, addressed to Alexandre Weill, and rich in psychological interest. It is written from Hauteville House, and runs as follows:

"You recollect me a little, and I am touched by the fact. I thank you for the opportunity of reading the works of your genius, always so strong and so full of matter. We are—you and I—at once at profound variance and in mysterious accord. There are, beyond the world of men, horizons where our spirits penetrate and meet. I am one of those who, like you, 'believing in God, regard themselves as works created for the sole purpose of glorifying the Creator.' The severe solitude in which I live, and in which I feel that I shall die, permits me no other thoughts. I am composed of an Alas and a Hosannah. Alas, when I look at the earth. Hosannah, when I dream of what lies beyond, and when I feel in my brain, flashing through my skull, the splendid penetration of Heaven.

"In God, then—that is to say in fraternity—I clasp your hand.—VICTOR HUGO."

French spelling reform, of which we spoke last week, is not by any means being discussed for the first time. Various of the great writers of the past have taken sides about it. Balzac, in "Louis Lambert" resolutely opposed all change. "What a magnificent book," he exclaims, "might one not write, in relating the life and adventures of a word!" On the other side we find Agrippa d'Aubigné, the sixteenth-century poet. "If," he protests, "the French language were written as it is pronounced, foreigners who wanted to learn it would be spared a third of their time and trouble." The only difficulty which he sees is that there is no authority competent to introduce the changes. "We should require," he says, "a learned King, or at all events an excellent Chancellor seconded by the best of Parliaments, to write all public acts in this style, and, in due course, to suppress everything written with any other orthography."

British Museum readers who grumble—and there are such—may be interested to learn that the readers at the Bibliothèque Nationale grumble more, and with greater reason. A list of grievances has been set forth in the Gil Blas. The reading-room, we are told, is noisy. The attendants slam the books down on to the desks like paving-stones, and engage in conversation in a loud tone of voice. A reader describes how they expressed their admiration when a lady with auburn hair walked up the library. They pointed her out to each other, exclaiming: "Voilà le casque d'or." That sort of thing at all events does not happen in Bloomsbury. Another advantage on our side is the electric light. The reading-room of the Bibliothèque National has no artificial illuminants.

Henry-Auguste Barbier, whose centenary France celebrated yesterday (April 28), has his interest for Englishmen. Like Byron, he woke up one morning and found himself famous. Paris was still seething with the Revolution of July when he published a poem in the Revue de Paris, attacking with scathing irony the prosperous bourgeois who had remained in hiding while the mob were "rushing to immortality," and had even emerged from their obscurity and asked for their rewards. The death of his mother caused him to travel, and later he wrote a number of poems describing the misery of London as he saw it and of the English working class. To Londoners he was scarcely polite. He called them people in black, living and dying in silence, and the victims of a fatal instinct that forced them ever on in the pursuit of gold.

In noticing a little book of essays on "Questions Actuelles" by the Abbé Ragon a collaborator of the Journal de St. Pétersbourg makes some severe remarks on the subject of English pronunciation of Latin. "We Russians," he declares, with the ingenuous vanity of his race, "have had the true pronunciation—that of Germany and Italy—from all time." He continues:

"It appears that at Oxford and Cambridge the first verse of the Bucolica:

Tetera tu patula recubans sub tegmine fagi is pronounced so:

Titiré, tu pétioulé rikioubans seub tegminé fédjaï."

It may be, as this excellent Latinist states, that we hold the championship of the world for absurdity in this matter; but in regard to Latin spelling it is obvious that Russian writers can easily surpass us. After "Tetera tu patula" we need not be greatly disturbed by the unqualified assertion that German and Italian pronunciation of Latin is altogether "right." The English form Seezer is bad enough, for Cæsar; but Tsehzar or Chehzar is hardly better. If anything is assured in philology, it is certain that neither Germans nor Italians speak Latin quite after the manner of Horace and Cicero. Undoubtedly our pronunciation of Latin is very vicious: and Oxford is much to blame for her example. It is not uncommon to meet graduates who are wonderfully ignorant of the principles of the ancient pronunciation, and of the methods by which these principles can be ascertained. Public school Latin grates unpleasantly on the ears of those who are accustomed to the more correct and refined forms, and is practically unintelligible on the Continent. It is remarkable that the English friends of the classic languages fail to see how they weaken their case by a barbarous and vitiated system of phonetics, which robs spoken Latin and Greek of all their music and nearly all their charm.

The idea of a special edition of Maupassant's stories for the use of young people is likely to cause a shudder for more reasons than one. Such attempts are not often a success, and we have a particularly lively recollection of an edition of Silvio Pellico's "Le mie prigioni," expurgated to meet the views of the British schoolmaster. Yet lovers of "the most exact transcriber in literature" may rest assured. The tales are produced in their entirety, and there are enough of them to represent the writer's genius at its best without prejudice to the reverence due to youth.

In celebration of Shakespeare's birthday the German Shakespeare Society gave in the Court Theatre of Weimar a performance of King Richard II. in strict accordance with Shakespeare's stage directions. The neutral scenes, or those that pass in an undefined place, were given before the curtain, while the principal scenes were played on the back part of the stage with all the art and mechanism at the command of modern times. It was curious and interesting, but it cannot be said that much was gained.

While scant attention is paid in our universities and schools to German literature, it is worth while noting what a large part is filled by English literature in the lectures announced for the summer term in the universities of Germany. Among the subjects are Byron and his times (which will be treated both at Berlin and at Bonn); Charles Dickens; the Brownings; the Victorian age of English Literature; English Literature in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; and English elements in German Literature of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

On Friday, April 14, Russia lost one of her best men of science. On that day Otto Vassilievitch Struve died. He was born in 1819. His father, Vassili Yakovlevitch Struve, was the founder of the Pulkov observatory and Otto Vassilievitch succeeded to the position of Director of the Observatory in 1862. One of his favourite occupations was the measurement of stars, a study in which his father stood first amongst his contemporaries. For his exceptional and brilliant work he was awarded the gold medal of the London Royal Astronomical Society, an award which is made but once a year. Up to his last days he devoted himself to science, remaining in constant touch with his sions—the Director of the Berlin Observatory, G. O. Struve, and the Professor of Astronomy in the Imperial Karkhoff University, L. O. Struve, and many other astronomers. He was eighty-six years of age at his death.

The following are the Lecture Arrangements at the Royal Institution, after Easter: Professor L. C. Miall, Fullerman Professor of Physiology, R.I., Three Lectures on the Study of Extinct Animals: the Rev. H. G. Woods (Master of the Temple), Three Lectures on Velazquez; Professor Sir James Dewar, Fullerman Professor of Chemistry, R.I., Three Lectures on Flame; Professor J. A. Fleming, Three Lectures on Electromagnetic Waves (The Tyndall Lectures); Professor H. Marshall Ward, Two Lectures on Moulds and Mouldiness; Dr. J. G. Frazer, Two Lectures on The Evolution of the Kingship in Early Society; and Mr. A. H. Savage Landor, Two Lectures on Exploration in the Philippines. The Friday Evening Meetings will be resumed on May 5, when a Discourse will be delivered by Professor H. E. Armstrong, on Problems underlying Nutrition. Succeeding Discourses will probably be given by Professor E. Fox Nicholls, Sir Charles Eliot, K.C.M.G., Professor J. W. Bruhl, Mr. George Henschel, and Sir William H. White.

Mr. Martin J. Blake is engaged in compiling the second volume of the "Blake Family Record," which will contain a Calendar of Documents, relating to the family during the seventeenth century, in continuation of the first volume, which contained those concerning the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The work will contain some interesting facts concerning the "plantation" of the Province of Connaught with English settlers in 1635, and concerning the fourteen ancient "tribes" of Galway. It will be illustrated by facsimiles of documents, coats of arms, pedigrees, ancient seals, &c., and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

LITERATURE

PIERRE LOTI'S NEW BOOK

La Troisième Jeunesse de Madame Prune. By PIERRE LOTI. (Paris: Calmann Lévy.)

WE must accept from every artist what he has to give; it is as useless as ungracious to exact powers which are not his. Commandant Loti stands without a rival as a landscape etcher in words: he tells what he sees with such clearness that we feel as though we too had seen it, and few travels are so easy and so effortless as those we make through the medium of his pages. And yet his books always leave us unutterably sad: the most hardened novel-reader sheds tears over the charming volume now in our hands, albeit it tells of no weariness or trouble and is merely a sea log:

"où j'ai voulu seulement noter quelques-unes des choses qui nous ont amusés. . . . Ce n'est qu'un long badinage, écrit au jour le jour, il y a trois ans bientôt, alors que les Japonais n'avaient pas commencé d'arroser de leur sang les plaines de la Mandchourie."

After an absence of fifteen years, M. Loti, in command of the ironclad Redoutable, revisits Nagasaki and notes his new or his revived impressions, drawing a more sympathetic picture than he etched eighteen years ago in Madame Chrysanthème. But now, as then, his appreciation of Japan is purely external: he sees the landscape and the changes brought about by iron, steam and coal; but he does not even ask himself whether there is a corresponding development in the spirit of the people. The town now is sharply divided between old and new, old Nagasaki and its suburbs:

"resté immuable . . . mais, dans la concession européenne, et partout sur les quais nouveaux, que de bâtisses modernes, en style de n'importe où! Que d'ateliers fumants, de magasins et de cabarets!

"Et puis, où sont donc ces belles grandes jonques, à membrure d'oiseau, qui avaient la grâce des cygnes? La baie de Nagasaki jadis en était peuplée; majestueuses, avec leur poupe de trirème, souples, légères, on les voyait aller et venir par tous les vents; des petites athlètes jaunes, nus comme des antiques, manœuvraient lestement leurs voiles à mille plis, et elles glissaient en silence parmi les verdurees des rives. Il en reste bien encore quelques-unes, mais caduques, déjetées, et que l'on dirait perdues aujourd'hui dans la foule des affreux batelets en fer, remorqueurs, chalands, vedettes, pareils à ceux du Havre ou de Portsmouth. Et voici de lourds cuirassés, des 'destroyers' difformes, qui sont peints en ce gris sale cher aux escadres modernes, et sur lesquels flotte le pavillon japonais, blanc orné d'un soleil rouge.

"Le long de la mer, quel massacre! Ce manteau de verdure, qui jadis descendait jusque dans l'eau, qui recouvrait les roches même les plus abruptes, et donnait à cette baie profonde un charme d'éden, les hommes l'ont tout déchiqueté par le bas; leur travail de malfaisantes fourmis se révèle partout sur les bords; ils ont entaillé, coupé, gratté; pour établir une sorte de chemin de ronde, que bordent aujourd'hui des usines et de noirs dépôts de charbon.

"Et très loin, très haut sur la montagne, qu'est-ce donc qui persiste de blanc, après que la neige est fondue? Ah! des lettres—japonaises; il est vrai—des lettres blanches, longues de dix mètres pour le moins, formant des mots qui se lisent d'une liene: un système d'affichage américain; une réclame pour des produits alimentaires!"

It is characteristic that having noted all this M. Loti does not appear to think about it. If he wonders how these changes affect the mentality of the Japanese he excludes such inartistic reflections from his diary. Not this book alone, but all his books reveal him more insular than the most insular of Britons: the Japanese are to him little grimacing monkeys, little cats who talk, and he does not trouble himself as to what may be germinating in "leur petite cervelle jaune." To the ladies he is more kind, though scarcely less contemptuous; but, after all, what impression of English womankind now would be formed by a Japanese naval officer stationed, let us say, at Dartmouth? His acquaintance would probably be much in the class of M. Loti's fair friends at Nagasaki—the little dancer Pluie d'Avrile, "moitié poupée et moitié chat," "Madame Renoncule ma belle-mère," and Madame Prune, in whose house was the home of Madame Chrysanthème. The fifteen years that have passed meanwhile have wrought little change in Madame Prune; she is still graceful and sentimental with an incomparable fall of the shoulders, she still inhabits that same house in the hillside suburb of Dioudjendji, though she is now a widow, and we are told that "tel à été son trouble de me revoir, qu'il ne m'est plus possible de mettre en doute la persistance de son sentiment pour moi." Time, says M. Loti, has robbed her of few of her attractions, and yet it is evident that, despite her persistent sentiment, she was now powerless to attract him: as a link with the past she affords a title for his book, but the rôle she plays in it is insignificant and faded: Nagasaki seen under "un soleil d'arrière-automne, chaud sans excès, lumineux comme avec nostalgie;" Nagasaki under snow, the sky lowering and leaden; Nagasaki at the end of March with its gay and warm spring days, is M. Loti's real subject, and the human interest is as unimportant as the "letterpress" of an illustrated magazine. But even in this light undercurrent Madame Prune is unimportant, and the honours are divided between that enchanting little child-dancer, Pluie d'Avrile, and Inamoto, the young daughter of a bonze:

"petite sœur de passage pour qui l'on garde, quelque temps après le départ, une pensée douce, et puis, que l'on oublie. . . . Est-ce elle que je regretterai, ou sa montagne, ou encore le vieux mur gris, protecteur de nos rendez-vous? Vraiment je ne sais plus, tant sa gentille personnalité est pour moi amalgamée aux ambiances."

And M. Loti was the most attentive of brothers, if his printed word is to be believed! Day after day he climbed the hill behind the town and scaled the garden wall to meet "au cœur même de la haute nécropole, dans une sorte de bocage enclos, environné d'un peuple de tombes," this little sister, with her pure frank eyes and candid brow. Inamoto in her first youth, not Madame Prune in her third, is the muse for whose sake Japan in 1901 was so much more sympathetic to Commandant Loti than had been Japan in 1886. And yet—alas! for the double inconstancy of the sailor and the man of letters—on the very day of his adieux with his eyes still wet with the tears of an eternal parting—a parting told in such touching language that our emotion leaps to his—he writes:

"Pourtant, je l'oublierai dans quelques jours, c'est certain. Quant à ces capillaires que j'ai prises, par quelque rappel instinctif de mes manières d'autrefois, il m'arrivera bientôt de ne plus savoir d'où elles viennent, et alors je les jetterai—comme tant d'autres pauvres fleurs, cueillies de même, dans différents coins du monde, jadis, à des heures de départ, avec l'illusion de jeunesse que j'y tiendrais jusqu'à la fin."

The friendship with Inamoto had been "en tout bien et tout honneur": she had nothing in common with the other Japanese ladies of his acquaintance (it is noticeable that the flower-sellers, monkey-dealers, bric-à-brac shop-keepers who cross these pages are all of the gentler sex), yet, you observe, he narrates the episode entirely from one point of view. She, the poor child, who met him daily, clandestinely, in the weedy garden, she is considered only as the pastime to while away a year of exile and then to be forgotten in a day. Perhaps this is the root of the profound melancholy of M. Loti's writings: he is never enthusiastic, never indignant, never in earnest, never convinced; his disillusionment is as complete as the disillusionment of the writer of Ecclesiastes; nothing is evil, nothing is good: all is seen from the outside and with the large tolerance of complete indifference; life affords to him a series of dissolving views, of impressions each to be effaced by its successor, each exquisitely seen, appreciated, noted, but by a seer for whom Life has no plan, and for whom its aimless beauties have lost all interest.

M. Loti has only reached middle-age, but surely in the France of to-day he is already an anachronism. His pre-occupation is with Style, that dethroned goddess whom the young earnest generation of Frenchmen neglect for ideas and ideals, for facts and tendencies and morals and research. An English literary journal comments on the fact that twenty-nine editions of "Madame Prune" were exhausted within two days of publication: "a similar success by a stylist in England would be impossible." The reproach implied is aimed at England, but we doubt if it hits the mark; for who are the buyers of Pierre Loti's latest novel? His is an art that appeals to the cultured minority of Cosmopolis far more than to his compatriots. Very easy to read, making use of a vocabulary that can be understood by the most indifferent French scholars; master of a style so pure and simple that it can be enjoyed and even appreciated by thousands who are unable to form a judgment on the majority of French writers, Pierre Loti is to the beginner in French what Heine is to the learner of German—the writer who flatters us with the illusion that we are as much at home in his language as in our own. And then, unlike many popular French writers, his theme is as interesting to a foreigner as to his compatriots: there is nothing peculiarly French in his subjects or in their treatment, for, indeed, M. Loti is a seer and not a reasoner; nothing escapes his eye and he finds always the word that best describes the cloud, the flower, the weather he has seen, but of the inner meaning of what he sees he gives no hint. Is it that those clear-sighted eyes of his are not allied to any power of deduction; or does he deliberately exclude thought as an inartistic element, destructive of the artistic beauty of his prose?

MR. PAUL'S "MODERN ENGLAND"

A History of Modern England. By HERBERT PAUL. In five Volumes. Vol. III. (Macmillan, 8s. 6d. net.)

THE third volume of Mr. Paul's "History of Modern England" receives the prompt welcome it deserves; a welcome, too, which declares the critics to be all of one mind. Rarely is there so much agreement as to the merits and shortcomings of a book, or so much accordance of respect for what is not considered perfect. But then perfect it could not be, even in the conventional use of the word. This is the third of the five volumes which are to comprise a critical record of a few decades of our history ending on the borders of to-day. As Mr. Paul advances to the close of the last century two disadvantages increase upon him.

For one thing, he enters upon events, mutations, policies, the end of which is not yet, or of which the origin, conduct and effects are still rather crudely disputable. Judgment of them is still subject to undetermined consequence, or there has not been time yet for the sort of illumination which memoir-writers slowly deliver. For another thing, the farther an historian of modern times advances into his own day, the more likely is he to be affected temperamentally by the conflict of passion and opinion, or (if he shared such conflicts and lived in one party or another) to feel himself under certain obligations of restraint. The mere consciousness of innate and exercised predilections, possibly still at work at the bottom of his mind, is enough to impose restraint upon likes and dislikes both, and to do so beyond the requirements of justice. This we know from the nature of men and things, and that it still remains true when the man is most capable, honest and bold, and when the events, the policies, the personages he would appraise, are not particularly dark.

Mr. Paul is of the order of minds described in the preceding sentence, but his good qualities relieve him of neither of the disadvantages we have mentioned. His third volume deals with the years 1865-76, itself a very eventful period and the breeding-time of changes and distractions which have been developing ever since: itself, too, a time of vigorous contention soon to become furious, and remarkable for a large importation of feeling into a great number of affairs. Mr. Paul, we may presume, took no very active part in politics till after 1876. But he was always a student of politics, it was in the years immediately preceding 1876 that his political opinions were forming, and the contentions of those years were his immediate retrospect when his political activities did begin. From this point, then, one of his disadvantages as modern historian—though not, of course, peculiar to him or to men of his way of thinking—becomes more operative; and it is closely connected with the other. For although thirty years have passed since the political disruption and confusion of the earlier seventies, much of the behind-the-scenes work of that time remains uncertain. In many cases it is too soon for the rendering up of official papers or confidential letters. The diarists and memoir-writers either put off publication for reasons always respectable, or else confess to reticences and suppressions similarly accounted for: meanwhile the whole course of party and political affairs is interpreted from opposite sides of the shield. It is not for the ACADEMY to attempt a decision upon these differences or even to suggest a preferential opinion. All we have to say is that whereas the period embraced in Mr. Paul's third volume was alive with the stir of change, dissolution, reconstruction not all complete yet, the time for treating it in the right historical manner has not come. Too much has to be viewed with the eyes of faith; too much has to be determined by inference, biased or unbiased.

So it is that most of Mr. Paul's critics have to say of his third volume that it should be described as journalistic rather than historical. That is a just description, and yet not just to him unless we add that the wisest and best-equipped of them—of his critics, we mean—could have made nothing else of it. In other hands, Radical or Conservative, it might have been a better or a worse book, but it would still have been rather journalistic than historical; a point which is settled (as we think) by so much undetermined policy and event. Of course, Mr. Paul is quite aware of all this, and we might even say that acknowledgment of it is to be found in his method of composition. His chapters or groups of chapters strongly resemble the review of affairs which the newspapers used to print on the first day of each year, at greater length and perhaps more studiously than they do now. These summaries were always carefully done; they wanted not for as much of the historical spirit as could be imported into them, and they were often models of good writing. So far the likeness holds, and it is carried farther by the fact that, were any one of these articles cut from the journal it was written for, no one could mistake its origin in Radicalism or Conservatism. Mr. Paul will not resent that statement. And of course there is this great difference in his favour. The survey of the annual summary writer is confined to controversies and events in the heat of their happening and extends over the narrow space of a single year; what developments the next year may show or what light it will bring may be guessed at but is unknown. Mr. Paul's case is very different, of course. In this third volume of his, for example, he takes a group of ten years from a time comparatively remote and to a great degree dispassioned; which of itself puts the commentator at an advantage, even though he cannot escape journalism altogether. But this is not all. His survey of that ten years is carried over and across a later period of twenty more, with all the benefit of what light they afford him. For the reasons we have suggested it is not enough for historical work, but neither is it inconsiderable.

What we would say of the book in detail hardly needs saying, so much is it in agreement with what has been said at length and at large already. We, too, are in wonder at the (relative) importance given to the ecclesiastical squabbles of thirty years since; and to this succeeds another surprise—that so much less space is given to science and scientific inquiry, a subject of dominating and ever-refreshed interest from the sixties onward. And we assent to all the commendation that has been given to the spirit in which the book is written, and again to its merits as a piece of writing; carrying away from it many such sentences as that in which Mr. Paul speaks of "the immoral leniency which public men practise towards each other at the public expense." It is a striking and useful saying as well as epigrammatic. With certain characterisations we cannot agree—disagreement resting not upon political grounds, but such as may perhaps be called psychological. Here, however, Mr. Paul has every right to his own opinions, which at all points command attention and respectful consideration.

JÖRN UHL

Jörn Uhl. By GUSTAV FRENSSEN. Translated by F. S. DELMER. (Constable, 6s.)

At the end of the book the hero is discussing with a friend, an author, whether the story of his life would be worth the telling. The man of letters replies:

"Your life, Jörn Uhl, has been no commonplace one. Your youth was still and quiet, decked out with all sorts of fantastic pictures. As you grew up you were lonely, and in your loneliness, without any one's help, you struggled manfully with Life's enigmas, and although you only managed to solve a few of them, the trouble was not in vain. You went away to fight for the land that lies around these water-rills of ours, you grew hard in fire and frost, and made progress in the most important thing of all in life, you learned to distinguish the value of things. You learned what woman's love was in all its intensity, and that is the second highest that Life can give us. You laid Lena Tarn in her grave, and your father and brothers, and you looked human misery in the face and learned humility. You fought against a hard and hostile fate without succumbing, and won your way through at last, although you had to wait many a day for help."

Jörn Uhl is a peasant belonging to the numerous family of the Uhls in Dittmarsch who through dissolute and extravagant lives had squandered what their ancestors had accumulated by hard, self-sacrificing toil. Jörn tried in vain to keep off ruin. At last, poor as a church mouse, he left his home which had been burnt down, and deeply grieved by the death of his young wife in child-bed, took refuge on the poor estate of his maternal uncle, Thies Thiesen, one of the most delightful characters in the book, and there began life afresh. In the end he comes out victorious, "life, after all, is long enough to make one's self into something, if one only has faith enough and a sturdy will." Courage to meet one's fate, courage to bear one's lot, is the lesson taught in this book. Frenssen knows that in the lives of most of us there are no romantic episodes, no opportunity for deeds of heroism. We may once or twice be moved by some great emotional experience, pleasurable or sad, but as a rule the trivial round prevails. Very often too the little things are harder to endure and overcome than the big things. We brace ourselves to meet great crises, they put us on our mettle; if we are victorious the fight has been worth while, if we suffer defeat there is often grace in submission. But it is the small worries and annoyances that eat the heart and sap the courage and endurance. Jörn Uhl saw things as they were, and won his way to freedom and as much happiness as a man can hope to have. He proved in his own life that all the labour and trouble people go through are not gone through in vain.

Such in brief is the substance of the book that has so deeply touched the heart of contemporary Germany. There is nothing in it of a sensational character, no extraordinary events, no marvellous chain of circumstances, no grandly depicted events or situations. It is only the simple tale of a simple life. And yet within a year of its publication (February 1902) 120,000 copies had been sold. Nothing like such a success had been known since the time of Ebers's early novels (1864-79) when 20,000 copies sold within a few days of publication.

Gustav Frenssen, who thus awoke one morning and found himself famous, is the son of a village carpenter, and was born at Barlt in Schleswig-Holstein. He grew up beside the encroaching, all-devouring sea, on the barren land at which men toil painfully for small results. He attended school at Meldorf and at Husum, the birthplace of Theodor Storm, the poet of Schleswig, and it is said that Frenssen occupied the very room in which that author wrote his tales and poems. He studied theology at the universities of Tübingen, Kiel, and Berlin, and then was appointed to a pastorate at Hemme. There he wrote two novels, "Die Sandgräfin," in some ways the most artistic of his works, and "Die drei Getrewen," but they attracted little if any attention until after the success of "Jörn Uhl." Last year Frenssen gave up his pastorate—his heart had never been deep in the work—bought a small estate in his native district, and has there settled down to write.

"Jörn Uhl" is a soul-history of the type of Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister," and Keller's "Der Grüne Heinrich," but it lacks their form: it has no artistic superstructure, no artistic rounding off of the whole. It is as if the author mounted a saddleless horse, threw the bridle over its neck and jogged along up hill and down dale, looking to right and left and taking heed of all he found on the way. And just when we are perhaps growing a little weary, and finding our author almost too discursive we come upon a splendid passage like that of the battle of Gravelotte. It is only a picture of one corner of the fight, just what Jörn Uhl, non-commissioned officer in the Holstein Artillery, experienced. In short sentences, filling about ten pages, we have the most perfect example of artistic impressionism we remember to have read in any work of modern times. Here is in brief what those pages tell us:

"The battery advances under fire; the guns are unlimbered. The shells fly, men and horses are laid low. Only a few of the private soldiers remain standing, and they work with perspiring faces. No more shells! Infantry fire from the left. 'Grapeshot! Four hundred paces,' sounds the word of command. In vain! They must retreat in order to gain new strength, and fetch up other horses and guns. Then it goes on as before. Gradually it becomes stiller; evening begins to descend upon the woods, the groans of the wounded are audible, and the survivors begin to think of themselves and of those dying around them."

That is all, and yet we read those ten pages with breathless emotion. Sometimes we are arrested by a piece of true philosophy, of acute criticism of life. When has true marriage been better described than in Jörn's observations:

"You see both of us know who it is we are marrying, and that neither of us is a saint. And each of us intends to let the other follow his own bent and go his own way. That's why so many marriages turn out failures, because the one wants to compel the other to think and act exactly in the same way as himself. I, on the contrary, think that each should try and bring out the other's characteristics—of course, within the limits of common sense—so that each may have a full, rounded individuality in his helpmate. What nonsense people talk about man and wife being like the oak and the ivy, cup and saucer, and such like! No! Let them stand side by side, like a couple of good trees of the same stock, only that the husband has to take the windward side. That's all."

We must resist the temptation to quote further, or to tell something of the old uncle, Thiess Thiessen; of Fiete Krei, the lively young broom-maker; of the faithful serving maid, Wieta Penn: of stately Lena Tarn, Jörn's first wife; of dainty Lisbeth whom he married later and whose delicious simplicity and goodness pervade the book; or of Jörn's sister Elsbe in whom the hot blood of the Uhls gains the mastery; or of the lonely Sand-lass who struggles with her fate and conquers; or of the part played by external nature of which Frenssen paints so many fine pictures in the course of his narrative.

A book of this character, so sincere in its aims, so true-hearted and simple, so impregnated with the breath of the salt sea and of the pine-woods, should find as many readers and admirers here as in the land of its birth. The excellence of the translation, too, will do much to make the book acceptable. Acquainted with the original as we have been since its first appearance, we must heartily congratulate Mr. Delmer on the manner in which he has overcome the difficulties of his task. The book could not have been rendered into better English.

ART IN THE GARDEN

Garden Colour. By MARGARET WATERFIELD. (Dent: 21s. net.)

THIS extremely pretty volume is a notable addition to garden literature. Miss Waterfield shows in colour some of the more thoughtful and refined aspects of gardening, such as have already, for a number of years, been advocated in print by our foremost artist-gardeners.

In the Preface, Miss Waterfield says:

"Various modern garden writers have, with much knowledge and skill, already laid stress on the importance of colour-effect in our gardens—suggestions which many have been able to adopt; but there are those to whom these word-pictures convey but little help owing to their limited knowledge of flowers and the effect produced by them."

It is this important lesson, of the right use of either one good plant at a time, or of some simple but effective grouping of two or three kinds of plants, that the pictures, with few exceptions, are intended to teach, and there can be but little doubt that they will show, even more clearly and helpfully than written words alone, what important aspects of garden-beauty may be produced by such simple means.

Many of the pictures show good examples of what is now well known as wild gardening—the most difficult gardening of all to do rightly, except to an artist; and, when rightly done, perhaps of all the most satisfying.

Where, as in the case of perhaps nine gardens out of ten, no such plain, clearly-intended, beautiful effects are to be seen, the reason is sure to be that there are too many kinds of plants jumbled together. They are museums of specimens, not gardens for beauty and delight. Still, we must not quarrel with their owners for admiring the flowers as individuals rather than for the consideration of their best use for garden adornment.

Miss Waterfield modestly describes her flower-pictures as "sketches," and sketches in fact they are; for they only attempt to show the general appearance of the groups as to form and colour. In many cases one could wish that they had been carried a little further, as in the case of "Giant Parsnip" (p. 82) (the name of which, by the way, should be Giant Cow-Parsnip). Here the grand foliage might well have been made more of, and, for a plant, the normal height of which is eight to ten feet, the stems look stunted and some dignity and grace are lost; also in "Oriental Poppy" (after p. 78) the foliage, of some importance in Nature, is not even indicated. In both these cases the drawing of the foliage might well have been carried further without any loss of breadth. On the other hand, in "Valerian" (p. 80), a sketch of charming colour throughout, the very slightness of execution is more than excusable, because the whole pyramid of bloom, composed as it is of an innumerable number of tiny flowers, is impossible to treat in detail.

Among the sketches deserving special praise are: "Snowdrops" (p. 18); "Cyclamen Coum" (p. 20); "Anemone blanda" (p. 26); "Blue-bell and Pheasant-eye" (after p. 48); all capital examples of wild gardening: in the last-named especially, the addition of the white Narcissus being a very clever invention. Others of the best pictures are "Magnolia conspicua" (p. 40); "May Tulips" (p. 48); "Iris orientalis," &c. (after p. 76); "Tree Lupine," &c. (p. 78); "Water-lilies" (after p. 108), true and charming; "Border of Annuals" (p. 112); a good reminder of the worthy use of these grand flowers, and especially of the noble port of the newer tall Snapdragons.

Perhaps the general slightness of treatment is the best present expression of the artist's powers, though one who begins so well will doubtless go further; for it is noticeable that in the few drawings where more elaboration is attempted, as in "Iris and Roses" (p. 76), the picture suffers from a blackness in the shadows. Some are also evidently inadequately rendered by the colour process, whose perfection of mechanism has no doubt not reached finality. Thus, in "Iris reticulata" (p. 24), and in "Japanese Iris" (p. 110), the purity of the purples is lost. In "Daffodils, &c." (p. 30), the red block shows up too much, as does the yellow block in "Delphinium, &c." (p. 92), "Yucca" (p. 120), and "Hollyhock" (p. 122).

Whether picture or process is in fault in one or two other instances, cannot be determined from the book alone, but the colour is not rightly rendered in "Crown Imperial" (p. 10), where a commonplace red does duty for the characteristic mahogany-like tint of the flower. In "Tree Peony" (p. 50) there is also a red of untrue quality. In "Pyrus japonica" (p. 36) there is an intrusively unbecoming object, like a tall brown post, which neither explains itself nor justifies its presence by any need or advantage to the picture. There is something pretty as a picture about "Tropæolum speciosum" (after p. 120), but it is not true either as a portrait of the plant or of its effect in the garden. "Michaelmas Daisies" (p. 130) is pleasant in colour, but is spoilt by the misfitting of the blocks, as is also "Sweet Rocket" (p. 74).

The letterpress is suitably instructive and suggestive; each of the four seasons has an introductory chapter, by Mrs. Earle, E. V. B., Miss Rose Kingsley and the Hon. Vicary Gibbs respectively; but Miss Waterfield's own notes and those of others are by no means the least informing and encouraging.

With the honourable exception of the last chapter, the book shows the usual well-grown crop of ill-spelt botanical names. In the inevitable "Thumbergi" one recognises the familiar impression of the printer's black digit; but such bumbles as "Coleus Thersoidens" for Coleus thyrsoideus; "Mittallia," a name unknown to botany; "Aster Punisius Pulclerrimus"; "Penstemon"; "Crocus purpurea grandiflora," to take a few, from pages opened at random, can hardly pass without challenge.

Still, one bears in mind that it is not a botanist's book, but the book of an artist, and its own lesson, the simple and beautiful grouping of flowers for colour effect, is taught in a way that should open many hitherto blind eyes to new visions of garden beauty.

G. J.

THE GREATNESS OF CONSTANTINE

Constantine the Great: the Reorganisation of the Empire and the Triumph of the Church. By J. B. FIRTH. (Putnam, "Heroes of the Nations" Series, 5s.)

MODERN historians form a court of appeal which is continually modifying and reversing the verdicts of the earlier assessors, who meted out rough justice without a very subtle appreciation of character. At the higher or at least the later tribunal such modern inventions as the spirit of the age, the stream of tendency, the web of circumstance, are taken into account, whereas contemporary critics judged their man on the strength of his answer to that question—"What ha' ye done?"—which left Mr. Kipling's Tomlinson speechless. The modern method is in its essence more critical, and if the writer of to-day seems apt to play valet to the heroes of the nations, he is also contributing evidence whereby a supreme court of judicature in the historian's utopia shall, some day, in the light of its omniscience, pass judgments from which there is no appeal.

In the meantime good work is being done in many periods by writers who refused to be hypnotised by conventional epithets, and not least in that period when the brooding East

"let the legions thunder past
And plunged in thought again."

Mr. Firth, for instance, starts with no assumptions because his subject has had greatness thrust upon him. Constantine "the great" must be weighed in the balance with those whose names have escaped, unqualified, from oblivion, and if it is found that his greatness consisted largely in swimming with the tide of circumstance, his title must be boldly found wanting. The task is a formidable one, for it is impossible to deny that contemporary judges had little of that impartiality which tradition associates with the bench. Lactantius was doubtless a good Christian, but his history suffers from the same handicap as would, let us say, prejudice the success of a life of Wyclif by Dr. Clifford; while the statements of Eusebius are obviously coloured by the difficulties which must beset the path of those who would reconcile the historical with the episcopal point of view. The suspicion which attaches to these and other original authorities increases the difficulty of weighing the evidence and of arriving at any conclusions which approximate to truth. This difficulty mainly concerns itself with the causes and tendencies of the time: the outlines of Constantine's life are not in dispute. He was certainly born to greatness; how far he entered into his heritage is more open to dispute. The claim of his predecessor in the purple to the title which has been attached to Constantine's name is undeniable; Diocletian was a great statesman, and the greatest crime of his reign, the persecution of Christianity, was committed in the interests of the State. He crucified martyrs, not for the good of their souls (that hypocrisy is a later development of odium theologicum) but because he believed their faith to be a superstition which was undermining the foundations of the State. By this belief we know that he showed himself deficient in the rarest and supreme wisdom of statesmen; but it is impossible to question his motives. His successor reversed his policy from the same motives, and with greater foresight. Constantine was nothing if not practical; and it is difficult not to conclude that it was the material rewards offered by the teachers of Christianity that had the largest share in inducing him to accept the new faith. In hoc signo vinces was the dominant thought. He embraced Christianity in belief that the God of the Christians would give him and his Empire "life more lasting, rule more high," and like Mycerinus he lived to learn that the rewards of religion are not material.

The edict of Milan, which formed the firstfruits of Christianity because it marked the birth of the conception of religious toleration, is a psychological as well as a historical document. In many ways it is extraordinarily modern, and from whatever point of view we regard it, the light which it throws on the character of Constantine is very clear. The toleration which it preaches is certainly a new conception in history: Plato himself knew no such liberty. The essence of the principle is that if Christianity is to be tolerated and accepted as the State religion, this does not affect the truth of other religions. Constantine's conception of religious toleration was a phase of the idea, which anthropologists know well, that all gods, good and bad, and even those whose existence is problematic, should be propitiated. It is a haphazard creed, and essentially a materialistic one. Constantine's creed is in fact only a cruder conception of the doctrine of a modern philosopher that all religions are equally true and equally false. The conception, of course, is foreign to Christian thought; and the delight of contemporary Christians at an Emperor's recognition of their creed caused them to overlook, if indeed they perceived, the qualifications of that recognition. To accept Christianity implies, in the sight of those who do so, the absolute rejection of paganism. No religion yet known to history is compatible with toleration of other religions: a churchman may tolerate a dissenter but not a Confucian. Constantine's inability to recognise this explains much in his career, and not least his death-bed baptism; for we refuse to accept the theory which accounts for his postponement of the rite by his wish that the forgiveness thereby promised by the bishops who lived at his court should include his whole life in its scope. In spite of these qualifications in his acceptance, the fact remains that Constantine was a Christian and an Emperor; and in this fact lies his principal claim to greatness, and to a place among the heroes of the nations. His work lived after him in the temporal power of Christianity. He had, of course, other claims to greatness, and in the central fact of his acceptance of the new faith we are apt to forget his success in war and politics. Unfortunately we know nothing of his early life: for us he is born, like Athena, in helmet and breastplate: but from his manhood onwards we can trace the steps by which he made himself sole master of the ancient world. The steps, like those of others who have attained the same goal, are marked with blood and crime; but war for its own sake or for the sake of mere aggrandisement was foreign to his nature. It is to his credit that, with all the temptation to do so, he never plunged the Empire into those religious wars which devastated Europe centuries later. If he had done so, would the unifying power of war have given fresh life to the old religion and marshalled its forces against Christianity? It is an interesting speculation, especially as it is difficult to resist the thought that if Constantine had been a more vigorous type of Christian he might well have provided the answer.

Turning to Constantine's third claim to greatness, we are on surer ground. Constantinople is not now the queen of cities, though Napoleon was not far wrong when he exclaimed: "It is the empire of the world!" The piercing of the Suez Canal has had momentous effect here as elsewhere, but the problems of the Middle East remain to prove that the city of Constantine is not yet, nor will be for many centuries, as Nineveh and Tyre. "Fools build houses," said a genial friend to R. S. Hawker when he was building his vicarage, "and wise men live in them." "Yes," replied Hawker, "and wise men make proverbs and fools quote them." The moral of this may be seen without quoting a proverb to prove it. The passion for bricks and mortar is a mere human weakness, but history shows that it is given to few men to build a city which shall endure for ages.

Mr. Firth traces the three phases of Constantine's career with admirable impartiality and in a graphic style. With such a subject it is impossible not to be interesting, and almost impossible not to be partial. In the Arian and Donatist controversy his task is made easier by his wise resolve to avoid metaphysical subtleties, agreeing with Huxley that the ashes of cold controversy make an unappetising dish. As to his conclusions, he steers a middle course between the biased panegyrics of the contemporary writers and the obloquy of some moderns; with qualifications he is inclined to agree to the conventional epithet. We will leave the reader to make his choice between Constantine the Great, and Tolstoy's "That scoundrel, Constantine!"

AVE, IMPERATOR!

The Thoughts of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.
Translated by GEORGE LONG, M.A. (Bell, 2s. net.)

The Meditations of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.
Translated by R. GRAVES, M.A. (Methuen, 1s. net)

THE interest in the philosophic Emperor grows. We have here two new popular editions of that private notebook where in all ages striving souls have found the rough upward path of a self-denying philosophy. It is only within recent years that the Meditations have secured a world-wide audience. Mr. Andrew Lang in his life of the Earl of Iddesleigh, better known as Sir Stafford Northcote, has pointed out that though Lord Iddesleigh was "probably one of the last English statesmen who knew the literature of Greece widely and well" he had never read Marcus Aurelius either in a translation or in the original crabbed and corrupt Greek. Even the omnivorous and omniscient Gibbon does not seem to have had any close acquaintance with the writings of the philosophic Emperor, as he dismisses the Meditations in a sentence. The general reader has now excellent and cheap translations of varying merit at his hand without trouble. The translation published at the famous Foulis Press, in Glasgow, in 1742, is an excellent piece of work with a fine old aroma about it. It seems to have been a vade mecum with Thomas Carlyle, as the wonderfully apposite motto from Arrian to his "French Revolution" appears to have been taken from a footnote in this notable version. At least we may surmise so. Carlyle was no recondite classical scholar, and it was unlikely he read Arrian in the original. "Stay, mortal! be not rash. The combat is great. The attempt god-like. It is for sovereignty: for liberty; for a current of life ever gentle, clear and unruffled." As he follows this up with a quotation from Antoninus in Greek also, the probability of his inspiration becomes almost a certainty. Jeremy Collier's translation, which Lord Avebury selected for his best hundred books, styled by Long as "coarse and vulgar," has in recent years been revised and corrected by Miss Alice Zimmerman. The antiquated seventeenth-century translation by Meric Casaubon is unknown to us. The volume, which is now being issued in good style at a nominal price by Messrs. Methuen, has an introduction by Mr. Sidney Lee, and is a version of some merit by Richard Graves, first published in 1792. Long's painstaking and scholarly rendering, in our opinion, holds the field for its many undoubted qualities, and added to it by way of appendix is Matthew Arnold's essay on Marcus—a fine piece of summing-up. Those to whom this famous classic is unknown, or who wish to refresh their minds by re-reading the Roman Emperor's priceless fragment will be glad to possess themselves of both these versions.

THE SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT

Scotland's Battles for Spiritual Independence. By HECTOR MACPHERSON. (Hodder and Stoughton, 3s. 6d. net.)

THE vaunted spiritual independence of Scotland has been so recently trailed through the mire of acrimonious litigation that one begins to believe it a dream—a devout imagination after all. This popular historic sketch of the claim of the Church has been hurriedly though not carelessly written to answer many questions raised by the man in the street. Mr. Macpherson holds a brief for those who contend for the autonomous government of the Kirk—a spiritual imperium or divine rule within the temporal state. Possibly he is strictly right in claiming that the Church was never actually or intentionally established and that it merely from time to time prevailed on the State to confirm its decisions and approve of its Confession of Faith. The Church of Scotland is really the freest of the churches. Its church courts have long been recognised as final in all matters strictly ecclesiastical and its right to meet in General Assembly without royal sanction is as nearly conceded as can be expected. A free untrammelled General Assembly has been for nearly four hundred years the one demand of the Scottish people. In England men concerned themselves about a free Parliament and strove to sit in it, but the General Assembly with its large quota of lay elders was the popular mouthpiece of the nation. The Estates of the realm were a close junta called together to register the proposals of the King and Privy Council, but the General Assembly, a democratic debating and yet judicial body, has always been the national ideal of the people. It gave scope for the well-known intensity of the Scots and was the oratorical safety-valve of the nation. This book may be regarded as one of the results of the deeply regrettable ecclesiastical impasse which has raised such a turmoil of rancorous legal vendetta. Lord Elgin's able and sage report, just published, will, we hope, make for righteousness and provide fair and equitable adjustment of this insane disruption, this outbreak of envy, malice, and all uncharitableness. The appeal to Parliament—to Caesar—has surely given a final quietus to the spiritual independence Mr. Macpherson makes so much of. Those religious wranglers may yet learn that spiritual independence is a pious myth and that in every state the royal or supreme power must be undisputed in all causes or over every organisation enjoying the peace and protection of the Government and its laws. What is spiritual independence but an inheritance from the papacy of mediæval times whose claim to supreme power in matters ecclesiastical in every country in Europe, resulted in conflicts between the civil and spiritual authorities, the most notable examples being the martyrdom of Thomas à Becket and the humiliation of the Emperor at Canossa? Needless to say the civil power has won all along the line.

BIRD-CHATTER

Familiar Scottish Birds. By A. NICOL SIMPSON, F.Z.S. (Paisley: A. Gardner, 2s.)

PRETTYLY printed and nicely bound, "Familiar Scottish Birds" is likely to tempt the casual purchaser; but, after saying that in size and shape it is essentially a "handy book," one is inclined, on looking through it, to add—"handy to throw at a cat." In the first place, such a book is not really needed; for the "Familiar Scottish Birds" are, almost without exception, familiar English birds too; and we cannot find anything of value stated in the book which is not contained in every book upon British birds. Omissions and errors, on the other hand, are numerous; especially in the large respect of means of identification of species, although this is put forward in the preface as one of the author's chief aims.

Of the rook, for instance, no description at all is given; while we are told that the carrion crow "can be readily distinguished from the rook by its black bill." As a matter of fact, the rook also has a black bill; and even if the author means to refer to the pale bare skin at the base of the bill and on the face of the rook, this does not appear till the bird is adult, and therefore you can never tell by its "black bill" that a crow, between the months of July and March inclusive, is not a rook. When there are precise and easy means of distinguishing the two birds, the author should have given these, if he was aware of them, instead of misleading his readers.

The same looseness runs through most of the book. Thus of the long-tailed tit the writer says that it "is extremely local in its distribution, but where it is located, quite a number may be seen day after day." The addition of the word "usually" would make this statement more accurate; because, of course, there are localities where the long-tailed tit occurs regularly, but in such small numbers that it is only occasionally observed. Of the long-eared owl, again, we read: "It loves fir-woods, especially when they are of any extent, but it shuns them otherwise." "Especially" quite destroys the antithesis; but, if the word is removed, the statement remains inaccurate, because no fir-wood is too small to have its long-eared owls, provided that it is dark and dense.

Often, too, Mr. Nicol Simpson seems to go out of his way to convey false impressions. Of the tree pipit, for instance, he says that "the student will have no great difficulty in locating the bird by its low but sweet ditty as it sings from the lower branch of some willow or broom cove"; whereas, although the tree pipit sometimes sings from the ground and sometimes from the large branch of a tree, that which characterises the bird and causes it to be noticed and admired is its habit of mounting into the air, uttering a loud sweet song, which is still continued as it descends in a graceful spiral, with its legs hanging and its wings almost meeting above its back. This is what all who know the bird remember as its most striking trait, and it is this which most often attracts the attention of those who do not know it. But from "Familiar Scottish Birds" readers would get no hint of the singer's identity.

Similarly with the next bird, the rock pipit, the author lays stress upon the colouring of the tail as a means of identification and describes it as "dusky with the outside feathers webbed in white." Now it so happens that this statement would be true of every other pipit except the rock pipit, which is distinguished from all its congeners by having the whole of the tail brown, not edged with white like theirs. The rock pipit is in fact the only bird of the genus which from Mr. Simpson's description could not be identified as a rock pipit. It would be easy to select other examples of error.

The whole arrangement of the book, moreover, is slipshod. Without cross-references, the classification of birds as "Land Birds," "Birds of Stream and Pond," and "Seaside Birds," cannot be satisfactory; and the author's division is often erratic. The dunlin, for instance, is classed only as a land bird, although by many it is best known as an abundant seaside bird from autumn to spring. The black-headed gull and the ring ousel, again, are both classed as birds of pond and stream, although the former is familiar as a seaside bird and also as a frequenter of plough-land all through the winter, while the latter is really a bird of moor and fell.

Altogether the contents of this little book are as disappointing as its exterior and its print are inviting; and if a good book on familiar Scottish birds was needed by readers across the border, it has still to be written.

BROAD CHURCH

Dr. Momerie: His Life and Work. By Mrs. MOMERIE. (Blackwood, 12s. 6d. net.)

THOSE who heard Momerie preach must sometimes, if not continually, have been puzzled by certain questions concerning him. What was he, with his opinions, doing in the Church of England? How did he come to enter it in the first instance? What were his reasons for remaining in it? How was it that, having travelled so far towards liberty of thought, he did not travel a little farther, like Mr. Voysey and Mr. Stopford Brooke? The Life is to some extent an attempt to answer these questions. The answers propounded are not quite satisfactory, but there is something in them.

It is certain that Momerie would never have sought Anglican orders at all, if he had held, at the critical hour, the religious opinions imparted to him by his pious parents. It is probable that he would not have sought them if he had then reached the intellectual position which he subsequently attained. By birth and upbringing he was a Dissenter, the only son of a Congregational minister, himself intended for the Congregational ministry. In this way he saw too much of Nonconformity to like it. He found its dogmatic theology narrow, and its practical Puritanism oppressive; and piety does seem to have been trespassing on the domain of absurdity when his desire to enter Edinburgh University instead of a Nonconformist

Theological College brought him a letter from his mother saying: "Dear Papa and I are convinced that we could not, without the utmost peril to your moral, spiritual, and eternal interests, send you to Scotland." A youth of intelligence was bound to revolt against the restrictions of a school of thought which confused the City of Destruction with the capital of Northern Britain. Momerie revolted. He insisted upon going to Edinburgh in spite of his parents, and he afterwards insisted upon going to Cambridge—a place which they also regarded as carnal and corrupt. The revolt, however, was only gradual, and only partial. He retained a good deal of religion, combined with a great desire to preach—provided always that he could preach what he liked. It appeared to him that the Church of England would give him the latitude which the Dissenting Sects denied. There, at all events, he would not be the salaried servant of a congregation, liable to be hauled over the coals by Deacons. "I have now," wrote his father, who had no trouble with his Deacons, on hearing of his decision, "to carry a life-long burden of bitter disappointment;" but he adhered to his purpose, and Bishop Fraser of Manchester ordained him to a curacy in his diocese. Parish work, however, did not suit him. It is always difficult for a metaphysician to talk with a charwoman about her soul; and Momerie's Christianity was really not much more (or not much less, if any one thinks that a better way to put it) than Hegelianism with a Christian terminology. His pastoral theology, therefore, was as much over the head of the average parishioner as his homiletics were over the head of the average clergyman. If the parishioners did not object, the vicar did. He did what a stupid man can to make things uncomfortable for a clever man. Momerie left him, and, following the line of least resistance, became a University Extension Lecturer, a lecturer on Metaphysics at King's College, London, and a preacher at the Chapel of the Foundling Hospital. He quickly became famous as a preacher who embraced heresy while repudiating schism. Was he justified in so doing? Or was it a case of running with the hare and hunting with the hounds? That is the one great moral question which his career raises.

His own answer to it was clearly given in an address delivered at the Chicago Parliament of Religions. It will be as well to quote it textually:

"In 1865, the clerical subscription was changed. Since then the Church of England, as by law established, have had the most perfect freedom. And they have certainly availed themselves of this freedom. There is not a single doctrine in regard to which the English clergy are agreed. We include within ourselves representatives of every denomination under heaven. The Church of England is broad enough to embrace them all. When I am asked, as I often am, why I do not leave my dear old Church, I reply: First because of the Act of Parliament which was passed for the express purpose of keeping me in; and secondly, because to leave the Church of England would be going out of the frying-pan into the fire; would be leaving a Church which is essentially broad for one that was comparatively, at any rate, narrow."

Dr. Momerie, that is to say, thought he could do more to reform the Church by attacking it from within than from without. Dean Stanley, as we know, was, for the same reasons, of the same opinion. The matter, however, cannot be settled by the appeal to precedent or authority; and the question still remains whether, whatever the amended law about heresy may be, the use of the formulæ which the Church provides is compatible with intellectual honesty in the case of a man holding Momerie's opinions. Those formulæ include creeds; and those creeds contain not only metaphysical propositions which may mean different things to different men, but definite statements of alleged historical fact which mean the same things to all men, and cannot be believed and disbelieved by the same man at the same time. The most that the honest doubter can do is to profess to believe them at the altar and explain that he disbelieves them in the pulpit. Is that a worthy attitude for a reformer? Does it not tend to the perpetuation of formulæ which the Church would be obliged to abolish or modify if all Broad Church clergymen were as intellectually honest as, say, the Rev. Leslie Stephen? It would be interesting to know whether Momerie ever faced the question in that form. The Life, at any rate, contains no evidence that he did so.

The chapter of greatest actuality in the book is that which relates the circumstances which led to Dr. Momerie's expulsion from his chair at King's College. In that matter, at any rate, his opponents had not a leg to stand upon; and, so far as argument went, he certainly triumphed over Dr. Wace, then Principal of the College and now Dean of Canterbury—a divine who may be learned and, in his way, devout, but who did not in that controversy display either an agile intelligence or a Christian temper. His view that Momerie's heterodox theological opinions unfitted him to teach Logic and Metaphysics might form the basis of collective action on the part of a bigoted clerical board, but could not be maintained as a thesis before impartial judges. His attempt to "rush" the decision, with only two days' notice, at a small ordinary meeting of the council was properly described by Momerie himself as "unseemly," and might even be characterised, without any abuse of language, as a piece of sharp practice. His complication of the issue by complaining that Momerie had spoken with levity not only of the Bible but also of Dr. William Smith, the editor of the "Biblical Dictionary," enables us to take the measure of his mind. Though he won the battle, and got rid of Momerie, the moral victory was with his opponent; and he receives in these pages an ironical castigation under which we sincerely hope that he is now smarting in his Deanery.

Mrs. Momerie's book has many merits. Not the least of them is that it is short—no small consideration in an age in which biographies are as a rule long out of all proportion to the importance of the life. The letters printed have been discreetly chosen; and Momerie's own narrative of his struggle for free thought within the Church has been used whenever possible. We are left with the impression that he had more brains than the general run of preachers, and that he meant to be sincere, though his conception of sincerity is not quite identical with ours.

COLONIAL NATIONALITIES

Studies in Colonial Nationality. By RICHARD JEBB. (Arnold, 12s. 6d. net.)

SINCE the late Sir John Seeley published in volume form the lectures which he had previously delivered to his pupils at Cambridge, under the title of "The Expansion of England," we have progressed a long way in our ideas of empire. Those lectures were the first expression of the imperial mission of England, and those who sat under Sir John at Cambridge in the 'seventies carried his ideas all over the world. But the Imperialism expressed by the "Expansion of England" is old-fashioned now, and Mr. Richard Jebb in his informing volume explains why it is so. Sir John Seeley's was the point of view of the centre of the Empire; it looked on the Colonies as English counties beyond the seas, imagined that the self-governing Colonies could be treated as a whole, and that any policy was pernicious that was not equally applicable to them all. Insensibly we have outgrown that theory, and the dividing line, though we hardly realised it at the time, was the Boer War, and the sending of the Colonial contingents to South Africa.

The new point of view which we are coming to adopt is that of the Colonies themselves. In no two of the four great self-governing Colonies is the predominating Imperialism quite the same thing. All four countries—Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa—are travelling the same road, that from the colonial to the national status, but all four are in different stages of development. There is no growing consciousness of a common nationality, as there should be if the idea of Imperial federation were to hold good; on the contrary, each colony is aspiring to a nationality of its own. The nationality of Canada differs from that of Australia, and that of New Zealand from that of South Africa. The new policy is practical, and is cordially approved by Imperialists beyond the seas, because it admits and promotes their own ideals. The colonial ideal is an alliance of a character more intimate and comprehensive, and therefore, as Mr. Jebb points out, more permanent than is connoted by the conventional use of the term. Such an alliance recognises separate national aspirations, whereas federation aims at national unity; and if diversified nationality, within workable limits, is valued as a progressive element in human civilisation, then the new policy is desirable as well as practicable.

Mr. Jebb's volume is an attempt, and an instructive one, to present a modern view of Imperial evolution, and is the result of three years travel and study among the self-governing States of the Empire. The forces at work during that period were the Spanish-American War, and the consequent birth of an Imperial issue in American politics; the affair of the Alaskan boundary; the institution of the Australian Commonwealth; and the despatch of the Colonial troops to South Africa. These events gave a mighty impulse to the idea of separate nationalities, and prominence to the policy of alliance as opposed to federation. The steps in the process are carefully explained in Mr. Jebb's book, which should be studied by all who wish to understand the trend of Colonial aspirations, whether they agree with them or not.

THE SCANSION OF SPACE

Our Stellar Universe. A Road-book to the Stars. By T. E. HEATH. (Knowledge Office, 5s.)

ANY astronomical literature that bears the imprimatur of our contemporary Knowledge is certain to be worthy of attention; and the present volume is no exception to the rule. Mr. Heath has succeeded in writing a unique little book, which is of real value in expressing the greater facts about the sidereal universe. He has discovered that the ratio of an inch to a mile is identical, to four places of decimals, with that of the earth's distance from the sun to the distance which light travels in a year—not far short of six millions of millions of miles. Certainly this relation, first observed by Mr. Heath, is of real value in enabling us to realise the distances with which astronomers concern themselves, for we can form some conception of the ratio of an inch to a mile, and of the sun's distance from the earth (though perhaps few realise that the distance from the earth to the moon is less than that from the sun's centre to his circumference!). The distance traversed by light in one year (nearly six billion miles) is conveniently known to astronomers as a light-year. Now the nearest fixed star, α Centauri, is about four and a third light-years distant from us: or, on Mr. Heath's scale-maps, on which the earth is represented as one inch from the sun, the nearest star is about four and a third miles away.

Further, Mr. Heath has been concerned to combat the extraordinary delusion that the brightest stars are the biggest. We say extraordinary delusion, but it must be admitted that what George Eliot, we believe, somewhere calls the "inalienable concavity of the blue heavens" is one of the most compelling of visual illusions. It is faintly possible to imagine how incredibly more impressive the starry heavens would be could we see them in due perspective, as in a hall hung here and there with electric lamps of various sizes, placed at various levels. Still more sublime would be the spectacle to an omniscient eye which should appreciate the magnificence of some giant star, however distant; whereas, even could we see the perspective of the heavens, we should still be unable to recognise the grandeur of stars beside which our sun is negligible, if they happened to be, say, five thousand light-years distant. Now Mr. Heath has ingeniously drawn and prepared stereoscopic charts which represent certain stars of various sizes or "sun-power" (as the engineer says "horse-power"), so that they appear poised in space of three dimensions, instead of seeming all equidistant on a continuous curved surface, as they appear in the sky. We have tested these charts with the stereoscope and have found the effect quite remarkable.

Mr. Heath is to be congratulated on the felicity of his quotations from several great masters—of one of whom it was said, in words which seem appropriate in this connection:

"Thy soul was like a star, and dwelt apart."

THE FOUNTS OF SONG

"What is the song I am singing?"

Said the pine-tree to the wave:

"Do you not know the song

You have sung so long

Down in the dim green alleys of the sea,

And where the great blind tides go swinging

Mysteriously,

And where the countless herds of the billows are hurl'd

On all the wild and lonely beaches of the world?"

"Ah, Pine-tree," sighed the wave,

"I have no song but what I catch from thee:

Far off I hear thy strain

Of infinite sweet pain

That floats along the lovely phantom land.

I sigh, and murmur it o'er and o'er and o'er,

When 'neath the slow compelling hand

That guides me back and far from the loved shore,

I wander long

Where never falls the breath of any song,

But only the loud, empty, crashing roar

Of seas swung this way and that for evermore."

"What is the song I am singing?"

Said the poet to the pine:

"Do you not know the song

You have sung so long

Here in the dim green alleys of the woods

Where the wild winds go wandering in all moods,

And whisper often o'er and o'er,

Or in tempestuous clamours roar

Their dark eternal secret evermore?"

"Oh, Poet," said the Pine,

"Thine

Is that song!

Not mine!

I have known it, loved it, long!

Nothing I know of what the wild winds cry

Through dusk and storm and night,

Or prophesy

When tempests whirl us with their awful might.

Only, I know that when

The poet's voice is heard

Among the woods

The infinite pain from out the hearts of men

Is sweeter than the voice of wave or branch or bird

In these dumb solitudes."

FIONA MACLEOD.

A BOOK OF TONGUES

"THE Lord's Prayer in Five Hundred Languages," lately published by Messrs. Gilbert and Rivington, does not, at the first glance, promise much to the casual reader. But the man who dips into it is doomed. Its fascinations are such that it cannot be laid down. The languages that one cannot "make head or tail of" at first, are hardly less interesting on investigation than those which one easily puzzles out; and hardly a page is without some entrancing discovery, redolent of lost history, leaping, illuminative, out of the dark backward and abysm of time. A word-for-word rendering of the Chinese dialect airily described as "Easy Wenli" (the character is ideographic Chinese) gives some idea of the tasks which missionaries have to grapple with. "Our Father in Heaven he, wish Thy name perfectly holy: They dominion rule-come-to, Thy will received-done in earth as in heaven truly. Grant us to-day the day what use food: forgive our sin-debts, as we forgive sin-debts against us those so. Not lead us enter seducing temptation, but save us out of evil-wickedness. For kingdom the, power the, glory the all belong to Thee, in age-age indeed. Heart wishes exactly so." Hardly less interesting are the barbarous dialects called Dutch- and Mauritius-Creole. The latter, a sort of pigeon-French, something like the horrible petit nègre of Cochinchina, begins thus: "Non Papa, Ki dan le ciel, fair Ki vou nom li sanctifié. Ki vou réin vini. Fair ça Ki vou vlê, laho la ter, comman dan le ciel."

Perhaps the most curious facts which one alights upon are those connected with the kinship of languages, where the same word occurs in a number of different versions. The familiar "bap" (father) of Hindustani turns up in all sorts of forms and in unexpected places, as "bap" in the Romansch of the Engadine, "bab" in Grisons, "papa" in the Caroline Islands, "babbu" in Corsican and several dialects of Sardinia, "bapa" in Malay, "babath" in Kabyle, "papah" in a language of West Africa, "baba" in Matabele and in two or three languages of Eastern Equatorial Africa! The repeated appearance of a double labial in the word for "Father" (which in some African languages is actually "mama") suggests the idea that infantile speech has fixed the name independently in many languages which, so far as we know, could not possibly have borrowed from one another. A certain added tenderness is thus given to the sublime opening Invocation. In Guiana the translator seems to have shirked a difficulty: the opening word is "Jehovah," which, whatever it may or may not mean, certainly is not a translation of "Our Father." Elsewhere it seems likely that the unedifying associations of the Muhammadan heaven have been purposely evaded, for in Urdu (Muhammadan Hindustani) the word is rendered "ásmán." Now "ásmán" means simply "sky": the word for heaven is "bihisht," which is actually employed in the Baluchi rendering. In Hindi, the word used is (correctly) "svarg." In all these "name" is rendered (with different accents, all importing a long vowel) "nam." How far afield we have to travel for the origin of "nomen" therefore! But even more remarkable are the Welsh "sancteiddier" and Magyar "szenteltessék" for "hallowed." Welsh is certainly older than the Roman occupation of Britain: yet "sancteiddier"—the only comprehensible word in the specimen of that difficult tongue—is clearly the Latin "sanctus." But what is the relation between "sanctus" and the Magyar word? Is either derived from other, or is the likeness mere accident? It would be remarkable if there were no accidental resemblances. In Awari, a language of the Caucasus, the word seems to be "hallal"; but Professor Skeat does not carry "hallow" and "holy" farther back than Goth. "heilag." A still more mysterious coincidence is the Gitano (Spanish Gipsy) "bastardo" for "evil." Lexicographers, following Webster, derive "bastard" from O.F. "bast" (pack-saddle). Is the Gipsy word a mere reflex, or have we here a discovery? The accepted derivation, bast, fils-de-bast, may have literary support, which of course would settle the matter: but it is not on the face of it convincing.

The Lord's Prayer has almost from time immemorial been employed, in glottological collections, as the specimen passage. In a learned preface to Messrs. Gilbert and Rivington's volume, Dr. Reinhold Rost mentions Conrad Gessner (1555), Chamberlayne (1715), Adelung ("Mithridates," Berlin, 1808-17), and A. Auer ("Sprachenhalle," Vienna, 1844-47) as having thus employed the greatest of all prayers. The last-named work contained 200 versions. But nothing to approach the present collection, either in copiousness or interest, has ever been published; and so far from being a mere technical handbook for experts it is, as above indicated, a most fascinating work for any reader.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

BOCCACCIO

Who says that realism originated with Zola, or Flaubert or Balzac, or even Fielding? Realism in modern literature is as old as fiction itself—which is to say that Boccaccio began it. He mirrored life in his writings—or in some of them—partly because his admirers wanted to see it mirrored and told him so, partly because his genius was more for the treatment of the real than the ideal, but chiefly because, as the result of what he considered the defects of his education, he had acquired a considerable knowledge of life. By nature he was a student, athirst for knowledge, but his father tried to make him a man of commerce. "Before I entered on the period of youth," he writes, "he put me to a merchant of great consequence, with whom I did nothing for six years but waste irrecoverable time." At the end of the six years, the bent of his mind was partially recognised, and, as he was seen to be studious, it was decided to make him a lawyer. It has been the habit of bourgeois parents in all ages thus to fling the dry bones of the learned professions to youth hungering for scholarship, confusing the two things perhaps because in each of them knowledge has to be painfully acquired from books. The case of Boccaccio in this regard anticipated the case of Mistral and many others. He "laboured in vain," he says, "under a very eminent professor"; and he adds: "My mind revolted to such an extent that neither the learning of my master nor the authority of my father, by whose commands I was perpetually harassed, nor yet the prayers, or rather the recriminations, of my friends, could bend it." So he turned to poetry, yet "missed the chance," as he believed, "of being an illustrious poet," because he was prevented from giving the art his undivided attention until too late. But the truth is otherwise. Boccaccio had not the endowments of his predecessor Dante, or of his contemporary Petrarch. Left to his own devices, he would have imitated without seriously rivalling one or other of them, or would have excelled as a scholar, doing good spade-work to facilitate the labours of the Scaligers and Casaubons of a later date. To some extent, indeed, he actually did both these things, though he is not remembered for them; but he owes his immortal fame to the fact that he could not begin to do them in his impressionable years. Then, thanks to a father who did the right thing, without knowing what he did, and to whom the son was so little grateful that, when obliged to live with him, he wrote that "the sour and horrible aspect of the old man, frozen, uncouth, and avaricious, adds continual affliction to my saddened mood," he was constrained to study life instead of books. He "knocked about, wandering through many lands, now here, now there, as his commercial engagements prompted." He fell in love; and his love was no purely spiritual passion. His mistress did not dwell in the clouds, there only to be approached by prayer in the form of sonnets. She was a woman of the world—probably of "light" behaviour, and certainly of interests which the French call "terre-à-terre." No doubt she wanted sonnets—sonnets are always flattering to a woman's pride, even when her natural preference is for jewellery or chocolates. But she also wanted stories, and discovered that Boccaccio had a turn for story-telling. She gave him a theme, and so he was started upon the career of which the "Decameron" was to be the culmination. He was able to rival the renown of Dante and Petrarch—and even, with his immediate posterity, to surpass it—because he worked on lines that were not identical with theirs, but parallel.

The "Decameron," as has been said, marks the beginning of realism in fiction. The tales are as realistic in their way as the short stories of Guy de Maupassant, whose themes are often somewhat similar. The difference between these two great masters of the art of the short story is more in their attitude towards life than in anything else. They are both photographic artists, and both humorists. But Maupassant's humour is sardonic, informed by the pessimism of an age that has grown old and weary—an age that has exhausted experiences, and finds civilisation unsatisfactory though indispensable. He has always the air, too, of despising the many for the entertainment of the few. Boccaccio writes with the joyousness that belongs to the youth of the world—its second youth that came to it when the Renaissance awoke it from the slumbers of the Middle Ages. The world then seemed a garden planted by Almighty God to be a pleasure for man. Men and women, diverting themselves in that garden, did not yet realise—since Savonarola had not yet spoken—that they were in the garden on probation, in sore need of grace, and in peril of judgment to come. They laughed, therefore, and made merry. There were what a vulgar modern would call "goings on" in the garden; and the way of a man with a maid was much practised in its arbours, even by churchmen vowed to chastity. Boccaccio, owing to that defective education which he deplored, knew about the proceedings in the garden at first hand—had taken part in them, and enjoyed them. That was how he differed from Petrarch; that, from a certain point of view, was his advantage over Petrarch. He was the man of genius who had lived the same sort of life as the men of common clay, and had not been disillusioned. As an artist, he perceived the sombre background of the highly coloured picture; and he heightened his effects by rendering it. That is the significance of the grim description of the plague at Florence which serves as prelude to his joyous narratives. But the gloom of this background does not darken the picture by its shadows, or depress the storyteller, or prevent him from living joyously in the present. The merriment of the garden-party asserts itself at once. The laughter awakens no hollow mocking echoes. The rollicking immorality of the age is seized and presented in a picture that has long outlived the age, not by a censor or a cynic, but by a sympathiser. Of course it is indecorous—it could not have been anything else. Few things more indecorous have ever been written except for the base uses of some secret pornographic press. It is better, for that reason, that some people should not read it. But it lives. It preserves for all time the picture of the Italian society of the first years of the Renaissance, naked and unashamed, though by no means innocent, unrebuked as yet by any zealot, whether of the Reform or of the counter-Reformation. And to say that is to say that realism for the first time triumphs in its pages.

In his old age, it appears, Boccaccio repented of the "Decameron." He besought his friends not to read it, and proposed to abandon light literature, and become a monk and a divine. Petrarch persuaded him to reconsider this last decision, and it must be agreed that the advice was good. No doubt Boccaccio would have been an eminent divine, if he had been a divine at all; but there was no need. There have been so many eminent divines in the history of the world, and so few among them concerning whom the religious public is absolutely agreed that they did more good than harm. That is one reason for refusing to regret our inability to include him in the list. The other is that there are some repentances which seem a set-back to the progress of the world, and some inconsistencies too gross to be tolerable even in the "converted." The case of the author of the "Decameron" is surely such a one. It is natural enough that age, bringing reflection, should also have brought him to the view that he had given too free a rein to the loose fancies of adolescence. But a man does not cancel the past by turning his back on it. He merely puzzles the critical observer by the illusion of a multiple personality, and by flying from one excess to another remains as far distant as ever from the mean. A literary success is not necessarily to be deplored because it is unsuitable for a divine; and it is equally impossible to wish that the "Decameron" had never been written and to wish that it had been the work of an ecclesiastic. It forms a starting-point in literary, much as Calvin's "Institute" forms a starting-point in religious Protestantism. The besetting sin of the men of letters of the period was indecency, just as the besetting sin of the theologians of the period was intolerance expressing itself in persecution; and of the two faults indecency is distinctly the less grave. There was no more need, therefore, for Boccaccio to make amends for his indecorum by taking the tonsure than for Calvin to indicate his regret for the burning of Servetus by writing a lewd romance. Literature and religion would have been made equally ridiculous by such a course.

FRANCIS GRIBBLE.

FICTION

In the Arena. By BOOTH TARKINGTON. (Murray, 6s.)

ON the evidence of these stories, six in number, we are inclined to corroborate the remark of the "old-timer", who gave of his wisdom to the questioning student, in the foreword. The remark is this: "Looking back upon it all what we most need in politics is more good men." The title of the first story is Boss Gorgett, and after this it is scarcely necessary to add that the politics in question are American politics, in the intricacies of which English readers have been already schooled by that admirable philosopher of Archey Road. Mr. Dooley. The old-timer of Mr. Tarkington does not view matters with the twinkling eye and the convenient weapon, stovepipe or brick, of the interested watcher in the bar: he has himself been in the arena and relates his experiences with all the earnestness of an old campaigner. These experiences are interesting and well told, though they are without that snap, that pungency of humour, which have made Mr. Dooley's observations famous in spite of his quaint obscurities of dialect. Boss Gorgett is contending an election with Farwell Knowles, who is a young man of ambition and principle, but does not know that "the only way to play politics, whatever you're for, is to learn the game first:" so he is indignant to discover that his opponent has arranged a little manœuvre by which he will be able to stuff the ballot box with his own votes. He determines to expose this corrupt scheme in the paper which he edits and send the Boss to the penitentiary. But Lake Gorgett is a great man, and does not turn a hair: for he has had the enthusiastic young idealist watched, and the young idealist, though he is a married man, has been carrying on a "soully flirtation" with a kindred spirit, and in a moment of exaltation has actually kissed her on the doorstep of her father's house. The final scene is most affecting and Farwell Knowles abandons politics. In "The Aliens," an excessively painful story of some force, we are shown the lowest grade of the system: the power of a scoundrel agent, Pixley by name, who, to prevent certain Italians living together in one cellar from voting against his wishes, is able to introduce among them with the help of the police, a negro infected with small-pox. It is the only tragic story in the book. The others are of the same nature as the first. They have no especial excellence of any kind, but they are very interesting and clever, and are written with a sound knowledge of the subject with which they deal. Whether more good men will enter the arena on their account, however, we venture to doubt.

The White Terror and the Red. By A. CAHAN. (Hodder and Stoughton, 6s.)

NOVELS dealing with what is now called the Russian reform movement, formerly known as Nihilism, are almost as the stars in multitude, but they fall into two main divisions. The one includes the works of those writers who take Aristotle's insistence on the plot as a command to multiply startling episodes, and who seek to obtain the requisite atmosphere by the crude application of local colour: it would be invidious to specify their style with more detail. The present work is not of this class, although neither incident nor local colour is by any means wanting. Although it shares with most Russian novels which we have read a strange formlessness of plot, the picture which it paints of social life in Russia is drawn from the inside: in opening the book we feel at once that we are in the company of one who knows the aspirations of the Russian people, and the methods which are now being employed to realise them. Mr. Cahan traces the mental growth of Prince Boulatoff, from his childhood, when he is a thoughtless champion of autocracy, till he is hand in glove with the reformers. His book is, like many Russian novels, a rather breathless story of intrigue tempered with dynamite. A mass of figures pass across the stage; and, with the exception of Pavel Boulatoff and the heroine Clara, they are rather colourless. The individual, as it were, is in the background, and the cause is everything. Mr. Cahan, we believe, thus faithfully reflects at once the strength and the weakness of the cause of reform in Russia. The types of reformers who play their parts in his pages are so engrossed in setting the cause above renown, that they seem paralysed into intellectual inaction. The novel, in fact, like Russia herself, seems waiting for a leader. But it is none the less an engrossing story, and may be safely recommended to those who wish to study, without undue application, the Russian history which is being made to-day. One does not expect optimism in a Russian novelist: Mr. Cahan is not even cheerful. Again, Russian fiction is not usually conspicuous for happy endings, or the workings of poetic justice: the siccum lumen of realism gives so gloomy an atmosphere to Mr. Cahan's pages that he is constrained to end on a note of despair. This, in fact, is not a novel for the ordinary subscriber to a circulating library, although the intelligent reader will find in it much sound workmanship and no little insight into the psychology of the Russian intellectuals.

Seth of the Cross. By ALPHONSE COURLANDER. (Eveleigh Nash, 6s.)

WE do not want to maintain that people who live in London suburbs on small means have nothing to grumble at, but we have often observed that they are mainly cheerful. The divine discontent that should show them the pitiable meanness of their lives is lacking, and in their petty, commonplace way they are actually happy. They come from little homes they think delightful, and from families they regard with sincere pride and affection. The truth is that a man will be happy if he can, and if, as Dr. Saleeby assures us, his digestion permits. We believe that some delightful temperaments would triumph over dyspepsia itself: we know that cheerfulness may abide with poverty, pain and suffering. But Mr. Courlander will have none of it. When an early suburban train deposits its crowd of bread-winners at a London terminus, he sees them pale and pinched by the gripping fingers of want. The city with its arms of iron is slowly crushing the desire of life out of their bodies, the women are slipshod, the men wear the livery of bondage. Every one is gloomy, hideous and a failure. This description of London "daily breaders" seems to us untrue to life, and less true of the suburban cockney clerk and business man than of most people. Ask Eliza's husband if his lot is an unhappy one. Seth Craddock, however, is not a cockney clerk. He does not come to that poor place London until he has been dogged by misfortune in the country. He is blood brother to Jude the Obscure, a bookish boy born in poor surroundings. The author does his utmost to rouse our sympathy with an unlucky fellow who has all the gods against him: but in these days when the gods no longer strike us directly, we ask that a man with health and brains should in some measure conquer circumstance. Seth Craddock was the tool of fate. The author, who seems to fear that his hero will be considered a prig, points out that "he was merely following the precepts of the Man who earned his deity by self-sacrifice:" and he goes on to suggest that to be righteous is to be dismal. This is a libel on humanity. Why should the gloomy people assume that they are the ones who see true? The colour of our life is mostly due to the eyes that see it, and its luck to the temper in which we encounter its chances.

Captain Balaam of the Cormorant. By MORLEY ROBERTS. (Eveleigh Nash, 3s. 6d.)

THE full flavour of these stirring tales can only be appreciated by those who understand the ways and talk of sailormen, and something of the art of navigation. But the most ignorant reader in such matters can make out that Captain Balaam, of the "Cormorant," played a trick upon the captain of the "Scanderberg"—such a desperately shabby trick, too, that he might have been the man who was once turned out of a whaler for ungentlemanly conduct. We like Mr. Morley Roberts best in his lighter vein, and least when he drops into tragedy; in "Jack-all-Alone" there is a terrible situation that should leave us cold and creepy, and not, as it does, cold and critical. Food plays an important part in these sea stories, and if Mr. Morley Roberts can be said to suggest a moral it is that men will do and dare anything if only they are fed well. Therefore, whoso desires to become a popular skipper and get the better of his rivals, let him see to it that tubs of butter and seven-pound cans of marmalade are forthcoming upon occasions of emergency.

A Self-Made Man's Wife: Her Letters to her Son. Being a Woman's View of a certain famous Correspondence. By CHARLES EUSTACE MERRIMAN. (Putnam, 6s.)

THAT it is obviously written neither from a mother's nor a wife's point of view is perhaps a matter of slight importance in a book of this sort, provided that it is readable and entertaining. Farcical exaggeration, aphorisms, illustrative anecdotes there are in profusion in these letters, but very few of the anecdotes are witty or original, and many are so stale and time-worn that it must have required almost the courage of despair to reproduce them yet once again. Most readers of Mr. Lorimer's "Self-Made Man's Letters to his Son" formed a rather agreeable impression of that millionaire's wife and son: it vanishes with the wife's first letter in this volume, which is a trifle hard on both their originator and the reader. Here and there a point is neatly taken, and there are one or two fairly amusing chapters, but upon the whole these letters are tedious and disappointing.

The Knight of the Needle Rock and his Days, 1571-1606. By MARY J. WILSON. (Stock, 6s.)

"THE facts and details of this story have been gathered from various family papers, documents, pedigrees, &c., the Oglander Memoirs, and different books of the period," and from these materials Miss Wilson has compiled a remarkably interesting and informing book. It takes the form of a diary kept by Mr. John Leigh, of Wolverton, Isle of Wight, interspersed with letters from friends and relatives at Court and abroad. These relationships are somewhat complicated, and the characters numerous,—this, however, enables the author to give information and rumours from many sources concerning the chief events of the time. The domestic side of life also receives its due meed of attention, and lacks nothing in picturesqueness. One of the most effective bits of description is that of the passing of the Spanish Armada up the Channel harried by the English ships, upon a still, hot summer's day. There is a letter from Lady Walsingham, at Paris, giving a vivid account of her experience during the night of the St. Bartholomew massacre: and reports from eye-witnesses of many famous scenes. The book, which in general interest and genuine romantic episodes is worth half a score of ordinary novels, gives evidence of great care, ability and good taste. The story runs on perfectly smooth harmonious lines, and the style is simple and unpretentious. We should gather that it has been a labour of love to the author. She may be complimented upon the successful use she has made of her family records. The frontispiece is a photograph of the Needle Rock after a line etching. Another illustration is that of a page of an ancient family Bible which has been in the author's family since 1541.

THE BOOKSHELF

CANON Arthur James Mason has rendered a real service to the public in compiling his Historic Martyrs of the Primitive Church (Longmans, 10s. 6d. net). With a subject of such wide interest, and so wrapt and buried in legends as Martyrology, the need of a book of handy size, which should acquaint the general reader with stories that are for the most part only to be found in large compilations in foreign or ancient tongues, has long been felt, and the disentangling of what may be safely taken to be historic fact from the legend that has crept in, often to the marrying of the beauty and effect of the true story, was a work which badly needed doing and which no one probably was better fitted to do than the Master of Pembroke. The stories he tells may be divided into five parts: the Martyrs of the Apostolic Age, the Martyrs of Alexandria, the beginning of Diocletian's persecution, the Martyrs of Palestine and the African Martyrs. There is, to a great extent, a sameness in the stories of these earlier sufferers for the faith. There is, on the other hand, in nearly every one of them, a strange and stirring beauty, and the volume is one to be welcomed even by people who may find themselves unable to study it exactly in the spirit in which it was written.

The object of the essays in Asia and Europe, by Meredith Townsend (Constable and Co., 5s. net.), which have been reprinted from various periodicals, is to show that Europe never has succeeded, and never will succeed, in dominating Asia, and point is lent to this new edition by the fact that Japan, an Asiatic power, not of the first class either in area or in population, has challenged and beaten by sea and land a first-class European Power. Our ideas on the subject are probably warped by the possession of India, which we have held at the most for a century and a half, a period of time which is as nothing in the eyes of Eastern people. Our superiority in the invention of weapons of war has also led us to believe that the European is necessarily superior to the Asiatic, and when, little more than a year ago, Japan, to the surprise of the Western world, accepted the contemptuous challenge of Russia, the general opinion was that she had vaingloriously undertaken a task much beyond her strength. But the Japanese showed that they had assimilated many of the ideas and much of the skill of Europe, and indeed that in several respects they were capable of improving on both. That Asiatics can fight seemed to be quite a revelation to many people, who forget that a small federation of Mongol tribes burst out of their steppes, reached France and nearly overthrew the Roman Empire on the plain of Chalons; that the Arabs, never fourteen millions strong, defeated both Eastern Rome and Persia, extirpated the Vandals of North Africa, conquered Spain, and, after their first energy had decayed, drove the picked chivalry of Europe out of Palestine. Moreover the Turks, a little Asiatic tribe, destroyed the Eastern Roman Empire, penetrated to the walls of Vienna, and still hold some of the finest provinces of Eastern Europe with the reputation of being the best individual soldiers in the world. Mr. Townsend holds that one of the fundamental conditions of history is that Europe should not permanently occupy Asia, nor Asia conquer Europe, and that the rise of Japan to be a first-class power must by degrees increase the difficulty for Europe in remaining in profitable possession of great sections of Asia. The fall of Port Arthur is in many respects the most momentous occurrence in the history of West and East since the capture of Constantinople, and there is nothing parallel to it, or explanatory of it, in modern history. Mr. Townsend's theory is that Asia will ultimately revert once more to the Asiatics, but he thinks that the tendency may be delayed for a century or so, if Japan is completely and fully admitted into the European family. But speaking broadly, it is almost safe to say that Asia, under the leadership of Japan, will recover her independence, which in all human probability she will once more misuse.

The Jewish Encyclopedia. A Descriptive Record of the History, Religion, Literature, and Customs of the Jewish People from the earliest times to the present day. Volume IX. MORAWCZYK-PHILIPPSON (Funk and Wagnall, 25s.). This latest volume of the Jewish Encyclopedia has much the same merits and defects as its predecessor, which was recently reviewed in the ACADEMY. In its general tone the book bears far more analogy to Meyer's Konversations-Lexikon than to the Encyclopædia Britannica, aiming not so much at literary effect as at giving a businesslike précis of all the information bearing on the various subjects. This being the case, we are all the more surprised that the volume is in so many instances overburdened by its illustrations which frequently possess a purely decorative function. In Mr. Budgett Meakin's otherwise excellent article on "Morocco," for instance, no less than four photographs are given of the various types of Moroccan Jewish beauty; pleasing in themselves, they strike us as signally out of place in a work of this description. Of the principal contents the most interesting is the article on "Palestine," copiously illustrated with maps, and containing statistical tables of the recent import and export trade which should prove particularly instructive to those concerned with the present Zionist controversy. Of the other articles we would mention in particular "Morbidity" and "Mortality" by Dr. H. Fishberg, which tend to show that the general health of the Jews is considerably better than that of the average Gentile though, on the other hand, they are more liable to hysteria and neurasthenia; "Music" by Dr. Francis Cohen, "Maimonides" by Dr. Lauterbach, "New York" by Mr. D. H. Hermelin, "Moses," by Dr. Barton and Dr. Lauterbach, and "Palæography" by M. Seymour de Ricci. Interesting too is the account of the Jewish periodicals from the Gazeta de Amsterdam of the seventeenth down to the very latest Jewish papers of the twentieth century. In spite of certain minor blemishes the Encyclopædia should prove a valuable work of reference to all interested in Jewish matters; while it cannot but serve to bring home to every reader the unique cosmopolitanism of the Jews, and their prominence in nearly all the departments of the artistic, intellectual, and financial worlds.

German professors who devote their lives to the production of immense volumes of learning, which with somewhat strained modesty they describe as hand-books, are familiar figures. Their colleagues in America have a tendency in the opposite direction. The spreading of the eagle's wings stirs even the atmosphere of the cloister, and breathes a note of grandiloquence even into the titles of books. We noticed the other day a little book by an American man of learning, which might have formed, had the subject been more suitable, a magazine article of ordinary length: its second title was, "The History of an Idea." These insular reflections, which are suggested by the title of Professor G. S. Goodspeed's History of the Ancient World (Constable, 7s. 6d. net), form no disparagement in themselves to a book which, if it hardly lives up to its title-page, should form a useful introduction to its subject. Professor Goodspeed writes, we imagine, for the benefit of first-year students in his own University of Chicago; but his book is one which deserves the consideration of sixth-form masters in our public schools. He covers the ground well, without an unnecessary display of learning, and the book both by reason of its admirable illustrations and its system of cross-references, should prove stimulating as a basis for wider study. It falls naturally, like so many subjects of the human pen, into three parts; the preliminary chapters on the Eastern Empires are kept short, and are sufficient to prepare the way for a more elaborate treatment of Greece and Rome. Each chapter is furnished with examination questions and suggestions for further reading on the subject, and the book also contains a good index and full bibliographies. Some of the illustrations might have been more fully described; for instance in the chapter on the Mycenaean Age, we have a reproduction of the Vaphio cups, which is simply labelled "reliefs from gold cups of the Mycenaean age" without further identification. In dealing with the literature of Greece and Rome, Professor Goodspeed is not very illuminating: Livy's style, he tells us, is "full and flowing," and Thucydides "had no imagination!" We suspect that here the critic is confusing imagination with the faculty of invention.

BOOK SALES

SALE OF BOOKS FROM VARIOUS SOURCES AT MESSRS. HODGSON & CO.,
CHANCERY LANE, ON APRIL 12, 13 AND 14.

Some important books were disposed of in this sale.

Tennyson (Lord) Poems by Alfred Tennyson, First Edition, original boards, uncut. Moxon 1833. £5.

Elyot (Sir, J.) The Boke named The Governour, title within woodcut border, black letter. 12mo, old calf. Imprinted at London by T. East 1580. £1 5s. 6d.

Macgillivray (W.) A History of British Birds, Indigenous and Migratory, 5 vols. 1837-52. £4 2s. 6d.

Gay (J.) Fables, with Life, plates by W. Blake. 1793. £1 10s.

Folk-Lore Society's Publications—a Complete Set, including the two rare Extra Volumes Callaway's Nursery Tales and The Religious System of the Amazulu, also Chamberlain's Aino Folk-Tales, and The Legend of the Holy Grail, 51 vols. 1868-1902. £20.

The Publications of the Harleian Society; a Complete Set, from the Commencement to 1704, 52 vols., with the Register Section, 31 vols., together, 83 vols. £30.

Villon Society—The Book of the Thousand Nights and One Night. Translated by John Payne. £6 10s.

The Index Library, being Indexes, Calendars and Abstracts of British Records, from the commencement in 1888 to 1904. £6 10s.

Gerarde (J.) The Herball or Generall Historie of Plantes, Enlarged and Amended by Thomas Johnson, Best Edition. London, 1636. £5 10s.

Gould (J.) The Birds of Europe, numerous beautifully coloured plates, with Descriptions, 5 vols., imp. folio. 1837. £33.

Ackermann's Microcosm of London, coloured plates by Pugin and Rowlandson of the Interiors and Exteriors of Public Buildings, and the Manners and Customs of London, with Descriptive Text, by William Combe, 3 vols. 1808. £14.

Gardiner (S. R.) The Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I., 2 vols., History of the Great Civil War, 3 vols., and History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, 3 vols., maps, together 8 vols. 1882-1901. £9.

Wordsworth (W.) Ode to the Memory of Charles Lamb, 4 leaves, commencing "To the dear Memory of a frail good Man. . . ." Presentation Copy, with Inscription on fly-leaf. "From the Author," original wrapper. 1835. £21.

Thackeray (W. M.) Vanity Fair: A Novel without a Hero, First Edition. £6.

AUTOGRAPHS.

Cromwell—Order for the Payment of £1587 12s. "unto Capt. Robert Hutton" for eight and twenty days' pay for the "officers and souldiers in Sr Arthur Hesilrig's, and Major Sydenham's . . . Troops of Horse . . ." signed "O. Cromwell," with receipt, April 16, 1651. £4.

Order for the Exchange of "Fittie Pikes" for "one hundred Pikes and twenty Musketts," May 2, 1643; Three A.L.S. from Thos. Astle, 1798-9, and others. £3 7s. 6d.

Holinshed (R.) Chronicles of Englande, Scotland and Irelande, woodcuts, black letter, 3 vols. in 2. 1587. £5 17s. 6d.

SALE OF AUTOGRAPH LETTERS AND HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

These were written by, amongst others, King Charles II., Queen Henrietta Maria, Abraham Cowley, the Marquis of Montrose, Wm. Prince of Orange, Prince Rupert and Lord Clarendon.

Also an extremely interesting series of Autograph Letters of Sophia, the mother of George I., Documents signed by Henry VII. and Oliver Cromwell, James II., Queen Anne, Cardinal Stuart and others.

The whole collection realised £2009 12s.

THE DRAMA

"ROMEO AND JULIET" AT THE IMPERIAL THEATRE

MR. LEWIS WALLER has learned to act imperially. His princely escapade as "Monsieur Beaucaire" and his soul stirring experiences as "Harry of England" have left their mark upon him. They have made him a king-intoxicated man. The phenomenon is not unique. Considering the plastic temperament which makes of a man an actor, the effect of oft simulated kingship on his imagination is almost inevitable. The counterfeit presentment of heroic deeds becomes vital fact; the actor feels that the hero is projected in his own personality. Under this stimulus, something of the heroic manner will be reflected henceforth in his bearing and speech. Thus Mr. Lewis Waller's "Romeo" emerges from his brain no volatile, mercurial Montague, but a monarch who, in no figurative sense, trails his cloak with a feeling for the decorative in pose. Imperially he enters, his hands clasped on his sword-hilt; imperially he takes the middle of the stage; and he seems in imminent danger of breaking out into the imperial hexameters of the fifth Henry at Agincourt. His attitude towards Benvolio and Mercutio is almost insolent. "I am Sir Oracle," says his arrogance; "when I ope my mouth let no dog bark." The cynic may object that this is the common way of actor managers; more charitably and more truly I believe it may be traced to Mr. Waller's essays in the art of being prince. These essays have weakened his perspective; for the moment they have diminished his interpretative powers. In its most characteristic expression Mr. Waller's artistic personality embodies the glamour of romantic strength, the triumph of will over passion, the victory of dominant sanity. With unequalled skill he can portray the man who is master of himself. Romeo, therefore, must become something other than Romeo in his hands. Not this the Romeo, the impassioned youth who, sighing for his Rosaline, is flung, on sudden sight of Juliet, into a very ecstasy of lyric love. Not this the man to leave Verona without Juliet or to waste time in confronting Capulet with the fait accompli of his marriage or sob in impotent rage on the floor of Friar Lawrence's cell. Moments of intensity, of poetry, of humour the new Romeo has, and his elocution is faultless; but there is not in him that suppleness, that sustained ardour of passion, enslaving the mind and conquering the will, that exultant fervour which make Romeo the unsurpassable type of youthful lover. If this poetic madness of loving be taken away, what is there left? The tragedy is little compared with the glamour of this perfervid episode of love—a love-song of varying moods and cadences but with ever its burden of the lordship of love. So one looks for this dominant motive in Miss Millard's Juliet—and looks in vain. Instead we have a picture of a very pretty young English lady, high-spirited, a bit of a hoyden, with quite respectable views about love and marriage. In her earlier love-scenes this nice girl who always has her feelings under proper control shows no indication of the capacity for violent physical agitation which overtakes her when she drinks the potion. Suddenly she develops into a Veronese equivalent for "The Worst Woman in London"—all syncopation and spasms. For the rest who cares? But if other things and persons count beside Romeo and Juliet, then it may be recorded that the play is beautifully mounted and, taken all round, carefully and competently acted. Mr. Esmond plays Mercutio and makes him a rattle-brain not a wit. He robs the famous Queen Mab speech of its fantasy by gabbling and indistinctness; and he is never dignified save in his death. This becomes him well; his valiant staggering off the stage to die is most impressive. One word more. To paraphrase a certain famous message—the fights are splendid.

"KING RICHARD II." AT HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE

Now are we in the full flood of our Shakespeare-worship. Whether at Stratford or in London, the actor-manager hastens with his offering of "new interpretations" to the shrine of the Bard. But the season breeds charity, so let us attribute solely to worship these promptings to pour out libations before Shakespeare's altar. In his enthusiasm Mr. Beerbohm Tree has given a whole week to a festival in memorial of the poet's "birth-week." This solemn rite began on Monday night with a performance of King Richard II.—a happy choice on the part of Mr. Tree. Certain there be who find in this great historical tragedy resounding rhetoric and nothing more. A narrow view, surely. The burden of its exquisite lyric beauty lies but lightly on the play, not marring but only amplifying the truth and tenderness of its characterisation. The wild, graceful creature that Richard is cannot be surpassed in all Shakespeare's wonderful gallery of pictures. Here is the whole man standing in a marvellous subtle light which illumines the dim places of his soul. It is a consummate portrait of a weak man, a vacillating king, with a wide ear for flattery and a delicate, sensuous joy in the soft and beautiful things of life. Depicting this complex being, variable and inconstant, Mr. Tree is seen at his best. Mercifully ignoring in him a tendency to exaggerate and to insist overmuch on certain clever but finicky pieces of "business," we may extol the performance as an extremely able, consistent, and picturesque piece of work, to be accounted with Mr. Tree's best. To his ideal of colour Mr. Tree is wont to sacrifice too much; but this time the actor is not under its exclusive dominion. For that reason Mr. Tree's King Richard II. may be commended highly. That the play lacks love interest is manifest, but its human interest is not diminished thereby. E sede deposuit potentes—is there greater human tragedy than the pulling down of the mighty from their seats? Many changes have been made in the cast since Mr. Tree produced the play first. Miss Viola Tree comes nearer acting—and acting with charm—than in anything she has yet done. Mr. Basil Gill is picturesque and resonant as Thomas Mowbray; Mr. Henry Neville gasps to his heart's content as "time-honoured Lancaster"; and Mr. Lyn Harding, whose elocution is really excellent, makes a singularly ineffective Bolingbroke. Mr. Tree's vagaries in the matter of interpolated tableaux can be pardoned; the pictures are so good.

"HER OWN WAY" AT THE LYRIC THEATRE "WHAT PAMELA WANTED" AT THE CRITERION THEATRE

THE performances of Miss Maxine Elliott in Her Own Way, and of Miss Ethel Irving in What Pamela Wanted, prove these two ladies to be comédiennes of as nearly as possible equal range and talent, and, as their personalities are equally though in different ways attractive, the reasons why the one should have scored an individual success and the other should not seem worthy of consideration.

What Pamela Wanted is described as a comedy, but it would be described much more correctly as a farce. Strictly speaking, it is neither. In that its humour—or as much of it as is proper to the theatre, as much as gains in effect by perpetration on the stage—is the humour of the situation, the piece is farce; but, in that each situation as it arises is treated not so much for its own sake as with a view to exploiting the characters concerned, it is comedy. But in itself the subject, since the humorous view of it was to be taken, is purely farcical, for the story consists of a series of events which have no spontaneous relation whatever, no relation at all except that given them by chance. The opportunity for comedy would only have arisen if each situation had resulted from the mood which the preceding situation had created. In that case the interest of the subject would have centred in the characters, for from their behaviour in the circumstances the story would have come. As it is, the story proceeds quite independently. Instead of being evolved by the action of the dramatis personæ, it carries them on a predestined course. It demands of them no definite characteristics, and, indeed, had such existed, it would inevitably be other than it is. With any but a negative he and she it could not possibly exist. In exploiting the characters, therefore, the authors have been unable to produce any comedy of interest or value and have merely retarded the action and diluted the interest of the plot, so that the play appears a slow and tedious farce. But a farce it is, if anything, and as farce it should be played. Now the one essential in this class of work is style, and style is the chief thing which Miss Irving has still to acquire. With time and experience it will doubtless come, but she could not possibly expect to have crystallised her method thus early in her "legitimate" career. Her talent for comedy she proves once again—she possesses, indeed, far more than the part requires—but, had she even shown a genius for it, her performance, without the one essential, must still have been unsatisfactory.

Miss Elliott's talent is no greater than Miss Irving's, but her part requires in the way of accomplishment no more than she is able to supply. There are possibilities which she ignores, but all that is essential she achieves, and in consequence her performance is successful. Workmanlike and admirable as it is, neither in conception nor in execution is Mr. Clyde Fitch's play ideal. Possessed in the person of the heroine of a definite centre of sympathy and interest, it is yet not written, as it should be, entirely from her point of view. The point of view of the other characters, even of the man antagonistic to her, is developed almost as fully as her own. Only by putting himself in the heroine's place, by seeing each person and event exactly and merely as she saw them, could the author, in the three hours to which the traffic of the stage is limited, have obtained the full effect implicit in his subject. As it is, he has even frittered much of his time on scenes and persons which, however delightful in themselves, are entirely unnecessary and irrelevant. The result is that the heroine is not as sympathetic as she might and should have been, and that in consequence the play is not as interesting. By a great actress the defect could almost have been remedied, for by the poignancy of her emotion and the quality of her appeal the effect of all that Mr. Fitch has left unsaid would to a great extent have been supplied. But, because this is not absolutely necessary—because, even as it stands, the play is interesting—Miss Elliott's performance is quite satisfying.

FINE ART

THE PICTURE-MARKET AND CONTEMPORARY ART

To those who have any personal acquaintance with the picture-market it is a familiar fact that in recent years it has become a matter of increasing difficulty for a living English artist to find a market for his wares. Even if we leave entirely out of account the merit of his work and consider the question of the market merely, we can find the explanation in the altered attitude of the picture-buying public, to which that of the dealers naturally corresponds.

In former days there were patrons, often of obscure origin, self-made men, and sometimes not even men of great wealth, who bought without any idea of speculation, simply on their own judgment. Such were the first patrons of Turner—Joseph Gillott, Dr. Munro, Elkanah Bicknell. Even as late as the Pre-Raphaelites there were to be found many patrons entirely independent of dealers and markets, who had the courage of and the reward for backing their own opinions. But a gradual change has been observable of late years. The middle classes appear to have concluded that original pictures are entirely beyond the means of persons with a moderate income; they would no more think of buying a picture than they would a pleasure yacht or a motor-car, and content themselves with photogravures. The wealthy, on the other hand, appear to consider picture-buying merely in the light of an investment, and all they want is a safe thing like Preference stock. Since it has been proved over and over again of recent years that even the official stamp of the Royal Academy is not a sufficient guarantee of the security of the investment, and they have no other standard to go by, they have finally restricted their purchases to the established reputations—what we roughly call the Old Masters, including of course our own, Reynolds, Morland, &c. The dealers find that they can in consequence make a splendid turnover without stepping aside from the well-worn ruts. Why should a dealer worry himself to exercise his flair and discover who are the rising men of his own time, when he can get a princely income on old-established lines? A well-known Reynolds was bought and sold by a great firm three times in the course of twenty years, and the last time at an increase of 1000 per cent. What wonder that they refuse to touch modern work?

True, they lose opportunities which former generations would have seized upon. If some dealer had had the courage to buy up every Whistler that was to be had in 1880, we should have seen a corner in Whistlers far stronger than that which was attempted in America. There was a Degas bought at Christie's less than twenty years ago for £64, and recently sold for £3000; but the dealers can afford to snap their fingers at such lost opportunities. Their position is quite secure as it is and sufficiently remunerative. To some extent, perhaps, the American buyer has helped to develop this state of affairs. As recently as twenty years ago Americans practically did not compete for Old Masters. Their specialty was for a long time in modern French, especially the Barbizon school.

Mr. Sheridan Ford wrote a most amusing account of the lengths they would go to in their acquisitions, and of the vast number of sham Corots and Daubignys that were dumped down on them. But of recent years and in accumulating volume they have bought in every market Old Masters of all nationalities, always, apparently, with a view to getting a safe thing, and with little real connoisseurship.

Unfortunately for them but perhaps fortunately for the progress of art, safety is not always assured by mere dollars. During the last year the writer had occasion to make a list of some American collections, and among six reputed Constables only one was declared authentic by the first authorities on the subject. Of course, if a man has a very long purse and deals with a firm of unblemished reputation he will probably obtain genuine work. But no amount of pedigree and document will convert a bad picture into a good one, and as masterpieces are not forthcoming in every sale he will have to put up with genuine but inferior examples. Even Reynolds occasionally produced tedious and bad work; it is notorious that much that was turned out of his studio as his own work was mainly produced by assistants. The ghost, we must remember, has in all ages been a useful animal.

The long purse will do something, the long head a little more, but the only complete arbiter is taste combined with a little courage. The Americans have always been patrons of French artists; at first the Barbizon men were all the rage; later and up to the present the impressionists, Monet, Degas, Renoir, &c. Whistlers have only been bought to a considerable extent since they obtained the imprimatur of Paris, that is, within the last ten years.

But the most striking fact in the list of some 400 pictures in American collections containing examples of all schools and periods from Giotto downward, was that only five modern English painters were represented, and these were all Academicians, with the exception of Rossetti. The last, by the way, was the only Pre-Raphaelite represented, which shows how completely Americans are in the hands of Continental dealers. It is to be hoped that the time is not far distant when Americans will realise that there are some painters still left in England and that they are not invariably to be found among the august forty. The condition of the picture-market is in certain respects much healthier in Paris than in London. Paris being the world's emporium for pictures, the competition among dealers is much keener, and they are forced to look about and use their flair to discover who are the rising men among living painters. This type of dealer, who sniffs out a good thing among the young and unknown artists, so well described in the Père Malgras of Zola, is not entirely extinct in Paris. He exploits the young painter mercilessly, but the latter does not complain.

It is not necessary for him to make a sensation, to paint the picture of the year, to entertain largely, to see and be seen at all social functions. He can stick to his little garret in some old quarter, and make little excursions into the country, and meanwhile piocher, sure of a steady, quiet market with very little booming or fuss. The poor English painter meanwhile demands nothing better than to be exploited. He is forced by artificial conditions to put his prices absurdly high. In the restricted market open to him he may as well demand twenty pounds as twenty shillings, for if he cannot get the first, he will not get the second price. Outside the very small ring of patrons there is no market whatever. It is like trying to sell stamps in a fish-market. The wares have their worth, but the public knows and cares nothing about it.

Of course, in Paris, even more than in London, there are the much-boomed sensational pictures, the atrocious vistas of interminable Exhibitions. But side by side with these there exists the humble, silent painter and the shrewd speculative dealer, who appear to be extinct in London. A remedy is not to be found in the exhaustion of Old Masters—these will continue as before to change ownership. Let us hope that it may come with a renewed interest in true connoisseurship and a more sporting inclination to back one's own opinion.

MUSIC

HANDEL'S MESSIAH

IN 1742, one Mr. Charles Jennens, a literary amateur, wrote to some person or persons unknown:

"I shall show you a collection I gave Handel called Messiah, which I value highly. He has made a fine entertainment of it, though not near so good as he might and ought to have done. I have with the greatest difficulty made him correct some of the grossesst faults in the composition, but he has retained his Overture obstinately in which there are some passages far unworthy of Handel, but much more unworthy of the Messiah. . . ."

"Or of Mr. Charles Jennens": was evidently the thought uppermost in that worthy's mind. This very fine person:

"lived in such princely state at Gopsall in Leicestershire that his neighbours dubbed him Soliman the Magnificent. His town house was in Great Ormond Street, Bloomsbury, and he is said to have constantly driven thence to the house of his printer in Red Lion Passage, not five minutes walk from the place, with four horses, and attended by four lacqueys, one of whom used to remove oyster-shells and other rubbish from the pavement, when he descended from his coach to cross over to the printing-office."

We read in Handel's life that Mr. Jennens's friendship for the composer "was most sincere, and met with an equally sincere return." Also that "he wrote much and well." However, his chief claim to immortality to-day lies in the compilation of scripture phrases for the Messiah, which he gave to Handel, who completed the score in twenty-four days, ending September 6, 1741.

On November 18 following, an Irish paper of the day, known as Faulkner's Journal announced with a flourish of trumpets, that the "celebrated Dr. Handel" had arrived at Dublin, in the packet-boat from Holyhead. Five weeks later appeared another paragraph:

"On Monday next, being the 14th of December (and every day following) Attendance will be given, at Mr. Handel's house, in Abbey-Street near Lyffey-street, from 9 o'clock in the Morning, till 2 in the Afternoon, in order to receive the Subscription Money for his Six Musical Entertainments in the New Musick Hall in Fishamble Street. . . ."

Fishamble Street, Dublin, now a slum, was then apparently a highly fashionable locality. The "New Musick Hall" built in 1741 had only just been opened. Handel's biographer, Mr. Rockstro, tells us that it was:

"afterwards converted into a Theatre, and, its audiences being very select, an advertisement announced that no one would be admitted to the Boxes or Pit 'without shoes and stockings' indicating of course that gentlemen were expected to wear the usual evening dress of the period, though certain Hibernian wits chose to give the passage a different signification. Thirty years ago, all that remained of the theatre was a neglected old building with a wooden porch into which it is probable that few persons wearing 'shoes and stockings' were accustomed to enter."

At each of the six musical entertainments conducted in this place we read in Faulkner's Journal that the New Musick Hall was filled to overflowing, with "a more numerous and polite audience than ever was seen upon the like occasion." In fact the series proved such an unqualified success that Handel was induced to give a second. In December he writes to his friend and patron, Soliman the Magnificent:

"It was with the greatest Pleasure I saw the Continuation of your kindness by the Lines you was pleased to send me, in order to be prefix'd to your Oratorio Messiah which I set to Musick before I left England. I am emboldened, Sir, by the generous Concern you please to take in relation to my affairs to give you an account of the Success I have met here. The Nobility did me the honour to make amongst themselves a Subscription for 6 nights which did fill a Room of 600 Persons, and without Vanity the performance was received with a general Approbation. Sign^a Avolio, which I brought with me from London, pleases extraordinary. I have formed another Tenor Voice which gives great Satisfaction, the Basses and Counter Tenors are very good, and the rest Chorus-Singers (by my direction) do exceedingly well, as for the Instruments they are really excellent, Mr. Dubourgh being at the Head of them, and the Messiah sounds delightfully in this charming Room, which puts me in good Spirits (and my Health being so good) I exert myself on my Organ with more than usual success. . . ."

He further informs Mr. Jennens that:

"the Audience was composed (besides the Flower of Ladies of Distinction and other People of the greatest Quality) of so many Bishops, Deans, Heads of the Colledge, the most eminent People in the Law as the Chancellor, Auditor General, &c. &c.," and begs him to be persuaded of the sincere veneration and esteem with which he had the "Honour" to be his most obliged and most humble servant, &c.

Handel was, in fact, feeling his way towards the production of the child of his heart, the new oratorio Messiah. The Dublin papers mention it for the first time on March 23, 1742, as follows:

"For the Relief of the Prisoners in the several Gaols and for the Support of Mercer's Hospital, in Stephen's Street, and of the Charitable Infirmary on the Inn's Quay, on Monday the 12th of April will be performed at the Musick Hall in Fishamble-Street Mr. Handel's new grand Oratorio, called the MESSIAH, in which the Gentlemen of the Choirs of both Cathedrals will assist, with some Concertos on the Organ, by Mr. Handell."

The public received this announcement so warmly, says Mr. Rockstro:

"that when a later advertisement was issued begging that ladies would be pleased to come without hoops and gentlemen without swords, all purchasers of tickets by courteously conceding to the request enabled the Stewards to seat seven hundred persons in the room instead of six. On Thursday the 8th of April the New Oratorio was rehearsed in presence of all who had bought tickets for the ensuing performance—"a most Grand, Polite and Crowded Audience." Faulkner's Journal informed its readers "that it was allowed by the greatest judges to be the finest composition of Musick that ever was heard."

We have seen that the Messiah as then produced did not altogether fulfil Mr. Jennens's expectations. Handel himself made extensive alterations in it afterwards. In 1789, thirty years after the composer's death, Mozart at Baron Van Swieten's request wrote his "additional accompaniments" for wind instruments. These were compared by Hauptman to "stucco ornaments on a marble temple." And in 1786, one Johann Adam Hiller, at a performance conducted by himself at the Berlin Cathedral, actually interpolated an Italian Aria to gratify the vanity of his principal singer. In fact the advisability of composing new arias for the Messiah was openly discussed in Germany, says Mr. Arthur Mees. Yet it was of the Messiah that the dying Beethoven exclaimed, pointing to the score: "Das ist das Wahre!"—"That is the true stuff!"

Handel himself conducted this work thirty-four times. On its first production in Dublin we are told that the chorus consisted of fourteen men and six boys. At the last performance which he proposed to direct himself, and which in fact took place three weeks after his death, it numbered twelve adult choristers, six boys and five principals—two men and three women.

We wonder how the eighteenth-century composer would have been affected, could he have emerged from his resting-place in the Poet's corner in Westminster Abbey, on April 21st, and listened to the Good-Friday performance of his beloved oratorio, given at the Albert Hall by the Royal Choral Society, under the conductorship of Sir Frederick Bridge.

Picture him in his gold-laced coat, buckled shoes, and silk stockings, gazing up amazedly at this most horrible building's crowded top-galleries, and comparing it in his own mind to the "New Musick Hall" in Fishamble Street! Picture his fierce eye on Sir Frederick Bridge, on the contralto, on the trumpet-player! Would the enormous white wig have vibrated with that little nod which, Dr. Burney tells us, manifested pleasure and satisfaction when things went well at the oratorio, or would it have remained ominously fixed, betokening thus to "nice observers, that he was out of humour"?

"And we shall be changed!" runs the last aria entrusted to the last soloist. According to Handel we shall be "cha-a-a-a; -a-a-a-a;—a-a-a-a-ANGED!" He little knew how much—before the final Resurrection. Poor Handel! We think that though, "without Vanity," his breast might have swelled exultantly under its ample lace ruffles, as he drank in a fulness of choral and orchestral effect unattainable in his day, those "larger other eyes," attributed by Tennyson to translated beings, might have detected the slightly contemptuous amusement with which the larger other ears of a flippant twentieth century listened to some of his remarkable roulades.

Much in the Messiah is of imperishable beauty. The chorus "All we like sheep have gone astray," though much censured in Handel's lifetime, is unsurpassed in point of descriptive sound, by any modern composer, besides being enriched by that art of delicate melody, for which nowadays we listen in vain. This short pastoral is a model of naïve poetry. As each little passage detaches itself and leaps away, we conjure up visions of the jocund and unruly flock skipping through gaps in flowering banks, or hurrying round pleasant lanes; we see the mingled haze of sun and dust so dear to the impressionist painter; we hear the patter of innumerable feet, and finally the joyous ripple of the shepherd's pipe as he leads his wandering charges into their pasture. It is a delicious study of idyllic atmosphere, and floats into a crowded hall like a breath of fresh meadow-scented air. Or let us dwell on the solemn loveliness of such arias as "Come unto Him all ye that labour." Alas! that those beautiful and impressive choruses, beginning "As by man came death," should merge into ludicrous anti-climax in the last of the set, "Even so in Christ shall all be made alive"; where the music, despite the solemnity of the words, suddenly leaps into such extreme liveliness as to suggest a Jack-in-the-box movement in most graveyards, culminating in a little jig among the tombstones. But who knows? Possibly this very effect may have been voted "Monstrous Pleasing" by the Flower of those Ladies of Distinction in Fishamble Street. Let us remember too that, while sorrow is as old as the world and its voice finds an echo in all hearts and will do so to the end of time, joy is so largely imaginative as hardly ever to achieve truthful expression. Happiness, says Maeterlinck:

"is the most silent thing that there is in the world. The angel of orrow can speak in any language, there is not a word but she knows, but the lips of the angel of happiness are sealed."

On the whole Handel's music is typical of Handel's own personality; a jumble of the absurd, pathetic, and sublime. One of his biographers informs us that as he lived so far away from his country and relations it is to be presumed that his "Social Affections were not very strong." But he was a sincere friend, a generous benefactor and a man of deep religious belief. He died on Good Friday, April 13, 1759, "in hopes," as he said, "of meeting his good God, his sweet Lord and Saviour, on the day of his Resurrection"; "meaning," says Dr. Burney, "the third day, or Easter Sunday following."

We cannot leave the composer of the Hallelujah Chorus on his death-bed, without one more quotation, prophetic, let us hope, of this solemn hour:

"I did think," he said to those who questioned him on the source of his inspiration, "I did think I saw all Heaven before me, and the great God, Himself."

E #

CORRESPONDENCE

"THE SEA-BLUE BIRD OF MARCH"

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—It is useless to discuss the meaning of this expression without taking into account that it is a literal translation of the last three words of the 26th Fragment of Alcman, which runs as follows:

"Ὅ μ' ἐτι, παρθενικὰ μελιγάρυες ἡμερόφωνα, γυῖα φέρειν δύναται· βάλε δὴ βάλε κηρύλος εἴην, ὅς τ' ἐπὶ κόματος ἄνθος αἰ' ἀλευόμενοι ποτίζται ῥηλεγὲς ἦτορ ἐχών, ἀλιπρόφυρος ἔσρος ὄρνις."

"No longer, maidens of sweet voice and lovely utterance, have my limbs power to bear me. Would, ah! would I were a kingfisher, that over the flower of the foam flits together with his mates, his heart free from care, the sea-blue bird of March!"

Tennyson is steeped in the Classics.

April 20.

R. J. WALKER.

SCIENCE

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—If I remember right, we were told in the ACADEMY some months ago that science was "systematised knowledge." Yet statements appear in the articles headed "science," which cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, on the most liberal and indulgent interpretation of the words, be brought under this definition. In the last number we are told that Wordsworth is "the profoundest thinker among English poets." Wordsworth a profounder thinker than Shakespeare! And in the preceding number I read, "innumerable creeds, all, of course, of Oriental origin." What! "all" of these "innumerable creeds"? And why, "of course," in the name of wonder? In what sense are such statements "science," and not rather, "questionable history" and "dubious criticism"? No one can love scientific reading more than myself, but I claim that it shall be science pure and undefiled.

April 24.

J. A. B.

ENGLISH WORDS IN FRANCE

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—H.E.F.'s impression concerning the French use of the word "raid" is inexplicable. I have lived in France for ten years, exclusively in French society. I have noted the gradual changes that have come over the meaning of "raid"; I have never seen it printed with the diæresis and never heard it pronounced otherwise than red. The writer of the note seems the better-informed.

April 25.

F. B.

THE CRESCENT AND STAR

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—What I saw in my youth was a veritable star, for the moon was "dogged" by it, as Coleridge describes it, for the rest of the evening. The star was not "within," but right upon "the nether tip," as I have seen in pictures of Oriental lamps. Others tell me they too have witnessed the phenomenon, so the question is how to explain what we saw. Can it be that the star was on the point of occultation? Many will, as I do, thank Mr. Wallis for his courteous consideration, which I hope he will extend to a further reply.

JOHN B. TABB.

P.S.—The note I referred to is by J. Dykes Campbell.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

Bate, Percy. English Table Glass. Newnes's Library of the Applied Arts. 7s. 6d. net.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

Miller, Edward. John Knox, the Hero of the Scottish Reformation. Me rose, 1s. net.
Vitetelly, Ernest A. The Wild Marquis. The Life and Adventures of Armand Guerry de Maubreuil, Marquis d'Orvault. Chatto & Windus, 6s.
Caussey, Fernand. Laclos, 1741-1803, d'après des documents originaux inédits d'un mémoire inédit de Laclos. Paris: Société du Mercure de France, 3 f. 50 c.
Le Brun, Roger. F. de Curel. Paris: Sansot. "Les Célébrités d'aujourd'hui," 1 f.

EDUCATIONAL.

Dumas, Alexandre. Le Voyage De Chicot. Blackie's Little French Classics. 4d.
Jamieson, Walter. Graphs for Beginners. Blackie, 1s. 6d.
Mansfield Poole, W., and Becker, Michel. Lectures Françaises, Géographie et Histoire. Blackie, 2s. 6d.
Shakespeare, William. Henry the Eighth. Blackie, the Picture Shakespeare, 1s.
Aveling, F. W. A Practical French Grammar. Swan Sonnenschein, 3s.
Blackie's English School Texts. Antonio and Benedict Mol, and Gipsy Storia. Extracts from "The Bible in Spain," by George Borrow. Nathaniel Hawthorne, Tanglewood Tales. Blackie, 8d. each.
Thucydides, Book VI. Edited with Introduction and Notes by A. W. Spratt. Cambridge University Press. Pitt Press Series, 6s.

FICTION.

Vachell, Horace Annesley. The Hill: A Romance of Friendship. Murray, 6s.
Morgan, Joseph Brown, and Freeman, James Rogers. The Spurs of Gold. Melrose, 5s.
Le Queux, William. Sins of the City. White, 6s.
Corkran, Henriette. Lucie and I. Unwin, 6s.
White, Fred M. The Crimson Blind. Ward, Lock, 6s.
Upward, Allen. The Phantom Torpedo Boats. Chatto & Windus, 6s.
Albanesi, E. Maria. Marian Sax. Hurst & Blackett, 6s.
Meyrick, Lloyd. Vicar Denior: An Incident in the Life of a Country Parson. Skeffington, 3s. 6d.
Gorky, Maxim. The Man who was Afraid (Foma Godyeff). Translated by Hermann Bernstein. Unwin. Popular edition, 1s. net.
Frenssen, Gustav. Jörn Uhl. Translated by F. S. Delmer. Constable, 6s. (See p. 464.)
Rennison, Rennie. Mixed Relationships. Simpkin, Marshall, 6s.
Ensell, Mrs. The Mysteries of Schoeder Hall: A Story of Things Natural and Supernatural. Burleigh, 2s. 6d.
Binstead, Arthur M. Mop Fair: Some Elegant Extracts from the Private Correspondence of Lady Viola Drumcree, the Fisherless Daughter of Feodorovna, Countess of Chertsey. Sands, 3s. 6d.
Spillmann, Joseph. Valiant and True: being the Adventures of the Swiss Guards at the time of the French Revolution. Sands, 6s.

HISTORY.

Lord, Arthur Power. The Regency of Marie De Médicis: a Study of French History from 1610 to 1616. Bell.
Bond, Beverly W., Jr. State Government in Maryland, 1777-1781. John Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science. Baltimore: John Hopkins Press, 50 c.

McKinley, Albert Edward. The Suffrage Franchise in the Thirteen English Colonies in America. Publications of the University of Pennsylvania Series in History, No. 2. Boston : Ginn.

Danvers, F. C. Israel Redivivus: being a History of the Tribes of Israel (distinct from that of Judah) from the times when the Biblical accounts of them came to an end. Banks, 3s. 6d. net.

LAW.

Smith, Russell J. The Organisation of Ocean Commerce. Publications of the University of Pennsylvania. Series in Political Economy and Public Law, No. 17. Boston : Ginn.

LITERATURE.

Kropotkin, P. Russian Literature. Duckworth, 7s. 6d. net.

Pellissier, Georges. Etudes de Littérature et de Morale Contemporaines. Paris : Cornély, 3 fr. 50 c.

Cutler, A. Waldo. Stories of King Arthur and his Knights. Re-told from Malory's "Morte D'Arthur." M'Spadden, J. Walker. Stories of Robin Hood and his Merry Outlaws. Re-told from the old Ballads. Harrap, 2s. 6d. net each.

Williams, W. H. Specimens of the Elizabethan Drama from Lyly to Shirley, A.D. 1580 to A.D. 1642. Clarendon Press and Henry Frowde, 7s. 6d.

Rusden, G. W. William Shakespeare: his Life, his Work, and his Teaching. Melbourne : Melville & Mullen, 10s. 6d. net.

Beatty, H. M. Dante and Virgil. Blackie, 2s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Compton, Herbert. Come to Tea with us. The Anti Tea-Duty League, 1s.

Lewis, Georgina King. Critical Times in Turkey, and England's Responsibility. Hodder & Stoughton, 3s. 6d.

Okakura, Y. The Japanese Spirit. With an Introduction by George Meredith. Constable, 3s. 6d. net.

Jephson, Lady. Letters to a Debutante. Nash, 3s. 6d.

ORIENTAL.

Semitic Study Series : No. IV. A Selection from the Prolegomena of Ibn Khaldūn. With Notes and a Glossary by Duncan B. Macdonald. No. V. The Abu Habbā Cylinder of Nabuna'id (V. Rawlinson, pl. 64). Autographed text by Robert J. Law, with an Introduction and Glossary by J. Dyneley Prince, Ph.D. Leiden, late E. J. Brill, 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.

Littmann, Enno. Modern Arabic Tales. Vol. I. Arabic Text. Part VI. of the Publications of an American Archaeological Expedition to Syria in 1899-1900. Leiden : late E. J. Brill.

Landberg, le Comte de. Etudes sur les dialectes de l'Arabie Méridionale. Vol. II. Dafnah. Part I. Textes et Traduction. Leiden, late E. J. Brill, 8 m.

PHILOSOPHY.

Harrison, Frederic. The Herbert Spencer Lecture, delivered at Oxford, March 9, 1905. Clarendon Press, 2s. net.

Trobridge, George. The Foundations of Philosophy: a Study of the Doctrine of Degrees and Related Subjects. Speirs.

POETRY.

Wood, Michael. The Garment of God. St. Mabel Workshop, Basing, 6d.

Stutfield, Hugh E. M. The Burden of Babylon, or the Social Incubus and other Vers de Société. Arnold, 2s. 6d.

Mowat, G. Houston. Search Light: being fog-ends of busy days put into verse. Paisley : Gardner, 2s. 6d. net.

POLITICAL.

Gulick, Sidney L. The White Peril in the Far East. Revell, 3s. 6d. net.

REPRINTS.

Dobson, Austin. Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay (1778-1840), as edited by her niece Charlotte Barrett. Vol. V., 1791-1802. Macmillan, 10s. 6d. net.

Herrick. Poems. Newnes. Thin paper Classics, 3s. 6d.

The Complete Works of Count Leo N. Tolstoy. Edited and translated by Leo Wiener. Vol. XII. : Fables for Children; Stories for Children; Moral Tales. Vol. XIII. : My Confession; Critique of Dogmatic Theology. Dent, 3s. 6d. net each.

Beaconsfield, the Earl of. Tancred, or the New Crusade. With an Introduction by the Earl of Iddesleigh. Lane, 1s. 6d. net and 2s. 6d. net.

The Hungry Forties: Life under the Bread Tax. With an Introduction by Mrs. Cobden Unwin. Unwin, People's Edition, 6d.

Dickens, Charles. A Tale of Two Cities. Nelson's Sixpenny Classics.

Bronte, Charlotte. Shirley. 2 vols. Dent, 2s. 6d. net each.

SCIENCE.

Allbutt, T. Clifford. The Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery to the end of the Sixteenth Century. An Address delivered at the St. Louis Congress in 1904. Macmillan, 2s. 6d. net.

SOCIOLOGY.

Ferri, Enrico. Socialism and Positive Science (Darwin—Spencer—Marx). Translated by Edith C. Harvey. No. I. of "The Socialist Library." The Independent Labour Party, 1s. net and 1s. 6d. net.

Horsfall, T. C. The Relation of National Service to the Welfare of the Community. Manchester : Sherratt & Hughes, 6d.

THEOLOGY.

Twells, Canon Henry. Bible Characters and other Addresses. Gardner, Darton, 3s. 6d.

Brooks, Phillips. An Easter Sermon. Allenson. Heart and Life Booklets, No. 3, 6d.

Atkin, F. W. Bright and Brief Talks to Men: twenty-one Addresses for Pleasant Sunday Afternoons. Allenson, 1s. 6d.

Carson, Thomas G. Man's Responsibility, or How and Why the Almighty introduced Evil upon the Earth. Putnam, 3s. net.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE. 10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—

The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes, Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events. Science and Art Specially dealt with.

Fulllest Reports of all Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE. 10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily.

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books. Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

THE SPHERE.

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week. Also List of Books Received.

SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

THE DUNDEE COURIER

Has double the circulation of any Morning Paper North of the Forth.

Literary Notes on Monday. Reviews on Wednesdays.

London Office, 109 Fleet Street, E.C.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS & NEW REMAINDERS.

OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

The APRIL LIST NOW READY, contains Popular Works on Sport, Travel, Biography, and Fiction.

Sent POST FREE on application to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34 New Oxford Street, London.

CONNOISSEURS OF COFFEE

RED

DRINK THE

WHITE

DELICIOUS FOR BREAKFAST
& AFTER DINNER.

&

BLUE

In making use less quantity, it being so much stronger than ordinary COFFEE.

"THE ACADEMY" is POSTED FREE (52 issues at 3d.) to every ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER in the United Kingdom prepaying 13s. FOREIGN SUBSCRIBERS by a PREPAYMENT of 17s. 6d. will secure it being sent for Post Free to any address throughout the World for a uniform 1d. postage, though the postage payable varies from 1d. minimum to 2½d. per copy. Orders may be sent through any Bookseller or Newsvendor, or direct to the Publisher, 5-7 Southampton Street, Strand, W.C.

PURE CONCENTRATED

Fry's Cocoa

STRENGTH

PURITY

SOLUBILITY

DIGESTIBILITY

"Four Cardinal Points"

J.A. HALPIN

A

No.

G

In vi
Anniv distin to be Steel
PRI
the Hum
Wor
TH
TH
TH
may Es scale selec
"Ge
Hun
addr
Essa
the cont
and her the be v
Es
If sub be a T
of l
A Uni
in FE dat

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

1

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1722

MAY 6, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

GEORGE BUCHANAN QUATER-CENTENARY, 1906.

PRIZE OF ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS.

In view of a Celebration of the Four-hundredth Anniversary of the birth of George Buchanan, the distinguished Scotsman and Humanist (1506-1582), to be held in St. Andrews in April 1906, J. Peddie Steele, Esq., M.D., LL.D., Florence, has offered a PRIZE OF ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS for the best ESSAY ON "SIXTEENTH-CENTURY HUMANISM AS ILLUSTRATED BY THE LIFE AND WORK OF GEORGE BUCHANAN."

The Competition is open to all ALUMNI OF THE FOUR SCOTTISH UNIVERSITIES.

The length of the Essay is not to exceed what may be read aloud within one hour.

Each Essay submitted must be enclosed in a sealed packet, bearing on the outside the motto selected by the Competitor, and the words "George Buchanan Quater-Centenary — One Hundred Guineas Prize Essay." The name or address of the Competitor must not appear on the Essay or on the sealed packet enclosing it, but the Essay is to be accompanied by a sealed note containing the Competitor's name and address, and a signed declaration that the Essay is his or her own production. On the outside of this note the motto selected by the Competitor ALONE is to be written.

Essays must be either type-written or printed.

If, in the opinion of the Examiners, no Essay submitted is of sufficient merit, the Prize will not be awarded.

The successful Essay will become the property of Dr. Steele.

All Essays must be sent to The Secretary, The University, St. Andrews, Scotland, and must be in his hands on or before THURSDAY, 15TH FEBRUARY, 1906. Essays received after that date will be disqualified.

ANDREW BENNETT, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY, ST. ANDREWS,
April 24, 1905.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE COM-MEMORATION 1905.—At the Theatre, Burlington Gardens, Wednesday, the 10th inst. at 8.15 P.M., Mr. G. K. CHESTERTON will lecture on "Puck." Particulars of Secretary, London Shakespeare League, 49 Southwold Mansions, Elgin Avenue, W.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

FIRST Editions of Modern Authors, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

YOUNG GENTLEMAN (23) WANTS POSITION in BOOKSHOP (New or Second-hand).—Apply, B. R. W., Alpha House, Grove Road, Stevenage, Herts.

AUSTRALIAN ANTHOLOGY.

THE undersigned is completing preparation of a new Anthology of Australian Verse, presently to be published in Sydney and London. He will be sincerely grateful to correspondents who will direct attention to verses worthy of inclusion that may have escaped his notice. Books or parcels may be sent to Messrs. EDWARDS, DUNLOP & Co., Bream's Buildings, E.C., for enclosure.

A. G. STEPHENS,
P.O., George Street North, Sydney.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27 King Street, St. James's.

Advertisements for out of print "Books Wanted" and "For Sale" are inserted at 3d. for each title (eight words, including address); minimum, 1s.

Books Wanted

HIGGINS (G.) Celtic Druids, 1829.
Anaclypsia, 2 vols., 4to, 1836.
Hillingdon Hall, 2 vols., 1845, or odd.
Hissey (J. J.) Old-Fashioned Journey, 1884.
A Drive through England, 1885.
Holiday on the Road, 1887.
On Southern English Roads, 1896.
On the Box Seat, London to Lind's End, 1886.
Hissey (J. J.) Through Ten English Counties, 1894.
Tour in a Phaeton, 1889.
Any of his Works.
Historic Military and Naval Anecdotes.
Historical Records of the Various Regiments.
History and Adventures of an Atom, 2 vols., 1749, or either vol.
History of Arthur, King of Britain, 4to, 1634.
History of a Warm Watchcoat, 12mo, 1769.
History of Jonathan Wild, 12mo, 1754.
History of the River Thames, coloured plates, 2 vols., folio, 1794-6.
History of Botany Bay, Bristol, 1787.
History of New England, 1667.
History of New Holland, Glasgow, 1796.
History of French Revolution, 3 vols., 1837.
History of the Company of Leatherellers, 1871.
Holbein's Portraits, Court Henry VIII., 1792, folio.
Veteris Icones, 4to, 1540.
Holborn Drollery: or the Beautiful Chloret, 1673.
Holland House, 2 vols., 1874.
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

WILDE'S SALOME. Also any others by him.—J. Jacob, 149 Edgware Road, W.

SHAKESPEAREANA—anything early. Cricket: Wisden's Almanacks; Lillywhite's Cricket Scores, &c.—The Chaucer Book Co., 37 St. Martin's Court, W.C.

Books for Sale

CURIOUS BURMESE BIBLE.—Mrs. G. N. Johnstone, 28 Rivers Street, Bath.

UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY by Elisée Reclus, 10 vols. Edited by Ravenstein, F.R.G.S. Published by Virtue. Splendid condition, as new. What offers?—Write Lloyd & Townsend, Dillwyn Book Mart, Swansea.

LADY BURTON'S ARABIAN NIGHTS, 6 vols., 4os. Medical Botany, by Stephenson and Churchill, Coloured Plates, 4 vols., half calf, 1837, 36s. Riggs' Decameron, with extra Plates, 2 vols., 21s.—Goulden, St. Paul's, Canterbury.

TRAILL'S SOCIAL ENGLAND, illustrated Edition, 6 vols., complete, buckram, leather label, published (in cloth), £4 4s. net, for £3 7s. 6d.—Walker, 37 Bridgegate, Leeds.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF
G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti,
Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings,
Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries,
may be obtained from
FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

WILDE, OSCAR.

Dorian Gray, Sole Authorised Edition, 10s. 6d.
Poems in Prose, now first published, 5s.

WHISTLER.

Baroness and Butterfly, Original Edition, 5s.

J. JACOB, Publisher and Bookseller, 149 Edgware Road, London, W.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140.

Containing a special article, entitled:
"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS."

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

THE ECLECTIC BOOK CO., 37 Goodramgate, York, issues a Catalogue at regular intervals. No. 4 now ready. Free on application.

Books and Libraries purchased for cash. Yorkshire books wanted.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP, Secondhand Bookseller, 100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND 4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.—"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookbinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £30 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1809; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—Baker's Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) undertakes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss FOOT, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L., 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

N.C. UNIV. LIB. MAY 17 1905

From MR. MELROSE'S LIST.

A Charming Volume for Garden Lovers.

A GIRL'S GARDEN. By MARGARET M. RANKIN. With many Illustrations and a specially designed Title-page. 2s. net.

A Choice Book of Selections.

SHAKSPERE'S MASTER-PASSAGES. A Guide in Miniature, with a Treasury of One Hundred Specimens, selected by JOHN HOGGEN. With specially designed Title-page. 1s. 6d. net.

A New Historical Romance.

THE SPURS OF GOLD: a Romance of England in Lollard Days. By J. BROWN MORGAN and J. ROGERS FREEMAN. With Illustrations by E. TRAVERS POPE. Imperial 16mo, cloth, 5s.

Important New Theological Works.

THE INFANCY AND YOUTH OF JESUS. By the Rev. A. MORRIS STEWART, M.A., Author of "The Crown of Science," "The Temptation of Jesus," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

THE SHRINE OF FAITH: Our Lord's Human Experience. By the Rev. T. H. WRIGHT, Author of "The Finger of God," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

Fourth Centenary of John Knox.

KNOX'S "HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF RELIGION IN SCOTLAND." With which are included Knox's "Confession," and "The Book of Discipline." A Twentieth-Century Edition, revised and edited by CUTHBERT LENNOX. With Frontispiece Portrait. (A New Edition of Knox's famous History, in which the editor has endeavoured to minimise the difficulties which English readers find in the original text.) Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 4s. 6d.

JOHN KNOX: A Biography. By D. MACMILLAN, M.A., with an Appreciation by the Very Rev. PRINCIPAL STORY, D.D., LL.D. With Illustrations specially drawn by THOMAS SMELLIE, F.S.A. (Scot.) Crown 8vo, cloth, rough edges, 3s. 6d. net.

A Popular "Life."

JOHN KNOX: The Hero of the Scottish Reformation. A Biographical Sketch. By the Rev. EDWARD MILLER, M.A. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net.

BOOKS FOR THE HEART.

A CHOICE SERIES OF DEVOTIONAL CLASSICS.

Edited by ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M.A.

With an Introduction to each volume, by the Editor. Fcap. 8vo, printed on antique wove paper, cloth boards, gilt top, 2s. 6d. each.

THE DIARY AND JOURNAL OF DAVID BRAINERD. Two vols. 5s.

THE CHRISTIAN'S GREAT INTEREST. By WILLIAM GUTHRIE. Second Impression of this Edition.

THE HEIDELBERG CATECHISM. A New Translation.

"We rejoice in the possession of the little book. It has given us delight through its introduction. . . . Most catechisms are for the head, but this is really a book for the heart."—Expository Times.

QUIET HOURS. By JOHN PULSFORD, D.D. Fourth Impression of this Edition.

"It is a casket of jewels from which flash the many coloured rays of well-cut gems. It is essentially a volume for thoughtful men and women of reverent mind, and to them the pages often coned will be ever fresh."—Rock.

THE RELIGIOUS AFFECTIONS. By JONATHAN EDWARDS. Second Impression of this Edition.

"My heart bounded when I saw 'The Religious Affections' announced under your editorship, and so cheap too. . . . Many whose blessing is worth earning will bless you for Edwards' masterpiece in this beautiful shape."—ALEXANDER WHYTE, Edinburgh.

THE JOURNAL OF JOHN WOOLMAN. With an Appreciation by JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER. Third Impression of this Edition.

"To read his quaint gracious jottings is to breathe an air of pious peace and sturdy devotion to practical righteousness. For devotional stimulus and preparation for personal communion with God, this will be a sweet aid."—Sword and Trowel.

GRACE ABOUNDING TO THE CHIEF OF SINNERS. By JOHN BUNYAN. Third Impression of this Edition.

"'Grace Abounding' is a peerless piece of autobiography. No life of John Bunyan can give such an idea of the man as this wonderful product of his own pen. Such a handsome edition should make it known to thousands."—Baptist.

THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. Fourth Impression of this Edition.

The Church Times says: "No cheap edition of the Confessions that we know of can at all be compared with this in beauty of outward form. Type, paper, and binding are alike irreproachable."

* Special Editions of these have been printed on thin paper; size 6½×4½×1-inch. Cloth, gilt top, 1s. 6d. net. Leather, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. net.

LONDON: ANDREW MELROSE, 16 PILGRIM STREET, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS opened at any date for THREE, SIX and TWELVE Months, Town Subscriptions 21s. Yearly. Books of past Seasons, 10s. 6d. Yearly.

Terms for Country, Suburbs, and Parcel Post, sent on application to MUDIE & CO., 30-34 New Oxford Street, London.

TYPEWRITING.—THE WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES, Authors' MSS., Translations, &c.; Legal and General Copying; Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years. —SIXES & SIXES, 229 Hammer-smith Road, W. (Private Address: 13 Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPEWRITING.—All descriptions.—Translations, duplicates; careful work. Novels, 9d. 1000. Smith Premier.—Miss HANLEY, Berkhamsted, Herts.

TYPEWRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1000 words. Specimens and references.—Address, Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS., 10d. per 1000, all descriptions; neat, prompt, accurate; duplicating a speciality. Shorthand, testimonials.—Mrs. MICHEL, 23 Quarrendon Street, Fulham, S.W.

DEIGHTON, BELL & CO., CAMBRIDGE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

NEW EDITION, Revised, with 2 Photogravure Plates.

THE RISEN MASTER.

A SEQUEL TO

PASTOR PASTORUM.

By HENRY LATHAM, M.A.,
Late Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ELEVENTH THOUSAND.

PASTOR PASTORUM:

Or, the Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord.

Crown 8vo, price 6s. 6d.

FOURTH THOUSAND.

A SERVICE OF ANGELS.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. net.

STUDIES OF ARIANISM.

Chiefly referring to the Character and Chronology of the Reaction which followed the Council of Niceæ.

By HENRY MELVILL GWATKIN, M.A.,
Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History,
Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, cloth, New Edition, with Additions and Frontispiece, price 3s. 6d. net.

THE CHAPEL ON THE HILL.

By ALFRED PRETOR,
Author of "RONALD AND I."

"The narrations recall the best passages in 'RONALD AND I.'"—Literary World.

"Will be read with genuine delight."—Scotsman.

"Lovers of animals will especially appreciate it."—Manchester Courier.

Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. viii+160, price 5s.

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

THE ELEMENTARY GEOMETRY OF CONICS.

By Rev. C. TAYLOR, D.D.,

Master of St. John's College, Cambridge.

"The book is in many respects the best and most reliable text-book on the Geometry of Conics that can be obtained."—Mathematical Gazette.

BY THE LATE REV. W. A. WHITWORTH. CHOICE AND CHANCE.

An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combinations, and Probability.

With 640 Exercises.

Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

CHOICE AND CHANCE.

700 Exercises, including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in "Choice and Chance."

With a Chapter on the Summation of Certain Series and a Gresham Lecture on "Some Points in the Philosophy of Chance."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

CAMBRIDGE: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.
LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

ROUTLEDGE'S NEW BOOKS.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANTRY: Their Agrarian Condition, Social Life, and Religion. By STEPNIAK. 654 pages, 3s. 6d. net. An extraordinary cheap edition of this authoritative work, without the help of which no intelligent comprehension of the present occurrences in Russia is possible. It provides the fullest account in English of Internal Russia, the agrarian question, the moujiks, &c.

PRACTICAL COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN PERSONAL MAGNETISM, TELEPATHY, AND HYPNOTISM. By GEORGE WHITE. 3s. 6d. net. A simple and practical, yet cautious, course of instruction in this new science.

THE RHYMERS' LEXICON: A Rhyming Dictionary of the English Language on a New Plan. By ANDREW LORING; with Introduction by Professor GEORGE SAINTSBURY. 8vo, cloth gilt. 7s. 6d. net.

The first successful attempt ever made to group together all English rhymes in such order that the volume may be consulted with the same ease as an ordinary dictionary. The principle of arrangement is novel, yet comprehensive and simple. The volume contains over sixty thousand words, and includes penultimate and antepenultimate rhymes.

DICTIONARY OF SLANG AND COLLOQUIAL ENGLISH. Abridged from the Seven-Volume Work by J. S. FARNER and the late W. E. HENLEY. 542 pp., half morocco, gilt top. 7s. 6d. net.

"Full of interest and entertainment; not likely to be superseded, for a generation at any rate, as the standard work on slang in one volume. All those who aim at a small and sound library of books of reference should secure it."—Athenaeum.

"A most valuable work."—Speaker.

A GUIDE FOR THE PERPLEXED. By MOSES MAIMONIDES. Translated by Dr. M. FRIEDLANDER. 416 pp., large 8vo., 7s. 6d. net.

By MARY SCHARLIEB, M.D., M.S.,
Each 1s. cloth.

A WOMAN'S WORDS TO WOMEN.

THE MOTHER'S GUIDE TO THE HEALTH AND MANAGEMENT OF HER CHILDREN.

Two invaluable books to the newly-married woman.

ONLY MY FUN.

By WALTER EMANUEL,

Author of "A Dog Day," etc. 176 pp., with picture cover, 1s. net.

A new book of humour, by the writer of the weekly Charivari in Punch, will be welcomed by all into whose hands his previous books have fallen.

Latest Additions to Series.

NEW UNIVERSAL LIBRARY. Cloth, 1s. net; lambskin, 2s. net.

JEFFREY'S Essays from The Edinburgh Review.

LESSING'S Laocoon. Translated by Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, Bart.

MILL'S Dissertations and Discussions. Series I.

BRIMLEY'S Essays. Edited by W. G. CLARK, M.A.

LOWELL'S My Study Windows.

MRS. GASKELL'S Granford.

HUGHES' Tom Brown at Oxford.

MILL'S Utilitarianism.

THE MUSES' LIBRARY. Cloth, 1s. net; lambskin, 2s. net.

ROSSETTI'S Early Italian Poets.

PROCTER'S Legends and Lyrics.

LIBRARY OF HISTORICAL LITERATURE. 5s.

History of the Reformation in Germany.

By L. VON RANKE. Edited by R. A. JOHNSON, M.A. (Oxon.). With new and copious Index. 816 pp.

Memirs of Count Camille. By ANTHONY HAMILTON. Edited by Sir WALTER SCOTT.

BACON'S Complete Philosophical Works.

Reprinted from the Texts and Translations, with the Notes and the Prefaces of J. SPEDDING and R. L. ELLIS, and edited, with an Introduction and additional Notes, by J. M. ROBERTSON.

LIBRARY OF EARLY NOVELISTS. 6s. net.

Boccaccio's Decameron. Translated by J. M.

RIGG, M.A., with J. ADDINGTON

SYMONDS' Essay on Boccaccio. 800 pp.

The Heptameron. By MARGUERITE DE

NAVARRA. Translated by ARTHUR

MACHEN. The complete work, including the verse (in English verse).

THE ENGLISH LIBRARY. 2s. 6d.

English, Past and Present. By ARCH-

BISHOP TRENCH, D.D. Edited, with emendations and Notes, by A. SMYTHE

PALMER, D.D. 272 pp.

On the Study of Words. By ARCHBISHOP

R. C. TRENCH. Edited by Dr. A. SMYTHE

PALMER. 264 pp.

The Folk and their Word-Lore: an Essay on Popular Etymologies. By Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER. 200 pp.

PHOTOGRAVURE SERIES. Each with 12 Original Photogravures, 3s. 6d. net.

Aucassin and Nicolette. Translated by

ANDREW LANG. With Photogravure

Reproductions of 12 Drawings by GILBERT

JAMES.

Milton's Paradise Lost. With Photogravure Reproductions of 12 Etchings by WILLIAM STRANG.

Send for Routledge's Spring Book Budget, containing full particulars and contents of their New Series and New Books

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LTD., BROADWAY HOUSE, E.C.

A MOST REMARKABLE ENTHUSIASM

Has Greeted the Publication of

MR. H. G. WELLS'S IMAGINATIVE & PICTURESQUE SOCIOLOGICAL STUDY, A MODERN UTOPIA.

And the Critics are unanimous in considering it his FINEST AND MOST POPULAR WORK.

READ THEIR OPINIONS:

The ATHENÆUM says:

"THERE HAS BEEN NO WORK OF THIS IMPORTANCE PUBLISHED FOR THE LAST THIRTY YEARS."

"IT IS AN AMAZINGLY ABLE CONSTITUTION AND ONE WONDERS THAT IT SHOULD BE THE OUTCOME OF A SINGLE MIND."

"THIS ASTONISHING BOOK IS A PIECE OF WORK WHICH EMBODIES IMAGINATIVE SCIENCE AT ITS HIGHEST."

"A Modern Utopia" ought to set people talking and discussing. Mr. Wells's ideas are always stimulating and crisply expressed. Domestic politics would become interesting again if Mr. Wells could convert a few statesmen to his way of thinking."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"The book has high value, and a significance that should not be overlooked, for it indicates both clearly and with some gaiety the course which civic and spiritual endeavours should follow if the world is not to revert to the type established in the Middle Ages."—MORNING POST.

"Mr. Wells's Book is interesting precisely because it challenges criticism and opposition. It is a book of great originality, the result of real thinking—a criticism of life by an acute and reflective observer who throws his work in a most attractive form."—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

"Broadly conceived and brilliantly written. . . Full of profound thought, of brilliant imaginative effort, with a background of sociological and economical possibilities which will stimulate interest in many world-problems of to-day."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"The work is crowded with thought and suggestion, with all those characteristics of candour and sincerity which have made Mr. Wells, the author, perhaps best worth reading of modern English writers engaged in the function of prophecy."—MR. C. F. G. MASTERMAN in the DAILY NEWS.

MR. H. G. WELLS'S FINEST WORK.

A MODERN UTOPIA.

ILLUSTRATED BY EDMUND J. SULLIVAN.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Mr. Wells's is much the most scientific and sensible construction of a Future based on the Present that I have ever read."—MR. H. HAMILTON FYFE in EVENING NEWS.

THE CRISIS IN RUSSIA.

RUSSIA IN REVOLUTION.

By G. H. PERRIS.

Illustrated, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

This striking and impressive book, founded upon close personal observation of all sides of subterranean life in the country of the Tsar, appears at a peculiarly appropriate time. It sets forth in graphic language and with absolute fidelity to fact the causes that have led to the present reign of terror, gives vivid word-pictures of the leaders of the revolution, and lets the reader into many suppressed stories of tyranny and oppression. A number of pictures from photographs taken on the spot, add to the convincing quality of the narrative.

A NEW WORK ON HEREDITY.

The Principles of Heredity.

By G. ARCHDALL REID.

Author of "Alcoholism: its Cause and Cure." Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

Dr. C. W. Saleeby, in the Evening Standard, says:

"We regard this book as one of the most valuable that have appeared since the epoch-making date of 1859."

Two Striking Six-Shilling Novels.

A STORY OF THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

THE BROODING WILD.

A MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY.

By RIDGWELL CULLUM.

Author of "The Devil's Kag," "The Hound from the North," &c.

AN EXPERT AMERICAN CRITIC who has read this story says of it: "The scene of the story is the Canadian North-West and deals with Trappers, Fur Traders, Half-Breeds, 'Neches,' Huskies, &c. The book is a distinct advance in style over the author's previous works, and the descriptions of animal life, nature, &c., are almost as well done as our great nature writer, Professor E. D. Roberts, would do it."

A CHINESE STORY.

CH'UN KWANG.

A TALE OF CHINESE LOVE AND TRAGEDY.

By OLIVER G. READY.

Author of "Life and Sport in China." With 12 Illustrations by a Chinese artist of repute.

"This pleasantly written tale will give European readers a better insight into Chinese life and society than many more pretentious works. We are thoroughly interested in the romance."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"A very simple, straightforward, and pretty tale."—Times.

"An exceptionally remarkable study of immemorial civilisation of the Chinese people."

"This is a really delightful book and Mr. Ready deserves the thanks of English readers for the charming love-tale of Far Cathay. . . Fascinating and delightful throughout."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

London: CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

CHATTO & WINDUS, Publishers.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE ERROR OF HER WAYSBy FRANK BARRETT.
Author of "Fettered for Life."STINGAREEBy E. W. HORNING.
Author of "A Bride from the Bush." [May 15.]THE PHANTOM TORPEDO-BOATS

By ALLEN UPWARD

Author of "The Secret History of To-Day."

"Mr. Allen Upward is a wizard among writers of sensational fiction. Sensational fact, one might as readily say, for in his stories of the Courts of modern Europe he has interwoven fact and fiction with so deft fingers that the reader is hard put to it to know how much is true and how much the product of the imagination. 'The Phantom Torpedo-Boats,' his latest romance, professes to be no less than the story of the secret influences which brought about many of the baleful incidents of the present war between Russia and Japan. . . . Much of the book deals with the manner in which the Dogger Bank outrage was pre-arranged in a foreign Court. . . . The Princess, who conspires on behalf of the war party in Germany, is the heart of a very romantic love-story. There are no dull pages in 'The Phantom Torpedo-Boats.' Indeed, few more generally absorbing and thrilling books of its kind can ever have been written."—To-Day.

THE YOUNGEST MISS BROWN

By FLORENCE WARDEN

Author of "The House on the Marsh."

"'The Youngest Miss Brown' forms an excuse for a delightful story, the plot of which is unfolded in excellent fashion."—SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

THE MILLIONAIRE BABY

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

Author of "The Leavenworth Case."

"Anticipations of a complex plot and exciting situations, raised by recollections of 'The Leavenworth Case,' will not be disappointed by 'The Millionaire Baby,' a mystery that holds the reader's interest to the end. . . . The scenes, which are laid in the haunted bungalow in the millionaire's ground, indicate that the author's hand has not lost its cunning."—BIRMINGHAM POST.

A SPOILER OF MEN

By RICHARD MARSH

Author of "The Beetle."

"There is no fainting or falling in the audacity, the power of invention. . . . This new story is as fresh and full of life as if the author had had a year's holiday."—SCOTSMAN.

THE MISSING ELIZABETH

By ADELINE SERGEANT

Author of "The Story of a Penitent Soul." [May 11]

DON TARQUINIO

By Fr. ROLFE

Author of "Hadrian the Seventh." [Shortly]

The POET and the PIERROT

By DOROTHEA DEAKIN

Author of "The Smile of Melinda." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [May 11]

THE WILD MARQUIS: Life and Adventures of ARMAND GUERRY
DE MAUBREUIL. By ERNEST A.
VIZETELLY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"A biography which leaves the efforts of many imaginative writers in a bad second place. Mr. Vizetelly makes the most of his subject as the theme of a book appealing directly to that human interest in shady and dangerous adventure which is perhaps too little regarded by historians of the documentary sort."—SCOTSMAN.

London: Chatto & Windus, 111 St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Cassell & Company's Announcements.*The Travel Book of the Year.

NOTICE.

The FIFTH IMPRESSION of SIR FREDERICK TREVES' engrossing new work, "THE OTHER SIDE OF THE LANTERN," is nearly exhausted, and a SIXTH IMPRESSION is now in the press. Fully illustrated, 12s. net.

"Unmistakably vivid, level-headed, characteristically accurate."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.
"Clear cut, incisive, new, and fascinating."—DAILY NEWS.
"Has colour, atmosphere, imagination, and charm of language."—DAILY MAIL.
"Instinct throughout with human sympathies."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

MR. FOSTER FRASER'S NEW BOOK.

Just Published, Price 6s.

Canada as It Is.

BY

JOHN FOSTER FRASER.

With Numerous Illustrations.

"From the point of view of the strenuous man, the possible investor, the possible emigrant, the man of affairs and of action, here, in some 300 brightly-written pages, is the veritable essence of Canada condensed for quick consumption."—Standard.

"This delightful and brilliant book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Important New Work.

NOW READY.—Price 21s. net.

King Leopold II.His Rule in Belgium and the Congo.

BY

JOHN DE COURCY MACDONNELL.

With 40 Full-Page Plates and Map.

Cassell's Unique
Fine Art WorkPART I. NOW READY, . .
Price ONE SHILLING net, ofRoyal Academy
Pictures, 1905

CONTAINING A BEAUTIFUL

Rembrandt Photogravure
of "THE CUP OF TANTALUS,"

By Sir E. J. POYNTER, Bart., P.R.A.

This work will be published in four parts, price One Shilling net each, or in one volume, 7s. 6d.

"The most perfect representation of the Academy ever placed within reach of the public."—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

CASSELL & CO., Ltd., London and all Booksellers.

A. & C. BLACK'S LISTROME

Painted by ALBERTO PISA. Text by M. A. R. TUKER and HOPE MALLESON. Containing 70 full-page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo. cloth, gilt top, price 20s. net.

Edition de Luxe, with letterpress printed on hand-made paper, containing the earliest impressions of the Illustrations, and limited to 250 signed and numbered copies, price Two Guineas net.

FLORENCE AND SOME TUSCAN CITIES

Painted by Colonel R. C. GOFF. Described by CLARISSA GOFF. Containing 75 full-page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, price 20s. net.

NORWAY

Painted by NICO JUNGMAN. Described by BEATRIX JUNGMAN. Containing 75 full-page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 20s. net.

TIBET AND NEPAL

Painted and Described by A. HENRY SAVAGE LANDOR. Containing 75 full-page Illustrations (50 in Colour). Square demy 8vo, gilt top, price 20s. net.

NUREMBERG

Painted by ARTHUR GEORGE BELL. Described by Mrs. ARTHUR G. BELL. Containing 20 full-page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d. net.

TROUT FISHING

By W. EARL HODGSON. Second Edition. With a Frontispiece by W. H. ROLFE, and a Facsimile in Colours of a Model Book of Flies, for Stream and Lake, arranged according to the Months in which the Lures are Appropriate. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d. net.

THE DICKENS COUNTRY

By F. G. KITTON. Containing 50 full-page Illustrations mostly from Photographs by T. W. TYRRELL. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

THE THACKERAY COUNTRY

By LEWIS MELVILLE. Containing 50 full-page Illustrations from Photographs specially taken for the book by C. W. BARNES WARD, and a Map. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

KNOX'S HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION OF RELIGION WITHIN THE REALM OF SCOTLAND

Transcribed into Modern Spelling by C. J. GUTHRIE. With 43 Illustrations. Cheap edition, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 3s. 6d. net.

THE FINAL TRANSITION

By JOHN K. INGRAM, LL.D., Author of "Human Nature and Morals," "Practical Morals," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

THE THREE GREATEST FORCES IN THE WORLD AND THE MAKING OF WESTERN CIVILISATION: THE INCARNATION

By WILLIAM WYNNE PEYTON, Author of "The Memorabilia of Jesus." Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	485	The Drama :
Literature :		"You never can tell" at the
Homer and Science	487	Court Theatre	496
The Merry Heart goes all the		"Becket" at Drury Lane	497
Way	488	"John Chilcote, M.P.," at the
Man in Nature	489	St. James's Theatre	497
Over the Sea to Skye	491	"Leah Kleschna" at the New Physical Culture	491	Theatre	497
To —	492	Fine Art :
The Ancestral Secret	492	The Royal Academy	498
Prize Poets	492	The New Gallery	499
A Literary Causerie :		Art Sales	499
The Dorset Poet	493	Science :
Fiction	494	The Question of Questions	499
The Bookshelf	495	Music: The Use of Opera	501
Book Sales	496	Correspondence	501
		Books Received	502

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

THE Royal Literary Fund will hold its annual dinner on May 15. An old pamphlet tells us how the fund came to be instituted. It had its origin in a club that used to meet, towards the end of the eighteenth century, in the Prince of Wales' coffee-house, Conduit Street; and this is the story of its foundation:

"During the summer recess of the summer of 1788 an event took place which tarnished the character of English opulence and humanity, and afflicted the votaries of knowledge. Floyer Sydenham, the well-known translator of Plato, one of the most useful, if not of the most competent, Greek scholars of his age, a man revered for his knowledge, and beloved for the candour of his temper and the gentleness of his manners, died in consequence of having been arrested and detained for a debt to a victualler who had, for some time, furnished his frugal dinner.

"At the news of this event, every friend of literature felt a mixture of sorrow and shame; and one of the members of the club above mentioned proposed that it should adopt, as its object and purpose, some means to prevent similar afflictions, and to assist deserving authors and their families in distress."

We shall doubtless hear, at the banquet, how many tens of thousands of pounds the trustees of the fund now hold invested. Its early balance-sheets are in striking contrast with its present opulence. The subscriptions received between April 1794 and April 1795 amounted only to £110 5s. The amount paid out for the relief of authors during the same period was only £86 17s. Naturally the individual grants were small. A typical case is that of "the widow of a late Doctor of Divinity." We read that "it was resolved that six guineas should be given to her, two guineas at a time, according to the direction of Mr. Deputy Nicholls." The largest of all the grants is one of twenty guineas to a Doctor of Laws; the justification of the extravagance being that "the difficulties under which he at that time laboured proceeded from the distressed circumstances of a gentleman from whom he used to receive annually a valuable consideration for the services which he rendered him."

A writer in a contemporary makes an attack upon the Society of Authors which, if not inspired by malice, must result from ignorance. This is what he says:

"Our best literature, our poetry, our biography, and our criticism are none of them helped in the least by the Society of Authors."

But it is no part of the functions of the Society of Authors to "help literature," whether good, bad or indifferent. It exists to define and protect literary property, which is quite another matter. Does the writer mean that the Society refuses to admit poets, biographers, and critics to membership? Or that it takes the guineas of poets, biographers, and critics, but denies to them privileges which it accords to its other members? Or what does he mean? We have a strong suspicion that he has been using at random words which mean nothing at all.

Can the civilisation of a country be gauged by the number of its periodicals? If so, America is indeed making culture hum. The latest Newspaper Annual, just issued in the United States, shows that there exist in that country no less than 22,312 periodicals, or approximately one for every 3400 inhabitants. In Germany, on the other hand, where there are more periodicals in comparison with the population than in any other European State, there is one periodical for every 7500 inhabitants; while in the United Kingdom there is, roughly speaking, one to each 9000. The United States, with a population of seventy millions, has absolutely more periodicals than the whole of Europe which has perhaps four hundred million inhabitants.

Equally remarkable is the number of languages represented in the publications of the great Republic sometimes humorously called "Anglo-Saxon." Apart from the English periodicals, no less than forty languages and dialects have their magazines and newspapers. German easily heads the list. Then, a long way behind, comes French. After that, with a fair representation, follow Czech, Dutch, Hebrew, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Spanish, Swedish, and Portuguese: while at the tail end of the list come Arabic, Armenian, Chinese, Finnish, Gaelic, Hungarian, Icelandic, Japanese, Lithuanian, Russian, Servian, Slovenian, and Welsh. Even the Redskins have a paper; and Latin lives in a Boston monthly, the Classical Review.

Under the head of "Our Neglected Monuments," the Quarterly Review in a well-informed article deals in a calm and dispassionate spirit with a subject of great national interest. The recent vandalism at Berwick-upon-Tweed in filling up the ancient fosse and demolishing the considerable fragments of the Edwardian Walls is very fully narrated and lamented. More acts of demolition were in contemplation, but thanks to the disinterested action of a public-spirited resident, the Local Government Board stepped in and acquired the Bell Tower and a considerable extent of the ancient wall. The modern walls of Elizabeth's reign (rather massive ramparts faced with stone) are still entire and fairly well preserved, but even they are threatened by the City Fathers, who have ever and anon before them a scheme for running an unnecessary roadway through them to the insignificant suburb of the Greens, the abode of the local fishermen. The ancient bridge over the Tweed—a unique and beautiful structure—built from the Royal Exchequer between 1611 and 1624, is also threatened. Since 1700, by writ of William III., £100 (never fully expended or accounted for) has been annually paid to the Corporation for repairing the Bridge, and yet the Town Council have the assurance to claim the right to disfigure and practically destroy the outstanding features of this fine international structure.

The writer in the Quarterly, after dealing exhaustively and interestingly with other cases of vandalism and explaining the excellent and effective provisions for preserving ancient monuments in Italy, Germany, France and other Continental States, suggests that a National Commission similar to the Historical Manuscripts Commission, which has done invaluable work in printing and cataloguing the contents of the charter chests of our historic families, should be as early as possible called into existence, to visit and catalogue our Ancient Monuments with power to schedule them and place them under national control. Where they are private property they should be purchased compulsorily at a reasonable price based upon three years' average rental; but at Berwick and other towns where they are earning no rent they should be enclosed and protected pro bono publico, free of price. The gods, alas, fight in vain against ignorance and stupidity. Did not Lord Avebury fight for ten weary years before even he could persuade our Conscript Fathers to pass the act of 1882 to protect our ancient monuments? Vested interests and so-called private rights of property stood in the way: as if any one individual or group of individuals or any little corporate body could inherit the sacred monuments of a great and honoured past! What would the United States of America give to possess monuments such as are scattered through the three kingdoms? Reverence for the past is cultivated and encouraged in republican America, but our local Dogberrys are hidebound and arrogant, and pride themselves on a wicked and senseless utilitarianism. Vix ea voco nostra—we can scarcely call these things our own; for are not these ancient monuments, like the English Bible, like Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton and many others too numerous to recite here, the inheritance of the Anglo-Saxon race all over the world?

It is looking back into the golden years to recall the pastoral time when the world was young. We have come through stone and iron and many ages, and to-day it depends on the fancy of the thinker whether he name it the mechanical and decadent age, which Bacon said followed by natural sequence pastoralism, war, art, or find with imaginative insight the elements of poetry behind steam and electricity. A delightful history of the "Three Phases of Pastoral Sentiment," its birth, its prime, its artificial period, swinging back even now to naturalism with sublime and unconquerable hope, will be found in the Edinburgh Review. The shepherds and shepherdesses that flitted joyously through our European literature are no more. It is the Bible that contains the abiding records of that pastoral life which to-day supplies much of our imagery and stirs poetic feeling. The shepherd is the moving and inspiring figure. Abraham watching his flock on the plain of Moreh, David the onetime shepherd-boy singing of his heavenly Shepherd, Solomon's ideal pictures, supply a whole line of story and romance, till that starlit night when simple shepherds were selected as worthy of divine tidings. Of course it may be said that Christian pastoralism was foreshadowed and anticipated in pagan times, for do we not even now, after the lapse of centuries, step on tiptoe with bated breath into that temple in Alexandria where the divine image of Adonis, his wan limbs limp with the boar's wound, reposes amidst flowers, and our ears hear the intoxicating chant of the whispered hymn—all as depicted by Theocritus in his matchless Ode? Is there anything new under the sun? This article is a prose poem and seems to recite with a rhythm of its own, here and there rather exuberantly, the writer's over-flowing study of a beautiful and idyllic period when life seems, on looking back, a dream of poetry. Our age of prose is spiritualised and purified by such a charming retrospect.

In connection with the article in a recent issue of the ACADEMY on "The Glory of Somerset," a correspondent sends us an interesting quotation from George Gissing:

"I have been spending a week in Somerset. The right June weather put me in the mind for rambling, and my thoughts turned to the Severn Sea. I went to Glastonbury and Wells, and on to Cheddar, and so to the shore of the Channel at Clevedon, remembering my holiday of fifteen years ago, and too often losing myself in a contrast of the man I was then and what I am now. Beautiful beyond all words of description that nook of oldest England; but that I feared the moist and misty winter climate, I should have chosen some spot below the Mendips for my home and resting-place. Unspeakable the charm to me of those old names; exquisite the quiet of those little towns, lost amid tilth and pasture, untouched as yet by the fury of modern life, their ancient sanctuaries guarded, as it were, by noble trees and hedges overrun with flowers. In all England there is no sweeter and more varied prospect than that from the hill of the Holy Thorn at Glastonbury; in all England there is no lovelier musing-place than the leafy walk beside the Palace Moat at Wells. As I think of the golden hours I spent there, a passion of which I can give no name takes hold upon me; and my heart trembles with an indescribable ecstasy."

Dr. Charlton Bastian has had an amusing experience in connection with the American request that he should write the book on the "Origin of Life" to which we referred the other day. The publishers failed to confirm the request of their editor, on the ground that, having the repute of a conservative firm, they could scarcely publish a work which was in conflict with accepted views. One would have thought that the publication of a "New Scientific Series" was the last enterprise to be expected in such a quarter. However, Dr. Bastian is no stranger to this state of mind; and his book proceeds unchecked.

The revived interest in the author of "Evelina" has resulted in a proposal that the Bath Corporation shall put a tablet on the wall of 23 Great Stanhope Street, where Fanny Burney once lived. Her first visit to Bath was in 1780 in company with Mrs. Thrale, and her journal is full of enthusiastic praise of the elegance of its houses, the beauty of its streets, and its enchanting prospects. Her next visit was in 1791, when she was introduced by Lady Spencer to Georgina Duchess of Devonshire.

Fanny Burney's most eventful residence in Bath was, however, in 1817, when she was occupied in nursing her invalid husband whom she had the honour of presenting to Queen Charlotte in the Pump Room. Both parties seem to have been fascinated, but no sooner had the Queen departed than General d'Arblay "sank upon a bench near the wall," overcome with pain. A few months later he died in Great Stanhope Street, and was buried in Walcot Churchyard.

"Annals of Ipswich," by Nath. Bacon (grandson of Lord Keeper Sir Nicholas Bacon), sometime Town Clerk and Recorder, was published in 1884 by subscription without an Index (a 4to volume of 600 pages) and it is now proposed to issue a carefully compiled one to render the valuable contents more accessible, as well as to bring the various extracts from the Town Records and documents of which the book is made up to light. There are many valuable facts stated therein, which for want of an index are simply lost. A fact of much interest to librarians and others is the foundation of the Town Library in 1612. Norwich was founded in 1608, and Bristol in 1613. The accounts of the famous Guild of Corpus Christi, the Christ Hospital, and Tooley's foundation, &c., are noted in detail. Passive resistance was not unknown in those times, but it was for the parson's pay that two yards of cloth were seized. The details of weights and measures are quaint to a degree. The famous proverb "to hunt for a needle in a bottle of hay" (which was to weigh about 6 or 7 lbs.) comes from this county. The work will be printed by Messrs. Sparks and Co. Limited, Caxton Printing Works, and is to be strictly limited to 100 copies signed and numbered.

The proposal of the Moore Memorial Committee to remove Thomas Moore's remains from Bromham churchyard to the Glasnevin cemetery at Dublin presents a difficulty. The lover of Moore can scarcely dissociate his memory from the Wiltshire cottage in which he lived so long, or the room in which he died, and in which his ghost is said still to appear, or the hamlet in which the memory lingers of the good deeds of his wife. Moreover Moore, who was the best of husbands and fathers, lies buried appropriately by his wife and two of his children, and one can almost imagine him uttering the Shakespearean malediction against any one who stirs his bones. That he belongs by his genius to Ireland seems an inadequate reason for breaking up his family sepulchre. Is there any precedent for such an act?

Another literary memorial in contemplation is a monument to Eugène Sue at Annecy. His is the second great literary name connected with the little town; the first being that of Rousseau, who was received there by Madame de Warens when he ran away from the engraver to whom he was apprenticed at Geneva, and who had beaten him for stealing apples. Sue retired to live there after the "coup d'état," Paris being then impossible to him on account of his political opinions. Though a Socialist of Socialists, he was luxurious in his personal habits. The story goes that, every morning, when he sat down to work, his valet brought him a new pair of straw-coloured kid gloves which he drew on before dipping a gold pen into a silver inkpot to write that "no one has the right to superfluities while any one is deprived of necessities."

It is doubtful whether Sue's novels are any longer read, but at the time of "The Mysteries of Paris," he was the most conspicuous novelist of his day. A selection from the letters which he received from the readers of that sensational serial was lately published in a French paper, and proved how large and how "mixed" was his public. Not only did the poor write to ask him for money. The rich also wrote to ask him to be their almoner—Mme. de Rothschild among their number. Lamartine addressed him as "my dear prose poet." A German Prince wrote asking leave to introduce "my cousin Prince Max of Bavaria." A musician made his story the theme of an oratorio, and horticulturists named new kinds of roses after his heroines.

Naturally, too, he received criticisms of his stories, and corrections of his inaccuracies. "You are mistaken," wrote one who evidently knew, "in supposing that the death penalty is gratuitous. No, sir. The unhappy wife of a victim of the guillotine in our part of the country has just had her furniture seized to defray the costs of the execution." Advice was also offered as to the fate of the sympathetic Fleur-de-Marie. A correspondent wrote all the way from Belgium to say that he would like to see her end as the directress of a charitable institution. "Arrange that for me, if you please, Monsieur Sue."

Finally there were letters from ladies desirous of the writer's acquaintance. One lady in the provinces has offered to present him with an Etruscan vase, and plaintively complains that he has promised to come and fetch it, but has allowed two years to pass without doing so. Another writes: "Sir, I know your taste to be refined. Please pay a visit to my collection of pictures in the Rue Taitbout. It is on the third story, and my name is on the door." One wonders whether any novelist is as popular as all that nowadays.

Though the date of the Barbier Centenary has passed, the celebration has, for some reason, been postponed until May 29. We may spend the interval in recalling the circumstances of the poet's election to the Academy. It was in 1868; and the favourite was "le bon Théo"—Théophile Gautier, author of "Mademoiselle de Maupin." But Gautier was Princess Mathilde's librarian, and there was a conspiracy, led by the Comte de Montalembert, to find a rival candidate whose election would annoy the Emperor and his family. The Count asked Edouard Grenier to find him a man, and Grenier suggested Barbier. "Who is he?" asked the Count. "The author of 'Iambes.'" "But I thought he was dead." "Not at all. I met him yesterday." "Is he the man who wrote:

'Je n'ai jamais chargé qu'un homme de ma haine:
Sois maudit, o Napoléon!'

"Certainly." "Then he's the man for us." And Guizot and Thiers were consulted, and approved; and Auguste Barbier beat Théophile Gautier by 18 votes to 14.

We have just received the German translations of George Moore's "Evelyn Innes" and "Sister Theresa." They are published in two volumes under the common title, "Irdische und himmlische Liebe" (Earthly and Heavenly Love). In a brief preface, the editor, Dr. Max Meyerfeld, who is not the translator, tells us that Moore revised his two novels in June 1904, rewriting the whole of "Evelyn Innes," and that the novel has vastly gained by the changes. German critics consider Evelyn Innes and Owen Asher the most artistic types of psychological character-drawing since Flaubert, and that in them Moore has attained the zenith of soul-analysis.

The latest production at the Deutsche Theatre, Berlin, deals with University life. The subject was treated incidentally, it will be remembered, in Alt-Heidelberg, and different phases of school life form the subjects of such popular modern plays as Der Probe-Kandidat, Flachsmann als Erzieher and Traumulus. The new work by Ferdinand Wittenbauer is entitled Der Privatdozent, and deals with the difficulties of the professorial staff, greatly complicated by the fact that the "professor's daughters must be married—that is the vocation of the Privatdozenten." A Privatdozent is a sort of tutor or lecturer who works under the chief professors. The somewhat conventional plot is atoned for by an original ending, in which all are not rewarded according to their deserts, by excellent dialogue, and some clever character-drawing, but the piece will scarcely take its place among those mentioned above.

Word comes from Sydney of a new anthology of Australasian verse, compiled by Mr. A. G. Stephens, which will be published shortly in Sydney and London. There is a great vogue, it seems, for poetry in Australia. The country has a long list of poets, Lawson, Paterson, Ogilvie, Barcroft Boake, Victor Daley, Bernard O'Dowd, Lindsay Gordon; and their works sell, not by the hundred, as do those of most of our living poets in England, but by the thousand—to be read not only in drawing-rooms and libraries, but by swagmen's camp-fires and in shearers' huts. The anthology of Australasian poets made some years ago by Mr. Douglas Sladen is now no longer adequate; and English readers will welcome the opportunity of becoming better acquainted with work that has made so wide an appeal in the country of its origin.

LITERATURE

HOMER AND SCIENCE

A Handbook of Homeric Study. By HENRY BROWNE, S. J.,
Professor of Greek at University College, Dublin.
(Longmans, 6s.)

FATHER BROWNE'S book of three hundred and twenty pages, pretty closely printed, is intended for "beginners" and "young students," probably for sixth-form boys, and men who aim at honours in Moderations. For our part we think that the best thing for such students to do is to read Homer "for human pleasure," to read him steadily, and read him whole, in the manner of Ronsard, who, in one of his poems, tells us that he sported his oak, and devoured the "Iliad" in three days, or at least that such was his intention. If, like the man in Voltaire, he looked out of the window, and if Cassandra passed with a handful of roses, probably the "Iliad" was not perused in this rapid fashion. However, we ought to know the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" thoroughly before we trouble ourselves with what Father Browne calls "a mass of complex problems which hardly grow less simple as we proceed."

We read him, and we see linguistic problems; problems of the history of religion; problems of the history of society; problems of the distribution of races; problems of land tenure; problems of the evolution of metallurgy; anthropological problems; archaeological problems; problems Mycenaean and Minoan; the whole tumult of Mr. Arthur Evans's problems; the problem of early writing; surging around us like a sea of cross tides and currents. But the greatest of all these is the literary problem: how did two long epics, with, it is admitted, a certain unity of plot and interest, come into existence in early Greece?

On this problem Father Browne, if we may make the remark without discourtesy, has practically nothing to say. He has "escaped his own notice" in putting forward no coherent and consistent hypothesis as to how the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" came to be what they are. He very properly avoids daring guesses: he probably thinks that the time has not come, and may never come, for an hypothesis which, in Mill's phrase, "colligates all the facts." He says that Mr. Matthew Arnold and Mr. Gladstone "were ranged on the side of extravagant Conservatism." One was a poet, the other "not unlike a poet," "and by such persons dry philology or critical science is very easily brushed aside as a mere impertinence." Now, first: the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" are poetry, and all poets except Coleridge have been partisans of Homeric unity. About poetry, poets have a right to an opinion: they make it, and, more than a legion of Ficks and Kirchhoffs, they know what poetry is, and how it is made. They know that a great poet does not write nonsense. But knowing this, Fick makes his original and earliest poet of the proto-Iliad send Agamemnon into battle in dressing-gown and slippers! Fick was a leader in "critical science," which profited him to the extent indicated. "But," says Father Browne with great naïveté, "everyday science progresses, and it is strange that even now writers are found who pretend that Homeric questions are to be approached not in the 'scientific' but in the 'literary' spirit. Mr. Lang" (in "Homer and the Epic"), "has adopted this strange and to us unconvincing argument." But he and his accomplices (such as Comparetti, who is the sanest of scholars) "perhaps by science mean science falsely so called."

That is precisely what they do mean. Numbers of volumes of "science falsely so called" are poured from the press, in Germany especially, every year. The authors, as Comparetti puts it, pore on the epics through microscopes, looking for these tiny "discrepancies" which Father Browne himself disdains to dwell upon; finding them where they do, and also where they do not exist; and using them as an argument for multiple authorship. These men treat literature as literature cannot be treated, and call the method "critical science." But the Provost of Oriel is not that kind of man; he is, in England, the greatest living Homeric scholar; and he (p. 135) is quoted as one of "the most severe advocates of unity." Yet he is "scientific," the field of philology being his chosen domain. Every sane man sees (even Mr. Lang sees) that, though the Homeric poems are literature, the Homeric problems, like all problems, must be studied in "the scientific spirit," that is, in the spirit of organised common sense. We must know everything that is knowable about the poems; but we must never forget that they are literature. For example, we must know all that philology can tell us about evidences of different stages of syntax and changes in meanings of words. Mr. Monro knows all that, and remains (with reserves for certain passages and even books) one of "the most severe advocates of unity." We must also know all that Mr. Evans, M. Pictet, and others can tell us about early writing, from the time of palæolithic man in France, to the earliest and later texts of Crete and the Levant. Obviously the question of the possible early existence of the poems in writing is of the highest importance. But Father Browne practically ignores it. He makes the Achæans "sub-Mycenæan," he allows that the men of the Mycenæan civilisation could write, and yet he dates the transmission of the poems, by means of writing, only from the sixth century B.C. If men could write long before that, why should the poems not have been written long before that?

Another branch of science with which we cannot dispense is the comparative science of literary evolution. We must study it from the songs of Australian black fellows upwards and onwards, through Volkslieder; early professional poetry; hymns handed down by oral tradition; poems written in an age when reading was almost never practised; epics said by "science" to have been formed by combining detached lays, and so forth. On this science Father Browne has nothing at all to say; yet of all the many sciences subservient to Homeric studies it is the most important. He does not mention Comparetti's masterly study of the Kalewala, as a prelude to the study of Homer; of the early mediæval French epics, the chansons de geste, he makes no use. He has, really, no hypothesis of the mode in which the Homeric poems became what they are, except that they were moulded under the influence of "schools," after they had reached a certain, or rather uncertain point (pp. 85, 86, 130, 131, 277). What was a school? What were the scholars aiming at, what kind of audience had they in their eye, how did they mean to gratify that audience? Why, if there were plenty of "lays," did they work them up into long epics, and how did they do it? We find no answer to these questions; indeed, we find little to show that the author has seriously reflected on these questions, or on the problem of writing in connection with them. What we must misdoubt, the science of statistics, we get in abundance. But our materials are too scanty for real statistical study. We really are not prepared to believe that the highly civilised persons of the so-called early "Achilleid" had not the conception of justice because the word for "just" occurs only three times in the "Iliad"!

The wrath of Achilles arises from nothing but a consciousness of what is just and what is unjust. Read the first three hundred lines of that Book I. of the "Iliad," which our author prefers to the whole of the "Odyssey" (the "Odyssey," to him, is mere "Homer and water!"), and you will see that the whole interest and action turn on what is just and unjust, in the circumstances. The presence or absence of the word dikaïos has nothing to do with the matter. If we say that an action is "a shame," instead of saying that it is "unjust," are we to be told that we have no sense of justice? And, as other words for the idea occur, though not the word "just," is anything gained by remarking that "so much as the word 'just' or 'holy' does not exist"? (p. 121.) This is carrying the fallacy of the philologist very far!

Anthropology is another science needed by the Homeric student. When he has learned it, he knows that the observations of "critical science" on various modes of disposing of the bodies of the dead (pp. 287-288) rest on ignorance of anthropology. We are not, in this work, given too much science, we are given far too little of that excellent thing. It is an honest, candid, careful, and, within its limits, it is a lucidly arranged book. If it makes its readers think for themselves, if they will read it reflectively, and test the author's conclusions, it will be a very useful manual. Teachers may greatly benefit their pupils by asking them to criticise the author's modes of reasoning.

ANDREW LANG.

THE MERRY HEART GOES ALL THE WAY

Coryat's Crudities. By THOMAS CORYAT. Reprinted from the Edition of 1611. In Two Volumes. (Glasgow: MacLehose & Sons, 25s. net.)

THE name of Thomas Coryat, if mentioned during his lifetime, was more often than not the signal for indulgent laughter, but few men attained so quickly as he did to posthumous fame. Playing at home the part of a hanger-on at Court, a privileged buffoon, he had wit enough, as soon as he gave attention to foreign lands, to turn even his follies to good account, and it is impossible to peruse his racy pages without an ever-broadening smile at the quips and oddities of an adventurer always on such excellent terms with himself and with the world. Since his death, fortune has certainly favoured Coryat in several ways. Few books are more difficult to procure, or even to see, than the famous "Crudities," and the careful reprint which now appears will only enhance the value of those copies of the original which are known to exist, by drawing attention to the personality of the writer: a rare and original being, who has something still to disperse "to the nourishment of the travelling Members of this Kingdome."

The humour of many of the threescore panegyrics, which themselves accounted to a large extent for the unusual vogue of the book on its first appearance, has of course considerably evaporated with time. But so great a galaxy of genius and talent can hardly be invoked in vain. There is at least one laugh on every page. A certain amount of repetition must be discounted, and the reader will find himself fairly familiar with Coryat's most notable adventures before he has read a line of his author. But it is not every man who could secure a hearing, even with the aid of sixty of the choicer spirits of his time. Ben Jonson, Rowland Cotton, John Donne, Laurence Whitaker, Inigo Jones, Michael Drayton, half in mockery, half in earnest, commend the ingenious Coryat and his diversions to their contemporaries; and their "encomiasticks" of "that observative and long-winded Gentleman" are reinforced by the rhymes, riddles, and macaronics of a good many other professional and unprofessional testimonial-writers. The dedication to Henry, Prince of Wales, and the Epistle to the Reader, strike another note. "Of all the pleasures in the world travell is (in my opinion) the sweetest and most delightfull." Coryat was long before his time in feeling this. He may be said to appeal now to a converted audience. We would all be up and away this moment if we could! To us the note of cautious persuasion rings with an almost pathetic cadence. Coryat was concerned also with the superior critic, only too ready "to chastise the lucubrations of most kinde of writers." He felt with a reasonable sincerity the need of disarming him. On the whole, he need not have been so anxious. He had friends of worth as well as of wit; he had been well received among scholars; he had entered into "a league of friendship" with some of the noblest characters of his time, both at home and abroad. His book was destined to live, to take in the present year a new lease of life, a fact which would have delighted and surprised him, had he been able to foresee it when he hung up his shoes in the little Somersetshire church of Odcombe, nearly three hundred years ago.

As our merry traveller footed it through Europe, his thoughts reverted continually to Odcombe. He had, no doubt, inherited something from his father which made these adventures possible. Some of the poems of George Coryat are appended to the "Crudities," and testify eloquently enough to a son's devotion. Several of his friends gave him considerable credit here. As Richard Badley wrote:

"Yet cannot I suppress, without digrace
The love thou bare thy Natalitall place.
For in the midst of thy most Alpish waies,
When ruinous rocks did threat to end thy daies,
No doubt, thou couldst have wisht thyself at home,
To live, and lay thy bones in sweete Odcombe.
But after thou hadst past those furious pikes,
Which feare and terrour to the Pilgrime strikes;
And did the Garden of our world descric,
Within the wombe of fertill Lombardie;
Immortal Mantua could not steale thy love,
Nor once from Odcombe thine affections move.
Wherein, Ulysses-like, thou didst display
Such love, as he bore to his Ithaca."

This is a fair example of the "panegyrics." But though Coryat was not destined to lay his bones at Odcombe, he has left that remote village a bequest worth having. It is no wonder that the custodians of the place preserved his shoes until, presumably, they fell to pieces.

Sir Archibald Geikie has lately reminded us that appreciation of the glories of the Alps, of mountains generally, is a thing of quite recent growth. The panegyrist just quoted was obviously impressed by his friend's hardihood: he was hardly envious of his fortune. But Coryat himself, though he might have been puzzled by the attitude, for instance, of a Ruskin, did not leave his faculty of observation dormant when he was passing through the mighty and miraculous scenes of divine handiwork with which we in our day are, in a sense, almost too familiar. His notes are those of the man who finds good in everything.

"I saw many flockes of goats in Savoy, which they penne at night in certaine low roomes under their dwelling houses. On every Alpe I saw wonderfull abundance of pine-trees, especially about the toppe and many of them of a very great heighth and betwixt the toppe and the foote there are in many of these mountains wilde Olive-trees, Chestnut-trees, Walnuts, Beeches, Hasel-trees, &c. The whole side of a hill being replenished with all these sorts of trees."

Then he discourses of the dangers. The risks of avalanche and landslip are realistically set forth. He points out that boulders the size of those of "Stoneage by the towne of Amesbury in Wiltshire" may slip betimes across your path: he is amazed at the "stupendous heighth" of the mountains. And then he turns with evident relief to the consideration of butterflies. His pictures are vivid and varied. The contrast and yet the similarity of custom, costume and life in the countries visited, regarded from a modern standpoint, are so remarkable as to set the ordinary moderately-travelled reader thinking pleasantly at every turn. Coryat came home to be laughed at for using a fork, a strange and finicking habit learned in Italy, but hardly approved by his own robust countrymen. Here he showed his sense, but all foreign habits were not equally to his liking. He was greatly exercised over the high beds of Savoy, the clumsy bed-coverings of Germany, and occasionally offended by the outlandish head-dresses of women in various parts. He is free-spoken on most social topics, if somewhat sensitive to the ridicule of which he was often the victim at home; and yet his protestations of personal virtue are quite convincing. And there are numerous sidelights. In Venice he saw women act, a thing which seemed an innovation: "though I have heard that it hath beene sometimes used in London." He dips into history and ecclesiology. His attitude is seldom insular. His eyes are open to receive all sorts of impressions; it is entirely to his credit that the unsurpassable beauty of the Queen of the Adriatic stands out admirably in his vivacious pages.

Coryat's five months' itinerary included that very portion of Europe which is most accessible to ourselves. A tourist with time on his hands might do worse than follow so genial a guide over the same ground. Methods of transport have changed, but that is all to the good. A Coryat may become a pedestrian by necessity, or a Belloc from choice: most of us will be wise to avail ourselves of the latest appliances of steam and electricity; and if we use the time thus saved in acquiring the skill of pioneers like Coryat, we may deserve as well as he does the thanks of those who come after.

MAN IN NATURE

The Evolution of Man. By ERNST HÆCKEL. Translated by JOSEPH McCABE. Two vols. (Watts, 45s.)

THE problem of the origin of life, and of man in particular, has always exercised a peculiar fascination over the human mind. In these latter days, while many have contrived to satisfy their thirst for information on this subject by the adoption of ancient and venerable traditions, others have ventured to push their inquiries further, though in so doing, they bring down upon themselves the charge of impious curiosity.

Our great countryman, Darwin, did more in his lifetime to lift the veil of this great mystery than had been done in all the centuries before him. But so firmly had the old traditions established themselves that the gift of his labours to the world caused his name and all that it stood for to become anathema to the multitude. Excraction poured from the throats of well-nigh the whole civilised community of the world. A few, however, of the more advanced minds grasped the immense importance of the new revelation, and among these Huxley in our country and Haeckel in Germany stand out conspicuously. It became evident to them that the old idea of creation must give place to the scheme of evolution propounded by the Master. And they ceased not, day nor night, to insist on this fact.

Professor Haeckel did for Germany what Huxley did for this country; and now, thanks to the work of the translator, Haeckel's contributions to this tremendous issue are almost as familiar among us as those of Huxley. But there is a great difference in the attitude of these two men with regard to the interpretation of the now famous Darwinian theory. Huxley, while convinced of the truth of evolution, never adopted Darwin's principle of "Natural Selection" which accounted for this evolution. For him the evidence, irresistible in so far as evolution was concerned, was not strong enough to support the hypothesis of selection. With Haeckel it was otherwise. Gifted with an exuberant and fertile imagination he has, in the minds of the more cautious, not seldom outrun the bounds of legitimate inference: he has pushed his conclusions further than the evidence warrants. This criticism applies, however, rather to matters of detail than to broad principles.

Like Huxley, Haeckel has spared no effort to place the fruits of the new learning before the lay public, believing that the right conception of this earth and its inhabitants, even though it may clash with preconceived notions, is far more likely to make for righteousness than to bring about the evils which the timid prophesied.

When the hypothesis propounded in the "Origin of Species" first saw the light, a thrill of horror ran through society. But when the "Descent of Man" appeared, it was felt indeed that the foundations of morality and religion would be undermined if the propagation of ideas so blasphemous were tolerated: and bell, book, and candle were vigorously used. After a while, when the excitement had subsided somewhat, and men began to examine this ogre that had excited such alarm, they found him surprisingly comely. To-day even those who occupy our pulpits are not a little proud of displaying the fact that they are on speaking terms with him.

Just now we are entering on an acute phase of this consequence of the invasion of the Darwinian theory. All the outer forts were captured long since, but the inner citadel yet remains in the hands of a few irreconcilables. While admitting defeat on the main issue, they still refuse to allow the application of the evolution theory to man himself. They are goaded into action by a sword of their own forging, to wit, that they cannot bring themselves to admit their descent from apes. This very exclusive attitude is really quite unnecessary, for the evolution theory demands no such admission. The human race, and the apes, have both come from the same common stock. Whether they accept this or not is after all immaterial.

With a view to the hastening of their capitulation, the great siege guns of Professor Haeckel have been modified, so to speak, so as to become available for the bombardment of that portion of the fort held by the English-speaking defenders. Huxley long since initiated the attack in a series of crushing arguments familiar to most of our readers under the title of "Man's Place in Nature." Haeckel's work adds nothing to this of any importance, but it amplifies the evidence. He gathers the public into one vast lecture-room, so to speak, and there unfolds the story of evolution piece by piece: beginning with the lowest of living animals and leading up to man himself; he shows them the warp and woof of life, and demonstrates the working of the looms.

The two handsome volumes before us have been admirably translated from the fifth (enlarged) edition of the German work. The abstruse and puzzling phenomena of embryology occupy the whole of the first volume; and this will be found hard reading indeed to those who have no practical acquaintance with the subject. The second volume is devoted to the vexed problem of our ancestry—beginning with the lowest forms of life and working upwards through "Our Worm-like Ancestors," "Our Fish-like Ancestors," "Our Five-toed Ancestors," and "Our Ape-like Ancestors." But besides these we have some luminous chapters on the evolution of the nervous system, sense organs, vascular system, and so on. A summary on the "results of anthropogeny" closes the book.

In spite of the infinite pains which the author and translator have taken, it is open to question whether the vast mass of information here collected will prove capable of assimilation by those for whom it is prepared. There are, however, a large and rapidly increasing number of people who, if they cannot digest the contents of these tomes in their entirety, will at least find in them not only a source of unfailing interest, but also a mine of facts, the bearing of which they can fully grasp.

Haeckel, as we have already remarked, differs markedly from Huxley in his mental attitude towards this great question, and this is painfully evident in his aggressiveness. He is not content with proving the sweet reasonableness of the Evolution theory: he makes no secret of the fact that he desires at the same time to deal a death blow to the Creed of Christendom. Having succeeded, he proposes to give the world a new dogma—Monism!

The monistic or mechanical philosophy of Nature:

"holds that only unconscious, necessary, efficient causes are at work in the whole field of nature, in organic life, as well as in inorganic changes."

For Professor Haeckel the monistic is the only possible philosophy. It is the soul of these two ponderous volumes; it crops up in the most unexpected places, and jostles arrogantly against the prevailing creed of to-day as though it were already dispossessed. While the triumph of Evolution is assured, it is by no means so certain that this new cult of Professor Haeckel's will achieve a like success. To our thinking these volumes would have lost nothing by the suppression of his philosophy. A little of the leaven of speculation can do no harm when introduced into the magma of scientific fact, but in excess the whole becomes so extremely vacuolated as to be too frail for service. Monism at present can only be looked upon as a sort of nebulous philosophy; and this does not come within the pale of Science.

In the first of these two volumes Professor Haeckel refers very briefly to the study—yet in its infancy—of experimental embryology: and to the very remarkable phenomena of parthenogenesis, or virgin birth. The latter is a subject which may well have stimulated the desire of the reader for more facts. For the very latest discoveries, then, in these subjects we would refer him to two volumes just published by Professor Jacques Loeb ("Studies in General Physiology": Unwin). In many respects Professor Loeb reminds us of Haeckel. He deals with the most complex problems, and the most obscure phenomena of life, as though but one interpretation were possible. Thus in a chapter on Geotropism and another on the Heliotropism of animals he appears to regard his subjects as automata. Many of the phenomena he describes are capable of quite another interpretation, however. Most of us, for example, could regard the light or shade seeking proclivities of these creatures as the result of the operation of natural selection: that is to say, whether they shun the light or seek it has been determined by the nature of the food they live upon or the enemies they have to avoid. Nocturnal animals are generally regarded as the descendants of those who sought shelter by day to escape persecution, those of their kind who persistently roamed about having become wiped out of existence. The positively heliotropic animals of Professor Loeb are, however, positively heliotropic because the pangs of hunger compel them to be so; they have no choice between being positively heliotropic or positively starved. Professor Loeb contends that these creatures are either heliotropic or the reverse because they are, so to speak, born so. The protoplasm of their bodies is controlled absolutely by the presence or absence of light: and willy nilly they must hide or come abroad, as 'tis their nature to.

But these essays, which deal with a variety of questions of a similar kind, are all of the highest value; and by the biologist, at any rate, they will be read and re-read with genuine pleasure. They form a solid contribution to our knowledge of the phenomena of life.

W. P. PYCRAFT.

OVER THE SEA TO SKYE

A Summer in Skye. By ALEXANDER SMITH. (Edinburgh: Nimmo, Hay, and Mitchell, 2s. 6d. net.)

THE name of Alexander Smith conveys little to the modern reader. The head of the once famous spasmodic school has passed from the realms of literature into which he was once welcomed as an abiding star, renowned for writing lines that had "the true Shakespearean touch." He was the son of a designer for lace in Kilmarnock, and followed his father's occupation till the age of twenty-one, when he published his poem, "A Life Drama," which was received with acclamation and at once went through many editions. Edinburgh University, with that characteristic interest in the poorer genius of its country which distinguishes it from the English Universities, appointed him secretary to its Senatus, a post he held till his death in 1867 at the age of thirty-six. He wrote very little after his appointment—a novel, which appeared in Good Words, dealing with the life of pattern designers, a book of essays called "Dreamthorp," and a delightful journal, "A Summer in Skye," which has just now been most happily reissued. R. L. Stevenson, when he did praise Edinburgh, has not excelled Smith in his introduction to this book:

"Of all British cities, Edinburgh—Weimar-like in its intellectual and æsthetic leanings, Florence-like in its freedom from the stains of trade, and more than Florence-like in its beauty—is the one best suited for the conduct of a lettered life. The city as an entity does not stimulate like London, the present moment is not nearly so intense, life does not roar and chafe—it murmurs only; and this interest of the hour, mingled with something of the quietude of distance and the past—which is the spiritual atmosphere of the city—is the most favourable of all conditions for intellectual work or intellectual enjoyment. In Edinburgh you do not require to create quiet for yourself; you can have it ready-made. Life is leisurely; but it is not the leisure of a village, arising from a deficiency of ideas and motives—it is the leisure of a city reposing grandly on tradition and history, which has done its work, which does not require to weave its own clothing, to dig its own coals, to smelt its own iron. And then in Edinburgh, above all British cities, you are released from the vulgarising dominion of the hour. The past confronts you at every street corner. The castle looks down out of history on its gayest thoroughfare. The winds of fable are blowing across Arthur's Seat. Old kings dwelt in Holyrood. Go out of the city where you will, the past attends you like a cicerone."

And so on. Smith's appreciation of Edinburgh is only equalled by his delight in Skye, where the ghost of Ossian calls to him in the blast of the tempest, where spirits hover round the misty mountain-peaks and the visions of second sight and the prophecies of seers meet him on the wet moorlands and in the lonely glens where silence is even to the poet tangible and horrible. He writes poems in the rainy weather, goes to rustic merry-makings, sits by peat fires, and hears old tales that stir the heroic blood or make it creep in fear, and sees and shoots birds or catches fish that were more plentiful then, alas, in the western islands of the bards, than to-day. Go to Skye, and Alexander Smith is no companion to be scoffed at. Perhaps there are some left who have treasured legend and song since he rejoiced in them.

"Who can relate the deaths of the people, who the deeds of mighty heroes, when Fingal, burning in his wrath, consumed the sons of Lochlin? Groans swelled on groans from hill to hill, till night had covered all. Pale, staring like a herd of deer, the sons of Lochlin convene on Lena."

In an essay this passionate admirer of that sounding past writes:

"I would rather be remembered by a song than by a victory. I would rather build a fine sonnet than have built St. Paul's. I would rather be the discoverer of a new image than the discoverer of a new planet. Fine phrases I value more than bank-notes. I have ear for no other harmony than the harmony of words. To be occasionally quoted is the only fame I care for."

It is a gladness that one stone has been raised over this pathetic grave of high hopes, and that oblivion has been routed for the moment from the spot she was covering with moss and weed.

PHYSICAL CULTURE

The Physical Culture Life. By H. I. HANCOCK. (Putnam, 5s.)

THIS is an American book, interesting as such, but not well adapted to English needs. The illustration of the female figure is American, not English. Some of the best known of the English Physical Culture Systems are not mentioned. There is a certain amount of excellent advice which has already been given in more than one English book.

Not only is the book more suitable for American than for English people; it is not well adapted to modern city-life. Of what use to recommend the open-air existence to those whose living depends on office-work? Surely city-life is now established and must be taken for granted. It is no remedy of the modern difficulty to bid people live in the open air or in the country. That is good enough for their holidays, but it is useless for their week-day existence, except in early mornings and summer evenings.

Mr. Hancock has already told us in more than one book that the Japanese System of Physical Training is the best; he has already told us what the Japanese diet is, and in his description he errs far from the exact facts, just as if they had no fish, eggs, and other extras. They do not live on rice: the poor people simply cannot afford much of it. As to the Japanese system of exercise, undoubtedly it suits the Japanese. But does it suit the British people? It may or it may not. Mr. Hancock's idea is perpetual resistance, as far as one can see. Never is there anywhere a free hand. Never is there due advice about muscular economy. It is constant work with sticks and things to grip, constant effort against obstacles. The hands never, never, never shall be free. The trunk movements are good, but many of them belong to other systems. Why should the extremities always be made to grip and exert themselves, when it is the trunk-muscles which we want to strengthen. Surely even the Swedish plan is better than the Hancockian: it attributes no special virtue to a thing because there is strain in it. If the same amount of health can be obtained easily, why always go in for difficulty?

And what about Anglo-Saxon games? One would think from Mr. Hancock's book that they did not exist or that they were not worth mentioning. Apparently nothing can be done with them; except for rowing, &c., they are to be swept away almost altogether; Japanese Jujitsu is to be substituted. There must not be football, but stick-practice. There must not be lawn tennis, but some strain-work. There must not be archery, but pulling at a sort of towel. At least, this is the general impression left by the book.

It seems to the present writer that much of the advice would be useful if only more stress were laid on physical repose and economy, which is at least half of the physical culture life, as of the commercial life; and if we started from games as already existing. We have established institutions in England. We have not only games, but also gymnasia; they are national. To these we may add some Jujitsu, some Hancockian devices. But it is surely better, as in political and other reforms, to begin with what exists and is interesting, and to adapt such things to daily life, and daily life to such things.

As to open air, no one can deny that it is admirable, that it is good as an antidote and change; but for seventy-five per cent. of us it is not feasible as a constant habit. Weak and dependent must be the man who is healthy only in open air.

So also the Japanese system is good as a change, and indeed as part of the foundation of physical life, but it does not already exist among us, and Mr. Hancock is apparently unaware that English people on the whole do not like radical changes. The book, once again, is not adapted for the English character. The author has not a deep acquaintance with us. And the Japanese system, as set forth by Mr. Hancock, is not a complete one.

A man, to write for a nation, must understand its interests, as well as its supposed needs. Mr. Hancock understands some general needs of some people, especially during holidays, but does not seem to understand the interests or the conditions of the majority. He has not studied what already exists in schools and elsewhere throughout England.

His is no new gospel, no feasible gospel for most of us on most days of the week. And the feasible parts of his suggestions have already occurred in other books, which receive no mention from him.

EUSTACE MILES.

TO —

(Alcaics in Stone's phonetic prosody)

FAIR has befallen your extravagant studies,
Francis, yet urge I counsel of excellence :
Seek beauty but shun glory, shun her,
Thy peril and very heart's corrupter.

Not perseverance nor flattering fashion
Can e'er assure us posterity's homage ;
Which only good-fortune, commanding
Genius and giddy chance, awardeth.

How few attempting leave a memorial !
"Heartlessly hard is thy metal, O Corinth,
To grave on, and Thy snowy marble
Mocks the cunning chisel, O Carrara !"

Do what delights you, but to the love for it
Bring no ally. Ah, his delicate passion,
His temper austere, who produceth
In happy hour an immortal offspring !

As life is of life, and spirit of spirit,
His grace of ancient inheritance cometh :
His work is inspir'd with divine breath,
And it ariseth a lively creature.

ROBERT BRIDGES.

THE ANCESTRAL SECRET

My father and mother both hid from me
The Wonderful Story of Romany ;
And my forehead was signed with the Christian sign
To quiet this Romany blood of mine.

But the Bird of the Secret flew out from the wild
And told me that I was a Romany child ;
And my blood began dancing through every vein
As the Wonderful Story grew mine again !

O, I swear, by the crowns of the Wandering Kings,
My blood shall run true to the Ancient Things—
And the life I will live is the life of the free,
For my heart is the heart of a Romany !

CHARLES DALMON.

PRIZE POETS

THE British public is prejudiced against prize poets. It believes that they come to no good—that at the best they subside into country livings and take pupils, paying for the precocity of their youth by the obscure mediocrity of their middle age. Happily, however, there are such things as Honours Registers, in which the rebutting evidence remains on record. We have only to run our eyes down a list of Newdigate prize men, and of the winners of the corresponding prize at Cambridge, in order to see that the writing of prize poetry may lead anywhere—even to Parnassus. Two very eminent poets of the Victorian period both won these prizes at their respective Universities. The entry in the Oxford Register is as follows :

1843. Cromwell. Matthew Arnold. Balliol.

And the corresponding Cambridge entry is :

1829. Timbuctoo. Alfred Tennyson. Trinity.

This is a good start. It is not easy to name any poets of equal rank who ought to have won the prizes but did not. When Wordsworth was at Cambridge, the prize had not yet been instituted. Shelley was expelled from Oxford, and Mr. Swinburne went down without taking his degree (though he stayed long enough to win the Taylorian prize for French). Browning was not a University man, nor was Rossetti. The only names whose absence from the lists provokes astonishment—perhaps in different degree—are those of William Morris, of Exeter, and Sir Lewis Morris, then of Jesus, and subsequently of Penbryn.

Obviously the examiners cannot be expected to find a poet of the first rank to take the prize every year ; but they have "spotted" a good many poets who were something considerably more than versifiers, and a still larger number of men of letters destined to distinction in other branches of the art of literature. Suppose we analyse the Oxford list, taking the poets first, and carefully confining ourselves to well-known names. In addition to Matthew Arnold, we find these six :

1827. Pompeii. Robert Stephen Hawker. Magdalen Hall.

1852. The Feast of Belshazzar. Edwin Arnold. University.

1857. The Temple of Janus. Philip Stanhope Worsley. Corpus.

1860. The Escorial. John Addington Symonds. Balliol.

1880. Sir Walter Raleigh. James Rennell Rodd. Balliol.

1890. Persephone. Robert Laurence Binyon. Trinity.

To which list the names of two poets, best known as hymnodists, and one poet, also known as a Lord Chancellor and as the compiler of a sacred anthology, must be added :

1803. Palestine. Reginald Heber. Brasenose.

1832. Staffa. Roundell Palmer. Trinity.

1836. The Knights of St. John. Frederick William Faber. University.

Now we will take the other men of letters, classifying as best we can, though the classification is hardly possible without cross divisions. We find, to begin with, two novelists :

1871. The Isthmus of Suez. William Hurrell Mallock. Balliol.

1898. The Pilgrim Fathers. John Buchan. Brasenose.

One dramatist :

1878. Ravenna. Oscar O'Flahertie Wilde. Magdalen.

Four critics—two of them of literature, and the remaining two of art—to whose names we will add that of a translator of Virgil, who is also the author of a notable biography of William Morris :

1839. Salsette and Elephanta. John Ruskin. Christ Church.

1842. Charles the Twelfth. John Campbell Shairp. Balliol.

1874. The three hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Shakespeare. William

John Courthope. New College.

1881. Thermopylae. John William Mackail. Balliol.

1882. The Fall of Carthage. Dugald Sutherland MacColl. Lincoln.

Four divines, not less distinguished in literature than in divinity :

1812. The Belvedere Apollo. Henry Hart Milman. Brasenose.

1837. The Gypsies. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley. Balliol.

1845. Petra. John William Burgon. Worcester.

1854. The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyon. Frederick George Lee. St. Edmund Hall.

Two editors—one of the Alpine Journal, and the other of the Times :

1866. Virgil reading his Æneid to Augustus and Octavia. George Yeld. Brasenose.

1875. Livingstone. George Earle Buckle. New College.

And one publisher—the present managing director of the house of Chapman and Hall—whom we see, in the following entry, sitting, without any other publisher to keep him in countenance, upon his pinnacle of glory :

1888. Gordon in Africa. Arthur Waugh. New College.

Our list, clearly, is one not of respectable nonentities, but of distinguished men, though, naturally, of men of letters rather than of men of action. Some of the men of letters, however, have been men of action too. Lord Selborne and Sir Rennell Rodd, now British Minister at Stockholm, are the most notable cases in point ; and there is the name of at any rate one other notable man of action to be added :

1846. Settlers in Australia. George Osborne Morgan. Balliol.

The world knows Mr. Osborne Morgan mainly for his advocacy of the claims of Nonconformists to be buried in consecrated ground; but in 1846, his aspirations were as follows :

Who that has wandered by the ocean shore,
His full soul echoing to the wild waves' roar,
Feels not their spirit as a thrilling bond,
Linking his fancy to the worlds beyond,
Till his rapt thoughts exulting, yearn to stray
With the wan billows glimm'ring far away?
Earth has her barriers, but thou, Mighty Sea,
Bidst man be One, divisionless, like thee.

So much for the Oxford poets. The Cambridge list is not so long, as the prize for poetry was instituted at a later date, and, on the whole, it is less distinguished; but there also we find some names remembered for other achievements than the winning of the prize. The first is that of Whewell, who wrote, in 1814, on "Boadicea," and used his poetical licence to defy grammar in the line: "Yes, Roman; use thy triumph whilst thou may." Then come the names of Macaulay and Praed, who each won the prize twice, and E. G. L. Bulwer of Trinity Hall, whom we know as the first Lord Lytton. William Wordsworth's brother Christopher, Master of Trinity, took the prize in 1827, and Tennyson, as has been mentioned, took it in 1829. The next famous winner is H. J. S. Maine of Pembroke, who is to be identified with Sir Henry Maine, illustrious for his works on Roman Law. The F. W. Farrar who won in 1852 is the Dean and the author of "Eric." The F. W. H. Myers of Trinity, who won in 1861, is the F. W. H. Myers who is famous in connection with psychical research. The S. Colvin of Trinity, the winner of 1865, is Mr. Sidney Colvin, Curator of Prints and Drawings at the British Museum; and the other winners whose names the world in general knows are Mr. T. E. Page of Saint John's (1872), the best of all editors of Horace, and Mr. A. R. Ropes of King's (1881) who, under the pseudonym of Adrian Ross, writes poetry of a kind which his academic performances did not foreshadow.

It may be easy to say which of the prize-winners was the greatest poet, though we need not turn aside here to weigh the relative merits of Tennyson and Matthew Arnold. It would be more interesting, but more difficult, to decide which of them wrote the best prize poem; but if the question were narrowed to: Which of the poems contained the best line? then the answer would hardly be doubtful. On two occasions, at least, the Newdigate is said to have been awarded on the strength of the merits of a single line, and, as the best of good lines always owes something to its context, it may be worth while to print the two passages here, leaving readers to adjudicate between them. The first comes from Mr. D. S. MacColl's poem of "The Fall of Carthage":

But better still in slumber-slanting ease
To be beside the falling of the seas,
To listen and to listen till the tune
Of all the life of all the afternoon
Deepens to one note of a long distress—
The monotone of everlastingness.

A striking line, and not unworthy of the prize; but does not Dean Burgon perhaps surpass it in this—his description of Petra:

Not virgin white—like that old Doric shrine
Where once Athena held her rites divine:
Not saintly grey—like many a minster fane
That crowns the hill or sanctifies the plain:
But rosy red—as if the blush of dawn
Which first beheld them were not yet withdrawn:
The hues of youth upon a brow of woe,
Which men called old two thousand years ago.
Match me such marvel, save in Eastern clime—
A rose-red city—half as old as time.

Comparing either of these extracts with Praed's or Macaulay's rhetoric, one realises at once that rhetoric and poetry are very different things.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

THE DORSET POET

MORE than a hundred years have passed since William Barnes first opened his baby eyes to the light in that corner of the beloved county which he has since immortalised. There amid the "zwellen' downs, the green meads and zedgy brooks," of which he has so often blithely sung, the meditative child drank in ample store of the tranquil delight which he has since managed to communicate to thousands of readers. The spirit of nature itself breathes through his poems, their very artlessness renders them the more impressive. The right phrase comes to him instinctively, without any of that searching for effect so obvious in the work of many writers of our time. He is quite unconsciously pictorial—no, the word does him wrong: it is the scene itself which he brings before us. Take this from "The Shepherd o' the Farm":

"An' I bezide a hawthorn-tree,
Do zit upon the zunny down
While sheades o' zummer clouds do vlee
Wi' silent flight along the groun'.
An' there, among the many cries
O' sheep an' lambs, my dog do pass
A zultry hour, wi' blinken eyes,
An' nose a-stratch'd upon the grass."

Or, again, this from "Thatchèn o' the Rick":

"As I wer out in mead last week,
A-thatchèn o' my little rick,
There green young ee-grass ankle-high
Did sheen below the cloudless sky;
An' over hedge in tother groun',
Among the bennets dry an' brown,
My dun wold meäre, wi' neck a-freed
From Zummer work, did snort an' veed;
An' in the sheäde o' leafy boughs,
My vew wold ragged-cwoated cows,
Did rub their zides upon the rails,
Or switch 'em wi' their heäry tails."

With the same directness and simplicity he can touch upon the joys and sorrows of the untutored heart. No one can sing the bliss of "maidens gay wi' playsome chaps" more tunefully than he. He chronicles the charms of his "feäir Jeanes" and his "blushèn Fannys" with most hearty goodwill. He records the humble, wholesome delights of hay-makings, and harvest homes, and the like, with characteristic vividness, and he can touch more delicate strings with a sure and sympathetic finger:

"Ah! sad wer we as we did peäce
The wold church road, wi' downcast feäce

Vor always there, as we did goo
To church, thik stile did let us drough
Wi' spreadèn eärms that wheel'd to guide
Us each in turn to tother zide.
An' vu'st ov all the train he took
My wife, wi' winsomegait an' look;
An' then zent on my little maid
A-skippen onward, overjay'd.

An' then, a-wheelen roun', he took
On me, 'ithin his third white nook,
An' in the fourth, a-sheäken wild,
He zent us on our giddy child.
But eesterday he guided slow
My downcast Jenny, vull o' woe,
An' then my little maid in black
A-walken softly on her track;
An' after he'd a-turn'd ageän,
To let me goo along the leäne,
He had noo little bwoy to vill
His last white eärms, an' they stood still."

To turn over the pages of Barnes is to breathe fresh air, to feast our eyes on green fields, to hear the "russlèn hay" or the slow swaying of the "bendèn bulrush"; always with that extraordinary impression of actuality. To the crowded dweller in cities his poems should indeed be a boon; the dialect may at first repel, but once mastered will be found to lend additional charm. Such words as

"bennets" (flower stalks), "blooth" (fruit blossom), "kecks" (stems of hemlock or cow-parsley), are wonderfully suggestive of the things described, while surely "bibber" (to shake with cold), "gnang" (to mock), "coll" (to embrace), are more expressive than the counterparts to which we are accustomed.

Some of Barnes' phrases are as felicitous as any to be found in the works of better-known and more highly prized poets.

"An' when the evenin' sky was peille
We heard the warblèn nightengale,
A-drawn out his wlonesome zong,
In windèn music down the drong.

Though nothen yet did come in zight,
A-shirren on the strayèn stream."

Barnes was a scholar and a philologist, but above all a lover of nature, and especially of his own native Dorset, where, even in this bustling twentieth century, nature still rules supreme. Yes, though "the white road up a-thirt the hill" is ploughed by traction engines; though, mingling with the scent of new-mown hay and meadowsweet and honeysuckle, is the lingering aroma of the motor-car which blithely runs over the shepherd's dog and fills the heart of the cottage-mother with fear; even though "Jeäne" and "Fanny" stand in their doorways, wearing the latest mode of blouse, and confining their waving locks with Hinde's hair-curlers, even still the Dorset of to-day is the Dorset of William Barnes. The railroad may cleave the landscape, yet it disturbs in but small measure the prevailing placidity; at the wayside station you may still hear the pipe of a blackbird in a neighbouring copse, or the jubilant song of a lark springing upwards from the young corn. The ploughboy, whistling as he plods the furrow, scarce turns his head to look after the vanishing automobile, the distant hoot of which is soon lost amid homely farmyard sounds; the heavy cloud of smoke that hangs a moment or two in the clear air, as the traction-engine with its attendant train of grimy waggons clatters along, is dispelled by the first sweet fresh breeze from the downs.

Modern life bustles on, and leaves Dorset as it found it, peaceful, unspoilt, solitary. Man is insignificant in the midst of these great fields, these open spaces; the beauty of these "woody hollows," the width and freedom of the downs, shame narrow aims and sordid ambitions. The only life that matters here is country life, the natural life, with the good earth under one's feet and the open sky above—a life spent amid growing things and dumb friendly beasts.

It is a satisfaction to think that Barnes, despite the eighty-six long years of life during which science and civilisation made more rapid progress than at any other period of the world's history, should have left his Dorset in so many respects unchanged; it is, I repeat, even more satisfactory to reflect that the Dorset which he loved is in existence at this day. At a stone's throw from the dusty high-road one may still light upon many a hamlet where life has been at a standstill for the last hundred years. Here are cottages with wonderful thatched roofs and diamond-paned windows, little gardens where sweet-william and phlox, lavender and lad's-love grow in delicious profusion. "Grammer," in her gathered bonnet, draws water from the well; "Grandfer," a shepherd in a white smock-frock, wanders homewards crook in hand; a group of children playing in the lane are chanting the old charm as they rub their chubby legs with dock-leaves: Out nettle, in dock. In dock, out sting. The unusual height of this privet-hedge is due to the fact of a witch's proximity. Her neighbours don't like to be "overlooked." She is a kindly old body nevertheless, and uses her power for good; on the topmost shelf of her dresser she keeps a store of herbs, being of opinion that "the Lard did make a cure for everything if one can but find it." She has removed hundreds of warts, not by any actual application to the sufferer's hand, but by picking some particular weed on some particular day and allowing it to wither slowly; as a natural sequence the wart withers, too, and finally disappears.

In spite of hair-curlers and "fayshionable" blouses, in spite even of the advance of education, "the maidens gay and playsome chaps" of Dorset still converse in their own vigorous Doric, the hiring fair is a standing institution; dairy-farming is carried on according to the methods which no doubt prevailed in Barnes' time: the dairyman leasing the cows, and not the land, from the owner, who is obliged to replace all who die or become useless, and even to supply the major part of the animals' winter provender.

Long may this simple, patriarchal, pastoral state of things endure. Long may Dorset remain the "Do'set dear" of which its poet sang. Long may Dorset folks enjoy the "happy, happy life" which the kindly old man so warmly wished them.

The singer has been asleep now for many years, but the "music o' the dead," which he himself knew well how to value, lives on for all who care to hearken to it.

M. E. FRANCIS.

FICTION

Dorset Dear. By M. E. FRANCIS (MRS. FRANCIS BLUNDELL). (Longmans, 6s.)

HUNDREDS of admiring readers who know nothing of the art of story-telling acknowledge the grace and charm of Mrs. Blundell's tales, and welcome any new book from her pen with keen pleasure. Other readers who understand all that goes to the making of such admirable stories add a spice of envy to their admiration. The materials are so slight, the incidents so ordinary, and yet the finished sketches are so delightful in their strong and kindly human interest, warm with the glow of sympathetic understanding, and bright with gleams of gentle humour. We cannot recall any failure among the seventeen tales reprinted here from various periodicals: each one seems as if it must be the best until the next is read. There is only one thing we should have preferred otherwise: the saddest story should not have been kept for the last. It is always desirable to end a thoroughly enjoyable book with a smile rather than with a sigh. These tales embrace a variety of incidents and emotions, grave and gay, no one trenching upon the borders of another; and the characters are distinct types of Dorset-folk, who are fortunate indeed in the makers of their songs and idylls. Where the interest is so evenly distributed it is almost unfair to single out any particular example for commendation. "Witch Ann" gives a pretty and touching account of the way a harmless old woman came to be considered a witch by her neighbours, and her own belief in the dread possibility of it. "The Spur of the Moment," and "The Worm that Turned," present amusing pictures of unromantic rustic wooings. "A Woodland Idyll" and "Postman Chris" are charming love-stories. In "The Majesty of the Law" an old-fashioned farmer is bewildered and indignant at the appointment of a girl collector of rates. He admires the maid, but stands out on principle against paying his rates to her, for all that she has the law behind her:

"Now, look 'ee here, my maid," said Jacob; "if you come to this, 'tis you that be a-tryin' to bully I. I've a-set my face again this 'ere notion. No respectable young 'ooman did ought to go a-trapesin' fro' one house to t'other, a-puttin' herself for'ard and a-coaxin' folks out o' their money whether it be for the Government or whether it bain't. 'Tis a question between us two which can hold out longest. Now if you was to give in to I—"

In the end Jacob solves all difficulties by the brilliant idea of marrying the maid, and thereby saving his dignity and removing her from the temptation to follow a masculine occupation for her living. There is no other writer of country stories who gives us quite the combination of qualities to be found in Mrs. Blundell's work. There is something in it better than cleverness and skill: the truth, charm, and goodness of it leave a grateful memory of pleasant hours in delightful company.

Hay Fever. By WALTER HERRIES POLLOCK and GUY C. POLLOCK. (Longmans, 8s. 6d.)

THIS story has already appeared in serial form, and it is pleasant to be able to read it through without a break, that the smile aroused by the opening pages may be allowed to broaden into uninterrupted laughter without the repeated intervention of a month of chequered existence. Few things are benefited by protraction; and a joke is not one of them. Hay Fever is a capital farce, and none the less amusing that the authors are slightly indebted to others in certain parts of their book, for a true imp of the sacred Comic Spirit was by them during the book's making and his jolly presence is manifest on almost every page. Mr. Henry Tempest, stockbroker, is suffering from a severe attack of the malady which gives the book its title; to cure it he takes an overdose of an Egyptian remedy, recommended by a friend with a careless turn for archaeology. The effects of this overdose are amazing and most mischievous. The stockbroker is transformed from a staid and benevolent man of middle-age into a boy of pranks, suavely jubilant in the proper execution of his mad schemes. He has one frantic day of irresponsible delight, and his adventures, from the time when he assumes the disguise of a famous detective to the sad moment in the evening when he collapses, soaked with rain and tired with running, behind the screen in his friend's drawing-room, carry one on from peal to peal of laughter. Certainly it is an excellent farce and no one who is in sympathy, however furtive, with fun, should miss it.

The Hill: a Romance of Friendship. By HORACE ANNESLEY VACHELL. (Murray, 6s.)

MANY men have thought with vain longing how good it would be to live again through the days of boyhood without relinquishing the wisdom of experience. Referat si Jupiter annos is no uncommon cry; for memory plays as fanciful pranks as hope, and dwells, wisely enough maybe, on the rosy moments, encouraging them to spread their glow over the dark hours. Wrapped up with such feelings, there is, no doubt, much that is both sentimental and false; there is equally, beyond doubt, much that remains vividly real; and nothing more memorably real than the love of the old school. It is a thing apart; unlike anything else in life, a thing about which it is not possible to argue, for no one who has not felt it can properly understand its strength and vitality. This spirit of devotion lives in Mr. Vachell's book and animates it. His boys are cleverly conventional types, nicely contrasted and distinguished, his incidents familiar to all readers of stories of school-life. But what raises his book above the ordinary level of such stories and connects it with life, is the love of Harrow. The corporate life of the school is here, though the individual boys do not live; and in this respect "The Hill" offers an exact contrast to "Stalky & Co.," that work of genius which is at once intolerable and fascinating to all right-minded public-school boys. Mr. Vachell writes with such tact and delicacy that we do not think his book will offend either Harrovians or those who love another school. The sharp eye of criticism will be alert for any error in taste, but it will find none. The book contains something peculiarly excellent, something which, without being vulgarly patriotic, happens to be peculiarly British—the corporate spirit of a great public school.

The Macdonnells. By J. A. C. SYKES. (Heinemann, 6s.)

THE dedication to Jonathan Swift and to "the living personality of George Bernard Shaw" suggests that this book is mainly connected with the state of Ireland. But this is not the case. Though Irish questions occasionally arise, they are only side issues, and are quickly dismissed, after the proper notes of anger and dismay have been touched. Lady Sykes writes of society some five and forty years ago. She lays bare once again the hypocrisy inherent in the narrow Puritanism which flourished at that time; the hard religious snobbery against which Thackeray was never tired of inveighing. Mrs. Macdonnell, a mother of the old school, who demands instant obedience from her grown-up children and delights to be called "ma'am," is head of the family and lives in a huge house in Portman Square, with her eldest son, Henry, and two daughters. Her youngest child is over twenty, but all are in subjection to the stern old woman. The story tells how the children become either emancipated or found out by their mother. Colonel Henry is a scoundrel of the Barnes Newcome type, only far more handsome and, if possible, meaner and more cruel; his intrigue with a dressmaker whom he deceives in the usual way is the chief episode of the book. One is inclined to become a little tired of the continual insistence on the hideous depravity of religious people; perhaps it is for that reason that the book becomes somewhat tedious, as it proceeds; and, though Lady Sykes writes with considerable cleverness, she has not mastered the craft of constructing a novel, and the story does not run smoothly from start to finish. The characters have in them a semblance of life that is above the average, and certain scenes contain undoubted force, but as a whole the book is rather meaningless and does not succeed in holding the attention of the reader.

The Girl of La Gloria. By CLARA DRISCOLL. (Putnam, 6s.)

FROM certain signs we take this vigorous story of the Far West to be the author's first book, and from certain other signs we suspect it will not be her last. Miss Driscoll can tell a tale with freshness and an engaging individuality—which makes us expect, and hope, to see more from her. But at present—and this, if we mistake not, indicates the novice—she is a thought too conscientious with her facts. She seems afraid of being misunderstood through leaving too much for granted. She has not quite got the knack either of omitting unessential details, or of saving essential ones from being a trifle tedious. She devotes, to cite a case, a chapter to the history of Texas. The chapter is short, it is true, and the historical facts are summarised with a deft felicity of expression, but chapters of history have nowadays no real place in novels. Tastes have changed since Sir Walter Scott wrote. Readers demand, and we think not without reason, that, if they are to be made acquainted with things which they ought to have learned at school and did not, the process be effected by gradual and almost imperceptible doses. There is, of course, no law binding authors to bow servilely to this demand. They have their ideals of art to consider. But it is well to remember that fact is in itself something of an art, and that on the whole it pays. We do not, however, wish to insist too much upon the defects of this book. Between its covers there is a very excellent and very well-told story laid in a region of America, which we are glad to know can still thrill us with its romantic realities; and if these covers hold as well other matters which are less interesting, we mention them only that our pleasure may be the greater when next we encounter a pair stamped with Miss Driscoll's name.

THE BOOKSHELF

Ordo Romanus Primus, with introduction and notes by E. G. Cuthbert F. Atchley, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. (the Library of Liturgiology and Ecclesiology for English Readers). The De La More Press, 7s. 6d. net. The "Ordines Romani," or directories of the ceremony of high mass at Rome, as distinct from the sacramentaries or actual service books, are but little known except to professed students of liturgiology. "Ordo Primus," which is here made accessible to "the intelligent Churchman who is interested in the rites and ceremonies of the Catholic Church," sets forth the ritual of pontifical high mass as celebrated at the beginning of the ninth century. Mr. Atchley has not deemed it necessary for the present purpose to attempt a critical edition of the text, and the work can, therefore, only be described as a "popularisation" for, we should imagine, an extremely limited number of readers. He has reprinted Mabillon's text (Museum Italicum ii, Paris, 1689), supplemented by a few readings from other sources, and has supplied an English translation on the opposite pages. In his introduction, after discussing the date (generally accepted as the eighth century) at which this particular "Ordo" was drawn up, the author has brought together a series of notes illustrative of the church, its ornaments and the various functionaries alluded to in the "Ordo," and he discusses the origin of these in relation to the organisation and usages of civil Rome. In the second part is briefly outlined the service and its ritual, as described in the "Ordo," and the derivation and development of these are commented upon. These sections of the book are supplemented by references to authorities which will be of use to the reader if he wishes to follow up the subject: trained liturgiologists are few, and but seldom are disciples added to the little band. Mr. Atchley's book will have achieved its purpose if it indicates the existence of a field in which the labourers are not many and the work to be done out of all proportion to the number of workers. The printing of the text of the "Ordo" as Appendix I. gives the book the odd and incomplete appearance of consisting only of introduction and appendixes; and as the readers for whom it is intended cannot be expected to have Mabillon's text at hand, the hiatus between sections 22 and 48 of the text should have been explained, as the obscure reference in the introduction may easily be overlooked. It would also have added to the convenience of the arrangement if the illustrative notes had been numbered with reference to the sections of the "Ordo" to which they relate. Considerable care has evidently been bestowed upon the book, but it is very irritating constantly to meet with the word "either" used in place of "each" or "both." It does not at all accord with the precision of ritual to say that "the singers arrange themselves in a double row on either side of the quire," as if the particular side were of no consequence. We doubt the value of the English translation provided by Mr. Atchley. A student of liturgiology who has no Latin would be spending his time to better purpose in some other work, and there is a clear case against the translation if it leads him to suppose that the beautiful prayers of the Mass convey no other sense of words than he obtains in the bald rendering offered him in an alien tongue. The book is provided with a satisfactory index, some interesting illustrations, an ill-designed title-page and, though clearly printed, is presented in a somewhat clumsy form.

We have received from Messrs. P. S. King and Son a valuable contribution to the literature of the Poor Law, in The Historical Development of the Poor Law of Connecticut (12s. net), which forms vol. 22 of the "Studies in History, Economics and Public Law," edited by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University. Dr. Edward Warren Capen, who is Alumni Lecturer at Hartford Theological Seminary, traces the development of the Poor Law of Connecticut from its beginning in the early colonial period to its present form. He divides his subject into five periods; the early colonial period, 1634-1712, the late colonial period 1713-1784, the period of interpretation and completion, 1784-1838, the institutional period, 1838-1875, and the period of special legislation, 1875-1903; and in each period Dr. Capen arranges his work in four sections: chief characteristic, preventive measures, measures of relief, and special legislation. The subject is interesting, as Dr. Capen points out, because the Poor Law of Connecticut is perhaps the best instance there is in the United States of what is known as the Town System as distinct from the County or State System; and in a valuable little chapter at the end of his work he points out the merits and demerits of the Town System—what it can do better than the others and where it falls short. The book has an excellent subject index.

Mr. Charles H. Cochrane, who wrote not long ago "The Wonders of Modern Mechanism" has produced a new volume called Modern Industrial Progress (Lippincott), in which he deals once more with what may be called the romance of modern practical science. The developments he describes are mainly American, as is only fitting in a writer who dates from New York; but he pays proper attention to British inventions and improvements, and has a very interesting paragraph in his preface, in which he shows how the exclusive policy of England in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries led by the force of necessity to the inventiveness of America in the nineteenth. The chapters that will appeal most of all to people interested in literature are those devoted to Printing, which Mr. Cochrane calls "the art preservative of all other arts," the Making of Newspapers and the Age of Paper. We have been much impressed by the picture of an august-looking editor in a frock coat sitting alone in a handsome room and speaking some no doubt epoch-making article into a phonograph. You turn the page and find a picture of a printer rattling off that epoch-making article from the phonograph, which is close to his right ear, on to the keyboard of a linotype. The three-colour-process, which has made such enormous improvements in the reproduction of coloured pictures, is carefully explained by Mr. Cochrane; but, as every artist knows, the great objection to the process is the peculiarly ugly tint of mustard which seems to be the only yellow its users can attain, and the four illustrations which Mr. Cochrane gives only serve to show how true the complaint is. The book is lavishly illustrated, and should be welcome to lovers of popular and practical science.

The War of the Succession in Spain (1702-1711), by Colonel the Hon. Arthur Parnell (Bell, 7s. 6d. net), is a book which was first published in 1888, but which is well worth reprinting in a cheaper form. The history is based on original manuscripts and contemporary records, and is of particular value; since the author, besides going deeply into the history of the war, has provided a very full list of authorities. The most interesting question in the book is really the character of Peterborough, whom Colonel Parnell describes as "a thin, brisk-looking man, notorious for foul living, open atheism and boastful talking." Peterborough's campaign in Spain on behalf of the Austrian claimant to the throne of that kingdom was of small profit to England and was eclipsed by the glorious victories of Marlborough, which were won at the same time in the Low Countries; but Peterborough was one of the most successful of British generals. His methods were remarkable and found little favour with the Duke of Wellington; who tersely described him as a brilliant partisan: Eugène declared that he thought like a general, and Marlborough acknowledged his good qualities. He was an eccentric genius, and Colonel Parnell's account of the war in Spain is excellent, although he allows so little merit to Peterborough himself, whose genius inclined to making war "by moral rather than physical force, by scaring men into the delusion that they were beaten rather than by actually beating them." A cantankerous nature, coupled with great conceit, has brought Peterborough a good deal of posthumous suffering at the hands of historians, which he does not wholly deserve.

BOOK SALES

THE most important Book Sale of last week was that of the books of the late Mr. Fraser Rae by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge.

To Mr. Rae's books were added other properties consisting of books with coloured plates, the publications of the Grolier Club, French Illustrated Books, Works on Costume, Water-Colour Drawings, Extra-Illustrated Books, Early Poetry and First Editions.

The greatest interest was taken in the following:—

Gulliver's Travels. First Edition. £15 10s.

Ackerman's History of the University of Oxford, with coloured engravings by Pugin and Nash (somewhat damaged), 2 vols., 1814. £11.

Ackerman's Foreign Military Gallery: Costumes of the Indian Army, a series of coloured plates of all the regiments, drawn by Martens and engraved by Harris, 1845-49. £20 5s.

The First Collected Edition of Spenser's Works, 1611. £8 5s.

Dobson (Austin) Old-World Idylls and other Verses, large paper, only 50 copies printed, a presentation copy to G. H. Boughton, with MS. poems on 2 leaves, signed by Dobson, 1883. £20.

De Vinne Press. Andrews (W. L.). A Stray Leaf from the Correspondence of Washington Irving and Charles Dickens. 77 copies printed. New York, 1894. £15 10s.

A Parcel of Boughton's Sketch Books. £10 5s.

Facsimiles of Manuscripts in European Archives relating to America (1773-1783). 25 vols. A magnificent work done as a labour of love to his native country by the late Mr. Stevens of Trafalgar Square at great expense. £22.

Bacon (Sir F.) Essays: His Religious Meditations, Places of Perseverance and Dissuasion, 1624. £7 10s.

Goldsmith's Traveller. First edition. 1765. £14 15s.

Heywood (John) The Spider and the Flie. Black letter. 1556. £5 5s.

A collection of pamphlets relating to Archbishop Laud, 1641. £4 15s.

The Most Pleasant and delectable Historie of Lazarillo de Tormes a Spaniard. Black letter. 1596. £10 10s.

Milton's True Religion, Haeresie, &c. First edition. 1673. £11.

Sir Philip Sidney's The Countesse of Pembroke's Arcadia. Second edition, 1593, brought £29. It was sold at Heber's sale for £1 18s.

The entire sale (three days) realised £1403 5s.

THE DRAMA

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL" AT THE COURT THEATRE

THERE is no doubt that, in spite of his persistent levity, Mr. Bernard Shaw is serious, that the views of life which he advances he believes. Beyond the mere statement of them, however, he does not seem to have aspired, and why, in view of this, he chose the theatre as his medium, is and probably will remain a mystery. A statement can be made at least equally well in any literary form, and to use a complicated form when a simple one would serve the purpose is surely inartistic. In the theatre, moreover, the particular class of statement which Mr. Shaw makes in You Never Can Tell not only does not gain but even loses. Many a playwright, having introduced you to his characters, proceeds merely to narrate what happens to them—to give a mere description, though in terms of actuality, of the course of their careers. This class of statement, though it does not gain upon the stage, at the same time does not lose—the comparative baldness of the narrative being atoned for by increased reality. But Mr. Shaw's interest in his characters is only of a secondary nature. What he desires to state is not so much the course of their careers as the various reflections which the course of those careers inspires in him.

The governing fact relating to the theatre, and the point in which it differs from every other form of art, is that it deals not with an aspect only of reality but with reality itself. A story, for instance, must be told by some one. A play is told by no one. It tells itself, it is; its object is complete illusion. On the quality of the reality, the completeness of the illusion, depends the interest of a performance. By as much as the personality of the author is obtruded, by so much will the illusion be destroyed and the interest diminished. Of course, in every play of any quality the personality of the author always does and always must appear, but it is in the facts that you will trace it rather than in the presentation of them. If the facts are personal, the presentation of them is impersonal, and on that account the facts obtain reality, being life seen, as it were, through the glasses of a personality. But from the presentation of the facts the personal element must be rigidly excluded, and, if the author's reflections are introduced at all, it must be by characters to whom in the circumstances they would naturally occur. Now Mr. Shaw's personality is probably unique, and with it the many reflections which crowd his play and dictate the conduct of the situations are very strongly marked. His characters, too, are very clearly drawn and possess distinct personalities of their own, but in no case does the personality coincide with Mr. Shaw's. The result is that they all seem, Faust-like, to be followed by a Mephistopheles—a Mephistopheles who thrusts and parries for them more often than they do so for themselves. Had they possessed less definite characteristics of their own they would have been able to assume more naturally the individual views of Mr. Shaw. In that case, however, the play would have ceased to exist as a reality, and, consisting only of a recital of Mr. Shaw's reflections, would have been even more unsatisfactory in the theatre than it is. But in these reflections the value of the play is to be found, and it would then at least have been possible to give them full attention. As it is, the attention of the audience, though divided, inclines in the direction less important. The reflections (Mr. Shaw) are at war with the reality (the characters), and in the theatre the effect of the reality is the greater.

It must be difficult, in playing a piece of this description, to decide whether, in the interest of the reality, the personality of the characters should be exploited, or, for the sake of the more valuable aspect of the play, should as far as possible be destroyed. In the present revival the former course is followed; and, although a finer example of impersonation (the parts of course admit of nothing more) is seldom seen, it follows that the influence of the reality is heightened and that the effect of the performance is in consequence bewildering.

"BECKET" AT DRURY LANE

Becket is not a great play, but it is the medium for great acting. Some dramatic rôles, like certain men, have greatness thrust upon them. Of such is "Becket": Sir Henry Irving thrusts greatness on the unsubstantial figure of the Chancellor-Archbishop. Under the dominion of his art, the portentous conflict between Church and Crown fades into nothingness against the glorious humanity of Becket, the priest, and Becket, the man. The spell that Irving exercises over men's minds can be understood after witnessing his performance as Becket. Here is in truth the militant priest whose unswerving faith shines through his every word and deed. It illuminates him with a dignity and a majesty and a vast elemental strength which invest this stupendous figure with a wondrous glamour, turning his lightest act to power and significance. In his dealings with Fair Rosamund he exhibits the strong man's love for weak and pitiable things. His rescue of this loyal heart from Eleanor's murderous hand is unalloyed melodrama; yet he robs it of banality, makes it seemly indeed. Such gentleness, such high courtesy, such "noblesse" as his deprive criticism of its function; art and truth in this instance are one. How touching his petition to Rosamund: "Pray for me, too; much need have I of prayer!" How exquisitely sad, too, that moment before his death, when he recalls the "fair-haired Norman maid" who was "the world's lily!" And when his body falls conquered under Fitzurse's blade and he commends his unconquered spirit to God who gave it, the limit of tragic poignancy is reached. Yet we do not suffer, for we have walked all this while with a man nobly prepared for death, and this is but the end ordained. Sir Henry Irving's Becket glows with living colour; it shines in the radiance of an imagination which burns like fire. It is a wonderful performance, an imperishable memory.

"JOHN CHILCOTE, M.P.," AT THE ST. JAMES'S THEATRE

John Chilcote, M.P., is the usual undramatic adaptation of an undramatic novel. Armed with foreknowledge of Mrs. Thurston's book the play is intelligible; without that, it is perplexity and the cause of wrath. Essentially a theme for psychological examination by the novelist, whose art may render acceptable its inherent improbabilities, it involves an interchange of "identities," which the visual conditions of the stage make it almost impossible to accept. The novelist's difficulty becomes, in its stage embodiment, a matter of machinery worked by an actor with sufficient skill to differentiate the "doubles" to the point of credibility. Mr. Alexander seeks to fortify the illusion by the introduction of a physical double, but dexterously as this is done, the trick only subtracts from the little dramatic virtue the piece possesses. In the whirlpool of small things in which the play moves—political prattle, crystal-gazing and what not—we are always on the verge of dramatic vacuum. Only twice in the long palaver about nothing in particular is the fringe of action touched—once when Lady Astrupp, a character played with great distinction by Miss Marion Terry, discovers Loder's identity, and again when she discusses Chilcote with the morphinomaniac's wife, a rôle enacted by Miss Miriam Clements with quiet grace. Mr. Alexander plays with much skill and earnestness, but the thing is not worth it.

"LEAH KLESCHNA" AT THE NEW THEATRE

A THING good after its kind is always to be praised, and because Leah Kleschna is a play of quite unusual quality in its own class, it must be welcomed. In it the theatricism which is so singularly ineffective in John Chilcote, M.P., is used with an unerring sense of the stage and is triumphant. Mr. McClellan, the American author, has achieved a tour de force, indeed, for he is, we understand, the librettist of The Belle of New York. In contemplating Leah Kleschna, so significant of strength, observation and dramatic aptitude, one can only forgive that other "base slander" of his brain, yet not regret, for the sake of the ensuing comparison. Theatricism fertilised by thought is so rare on our stage that its presentment may earn acclamation beyond its merit. This is the danger of Leah Kleschna. It is endowed with qualities which almost cajole the critic into placing it in a higher plane than that in which it moves. For Leah Kleschna after all, is but melodrama—a melodrama full of thoughts and thrills, but, in spite of its admirable expression, melodrama. Indeed, so fine is this melodrama of a criminal's reclamation that it almost hides its true nature as a play of situation by the high value of its observation of character. All its men and women, good and bad, are vividly drawn. "If you prick them" most of them do bleed. Especially is this the case of Leah Kleschna's father, an habitual criminal of resource and courage. He is depicted by Mr. Charles Warner with great reserve, great power and rare skill. Kleschna is a masterly and vital study of the instinctive criminal, who might have been dramatised from the pages of Lombroso. His daughter, an accidental criminal, is portrayed with much nervous intensity and fine restraint by Miss Lena Ashwell. Great care has been taken with the play, which but for Mr. Leonard Boyne's portentous manner, is well-acted all round, and will be, as it deserves to be—after it has been purged of its plethoric words—a success with critical and uncritical alike.

FINE ART

THE ROYAL ACADEMY

So recently as twenty years ago there may have been some point underlying the rather vacuous question that pervaded the air at this season: "Is it a good or bad Academy?" At present, chiefly through the fault of the Academy itself, the Exhibition has lost much of its predominant position, and whatever meaning the question ever had, has been rendered futile.

Rumours have been rife that this time the Academy had at last put its foot down and exercised a stern rigidity in its selection. If so, it must have been unusually unfortunate in the works submitted, for the Exhibition shows no improvement in the standard. It is just the usual jumble of all grades, the excellent, the creditable, the discreditable, and the incredible.

One fact that marks it from other exhibitions and is so far perhaps a credit to the selection, is that there are very few pictures of any considerable merit to be found by unknown men.

The pictures that claim our attention by their excellence are nearly all by members of the body or by painters of reputation. The small or "unimportant" works are truly unimportant. Of course, we cannot judge the significance of the fact, since we do not know what works were submitted, and in one case at least, Mr. Havard Thomas' "Lycidas," now at the New Gallery, the rejection cannot even be excused on account of the insignificance of the work. But if we make the bold assumption, that the works exhibited were the best submitted, it is quite as it should be that Academicians and Associates should come out on top.

We often hear complaints that artists are forced in these times to repeat former triumphs, but it must be admitted that any excursions into new ground, or any jumping of other people's claims have droll results—in the Royal Academy. Probably the game of prisoner's base is one requiring more agility than the staid Academician can command, and the result is seldom happy.

Mr. Dicksee in The Ideal was ill advised in calling up the spirit of George Frederick Watts, since he has not conjured with it. Mr. McWhirter has introduced a pleasing variety in his birch-tree, lonely from the departure of many sisters, by placing it this time in a winter landscape No. 202; but if he wished to poach he might have chosen some richer preserves than those of Mr. Henry Woods in 477, Lake of Como from above Lenno.

Mr. Clausen too, reminds us to his own detriment of Claude Monet and P. Wilson Steer in No. 54, A morning in June. Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema startles us in No. 212, The Finding of Moses, by emulating his late colleague Edwin Long, or perhaps we should say Mr. Ernest Normand. In any case the departure is not to be recommended.

Mr. Sargent has accustomed us of late years to acknowledge his pre-eminence, but here also guileless colleagues have been lured by his repeated challenges to try and meet him on his own grounds, and have suffered. Mr. Harold Speed, Mr. Seymour Lucas, and Mr. Luke Fildes are among the prostrate. How much wiser in their own generation are Messrs. Leader, Peter Graham, Davis, and Oules!

"The eldest oyster winked his eye,
And shook his heavy head."

Mr. Sargent's influence on contemporary painters is regrettable. It requires all his immense energy and experience, his faultless eye and hand and his taste, which is more accurate than exquisite, to reconcile us to the positive style of his painting. It is only the intense nervous tension of his work which renders it interesting, like that of a great virtuoso. Without these characteristics it would be dull, besides being, as it inevitably must be, harsh and strident.

Painters of much smaller gifts than his could produce more artistic results, if they would permit themselves to hint and suggest rather than to assert. As an instance of the kind of work that should not be beyond the reach of several contemporaries, I should quote the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Edwardes by Fantin-Latour, now in the National Gallery. The pre-eminence of this work is due to taste and sensibility rather than to extraordinary gifts, and it consists chiefly in the due proportion of emphasis and reticence, those passages in which there was not much to be said, having been, as it were, gently whispered, thereby making the positive statements all the more striking by contrast. But when everything in a picture is asserted with equal dogmatism, the result is rather to alarm than to convince, and when, as with every one but Mr. Sargent, those assertions are not even accurate, we are distressed as well. But such an achievement as Mr. Sargent's Marlborough Family, No. 256, is enough, it must be admitted, to shake any conviction for the moment. Moreover, Mr. Sargent has evidently studied Vandyck to some purpose in this canvas. The plan of the picture is superb, especially the manner in which the foreground figures, the child holding up the massive train and the leaping dog enliven a mass which would have become too heavy. Of his other portraits, No. 376, A vele gonfie, is the most interesting, but the two at the New Gallery of Mrs. Ernest Raphael and Sir Frank Swettenham show even greater accomplishment.

It is remarkable that at the present day the Academic style is the reverse of traditional, and that nowhere do we find cruder statements of the positive method. By positive we mean the uniform treatment of every portion of the picture without regard to relative importance, or character. Mr. Stanhope Forbes matches the colour of a blue sea as he does that of a blue jersey. We do not feel that the one has a different character and quality as well as a different tone from the other. We find the same baldness of statement in Mr. Tuke's work, in that of Mr. Hacker, of Miss Lucy Kemp-Welch, of Mr. David Murray, of Mr. Waterhouse.

Mr. La Thangue, after many divagations, has invented a technique which has certainly the merit of originality. He delights in the brilliant lights and reflections of southern climes and has developed the positive method to meet these aspects in the oddest way, so that his pictures can be recognised at a glance. Every touch appears to have been put on with a heavily loaded spatula and jumps in your eye with equal insistence. Since he is scrupulous to give the conflicting colours of reflection, the effect of this uniform treatment is that of a "shot" colour and must be bewildering to any one who is not capable of appreciating the study and observation traceable in his work. In regarding any of his pictures we feel that we are face to face, not with nature, but with some formidable, monstrous, and efficient machine. It is not the flicker of sunlight that we see, but rather of a biograph, and we long to set the machine in movement, so as to justify the action which has been arrested in a kind of unstable equilibrium. In one of the pictures, No. 135, A Ligurian Mill-race, a girl is bending down and drinking from the stream. Her dress is an orange-red, and her face is illuminated by the same colour, sunset, we believe. The two colours, the one local, and the other caused by illumination, are represented in precisely the same way by positive mixtures of paint and the effect is wonderfully unlike nature. Quite wonderfully, because Mr. La Thangue has set himself to copy the aspect, and has done so with as much precision and force as his method could allow him. If with all his skill and experience he can only produce work ugly of necessity, but false even more, does not that show that the whole direction of modern academic art, of which Mr. La Thangue is only one and perhaps the most accomplished example, is towards a blind alley?

B. S.

THE NEW GALLERY

WHEN the New Gallery was started under the direction of Messrs. Carr and Hallé, although there was no actual Society or enrolled body of painters, the Exhibition was continued on the lines of the Grosvenor Gallery, and had a certain character of its own distinguished chiefly by the Pre-Raphaelite rump. Year by year the distinction has diminished until at the present time it is difficult to regard it as anything but an annexe to the Royal Academy. But this year at any rate it has justified its existence by including among the exhibits one masterpiece that the Royal Academy has had the incredible folly to reject.

Mr. Havard Thomas's "Lycidas" is the most scholarly, original and sincere piece of sculpture that an Englishman has produced for many years, and its offence to the academic mind is an absolute mystery. Not only is it exquisitely finished, but it is even, we should have thought, in sympathy with the tendencies of modern Academic sculpture which are towards the Florentine Renaissance of Donatello and Luca della Robbia, rather than, as formerly, influenced by the Greek classics.

The Royal Academy has once more asserted that mediocrity is the only sure claim to recognition. Silly imitations of Donatello are sure of a place, but this work, which is no imitation at all, but informed with the spirit of the Renaissance, whilst retaining a sure hold of nature, is shocking to their susceptibilities. Another piece of sculpture which, we believe, was unjustifiably rejected is Mr. Toff's bronze bust of Mark Hambourg, a strong piece of work, worthy of the Napoleonic head of the sitter.

It is to be regretted that the managers of the New Gallery weaken an exhibition which is not otherwise pre-eminent by including the works of titled amateurs, prominent nonentities, and the sisters, cousins, and aunts of distinguished people. It cannot be of much service to anybody, and is prejudicial to the serious efforts of artists who are entitled to consideration.

It is curious to watch the gradual decrepitude of what seemed, at the opening of the Grosvenor Gallery, the most important movement of the time, the later or eclectic school of Pre-Raphaelites, of whom Edward Burne-Jones was the chief exponent. We have here in 1905, only gibbering ghosts to remind us of its previous existence, and when these are laid we shall expect to breathe more freely.

One impression that is very marked is that Mr. Sargent's proximity, or indeed his presence, is absolutely disastrous to any exhibition, and since he has extended his operations not only to scenes of former triumphs, like the New English Art Club, but to new fields like the Institute of Painters in Water-Colour, he will soon have "left no man on his legs."

His agility and force are, as always, phenomenal, and there are moreover a certain dignity and absence of swagger in his work which are cruel to so much that is loose or tired or fatuously complacent in the other works. His singleness of purpose, and the way he goes straight to his object without looking to the right or to the left are quite admirable. It is only by his indifference to the material he is handling, as exemplified in the pearl necklace of No. 216, Mrs. Ernest G. Raphael, that he shows his inferiority to the great masters. In his work there never has been, and it is too late to hope that there ever will be, any tenderness, and without tenderness the highest level cannot be reached. Mr. J. J. Shannon spoils his charming talent by unnecessary swagger. He is evidently preoccupied by Lawrence and Romney, and failing to emulate these accomplished roysterers, the challenge and provocation are unjustified. The painter of the head of 110, Miss Kitty Shannon, really need not have worried about his precursors. Mr. Charles Wyllie, whose work is too little known for its merits, shows in No. 5, A Water Frolic, a research in drawing and a study of the play of light on the nude, which are remarkably accomplished. Taste and beauty are absent, it is true, but we almost forget this in the vigour and brilliancy of the handling. Mr. James Charles' No. 17, Skittle Players, is also a brilliant work in a very different style, being more Continental in its summary statement. No. 81, The Doctor's Garden, by Mr. Alfred Withers, has some charm, spoilt like so much in modern painting by meaningless crudities of pigment.

Mr. Harold Speed shows much cleverness in all his work, especially in the striking portrait of Mark Hambourg, No. 191; Mr. Edward Stott has less to say and says it at greater length than before; Mr. Austen Brown combines the subjects of Millet with the handling of Glasgow in his sophisticated canvases; Mr. James S. Hill is sophisticated to some purpose, and his St. James's Park, No. 113, is charmingly successful. As for the rest of the exhibitors, they are neither better nor worse than in former years, and what more can be said?

B. S.

ART SALES

AFTER the Easter vacation Messrs. Christie began business again on Saturday last with an important sale of the collection of modern pictures of the late Mr. John Gabbittas. The highest price was reached by a Corot, "La Chevre," a picture of a child tending a white goat on the outskirts of a wood with a distant view of a castle, 23½ in. by 19 in., 1650 gs. (Watson). A river scene by the same artist, 10½ in. by 17½ in., fetched 380 gs. (Devereux). Other works by foreign artists were: Ch. Jacque, sheep and shepherd outside a wood, 18 in. by 26 in., 560 gs. (Wallis); N. Diaz, a rocky landscape with peasants and cattle, on panel, 16½ in. by 21 in., 1848, 480 gs. (Obach); and a forest scene, 19 in. by 13 in., 1848, 130 gs. (Wise). Descamps' "On the Look-out," 12 in. by 15½ in., 270 gs. (Williams); J. Maris, the outskirts of a town with a man on a white horse, 6½ in. by 9 in., 260 gs. (Wallis). Roses in a vase by Fantin-Latour, 16 in. by 13½ in., 1879, 180 gs. (Wallis); a Monticelli, nymphs in a garden, 13½ in. by 23½ in., 180 gs. (Moore); and a fête champêtre, by Watteau, on panel, 15½ in. by 20½ in., 120 gs. (Eyles). Three drawings by David Cox were sold: a landscape with a windmill, 18 in. by 27½ in., 260 gs. (Ormonde); a landscape with a peasant woman, 1851, 10½ in. by 15½ in., 160 gs. (Agnew), and "Seedtime," 10½ in. by 14 in., 1853, 65 gs. (Price). A landscape by Copley Fielding, 11 in. by 15½ in., 1833, reached 250 gs. (Waters); a De Wint, 11 in. by 17½ in., reached 60 gs. (Ward); a Constable, landscape with a peasant woman on a road, on panel, 8 in. by 11½ in., fetched 105 gs. (Maclean); and another, representing an old cottage at Langham, Suffolk, on panel, 12½ in. by 14½ in., 280 gs. (Osston). Gainsborough's portrait of Mrs. Leslie Baker, of Bath, 30 in. by 24½ in., went to 170 gs. (White); and Sir T. Lawrence's "The Age of Innocence," 35½ in. by 27 in., to 250 gs. (Miles). "Driving the Flock," by J. Linnell, Senior, 26 in. by 36 in., 1854-6, fetched 270 gs. (Wallis); and a picture of Venice, by Holland, 100 gs. (Norman). A landscape by Professor Legros, with a peasant and horses, 36 in. by 50 in., 1900, was sold for 110 gs. (Dunthorne). The sale also included works by Clausen, Detaille, and Weissenbruch.

SCIENCE

THE QUESTION OF QUESTIONS

THE question of questions is the concern of philosophy—which is the quest of reality. Hence we may divide all schools of philosophic thought into two great categories—those which believe that they have found the answer to this question, and those which believe that it is unanswerable.

Truth not being determinable by a counting of heads, however distinguished, we need not expect to reach any conclusion as to whether or not Reality is knowable, by citation of the authorities for or against. Perhaps the great names are equally balanced; and perhaps exception might be taken to any off-hand attempt to assign the great thinkers to one or other category. But Plato(?) and Kant, Spinoza and Spencer may be named as representative of those who, though widely differing among themselves, agree in denying that the ultimate reality can be known. The terms noumenon, thing-in-itself, and unknowable, may be recalled: whilst even "the God-intoxicated" Spinoza, who spoke of Deus sive Natura, declared that "to define God is to deny Him."

On the other hand, there are many illustrious thinkers who teach that Reality can be known. It is true that most of them lived before the days in which men began to study the knowing process; but their names compel our respect. It will probably be admitted that Democritus, Aristotle and Berkeley were of their number. But if the mutual differences of the first—the ultimately sceptical or agnostic group—are immense, profounder still are the differences between the thinkers of the gnostic or dogmatic group. For this method of classification—which I am nevertheless prepared to regard as the primary classification of all philosophic systems—groups together, in respect of their dogmatism, the theologians of all creeds, Christian, Buddhist (if it be not incorrect to speak of a Buddhist theologian), Mohammedan, Hebrew, or what you please—every religious system including a philosophy or theory of reality, and all such theories being necessarily dogmatic or gnostic; the idealists who maintain that mind, which they regard as obviously and immediately knowable, is the ultimate reality; the Materialists, who regard matter or atoms as the (knowable) reality; and their successors, who answer the question of questions by referring us to an (equally knowable) Energy or Force. Thus, in respect of their belief that the quest of Philosophy is attainable, the Theist, some Pantheists, and some Atheists may be found to agree.

But in one respect, at any rate, all the philosophic thinkers of any weight, whether gnostic or agnostic (I use the words in their primary senses), are found to agree—and that is in the belief that Reality, whether knowable or unknowable, whether personal or impersonal, material or immaterial, is one. No philosophy that counts is content with anything but some form of monism. If we believe in God and Nature as antithetic, we must at any rate declare that God made Nature from his own substance; if we believe in mind and matter as antithetic, though knowable, we must at any rate declare that Reality consists in the "union of subject and object"; and so forth. Mr. Balfour, who ranks at times beside the ancient sceptic who denied everything, even to denying that he denied anything, doubts whether there are any grounds for this constant search for the One: but at any rate we find that a belief in the unity of Reality is common to all the systems that are not negligible. Whether Reality be a knowable God, or the Unknown God, or Matter, or the "Unknowable"—it is believed to be one.

As a camp-follower of those who believe that we cannot know Reality I am in company too good to permit me any distress at the allegation of "having one of those uncentred minds which cannot be happy without a mystery"; and so I hope I can consider, without any resentment due to such an unkind heart-thrust, a volume which I have just finished reading—The Evolution of Knowledge, a Review of Philosophy, by Raymond St. James Perrin. (Williams and Norgate, 6s.) The author of this book believes that "the reason why our knowledge is only of phenomena is that there is nothing but phenomena": he regards the postulating of anything that cannot be known as mysticism and superstition, and his main thesis, which he considers to be abundantly proved, is that the ultimate reality is motion. He is an evolutionist, and it would appear that, from the doctrine of universal change, he infers reality to be none other than material change or motion. It would be idle to follow him in the whole of his argument—how idle no reader will need more than ten pages to show—but it is expedient, I think, to consider the chief difficulty which he has to encounter—the resolution of mind into motion.

Whilst we who believe that neither mind nor not-mind is the ultimate reality, but that both are phenomenal of an underlying reality, can afford to recognise a proximate dualism of mind and not-mind, those who believe that they have found the answer to the question of questions are commonly compelled, by the passion for unity which they share with us, to resolve mind into not-mind, or vice versa.

A few years ago, we could have used the word materialism to describe the doctrine which professes to explain mind in terms of not-mind. But recent discovery, as every one knows, has cracked the clay feet of materialism, and we are now at a loss for a word until people shall become familiar with the appropriate substitute, which is, I suppose, Energism. Let us admit that everything that is not mind may be resolved into Energy—ignoring the palpably derivative concept of motion—and let us then inquire into the contention that mind may be resolved into Energy.

From our author we may take the very crudest conceivable form of the doctrine which explains mind in terms of not-mind. In words which this pen is too feeble to characterise, Mr. Perrin gives, as "the modern scientific definition of mind"—"that part of the sensorium capable of the greatest molecular activity"—a definition which is almost enough to make one forswear science for ever and go in for black magic, hell-fire theology, or the Baconian theory. Even admitting that the matter of which the human sensorium is composed is really like all matter, a manifestation of that form of energy which we call electricity, let us consider it in relation to our author's theory of mind.

It is an easy thing to dissect a human brain. The post-mortem room attendant preserves it in formalin or alcohol and sells it to the student, who proceeds, with a long knife, to slice it from above downwards, examining each section seriatim. He can also make microscopic sections of the grey matter from various areas, stain them with silver salts, and examine them under a high power. He thus is certain to encounter "that part of the sensorium capable of the greatest molecular activity"; but as he fingers and smells and sees it, does it ever occur to him that he is fingering and smelling and looking at mind? Is he entitled to say: "This morning I bought a small piece of consciousness, cut a thin section of it, stained it by Golgi's method, and mounted it in Canada balsam?" Even granted that the thin section is really a manifestation of Energy, can anything more fatuous than such a mode of thinking be conceived?

Of course the materialistic or energistic theory of mind can be framed in terms slightly less ridiculous. If we avoid the use of the term "matter" and confine ourselves to such words as "energy," we can declare, if we like, that "consciousness is a form of energy." This is by far the most plausible form in which the theory can be presented, for we are easily deceived by the excellence of the metaphor into thinking that it is more than a metaphor. But—to name the one objection my space will hold—all the natural sciences have united in the demonstration of the fact expressed by the phrase "conservation of energy." Heat, light, electricity may be transformed, but they are never lost; nor is any energy ever created. Those who would persuade us that "consciousness is a form of energy" must be good enough to demonstrate that its manifestations are compatible with this law. But how is this to be done whilst no one can even furnish us with any unit or scale of consciousness? Even if we assume, for argument's sake, that exactly the same number of milligrammes of phosphorus are oxidised during an hour's consciousness—whether of a Shakespeare or a sot—who will declare that those two conscious entities, even though accompanied by exactly equal amounts of chemical change, are equal? Burn a gramme of phosphorus, in a brain or a pan, and you will always obtain an invariable amount of heat. But one brain will yield, meantime, the Prelude to Parsifal, another the "Washington Post" March, whilst the pan yields nothing at all but the heat. The law of the conservation of heat-energy is observed, but to resolve mind into energy (which is, as a fact, a material concept) you must demonstrate that the Prelude to Parsifal, Mr. Sousa's March, and nothing are equal. We wish you joy of the task.

C. W. SALEEBY.

MUSIC

THE USE OF OPERA

IF those conclusions are accepted which were reached in our discussion of the failure of opera in the ACADEMY of March 25, the question then arises, has the whole operatic movement been a misdirected effort as a serious art? Is it possible that all the great masters, with the exceptions of Bach and Brahms, have "followed wandering fires," and during a large portion of their lives given themselves to a branch of art which is no true art; and consequently that their great efforts are wasted? We wish to draw no such pessimistic picture. Apart from the truism that every honest effort, even if misdirected, has its value, and that the music of Don Giovanni or Fidelio is great music and therefore to be revered as such, notwithstanding its operatic form, opera has done a great work for musical art in general, which could not have been done in any other way. A glance at the history of music shows us that opera has always received a new impulse, whenever it has been necessary to emphasise the human side of music, that which expresses emotion as opposed to the purely intellectual beauty of formal or abstract music. These two great elements in the appreciation of music, intellectual beauty, and emotional sympathy, have had, for the most part, to receive alternate, not simultaneous cultivation. It is never possible wholly to lose sight of either and still to keep music alive, but it remains for some millennial period of art to present the two in exact counterpoise. There are during the past three hundred years—which practically contain the history of modern music—three prominent instances in which opera has come to the rescue, by turning music back from intellectual development to consider the need for the cultivation of the more directly expressive side of art.

The first is the birth of opera, at the beginning of the seventeenth century. The etherially beautiful and abstract art of Palestrina and his contemporaries had just been completed. Anything more spiritual and truly uplifting, but at the same time more completely removed from the ordinary emotions and feelings of everyday life than this music, it is difficult to imagine. The ideals of the small body of enthusiasts, spoken of as the Florentine Academy, were in direct opposition to this view of music. Under the influence of the Italian Renaissance they attempted a musical form founded on the principles of Greek drama, which ultimately resulted in opera. As their music was illustrative of dramatic action, so it was necessarily of the earth, earthy. To those trained in the principles of ecclesiastical art, their efforts at declamation were chaos; to us they are crude in the extreme, but we now reap the benefit in the possession of recitative, with all its varied possibilities. Nay, further, we may almost attribute to this movement our possession of harmony, as opposed to counterpoint, since these men first felt the need of it as an accompaniment to a solo voice. It may be said that the efforts of these composers were not only in the direction of opera but in that of oratorio, and this is true; but it was the dramatic impulse which gave birth to both forms, and while oratorio at a little later period profited more largely by the work of the early ecclesiastical music and incorporated its contrapuntal principles into a scheme which found fulfilment in the great choral works of Bach and Handel, opera on the other hand, by the greater variety of sentiment and emotion which its subjects admitted, did more to widen the scope of expression by means of passages of free declamation, new harmonic progressions and the use of instrumental interludes and incidental music.

This done, opera sank into conventionalism, and the absurdities with which the operatic works of Alessandro Scarlatti and Handel abound. It became merely a fashionable entertainment, and as such could do no abiding service to musical art, until the next strongly revolutionary influence arrived in the person of Glück. His reforms, though they primarily affected opera itself, yet had an important bearing upon the art in general. In his hands opera did much for the development of the orchestra; and, as tone-colour is to the ear what stage scenery is to the eye, the art of orchestration owed much of its advance at this time to the theatre, and the first great master of the orchestra, Mozart, attained the art largely through his early experience as a composer of operas.

We find all these qualities of musical expression, declamation, development of harmony and tonality, as well as the art of orchestration, carried much further in the opera of Wagner. As the latest phase of stage music, it seems to sum up in its relation to modern music all that opera has ever done for the art in general, and to do the same work over again in a heightened form. It was Wagner who first pointed the way towards that new range of harmonies in which every modern composer makes some experiment, and which is still partially unexplored; it was he who fused together recitative with metrical music so that the two became almost indistinguishable, and it was he, together with Berlioz, who set composers hunting for new orchestral colours, so that we are almost justified in laying to his charge the present epidemic of muted trombones and saxophones.

This is the good that opera has done to music; it has widened its resources in every direction which has to do with its expressive side, and it may perhaps be maintained that it has still further work of this kind to do. That is possible, but we think improbable. The art of music is now beginning to pass from infancy into maturity. Just as the mind of the child in its first reading lessons has to be helped to formulate ideas by means of pictures, so the accessories of stagecraft and drama were necessary to the development of musical expression in its initial stages. But when the child has learnt to read, and his mind possesses the experience of a grown person, pictorial illustrations are not only unnecessary to his enjoyment of reading, but often hinder his own mental picture. So in music, the present movement in the direction of "programme" music is like the assertion of the growing mind that it can enjoy a romance without the aid of pictures; it is an attempt at musical drama without staging. If this be so, it is actually a step towards, instead of a step away from, abstract music, since it renounces the childish aid of scenic appliances; and one can easily foresee that the next step will be to renounce also the written description of the unacted drama, which at present is given in the programme. Having so fully waked up to the possibilities of dramatic thought and expression in music apart from dramatic action and scenery, it is hardly likely that the art will revert to its childish picture books for instruction. We need not despise them: we may even sometimes like to take them out and look at them, but it will be as a relic of a period which we have passed, in grateful recognition of what we once learnt from them, rather than as the mental food wherewith we now sustain life. Least of all does it appear that opera or music-drama can be, as Wagner predicted, the music of the future. It has been at best a useful vehicle, whereby the range of our musical art has been much extended, but it is one of those means of education which the child has outgrown, and so must now be put away with other childish things.

H. C. C.

CORRESPONDENCE

SCIENCE

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The first issue raised by J. A. B. is as to the phrases animated upon. When I used the phrase "profoundest thinker" I assumed a distinction between philosophic thought on the one hand, and such powers as observation and imagination on the other. Had the names of Coleridge or Milton been cited against Wordsworth, I should have better understood J. A. B.'s objection. On asking the two most competent critics of my acquaintance, both of them poets who yield to none in their admiration of Shakespeare, I learn that neither of them would be prepared to describe him as a "profound thinker." Can any one state Shakespeare's attitude to the ultimate problem of philosophy? Is there any evidence that he had formulated the ontological question for himself, or was aware of its existence? Then, as a psychologist, he was doubtless the greatest observer of any age, but could he be called a profound thinker as was Kant or Berkeley?

As to the origin of creeds, can J. A. B. name one, the beginnings of which are not Oriental? The "of course" was my manner of saying that I did not regard the observation as other than platitudinous.

The point about "all" and "innumerable" seems to be that one cannot speak of "all" of an "innumerable" number of things. This involves a palpable confusion between innumerable and "infinite," I think. May one not say, for instance, that all the innumerable stars are bound together by gravitation?

The indictment of my essays as not being "science pure and undefiled" involves more radical questions. With your permission, I hope to submit my apologia for my work to its readers next week.

C. W. SALEEBY.

THE FIRST FARCE

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Will you be courteous enough to permit a brief correction to appear of certain misrepresentations contained in your criticism of my translation of "Patelin"?

The title-page was explicit as to which version was attempted to be translated, and the advertisements and preliminary announcements left no room for doubt either upon this point. I did "look the matter up" before (guardedly, not confidently) stating that the subject was first introduced by me to the English reader. My principal authority is the exhaustive monograph of Dr. Schaumburg, "La Farce de Patelin et ses Imitations," as translated, annotated and enlarged by M. L. E. Chevaldin (Paris, Librairie Klincksieck, 1889). In this book copious extracts are set out taken from an infinitely earlier adaptation than the one cited by your critic; they are to be found in one of the Towneley Mysteries (Surtees Society, London, 1836). Dr. Schaumburg does not mention The Country Lawyer. An "acting version in one act" would not seem to have been primarily intended for the English reader; and in any case it has certainly missed him! To the discredit of English letters I am afraid, then, that my statement is substantially correct. It is likely now that a better hand may stretch forth to the like labour: Prosit!

Dr. Schaumburg and his translator (whose taste and judgment may be supposed at least to be on a par with those of my numerous rigid and precise critics) prefer Bruyès' version to all other renderings.

"M^{me}" and "M^{lle}" are quite usual in English; the latter form is given in Ogilvie and in Webster. To estimate the limitations of another's acquaintance with a foreign tongue by the discovery of a superfluous letter in an abbreviated stage direction in English may possibly be ingenious conjectural criticism, but it is certainly not ingenious, nor in every instance trustworthy.

April 26.

SAMUEL F. G. WHITAKER.

[Our Reviewer writes: "Mr. Whitaker described the piece which he had translated as 'the fifteenth-century farce.' The piece actually translated by him belonged, as I pointed out, to the eighteenth century. I can admit no responsibility for the omission of all mention of The Country Lawyer in Dr. Schaumburg's monograph. Mr. Whitaker would not have failed to discover it, if he had searched the British Museum catalogue. To say that because it was an 'acting play' it was not 'primarily intended for the English reader' is no answer to my contention that Mr. Whitaker was mistaken in supposing that the piece was, in his version, 'introduced to the English reader for the first time'—in italics. It is true that 'M^{me}' and 'M^{lle}' are 'quite usual in English.' So, for that matter, is 'Mons.' But all these abbreviations are wrong, and none of them are employed by scholars."]

THE GOLDEN ASS

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—With reference to a review of "The Golden Ass of Apuleius," which appeared in your issue of April 1, I consider it just to myself to inform you that the book in question, though substantially my work, was published without my knowledge or consent, and without my having been permitted to correct the final proofs or give the book the form in which it should have been put before the public. I had not even received an "author's copy," and your review was my first intimation that the book had appeared—as I saw, in a deplorable state, for which I decline all responsibility.

With some difficulty I have ascertained the address of "The Imperial Press," the manager of which informed me that he had purchased the copyright of the work from the publisher for whom I executed it on commission, and that he published it without being aware that my rights had been so grievously transgressed.

I must, at the same time, protest against the insulting headline under which your review appeared, and which it seems to me no incompetence on the part of a previously unknown author, however great, could possibly justify.

And I maintain that any one who read my work fairly through should have recognised what my other reviewers have done, viz., that it was impossible that the author of the work could have been responsible for the defacements caused by the ignorant hands which ampered with it.

Trusting you will give my defence in this matter the same publicity that you gave to your reviewer's attack on my fair name,

May 1.

F. D. BYRNE.

[It was impossible for any reviewer to divine the extraordinary circumstances under which Mr. Byrne was rendered irresponsible for the mistakes in his own book.—ED.]

THE CRESCENT AND STAR

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Possibly the phenomenon Mr. Tabb witnessed was, as he suggests, the effect of an occultation.

Usually, by virtue of the moon's airless condition, the disappearance of occulted stars is instantaneous; but there have been occasions on which the star has been seen apparently to "hang" for a moment upon our satellite's limb, or edge. This does not discredit the theory of the moon's airlessness; but is due, in my opinion, to certain local conditions in our own atmosphere at the time.

I do not understand, however, how—on the theory of occultation—the star could have "dogged," i.e., followed, the moon for the rest of the evening. By reason of our satellite's proper motion eastwards, the star would disappear at the eastern edge; and, remaining hidden for an hour or longer according to the circumstances, would emerge at the western limb. Is Mr. Tabb quite satisfied that the "star-like" appearance upon the "nether," or southern, tip did in verity persist until the moon set?

April 29.

J. B. WALLIS.

THE AGE OF MODERN WELSH

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—The late Mr. Vaux of the British Museum, an expert numismatist, prepared an analysis of the Welsh vocabulary, expressing his view that 90 per cent. of the words were from Latin.

Their term for old is hen, Latin "senex" exchanging s for h as in sine—hind; their word for fountain, which is ffynnon, replaces the Latin "fons"; a full consideration then results in the conviction that modern Welsh is a survival of Legionary spoken Latin, based on a Celtic grammar.

April 29.

A. H.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

The Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours, A Retrospect: 1805-1904. Woman's Printing Society.
Hobson, R. L. B.A. Catalogue of the Collection of English Porcelain in the department of British and Mediaeval Antiquities and Ethnography of the British Museum. British Museum.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

Legge, Helen Edith. James Legge, Missionary and Scholar. The Religious Tract Society, 3s. 6d.
Alderson, J. P. Mr. Asquith. Methuen, 7s. 6d. net.

DRAMA.

Jones, Henry Arthur. Mrs. Dane's Defence: A Play in Four Acts. Macmillan, 2s. 6d.

ECONOMICS.

Cox, Harold. Protection and Employment. Unwin, 6d.
Hatch, E. F. G., M.P. In Support of Free Trade. King, 1s. net.

EDUCATION.

Ashmore, Sidney G., L.H.D. The Classics and Modern Training: A Series of Addresses Suggestive of the value of Classical Studies to Education. Putnam, 5s. net.
Nicklin, Rev. T. Old Testament History, for sixth-form boys. Part III. From the death of Jehoshaphat. Illustrated. Black, 3s.
Nicholson, Jaffray B. The Higher Education of the Blind.

FICTION.

Fuller, Anna. A Bookful of Girls. Putnam, 6s.
Kernahan, Coulson. The Jackal. Ward, Lock, 6s.
Hocking, Joseph. Roger Trewinion. Ward, Lock, 3s. 6d.
Noble, Edward. Waves of Fate: A Romance. Blackwood, 6s.
Francis, M. E. (Mrs. Francis Blundell). Dorset Dear, Idylls of Country Life. Longmans, 6s. (see p. 494).
Wenlock, Arthur. The Countermine. Alston Rivers, 6s.
Gerard, Dorothea (Madame Longard de Longgarde). The Three Essentials. Hutchinson, 6s.
Barrett, Frank. The Error of her Ways. Chatto and W. dus, 6s.
Muddock, J. E. Preston. The Sunless City. White, 6s.
Clouston, J. Storer. The Adventures of Monsieur d'Horico. Blackwood, 6d.
Harraden, Beatrice. Katharine Frensham. Blackwood, d.
Grier, Sydney C. The Warden of the Marches. Blackwood, 6d.

HISTORY.

MacDonnell, John de Courcy. King Leopold II. His Rule in Belgium and the Congo. Cassell, 21s. net.

LITERATURE.

Loring, Andrew. The Rhymers' Lexicon. With an introduction by Professor George Saintsbury. Routledge, 7s. 6d. net.

MILITARY.

Cassell's History of the Russo-Japanese War. Part 22, 6d. net.

MUSIC.

Platt, William. Child-Music: a Study of Tunes made up by quite young Children. 77 St. Martin's Lane and Simpkin, Marshall, 2s. 6d.
Journal of the Folk-Song Society, No. 6. Being the first part of Vol. II. 84, Carlisle Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

NAVAL.

Klado, Captain N. The Russian Navy in the Russo Japanese War. Translated by L. J. H. Dickinson. Hurst and Blackett, 5s.
 Baylis, Lieut.-Colonel T. Henry. The True Account of Nelson's Famous Signal. Allen, 6d. net.

POETRY.

Maddock, Alice. An Autumn Romance, and other Poems. Elkin Mathews, Vigo Cabinet Series, 1s. net.
 Charos. Via Lucis. Cuisinier, 2s.
 Doyle, Edward. The Haunted Temple, and other Poems. New York: The Knickerbocker Press.

POLITICS.

O'Brien, R. Barry. England's Title in Ireland, a letter addressed to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Unwin, 6d.
 Courtney, Leonard. The Working Constitution of the United Kingdom and its outgrowths. Dent, The Temple Primers, 1s. net.

REPRINTS.

Whitman, Walt. The Book of Heavenly Death. Compiled from "Leaves of Grass" by Horace Traubel. Portland, Maine: Mosher.
 Wilde, Oscar. The Saul of Man under Socialism. Portland, Maine: Mosher.
 Jefferies, Richard. The Pageant of Summer. Portland, Maine: Mosher.
 Stevenson, Robert Louis. Father Damien, an open letter to the Reverend Doctor Hyde of Honolulu. Portland, Maine: Mosher.
 Cooper, Fenimore. The Deerslayer. Nelson, 6d.
 Tom Brown's Schooldays. Nelson, 6d.
 Marshall, Emma. Life's Aftermath. Seeley, 6d.
 Heart and Life Booklets: Brooks, Phillips. The Life with God; Selections from Faber's Hymns; Robertson, F. W., The Loneliness of Christ; Browning, Robert, Easter Day. Allenson, 6d. net each.
 Shorthouse, J. Henry. John Inglesant. Macmillan: Illustrated Pocket Classics, 2s. net.
 Fielding, Henry. The History of Amelia. 2 vols. Hutchinson, 1s. 6d. each.
 The Red Letter Library: Vaughan, Henry, Silex Scintillans, with an introduction by W. A. Lewis Bettany; Bacon, Francis, Lord Verulam, Essays or Counsels Civil and Moral, with an introduction by Frederic Harrison; Shakespeare, King Richard III. Blackie, 1s. and 1s. 6d. net each.
 Southey, Robert. The Battle of Trafalgar. The Astolat Press, 1s. net.
 Emerson, R. W. Character. The Astolat Press, 1s. net.

SOCIOLOGY.

Whitehouse, John Howard. Problems of a Scottish Provincial Town. The St. George Press, Bourneville, Birmingham. London: Allen, 3s. 6d. net.
 Pattin, H. Cooper. The Ritual of Temperance and State Hygiene. Contributions towards a rationale in National Healthiness. Norwich: Goose, 2s. 6d. net.

SPORT.

Warner, P. F. How we Recovered the Ashes. Cheap Edition. Newnes, 1s. net.

THEOLOGY.

Talbot, Edward Stuart, D.D., Bishop of Southwark. Sermons at Southwark, preached in the collegiate church of S. Saviour. Nisbet, 3s. 6d. net.
 Momerie, Rev. Alfred Williams. Immortality and other Sermons. 4th edition. Allenson, 3s. 6d.
 Lloyd, Samuel. The Corrected English New Testament. A Revision of the Authorised Version (by Nestle's resultant Text), prepared with the assistance of eminent scholars and issued by Samuel Lloyd, a Life Governor of the British and Foreign Bible Society, as his Memorial of the Society's Centenary 1904. With preface by the Bishop of Durham. Bagster, 6s. net.
 Marsh, Gideon, W. B. The Resurrection of Christ. Is it a Fact? Sands, 6d. net.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

Kelly, J. J. The Barly Haunts of Oliver Goldsmith. Dublin: Sealy, Bryers & Walker, and Gill & Son, 2s. 6d.
 Wollaston, Arthur. The Sword of Islam. Murray, 10s. 6d. net.
 Hueffer, Ford Madox. The Soul of London, A Survey of a Modern City. Alston Rivers, 5s. net.
 Bryson, Mrs., of Tientsin. The Land of the Pigtail. Sunday School Union, 2s.
 Street, M. Jennie, & Sorella. The Story of Palma, and other tales of Village Life in the Holy Land. The Sunday School Union, 2s.
 Dellenbaugh, Frederick S. Breaking the Wilderness, the story of the Conquest of the Far West. From the Wanderings of Cabeza de Vaca, to the First Descent of the Colorado by Powell, and the Completion of the Union Pacific Railway. Putnam, 15s. net.
 Reid, Allan, F.S.A., F.E.I.S. Picturesque Orfarshire. The Shire Series. Dundee, &c.: Valentine, 2s. 6d.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE. 10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily.

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY.
 Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books.

Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE. 10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—
 The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes, Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events. Science and Art Specially dealt with.
 Fulllest Reports of all Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere.

THE SPHERE.

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week. Also List of Books Received.
 SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

The Morning Newspaper for Aberdeen and the Northern Half of Scotland.
 Reviews of Books appear on Mondays and Thursdays, and on other days as required.

Book Advertisements are inserted on Literary Page.

NEW BOOKS ARE PROMPTLY REVIEWED.

LONDON OFFICE: 149 FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE WESTERN MORNING NEWS

Is the most widely circulating paper in the four Western Counties.

LONDON PRIVATE WIRE OFFICE: 49 FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telegraphic Address: "PLYMOUTHISM, LONDON."

Telephone No.: 165 HOLBORN.

THE DUNDEE COURIER

Has double the circulation of any Morning Paper North of the Forth.

Literary Notes on Monday. Reviews on Wednesdays.

London Office, 109 Fleet Street, E.C.

IN BUYING A

None so good as
The "SWAN."

"SWAN"

Fountain Pen

You are satisfied. Your purchase is a good one. It will last for years, do good work, rapid work, and do it comfortably.

Other prices:

10/6, 16/6,
25/- to £20

POST FREE.

Of all Stationers.

Catalogue Free.

MABIE, TODD, AND BARD,

79 & 80 HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

93 CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

95a Regent Street, W.; 3 Exchange Street, Manchester; and 37 Ave. de l'Opera, Paris.

Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge

CHRISTIAN WORSHIP: its Origin and Evolution. A Study of the Latin Liturgy up to the Time of Charlemagne. By Monsignore DUCHESNE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE from the Third Edition of "Les Origines du Culte Chrétien." Second English Edition, Revised with considerable Additions by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 20s.

The Third Edition of the French Original was lately published in Paris. This translation represents not only that Edition, but contains also additional matter just received from Monsignore Duchesne. There is also added, by request, a Translation of the "Peregrinatio" of Etheria (Silvia).

It is not too much to say that this is the most important work which has appeared on this subject.

LENTEN ADDRESSES, 1905. By the Right Rev. A. F. WINNINGTON INGRAM, D.D., Bishop of London. Demy 8vo, paper cover, 6d.; cloth boards, 1s.

These Addresses were attended by thousands in London, and will be welcomed by a still greater number outside.

RELIGION IN RELATION TO SOCIAL DUTIES AND PLEASURES. An Address to Girls given at Bridgewater House on March 23, 1905, by the Right Rev. A. F. WINNINGTON INGRAM, D.D., Bishop of London. Small post 8vo, stitched, 1d.

AN APPEAL TO THE FIRST SIX CENTURIES. Containing an Address on Variations in Doctrine and Practice, a Report of a Deputation to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Two Treatises by BISHOP COSIN on the "Catholic Religion of the Realm of England." Edited by HENRY WACE, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. Demy 8vo, paper cover, 6d.

THIS CHURCH AND REALM: being some Instruction about the Church of England. With a Preface by the LORD BISHOP OF LONDON. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 6d.

MODERN CRITICISM AND THE BOOK OF GENESIS. By the Rev. H. A. REDPATH, D.Litt., M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE ORIGINAL SOURCES OF THE QUR'AN. By the Rev. W. ST. CLAIR TISDALL, M.A., D.D. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 8s.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF A HAPPY LIFE. By the Very Rev. C. T. OVENDEN, D.D., Dean of Clogher. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DEVOTIONAL LIFE IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. A Sequel to "Books of Devotion." By the Rev. Canon C. Bodington. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR: Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holy Days throughout the Year. By JOHN KEBLE. Printed in Red and Black. Royal 16mo, paste grain roan, 1s. 6d.

THE RULE AND EXERCISES OF HOLY LIVING. By JEREMY TAYLOR, D.D. Printed in Red and Black. Royal 16mo, paste grain roan, 1s. 6d.

THE RULE AND EXERCISES OF HOLY DYING. By JEREMY TAYLOR, D.D. Printed in Red and Black. Royal 16mo, paste grain roan, 1s. 6d.

"THE EVIDENCE OF THINGS NOT SEEN." I. FROM NATURE. II. FROM REVELATION. By J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S. Crown 8vo, paper cover, 6d.; cloth boards, 1s.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CONTRASTED WITH CHRISTIAN FAITH and with ITSELF. By WILLIAM LEFROY, D.D., Dean of Norwich. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CHRISTIANITY AND AGNOSTICISM. Reviews of some Recent Attacks on the Christian Faith. By the Very Rev. HENRY WACE, D.D. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ON AGNOSTICISM. Replies to the late Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. By the Very Rev. HENRY WACE, D.D. Medium 8vo, paper cover, 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.—ROMAN ROADS IN BRITAIN. By THOMAS CODRINGTON, M.Inst.C.E., F.G.S. With several Maps. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

The TIMES says:—"Mr. Codrington's book has much to recommend it to the antiquary and the topographer. To come suddenly upon a book literally packed with suggestions for the well-being of the walker is, in this year of grace and automobility, no small joy."

EARLY BRITAIN.—CELTIC BRITAIN. By Principal RHYS. Third Edition, Revised. With 2 Maps. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE DAWN OF CIVILIZATION.—EGYPT AND CHALDEA. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, by Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to, cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 48s.

THE STRUGGLE OF THE NATIONS.—EGYPT, SYRIA, AND ASSYRIA. By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and over 400 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

THE PASSING OF THE EMPIRES. 850 B.C. TO 330 B.C. By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and numerous Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

WAVES AND RIPPLES IN WATER, AIR, AND ETHER. Being a Course of Christmas Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain by J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

MARVELS OF THE WORLD OF LIGHT. A Popular Study of the Phenomena of Light, Colour and Sight. By the Very Rev. C. T. OVENDEN, D.D., Dean of Clogher. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MATTER, ÆTHER, AND MOTION: the Factors and Relations of Physical Science. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M.M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tuft's College, U.S.A. English Edition, Edited by Prof. ALFRED LODGE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES. By F. EDWARD HULME, F.L.S. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

THE FERN PORTFOLIO. By FRANCIS G. HEATH, Author of "Where to Find Ferns," &c. With 15 Plates, elaborately drawn life size, exquisitely Coloured from Nature, and with Descriptive Text. Cloth boards, 8s.

FLOWERS OF THE FIELD. By the late Rev. C. A. JOHNS, B.A., F.L.S. Thirtieth Edition. Entirely Re-written and Revised by Prof. G. S. BOULGER, F.L.S., F.G.S., Professor of Botany in the City of London College. With numerous woodcuts. Small post 8vo., cloth boards, 7s. 6d.; half-calf, gilt edges, 14s.

FREAKS AND MARVELS OF PLANT LIFE; or, Curiosities of Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

DISEASES OF PLANTS. By Prof. MARSHALL WARD. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME AND TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Third Edition, Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SOUNDING THE OCEAN OF AIR. Being Six Lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston in December 1898. By A. LAWRENCE ROTCH, S.B., A.M. With numerous Illustrations. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE MACHINERY OF THE UNIVERSE. Mechanical Conception of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M.M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tuft's College, U.S.A. With several Diagrams. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

SKETCH-BOOK OF BRITISH BIRDS. By R. BOWDLER SHARPE, LL.D., F.L.S. 272 pages. With Coloured Illustrations by A. F. and C. LYDON. Crown 4to, cloth boards, 14s.

The GUARDIAN says:—"Briefly, he has produced a most interesting and informing book, which has been admirably illustrated."

FAVOURITE ENGLISH POETS AND CLASSICS.

A Selection from Standard Writers, presented in a form which will appeal to every Booklover:

BROWNING'S (Mrs. E. B.) POEMS, including "AURORA LEIGH."

BROWNING'S (ROBERT) POEMS, including "DRAMATIC ROMANCES AND LYRICS," "MEN AND WOMEN," &c.

COLERIDGE'S POETICAL WORKS.

COWPER'S POETICAL WORKS.

DANTE. Cary's Translation.

HOOD'S POETICAL WORKS.

KINGSLEY'S WESTWARD HO!

LAMB'S TALES FROM SHAKESPEARE.

LONGFELLOW'S POETICAL WORKS.

SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

SHAKESPEARE'S COMPLETE WORKS.

TENNYSON'S POEMS, including "In Memoriam," "MAUD," "THE PRINCESS," "IDYLLS OF THE KING," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, each 2s. 6d.; paste grain roan, each 3s. 4d.

These are nicely printed and very cheap Volumes. They are especially suitable for Prize and Gift-books.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43 QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. BRIGHTON: 129 NORTH ST.

JUN 2 1905

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

No. 1723

MAY 18, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

THE CARNEGIE DUNFERMLINE TRUST.

COLLEGE OF HYGIENE AND PHYSICAL TRAINING.

A COLLEGE for the Training of Teachers of HYGIENE and PHYSICAL TRAINING will be OPENED on the 26th SEPTEMBER next, under the auspices of the Carnegie Dunfermline Trust.

The course of study will extend over two years, and will include Hygiene, Anatomy, Physiology, Educational and Remedial Gymnastics on the Swedish system, Games, Swimming, Dancing, &c.

A Residence for Women Students will be opened at the same time under the superintendence of Miss E. ADAIR ROBERTS.

A specially qualified Medical Man will devote his whole time to the work of the College.

TERMS, for Residence and Tuition, £80 per annum.

For particulars, apply to the Principal: Miss OGSTON, Physical Training College, Dunfermline, Scotland.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LIVERPOOL.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

The COUNCIL of the UNIVERSITY will, during the PRESENT TERM, appoint a LADY as LECTURER in EDUCATION in the UNIVERSITY in succession to Miss Graveson. The Department of Education of the University includes Students training both for Secondary and Primary Teaching. The Stipend will be not less than £300 per annum.—Further particulars will be available on application to the REGISTRAR on or after MAY 12. Testimonials will be required not later than JUNE 1.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27 King Street, St. James's.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford. Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System, Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket, Tennis, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

BOOKSELLERS IN BIRMINGHAM.

"Mr. E. Baker is a very experienced bookseller."—Bazaar Exchange and Mart. All out-of-print books supplied, no matter what the subject. The most expert bookfinder extant. Please state wants. BOOKS WANTED—£30 offered for Vanity Fair, 20 Nos., 1847-48; £50 for Walton's Angler, 1653; £10 for Jorrocks' Jaunts, 1843; £20 for Orme's British Field Sports, 1807; £20 for Shelley's Queen Mab, boards, 1813; £3 for Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1807; £2 for Poetry for Children, 2 vols., 1809; 25s. for Rosamund Gray: a Tale, 1798.—BAKER'S Great Bookshops, John Bright St., Birmingham.

LITERARY AGENCY.—INDEXING, Translations (French, German, Latin). Authors' MSS. carefully Revised and Placed. Terms moderate. Typewriting 8d. per 1000 words. References.—Miss A. HORSFIELD, 48 Church Street, Barnsley, Yorks.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Envelopes, &c., carefully typed at home (Remington), 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L. 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—THE WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES, Authors' MSS., Translations, &c.; Legal and General Copying; Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—SIKES & SIKES, 229 Hammer-smith Road, W. (Private Address: 13 Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPEWRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1000 words. Specimens and references.—Address, Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS., 10d. per 1000, all descriptions; neat, prompt, accurate; duplicating a speciality. Shorthand, testimonials.—Mrs. MICHEL, 23 Quarrendon Street, Fulham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—Reviews, Novels, Plays, Poetry, Scholastic Work, Letters, &c., typed, or from dictation (Shorthand if desired). Foreign and scientific MSS. a speciality. Ten years' experience. Duplicating. Cheap prices.—GRAHAM, 34 Strand, W.C. (Charing Cross).

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds.—Translations, duplicates; careful work. Novels, 9d. 1000. Short articles by return.—Miss HANDLEY, Berkhamsted, Herts.

Advertisements for out of print "Books Wanted" and "For Sale" are inserted at 3d. for each title (eight words, including address); minimum, 1s.

Books Wanted

HOLLAND (H.) Heroologia Anglicana, sm. folio, 1620.
Holme (R.) Academy of Armory, folio, 1701.
Holtzapffel (C.) Turning, 5 vols.
Holy Bible, translated into the American language by J. Elliott, Cambridge, Mass., 1661 or 1635.
Homer, Iliads, translated by Chapman, folio, 1611.
Homer, Works, translated by Chapman, 1616, folio.
Hondius Historia Mundi, folio, 1635.
Honest Fellow, or Reveller's Book of Songs, 1767.
Honour of the Taylors; History of Sir John Hawkwood, sm. 4to, 1687.
Hood (T.) Comic Annual, 1839.
Tynley Hall, 1843, 3 vols., uncut.
Whimsicalities, 2 vols, 1844.
Hooker and Greville, Icones Filicum, 2 vols, 1829-31.
Hooker (Sir J. D.) Botany of the "Brebis and Terror," 4 vols, 1847-55.
Hooper's Waterloo, 1862.
Hooton (C.) Colin Clink, 3 vols., 1841.
Hope (Sir W.) The Scots Fencing Master, 12mo, 1687.
Horace Templeton, 2 vols., 1845, or either vol.
Hortus Sanitatis, Mogunt, 1491.
Hotten's Lives of the Saints (only in the Antique Style Binding), 4to, 1869, or Toovey's or Newman's.
Howell's State Trials, 32 vols.
Howitt (S.) Oriental Field Sports.
Howitt (W.) Northern Heights, 1866.
How Pippins enjoyed a Day, &c., oblong folio, Fores, 1863.
Hoyle on Whist, 1742.
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

For continuation of Books Wanted and For Sale see page 506.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF
G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti,
Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings,
Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries,
may be obtained from

FREDK. HOLLYER, 8 PEMBROKE SQUARE, LONDON, W.
Illustrated Catalogues 12 penny stamps. Foreign stamps accepted from abroad.

B. H. BLACKWELL,
50 AND 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CATALOGUE of CRITICAL EDITIONS of LATIN CLASSICAL AUTHORS and Standard Works dealing with Greek and Roman History, Literature, and Art.

IN THE PRESS.

CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS SECOND-HAND BOOKS, chiefly ENGLISH, including SELECTIONS from the LIBRARIES of the late REV. ALBERT WATSON, M.A., formerly Principal of B.N.C., the late Professor FREEMAN, the late R. S. WILSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of B.N.C., and from other Libraries recently purchased by the Advertiser.

READY SHORTLY.

CATALOGUE of the THIRD (and LAST) PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Professor F. YORK POWELL, including Greek and Latin Classical Writers and Medieval Authors, Ecclesiastical History, Antiquarian Works, Law, Philosophy, and Miscellaneous Items.

BERTRAM DOBELL,
SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER, AND PUBLISHER,

77 CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.

A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 140.

Containing a special article, entitled:

"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,"

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP,
Secondhand Bookseller,
100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND
4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Ad-dresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Com-missions executed.

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) under-takes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader; testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss FOOT, 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

GAY & BIRD'S LIST

A MARVEL OF CHEAPNESS.

A FINE LIBRARY EDITION IN TWELVE VOLUMES.

FIELDING'S WORKS.

With Introduction to each Work by

G. H. MAYNADIER, Ph.D., Professor of Harvard University.

Size of Pages, 18½ in. by 5½ in. Small Pica Type

A Photogravure Frontispiece in each Volume.

Tastefully bound in cloth, full gilt back.

PRICE PER VOLUME, 2s. 6d. NET.

H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON writes in the DAILY MAIL: "One has to acknowledge the intelligent, sympathetic, and appreciative introductions by Mr. Maynadier. Adopting Pepys, one may say that this is the very best edition that ever I did see of an English Classic at so low a price."

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Only authorised and complete Edition, beautifully printed on a specially-made thin opaque paper.

Limp Cloth Edition, price 1s. net each. Limp Leather Gilt, price 2s. 6d. net each.

POEMS OF PASSION.

POEMS OF PLEASURE.

POEMS OF POWER.

3s. 6d. net.

The following will be published in a few days:

MAURINE. New Copyright Edition. With New Poems. 3s. 6d. net.

THREE WOMEN. 3s. 6d. net.

London: GAY & BIRD, 22 Bedford St., Strand. Agency for American Books.

NEW BOOK BY MR. ANDREW LANG.

John Knox and the Reformation.

By ANDREW LANG.

With 2 Photogravure Plates and 3 other Illustrations, 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., 39 Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Books Wanted—(continued)

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S QUARTERLY JOURNAL, from Vol. 1, 1845, to Vol. 25, 1869.—A. Iredale, Torquay.

BRADBURY'S SADDLEWORTH SKETCHES; Butterworth's History of Oldham; Brierley's Daisy Nook Sketches.—W. E. Clegg, 30 Market Place and Peter Street, Oldham.

Books for Sale

OLD WATER-COLOUR SOCIETY, Spring No. of Studio.—John D. Balfie, Grand Pump Room, Bath.

BOOKS.—America, Australia, Oriental, North Georgia Gazette, American Scenery. Menhoff's Brazil, Buckingham's Arabs, Riley's Timbuctoo, Salt's Abyssinia, Czar's Travels (Japan), Rousselot's India, Wild's Challenger, Anthropological Memoirs; list free.—Carter, Nightingale Terrace, Hornsey.

UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY by Elisée Reclus, 10 vols. Edited by Ravenstein, F.R.G.S. Published by Virtue. Splendid condition, as new. What offers?—Write Lloyd & Townsend, Dillwyn Book Mart, Swansea.

CASSELL'S ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES, complete set from commencement, 1888 to 1903. 16 vols., uniformly bound in publisher's case, good condition.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER

HAVE NOW READY:

Mr. Carnegie's New Book,

Completing the "Famous Scots Series."

JAMES WATT,

THE INVENTOR OF THE STEAM-ENGINE.

By ANDREW CARNEGIE, LL.D.

"Why shouldn't I write the life of the maker of the steam-engine, out of which I had made fortune? It has revealed to me one of the finest characters that ever graced the earth."—AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

Art Canvas, 1s. 6d. net; gilt top, 2s. net.

List of the Series (43 Volumes) on application.

DR. ALEX. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.

THE WALK, CONVERSATION, & CHARACTER OF JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD.

A Series of Discourses on the Character of Our Lord. By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D., Author of "Bible Characters," "Bunyan Characters," &c. Price 6s.

THE GREAT RELIGIONS OF INDIA.

By the late J. MURRAY MITCHELL, M.A., LL.D. With Map and Portrait. 5s. net.

STANDARD.—"The book gives a singularly clear and unprejudiced account of the true inwardness of Hinduism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, and Mohammedanism as they exist in the present day in India."

SECOND EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE, OF THE FAITH OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. By JOHN KELMAN, Jun., M.A. 6s. net, half vellum cloth; gilt top.

ATHENÆUM.—"An attempt to figure the man forth in all his qualities. The attempt is astonishingly successful."

THE ORIGIN AND NATURE OF MAN.

By S. B. G. MCKINNEY, M.A., L.R.C.P. Edin. Now ready, Part V., The BIBLE; Genesis as Foundation of all Religion and Philosophy. Price 6d. net, postage 1½.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, 21 Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS

In crown 4to, appropriately bound, 10s. 6d.

THE TABLE BOOK OF THE CINQUE PORTS.

Being the Index to the Decrees of the Courts of Brotherhood and Guesting, from 1433 to the Present Time.

"A book of great interest."—Hastings Visitor's List.

"We welcome the volume as one of the most interesting contributions to local history; it is not a book to be taken up and laid down hastily; it is one that will repay careful study."—Hastings Chronicle.

In square 8vo, appropriately bound in cloth, illustrated, 3s. 6d.

MY NEW ZEALAND GARDEN.

By A SUFFOLK LADY.

"Every nook and corner in the 'New Zealand Garden' is graphically described; and the numerous full-page photographs help the reader to realise the magnificent things in shrubs, trees, and flowers which can be reared out of doors in this beautiful land."—Oxford Chronicle.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, illustrated, price 6s.

THE KNIGHT OF THE NEEDLE ROCK AND HIS DAYS, 1571-1606.

This is a story of Elizabethan times, the chief incidents taking place in the Isle of Wight, Guildford, and in London.

"Miss Wilson presents us with an entirely new and original kind of fiction. The reader feels himself in real historical company."—The Athenæum.

"Miss Wilson has compiled a remarkably interesting and informing book. In general interest and genuine romantic episodes it is worth half a score of ordinary novels and gives evidence of great care, ability and good taste."—The Academy.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 6s.

THE PAINS OF HAPPINESS.

A Novel. By RASSAC TORRIANI.

"The author interweaves a double love-story with no little skill."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The story is full of incident, adventure and romance, and has movement and interest from beginning to end. The tone of the work is thoroughly healthy."—Reek.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE

In square 8vo, printed on hand-made paper by the Chiswick Press, appropriately bound, price 3s. 6d. net.

ZETETES AND OTHER POEMS.

By MAURICE BROWNE.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 3s. 6d.

THE LOVE-SONG OF TRISTRAM AND ISEULT.

By CYRIL EMRA.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price, 1s. 6d.

VERSES CHIEFLY ABOUT NATURE.

By G. E. M.

"The versification is smooth and often graceful."—Oxford Chronicle.

"A pleasing gift of verse and an earnest religious spirit are the two notes of this little book of song."—Glasgow Herald.

In crown 8vo, appropriately bound, price 1s. 6d.

THE TREASURES OF DARKNESS AND OTHER VERSES.

By M. B. W.

"Its gracefully turned and dignified lyrical pieces give a not unbecoming expression to feelings of familiar simple piety of the refined ecclesiastical sort."—Scotsman.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62 PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

A New Novel by
AGNES & EGERTON CASTLE.

JUST PUBLISHED. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ROSE OF THE WORLD

By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE,
Authors of "Young April," "The Secret Orchard,"
"The Star Dreamer," &c.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.—"A charming romance.
The book is a distinct success; it grips the attention of its readers, even of jaded reviewers."

IN PEACE AND WAR

Autobiographical Sketches. By SIR JOHN
FURLEY, Kt., C.B.

Author of "Struggles and Experiences of a Non-Resistant Volunteer," &c. With a Portrait, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SPRING IN A SHROPSHIRE ABBEY

By Lady CATHERINE MILNE GASKELL.

Author of "The New Cinderella," and "Old Shropshire Life."
With 16 Full-page Illustrations, small demy 8vo, 9s. net.

THE UPTON LETTERS

By T. B. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [On May 22.

"In the 'Upton Letters' a schoolmaster gives his experiences of life to a friend in Madeira. Dated from 'The Upton'—which is neither Uppingham nor Repton—the correspondence tells of men and books, no less than of boys and lessons. The letters were returned to their writer when the friend died.

ITALIAN LETTERS OF A DIPLOMAT'S WIFE

By MARY KING WADDINGTON.

With 24 Portraits, Views, &c., 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND ENGLISH IMPRESSION READY NEXT WEEK.

WORLD.—"One of the most interesting books of the season. . . . Chatty, vivacious, observant, good-humoured, pleasantly descriptive, and teeming with references to famous and notable people, and to places and events of interest, these letters are models of their kind."

A VAGRANT ENGLISHWOMAN

By CATHERINE I. DODD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GUARDIAN.—"This is a very delightful book. The writer possesses that rarest of all gifts, true humour."

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO.,
15 Waterloo Place, S.W.

THE SOUL OF LONDON.

By FORD MADDOX HUEFFER.

Imp. 16mo, 5s. net.

The reception accorded to this volume on the day of publication by the London and Provincial Press stamps it as the book of the month.

"AMONG ALL THE MANIFOLD BOOKS OF WHICH MODERN LONDON HAS BEEN THE SUBJECT, ONE MIGHT SEARCH IN VAIN FOR ANY FELLOW TO THIS DEEPLY CONTEMPLATIVE WORK, WITH ITS FINE INSIGHT, ITS COMPREHENSIVE SYMPATHY, ITS VIVID YET RESTRAINED SENSE OF THE PICTURESQUE, ITS SINGULAR POWER BOTH OF GENERALISATION AND ANALYSIS, AND ITS UNERRING EYE FOR FACTS AND FEATURES WHICH GO TO GIVE THE MODERN BABYLON SUCH INDIVIDUALITY AS IT MAY BE SAID TO POSSESS."—THE WORLD.

CURRENT FICTION.

Mrs. H. H. Penrose, who is one of the women novelists to be taken into serious account, has not written anything better worth reading than "THE UNEQUAL YOKE" . . . She has set before herself the difficult task of placing a certain order of religionists in that ridiculous and contemptible light in which they really do stand to the vision of minds not only rational but reverent, without casting slight or ridicule upon religion itself.—THE WORLD.

No book of this season has been so widely and favourably reviewed or so keenly appreciated by the reading public as Mr. Archibald Marshall's "THE HOUSE OF MERRILEES."

Mr. Reginald Turner's "PEACE ON EARTH" is, says the Daily Telegraph, "both clever and unconventional." The Yorkshire Post describes it as "a book which deserves wide appreciation as a singularly sane and powerful analysis of the profound principles which he finds in the theory of anarchism; principles which are, very possibly, least understood by those who profess and call themselves anarchists."

"THE COUNTERMINE" is a clever, and original story of military life by Arthur Wenlock, who is, says the Morning Leader, "to be heartily congratulated upon a book which blends humour and excitement so agreeably."

MR. THOMAS COBB'S NEW NOVEL.

THE FRIENDSHIPS OF VERONICA

Will be Published on TUESDAY NEXT.

London: ALSTON RIVERS, Arundel St., W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S New Books.

SECOND IMPRESSION. NOW READY.

Hercoe A. Vachell's New Novel
The Hill. 6s.

"An inspiring book which should be read by all boys whether they are Harrovians or not; by men who were at public schools and who would like to be taken back to their schooldays for several brief entrancing hours and by those who can appreciate a story full of optimism, vivid portraiture, humour, tenderness, and a knowledge of the human boy that is quite remarkable."—THE WORLD.

Beeth Tarkington's New Work
In the Arena. 6s.

"Capital stories. . . . 'Hector' is a truly magnificent character study. It is, we think, one of the truest, most ironic, and most telling studies in modern American fiction." DAILY GRAPHIC.

Isobel Fitzroy's New Novel
A Quixotic Woman. 6s.

"Agreeable to read and never dull, so that it should have no lack of readers."—SCOTSMAN.
"The author arrests and holds the attention of the reader from the first."—WORLD.

With Russian, Japanese, and Chunchuse

The Experiences of an Englishman during the Russo-Japanese War. By ERNEST BRINDLEY. With a Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

From the Cape to the Zambesi

By G. T. HUTCHINSON. With an Introduction by Colonel FRANK RHODES, C.B., D.S.O. With many illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 9s. net.
"The whole book is really an enlightening one on South Africa, and is worthy of careful attention by statesmen, politicians, economists, and general readers."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Our Sudan

By JOHN WARD, F.S.A., Author of "The Sacred Beetle," "Greek Coins and their Parent Cities." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.
"The book is indeed so profusely illustrated that the effect is like that of a fascinating lecture accompanied by an immense number of lantern slides. . . . It would be impossible in our space to exhaust the interest of this delightful book." NORTHERN WHIG.

Five Years in a Persian Town

By the Rev. NAPIER MALCOLM. With Illustrations, and a Map. Square demy, 10s. 6d. net.

A NEW EDITION.

A History of the Siege of Gibraltar, 1779-1783

By JOHN DRINKWATER, Captain of the Seventy-Second Regiment, or Royal Manchester Volunteers. With Plans. Large crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Ready immediately.

Memories of Life at Oxford, on the Continent, in Greece, and Elsewhere

By the Rev. FREDERICK MEYRICK, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln and Rector of Bickling. Demy 8vo, 12s. net. [Ready next week.

The Royal Academy and its Members

A History from 1768 to 1830. By the late J. E. HODGSON, R.A., and F. A. EATON, M.A., Secretary of the Royal Academy. With Portraits. Large demy 8vo, 21s. net.

"Of undoubted interest for all who find attraction in the study, pursuit, or literature of art."—GLOBE.
"Entertaining and so useful that one only regrets that the book should stop at the year 1830."—TIMES.

The Sword of Islam.

By ARTHUR N. WOLLESTON, C.I.E. With Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

FREE OPINIONS

BY

MARIE CORELLI

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This book will, like others that have proceeded from the same pen, prove a great popular success."—Westminster Gazette.

THE JAPANESE SPIRIT. By OKAKURA-YOSHISABURO.

With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Its author has mastered not only our language, but our modes of thought so thoroughly that in his pages, as Mr. George Meredith observes, 'We get nearer to the secret of this singular race than we have had the chance of doing before.'"—Times.

JÖRN UHL. By GUSTAV FRENSEN. The most popular German novel of modern Times.

"A book of this character, so sincere in its aims, so true-hearted and simple, so impregnated with the breath of the salt sea and of the pine-woods, should find as many readers and admirers here as in the land of its birth. The excellence of the translation, too, will do much to make the book acceptable."—Academy.

THE FIRST ROMANOV (1613-1725). A History of Muscovite Civilisation and the Rise of Modern Russia under Peter the Great and his Forerunners. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of "The Pupils of Peter the Great," "Peter III., Emperor of Russia," &c. With Eight Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Just published.]

CATHERINE DE MEDICI AND THE FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of "Women and Men of the French Renaissance," "The Household of the Lafayette," &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15s. net.

"Miss Edith Sichel has done a fine and distinguished piece of work. She has written a brilliant and a scholarly book; a book it is both tempting and difficult to overpraise. For Miss Sichel is gifted with much of the rare projective vision of the born historian."—Times.

JOHN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT OF DUNDEE, 1648-1689. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"The work will take its place as the most authoritative and complete study of the man which has yet been given us."—Guardian.

THE KING IN EXILE (CHARLES II.). By EVA SCOTT, Author of "Rupert Prince Palatine." Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"Miss Scott is to be congratulated on a notable contribution to Stuart history. Not merely has she unravelled with skill the entanglements of a singularly intricate subject . . . but she has sketched the characters of the banished Royalists with a living touch."—DORA GREENWELL MCCHESENEY in the Daily Chronicle.

A REGISTER OF NATIONAL BIBLIOGRAPHY. By W. P. COURTNEY. Two vols., demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. net.

"A veritable mine of usefulness to the student and the author. Now and in the future their thanks will go forth to Mr. Courtney, alike for undertaking a work which was needed, and for the quality of his workmanship."—Daily Chronicle.

CRITTENDEN. By JOHN FOX, Author of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." 6s.

"'Crittenden' will be found worth reading, both as a story and as history. . . . It is written in an easy, vigorous style, and the interest never flags."—Academy.

IN SEARCH OF THE UNKNOWN. By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS. Author of "The Maids of Paradise," "Cardigan," &c. 6s.

"The stories are delightful, and highly to be recommended."—Westminster Gazette.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Kloof Bride," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A story of absorbing interest, touching life at many points, and told with equal vigour and feeling."—Academy.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN: Kempton Park once upon a Time. By EDITH A. BARNETT, Author of "A Champion in the Seventies," "The Fetich of the Family," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Just Published.]

THE SAYINGS OF MUHAMMAD. Arranged by A. L. SUHRAWADY. 16mo, 2s. 6d. Uniform with the "Ingersoll Lectures." [Just published.]

FORTHCOMING BOOKS

THE FAR EASTERN TROPICS: Studies in the Administration of Tropical Dependencies. By ALLEYNE IRELAND. With a Coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE CITIZEN: a Study of the Individual and the Government. By NATHANIEL SOUTHGATE SHALER, Professor of Geology in Harvard University and Dean of Lawrence Scientific School. Crown 8vo, pp. viii + 346. 6s. net.

THE SOULS OF BLACK FOLK. By W. E. B. DUBOIS. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

WASPS: SOCIAL AND SOLITARY. By GEORGE W. PECKHAM and ELIZABETH G. PECKHAM. With an Introduction by JOHN BURROUGHS and Illustrations by JAMES H. EMERTON. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

Please write for Complete Catalogue and Announcement List and Prospectuses of all New Books.

A. CONSTABLE & CO., Ltd., 16 James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

MR. HEINEMANN'S

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.

MISS ELIZABETH ROBINS' NEW NOVEL

ENTITLED

A DARK LANTERN. A DARK LANTERN.

Price 6s.

Author of

"THE MAGNETIC NORTH,"

"THE OPEN QUESTION."

DAILY MAIL.—"This is a very notable book; it is the best that Miss Robins has produced, which implies that it reaches the highest level of modern fiction. . . . For many years there has been no more sympathetically, yet relentlessly drawn character in fiction than that of Katharine."

THE WISE WOODS

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY. 6s.

Author of "The Story of Susan," &c.

This is, so far, Mrs. Dudeney's most ambitious work. She gives picturesque descriptions of gipsy life, and some clever studies of suburbia which readers of her previous books will welcome as containing some of her most incisive writing.

TOLLA, THE COURTESAN

By E. RODOCANACHI. 6s.

This book is a serious attempt to picture in a graphic way, by means of a series of letters, the daily life of Rome in the year 1700.

THE MACDONNELLS

By LADY SYKES. 6s.

MORNING POST.—"Henry Macdonnell and his Calvinistic mother might have been conceived by Thackeray."

THE STIGMA

By J. L. HERBERTSON. 6s.

MANCHESTER COURIER.—"A remarkable novel, touched with something akin to the Brontë fire, and its women have the intensity, and its men the brutality, that mark the characters in 'Jane Eyre.'"

DUKE'S SON

By COSMO HAMILTON. 6s.

PUNCH.—"The Baron commends this book . . . having once taken it up the reader's attention will be held until the very end."

THE CONFESSIONS OF AN AMBITIOUS MOTHER

3s. 6d. net.

WORLD.—"A more thoroughly candid account of how an American woman succeeded in marrying her daughters I have never read."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford St., W.C.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	509	Fiction	519
Literature :		The Bookshelf	521
The Royal Academy	511	Book Sales	521
Dream-Come-True	512	The Drama :
The Return of the Pamphlet	512	"Romeo and Juliet" at the
Literary or Literary ?	513	Royalty Theatre	522
The Shores of Old Romance	514	Fine Art :
New Clothes	515	Historical Portraits at Oxford	523
Winnower's Song to the Winds	515	Whistler and Watts	524
Two Old Songs of May	515	Art Sales :
The Schiller Centenary in Ger- many	516	The Capel-Cure Collection	524
Musical Copyright and Summary Jurisdiction	517	Science :
A Literary Cause :		A Point of View	525
Character and Style	518	Correspondence	526
		Books Received	527

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

A CORRESPONDENT suggests that our article on Prize Poets should be supplemented by some reference to the winners of the prizes awarded at each University for Poems on Sacred Subjects. At both Universities alike the proportion of eminent names is small. These are the four most interesting entries in the Cambridge list :

1759. B. Porteus of Christ's.
1830. M. M. Praed of Trinity.
1854. E. H. Bickersteth of Trinity.
1869. H. C. G. Moule of Trinity.

Beilby Porteus is, of course, the Bishop whom Thackeray covers with sarcasm in "The Four Georges." Praed needs no introduction, though one is a little surprised to find him in the galley. Bickersteth is the compiler of the Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer. H. C. G. Moule is the present Bishop of Durham, distinguished as a biblical critic.

At Oxford the prize was only instituted in 1848, and is only awarded once in four years. Nevertheless, though we find no name quite of Praed's poetical celebrity upon the list, we do find at least five names which stand for something. They are :

1857. "The Death of Jacob." Charles Henry Pearson, M.A., Fellow of Oriel.
1860. "The Waters of Babylon." William Alexander, M.A., Brasenose.
1863. "Saint John at Patmos." Richard Watson Dixon, M.A., Pembroke.
1884. "The Sea of Galilee." Alfred John Church, M.A., Lincoln.
1896. "The Life of Saint Augustine." Henry Charles Beeching, M.A., Balliol.

Henry Charles Pearson is the Pearson who discovered the Yellow Peril. William Alexander is the present Archbishop of Armagh. Richard Watson Dixon is the Canon Dixon known as a poet and a friend of Pre-Raphaelites. Alfred John Church is the author of "Stories from Homer," "Stories from Herodotus," and similar works much read by schoolboys. Henry Charles Beeching is Canon Beeching, Preacher to the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn, and the "Urbanus Sylvan" of Cornhill.

ADMIRERS of John Stuart Mill will hope that his house at Avignon, which is on sale, will remain in English hands, even though it cease to form part of the property of the Taylor family. Mill had made acquaintance with the south of France in early life, but the reason for his attachment to Avignon is to be found in the fact that his wife died there after seven years of married happiness. When he lost his seat in Parliament in 1868 he took entirely to literary work, spending much of his time in "the windy city" on the Rhone. Here his devoted stepdaughter, Miss Helen Taylor, arranged a herbarium, a vibratory and a circum-gyratory so that he could walk about in all weathers or pursue his studies in botany. It was after a walk of fifteen miles on a botanical expedition that he was seized with the illness that ended in his death.

This was erysipelas, which seems to have been a local endemic malady. The house, as a matter of fact, was not in a healthy situation, but Mill bought it because it was near the grave of his wife, which he liked to visit as often as possible. In the grounds were a number of tall trees, where the nightingales sang, and the philosopher always refused to have any of them cut down lest the birds should be frightened away. Mr. Mansfield Marston, who visited Mr. Mill during his last illness, relates that the birds were so tame that they followed him about from tree to tree.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning had no personal connection in her youth with Camberwell, but her husband was born there. It was in his quiet home at Camberwell that he indulged in his taste for pets, and here he received instruction in the school of the Misses Ready. But the foundations of his real education were laid not at school, but in his father's excellent library, for his father, though he had been connected with the Bank of England, was passionately fond of books and had besides no mean capacity for versification. In after life the poet seems to have drifted further and further away from Camberwell, but it can scarcely be said that it was entirely ignored by her who wrote "The Cry of the Children" and "The Song for the Ragged Schools."

An American journalist, who has been trying to explain the decadence of American literature, puts it down partly to feminine influences and partly to the commercial instincts of the American people. He goes on to say that it is the secret wish of every Englishman to be a lord, of every Frenchman to be elected to the Academy, and of every German to write a good-sized book on the Turanian languages. Now these ambitions elevate and adorn the lives of those who have them. But what is the ambition of the citizens of the United States? The discontented journalist has found the answer in the prospectus of an insurance company. It is to eat well, to dress well, to have a fine house and a position in society. Disciples of Emerson will easily understand that it is impossible for people of this sort to produce great literature.

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man.
When duty whispers 'Lo, thou must,'
The youth replies 'I can.'"

That is the stanza of Emerson which Mr. Choate recalled in his farewell speech last Friday. But is this exactly how Mr. Choate recalled it? As a matter of fact, duty (in the original) "whispers low, 'Thou must,' not 'Lo, thou must.'" Who is responsible for this new reading, speaker, reporter, or compositor? At any rate, "Lo, thou must," is the version printed in at least one morning newspaper. But the word "Lo" is already associated with misconceptions, since the time of that student of Pope's "Essay on Man," who in the lines :

"Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutored mind Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind."

took "Lo" to be, not an interjection, but the name of the untutored though instinctively religious barbarian.

In the current number of Good Words under the head of "The Shelf and the World" Mr. Lucas prints the following characteristic anecdote of Charles Lamb, which he has lately come across in a book lent to him by a friend, entitled "Living Authors," by Thomas Powell (New York, 1849). It is in the account of Edward Moxon, who married Emma Isola, the Lambs' adopted daughter.

"A cheesemonger, who having realised a large fortune retired with a genteel wife and still genteel daughter to enjoy the otium cum dignitate in a nobleman sort of way at Highgate, where he had a superb villa, was above all things most anxious to conceal from every one of his acquaintances that he had ever been engaged in trade at all—more especially in so low a calling as that of cheesemonger. It was the canker in his blooming rose of life, and any allusion, however accidental, was construed by him into a deadly and never-to-be-forgiven insult.

"In a large party at the house of the village clergyman, Coleridge, Lamb, and the quondam cheesemonger were present. In a discussion on the hard Poor Law, which was then agitating the political and social circles of London, the retired tradesman took high ground, and irritated the kind-hearted Elia by violent denunciations of the poor; turning round, and with great appearance of triumph over the silent wit, he said to the company, generally but more particularly to Lamb: 'You must bear in mind, sir, that I have got rid of all that stuff which you poets call the Milk of Human Kindness.' Lamb looked at him steadily, and gave his acquiescence in these words: 'Yes, sir, I am aware of it—you turned it all into cheese several years ago!' The retired cheesemonger was inconsolable."

Mr. Lucas states that he has not seen this story before. It is, however, to be found with but slight alterations in "Bon Mots of Charles Lamb and Douglas Jerrold," edited by Walter Jerrold, with illustrations by the late Aubrey Beardsley, and first published in 1893, a cheaper edition of which appeared last year.

"Posterity," said Alexandre Dumas, "begins at the frontier." This should mean that immortality will be the lot of the authors who get their books translated into foreign languages. The new catalogue of the "Société du Mercure de France"—a publishing house of notoriously Anglophil proclivities—enables us to see which of our own writers are achieving that distinction. The "Mercure's" list, which includes both the living and the dead, is as follows: Thomas Carlyle, Mrs. W. K. Clifford, Thomas Hardy, Frank Harris, Rudyard Kipling, George Meredith, Walter Pater, Thomas de Quincey, John Ruskin, Mark Twain, and H. G. Wells. This is a strong eleven; and the member of the team who makes the best score is Mr. Wells. "Eleven not out" is his present figure. Next to him comes Mr. Kipling, who is represented by nine volumes.

European critics have often said their say about Japanese literature. It is not less interesting to hear what the Japanese critics have to say about European literature. This is their view of our fiction, as reported by M. Gaston Donnet, the author of a popular history of the Russo-Japanese war:

"Why (the Japanese critic asked M. Donnet) is it so full of love, and of nothing else than love? Your heroines are always women who 'have a right to love,' who are 'determined to have their share of love,' and who, not finding it in marriage, seek it in adultery. Or they are young girls looking out for husbands, to whom they will soon be unfaithful, because they have been unable to 'have their share of love with them.' All this is terribly tedious. I wonder where your novelists and your dramatic authors go for their models in real life. It is not the drama of love but the drama of money that is true to life. And why is it that they never mention hunger and thirst, and are always talking of this love which, after all, is a function just as banal and animal as thirst and hunger are? We do not think of a man as being unhappy when he is eating. Why then should we think of him as being unhappy when he loves?"

Decidedly this is a new point of view, though the Japanese critic's studies seem to have been confined within somewhat narrow limits, and to have left a good deal of European literature—and even of European fiction—untouched.

A propos of the centenary of Schiller's death M. de Gleichen, one of his descendants, has recently published several anecdotes. Here is one that shows how Schiller was ennobled. Herder's wife was extremely anxious to figure among the titled people, who visited the court at Weimar, and poor Herder was at his wit's end to know how to gratify the ambition. However at last he bought some lands, which gave him the right to consider himself a titled personage. But the court still refused to receive Madame Herder. It even went further, and in order to annoy Herder conferred on Schiller and his family the titles required to ensure presentation at court. Schiller, a great believer in "the simple life," was so kind-hearted that he accepted the privilege with extreme reluctance, knowing the annoyance that it would cause the unfortunate Herders.

Here is another story to illustrate his views as to the remuneration that a poet should receive. Wallenstein had just been performed, and a duchess, who was one of the spectators, was so delighted with it that she presented the author with a silver coffee service. Schiller, in thanking her, said that a poet should receive no remuneration, but that which came in the shape of voluntary offerings, "for," he added, "there is a natural affinity between the gifts of the poet and the gifts that are made at the dictation of the heart. Both ultimately are to be traced to heaven." If the public would only take this sentimental German view and be sufficiently open-handed, the long-vexed question of the relations of an author to his publishers would soon receive a satisfactory settlement.

Schiller's Wilhelm Tell has been played with great success since the beginning of March in the chief theatre of Tokio. The characters have Japanese names, Tell is a Japanese hunter, and Gessler a Daimio.

Lord Goschen's biography of his grandfather, the publisher, George Joachim Göschen, has been translated into German. The author has made a few improvements in the text, and shortened some passages, but in all essentials it is the same as the original. It is published by the G. J. Göschensche Verlagshandlung of Leipzig.

A copy of Miss Ethel Clifford's "Songs of Dreams" was included among the recently-sold collection of books from the library of Mr. Thomas Hutchinson, of Morpeth, author of "Ballades of a Country Bookworm;" and on the fly-leaf fronting the title-page Mr. Hutchinson had inscribed a poem "to Miss E. Clifford." The verse tribute is based on a favourite saying of the late W. K. Clifford, and opens thus:

"Let us take hands and help
For to-day we are together,
And bright will be life's skies
In every kind of weather.
And sweet remembrances
Of mutual joys and sorrows
Will dissipate the clouds
That may darken our to-morrow."

It must be admitted that France knows how to honour her great men. Not two months have elapsed since the death of Jules Verne, and already three places have decided on measures for keeping his memory alive. The first in the field was Chantenay, a manufacturing village near to Nantes, where Jules Verne spent a portion of his youth. On the day after his death it was resolved that one of the streets should henceforth be called Jules Verne Street. A fortnight later the town council of Nantes agreed to set up a tablet on the house where he was born, to give his name to a square, and to open a public subscription for a suitable statue to his memory. The town council of Amiens has also decided to rename the Boulevard Longueville, where the famous writer was living at the time of his death. Meanwhile a beginning will be made with the publication of some, at any rate, of the sixteen plays and fourteen novels which he left behind in manuscript.

The erection of a statue at Rome to Victor Hugo is another instance of the power of literature to link nations in bonds of sympathy; though the poet never fell to any considerable extent under the spell of the Eternal City. Modern Rome, the Rome of the Papacy, he abhorred. It is "a snake," "the sewer of the human race." When the newly-invented chassepot killed six hundred Garibaldians at Mentana at the rate of twelve a minute, because they wished to take possession of the city, he apostrophised

"the sinister old man" who sat upon the throne of St. Peter in lines that glowed with indignation. After the invasion of France by "the barbarians" in 1870, he went so far as to assert that the Capitôl, that is the virtues of the old Rome of the Republic, was to be found only at Paris, and to predict that in the coming struggle between Paris and Rome, the principles of the former would certainly triumph. When, a year or two later, the citizens of Rome sent the French people an address, they chose Victor Hugo as the medium, and he in reply thanked them for their sympathy with France in her unequal conflict with Germany, Russia and the Papacy, three spectral powers that in his opinion symbolised war, barbarism and darkness.

The leading Belgian men of letters have decided to boycott the festivities in commemoration of the achievement of Belgian Independence on the 75th anniversary of the expulsion of the Dutch. This is M. Maeterlinck's reply to the invitation addressed to him:

"I mean to take no part whatever in the celebration of a fallacious independence which, at the present moment, afflicts us with a Government which is the most retrograde in Europe, and the most opposed to all ideas of justice and freedom, excepting only those of Russia and Turkey. There are a few of us who are waiting for this state of things to pass and who hope that we shall some day be able to rejoice over the achievement of a true independence."

Which means, being interpreted, that the clericals are in power in Belgium, and that the sympathies of M. Maeterlinck are ranged on the side of the opposition.

The Gaulois has an interesting Flaubert note, giving the author's own account of the adventures of a play which he wrote, but which he tried in vain to get produced. These are the notes which he sent with the manuscript when he finally offered it for publication in a magazine:

"1. Marc Fournier refused to hear the play read on the ground that I was incapable of writing one.

"2. Gustave Claudin asked for the piece for Noriac, manager of the Variétés. Enthusiasm of the said Noriac, who talked of putting it in rehearsal at once. Then silence for six months, at the end of which time I could only recover my manuscript by brutal insistence.

"3. The piece was taken to Hostein, manager of the Châtelet, who, within forty-eight hours, sent a footman with the message: 'M. Hostein told me to tell M. Flaubert that this is not at all what he wants.'

"4. A manager of the Gaieté heard the piece at my house, and expressed admiration, but I heard nothing more from him.

"5. The piece was asked for on behalf of the managers of the Gaieté, was kept three months, and was then returned to me with scorn.

"6. Raphael Félix heard it read at Michel Levy's, and proposed to draw up an agreement on the spot, but suddenly changed his mind because he remembered that he wanted to revive Lucrezia Borgia instead.

"7. Last year the manager of the Gaieté kept the manuscript for a week, and then gave me the same answer as his colleagues.

"8. This winter Dalloz refused to publish it in the Revue Française."

Let us hope that it is not often that genius knocks so vainly at so many doors.

As the Barbier centenary is still impending, we may find place for the story of the circumstances which induced the poet to write his famous revolutionary rhymes. He came to Paris immediately after the "three glorious days," and with him was a general who had strong ideas about law and order. The barricades were still standing in the streets, and a civilian friend of the general advanced from one of them to shake hands. "General, we have done well," said the civilian. "What do you mean?" asked the officer. "You have let yourselves be beaten by this rascally mob." "General," was the reply, "the people were sublime." And Barbier writes in his Reminiscences: "This young man, whom I never saw again, and whose name I do not know, was he who first inspired my enthusiasm."

The price of Messrs. Watts's edition of Haeckel's "Evolution of Man," translated by Joseph McCabe, is 42s., not 45s., as stated in our issue of May 6.

LITERATURE

THE ROYAL ACADEMY

The Royal Academy and its Members, 1768-1830. By the late J. E. HODGSON, R.A., and F. A. EATON. (Murray, 21s. net.)

THE imperturbability of the Royal Academy is almost admirable. Some forty years ago a Commission, appointed by the Government, invited it to reform. As late as last autumn a Committee of the Lords urged it to alter the method by which it administers the Chantrey Bequest. It is indifferent to Commission and Committee alike; it goes on its road deaf to abuse as to remonstrance; and when in the future a falling balance-sheet does persuade it to consider its position, it will find some other method than reform to win back its hold upon a patient public. It may, for instance, offer prizes for the solution of puzzles, or it may instal a café chantant in the central hall. But it will never be false to its noble ideal of mediocrity. Though it has never encountered so much ignominy as during the last six months, it declines to explain or refute. That, as Sir Edward Poynter said the other day, would disturb a festive occasion. What, then, does it do? It publishes a pompous history of itself and its members, and thus reminds us in a dim and shadowy way of imperial Nero, who fiddled while Rome was burning.

It is not a glorious record, this of Messrs. Hodgson and Eaton, but as though to atone for its meagre episodes it is composed in a proud and vaunting style. When the authors compare the present triumph of their institution with its humble beginnings, they cannot restrain their enthusiasm. In 1760 one hundred and thirty pictures, exhibited by sixty-nine artists, produced a net profit of one hundred pounds! It is not much, to be sure, and it is perhaps not without irony that the authors of this book set forth the paltry sum. But paltry as it was, it started painters on an evil road and suggested to them that there might be as much money in a peep-show, if it were properly worked, as in a theatre. "That was a very remarkable sum of one hundred pounds," says Mr. Hodgson, "one of the most remarkable recorded in history; it revealed a new source of wealth, a money-making power hitherto unknown." Of this source Titian and Velasquez knew nothing, and therefore may be supposed to have practised their craft in vain. But the Royal Academy, more happily inspired, found "the money-making power" ready to its hand, and its worst detractors cannot say that it lost its opportunity. "Annual exhibitions of pictures," again we quote, "under such promising circumstances were continued, and have gone on until they have attained the present portentous results—an exhibition of some two thousand works of Art" (note the capital A), "by more than one thousand two hundred artists, which is visited on an average by some three hundred thousand people." Portentous is it not? And though the statistical method is not the best, whereby to estimate the virtues of an Academy, it has the double advantage that it is easy to apply, and that its figures are indisputable.

So, on November 28, 1768, King George III. founded the Royal Academy, "my Academy," as he was wont to call it, and signed the "Instrument," which still defines the duties of the body. He did more than this: he provided the Academy with rooms, and, when it was in need, with money. Thus it is not easy for the Academy to justify its existence as a private club. It was established upon the rock of kingly munificence, but it has a worse memory for this truth than for the number of persons who pass the turnstile, and it persists in declaring that it is accountable to nobody for its policy and administration. However, it commenced business under the best auspices. Its first President, Sir Joshua Reynolds, was not merely a most distinguished painter; he was also a man of intellect and of the world. So long as he lived, the institution was worthily governed. If he did not appreciate Gainsborough as he should, he was for the most part catholic in taste and scrupulously fair in the conduct of his office. That all the members of the Academy were not great men was not his fault. He made the best of the material which came to hand, and that was all the wisest of men could achieve. With his death the Academy declined in prestige, and it has never recovered itself. The results of the turnstiles are more "portentous" than ever, but the most bigoted partisan cannot pretend that the Royal Academy of to-day represents any interests but its own, and its three hundred thousand visitors are no more significant than the crowds which nightly frequent the music-halls of the metropolis.

If for a moment we forget the thousands of persons who look at the pictures and descend to consider the painters who make them, it is a dreary tale which we have to tell. It is true that in the time of Reynolds the Academy could not boast, as it boasts to-day, of twelve hundred "artists" contributing their masterpieces to its exhibitions. But few as they were, they are, for the most part, forgotten to-day, Academicians and all. Who has heard the names of John Baker, Jeremiah Meyer, and Peter Toms? Yet they were eminent in their day and entitled to write R.A. after their names. The obscurity into which they have fallen should teach a lesson of humility to the twelve hundred intrepid spirits who every year attract three hundred thousand people to admire their works, and should suggest to Sir Edward Poynter and his colleagues that they do not inherit all the arts of all the ages.

When the Royal Academy was first discussed, it found a determined opponent in Hogarth. "It will be vain to attempt to force what can never be accomplished," said he, "at least by such institutions as royal academies on the system now in agitation." It is a confused sentence, but its meaning is perfectly clear and perfectly sane. Such books as this, which we are now reviewing, do but prove the uselessness of Academies. No one can be persuaded to produce masterpieces except by his own genius, and the best Academy can do no more than foster mediocrity and encourage intrigue. The Royal Academy has long since forgotten the purpose for which it was established. It is quite out of touch with the art of painting. It administers the fund bequeathed by Chantrey to the great comfort of its own members. And nothing but a falling off of the three hundred thousand citizens will ever bring it to reason. But it is no worse than other academies, and it may take to its soul whatever consolation this sad truth can bring it.

DREAM-COME-TRUE

Dream-Come-True. By LAURENCE BINYON. (Eragny Press, 12s. 6d.)

A BOOK of which only one hundred and eighty-five copies are issued is obviously not a book for every one. The question for each lover of books will be: Is "Dream-Come-True" a book for me? Mr. Binyon is a poet most of whose admirers, we imagine, cannot help feeling as though they were his friends. "Dream-Come-True" is the lyrical monument of the poet; betrothal, honeymoon, and first year of wedded life. Naturally therefore it will be of intense interest to all those many admirers of Mr. Binyon who feel as though they were his friends. "Dream-Come-True" is in every way an exquisite little book, and makes one feel at once that its full perfume can only be disengaged on familiarity. Mr. Pissarro has been lucky in designing the delicate patterned paper for its cover: and to read such excellent modern work, in so choice a type as he has designed, is a pleasure not often offered to us. Mr. Binyon has himself designed and cut a wood-block for the frontispiece, in which he shows that he has fully profited by the admirable example of Mr. Selwyn Image's chaste and haunting idyls, rendered by the full reed pen with a few expressive lines. The complete double page, on which this design and the first poem are framed by Mr. Pissarro's cornflower border, is printed to entrancing result, in a delicate sage green, with its text in black caps and an initial and device at the end in pale vermillion. The whole book breathes an intimacy which suggests some trysting-place among the river salallows, on an early June afternoon fragrant with meadow-sweet.

"Within the voice, within the heart,
Within the mind of Love-Lily,
A spirit is born who lifts apart
His tremulous wings and looks at me."

sang Rossetti in one of his most beautiful lyrics and Mr. Binyon begins with a delicate and probably unconscious echo of the first two lines:

"Within the eyes of Dream-Come-True
Shine the old dreams of my youth,
Ere they faded, ere they grew
Distant, they were born anew
In her truth."

"Within the heart of Dream-Come-True Lies my life, a folded bud."

No doubt the principled critic would like us to regret this echo. We are all to be "on our own" nowadays, and be quickened by no more estimable spirits than that of to-day and our own uncultured and uninfluenced animalism, for which the past is rich in vain. Leaving the poor principled critic to welcome the motor-car into verse, and remembering that true originality is not afraid of father and mother, but delights in many relationships less inevitable, the lover of poetry will trip with a thrill of manifold recollection over the threshold of this new home to which he is invited, by the poet's frank and generous faith in the nobility and delicacy of his nature. The fall of the rhythm may remind him of Shelley as well as Rossetti, and if he needs must analyse his impressions, he may remark that Rossetti's Latin nature inclined to elaborate a perfectly balanced form which enabled him to produce more definite impressions and led him to the almost epigrammatical terseness of his last two lines:

"Whose speech Truth knows not from her thought Nor Love her body from her soul."

While Mr. Binyon with a more spontaneous rhythm is led to a more enigmatical expression:

"O may the fountain leap in flood
The young shoot branch in leafy wood,
Blest in promise through and through
By the dear thoughts of Dream-Come-True!"

But most will not care to linger in order that such distinctions may grow clear to them, they will hurry away through these moods of peace and realised bliss, which shift from England to Italy and back again, till they cry with the poet:

"Now my soul hath taken wings,
Newly bathed in light intense,
And purging off the film of sense
Of its native glory sings."

For one, who is evidently both sensitive and delicate, to offer to take the world into confidence over his love, must needs prove him generous and unsuspecting as well. Such a poet is bound to have more real friends than he knows of.

THE RETURN OF THE PAMPHLET

Towards a Social Policy. (ALSTON RIVERS. 1s.)
Gladstonian Ghosts. By CECIL CHESTERTON. (The Lanthorn Press. 2s. 6d.)

THE conspicuous decline of the English political Press gives great scope for the revival of the political pamphlet, of which "Towards a Social Policy" is a good average specimen. The writers are a set of earnest young Liberals who find the policy of their party too negative for a long prospect of life. Cutting themselves adrift from party politics, they make an effort to explore the whole ground of social policy with a view to suggestions of practical reform. It is not our province either to analyse their explorations, or to criticise the resulting suggestions. The sight of these young Japhets in search of a parent must touch the hardest heart and disarm the severest critic. The fact that they should thus be wandering in the wilderness after so many years of talk suggests indeed certain thoughts about the party system which we will not further pursue. Suffice it to say that the writers cover immense ground in this series of articles—touching not without some originality and freshness on such thoroughly diverse questions as Land Reform, Housing, Poor Law, Old Age Pensions, Factory Laws, Finance, and Local Government. The book is rather intended for the speaker than the general reader.

Quite a different type of political pamphlet has been put forth by Mr. Cecil Chesterton under the title of "Gladstonian Ghosts." Mr. Cecil Chesterton has some of his brother's cleverness, and all his audacity. He possesses a fair share of that critical cleverness which is hateful to the good party man, and generally indeed forms a dissolving rather than a binding force in politics. It is very difficult for the plain man to tell exactly where Mr. Cecil Chesterton stands. He seems to be a kind of Conservative Socialist, fighting sometimes from the standpoint of the Conservative, sometimes from that of the Socialist. His attack on Free Trade and Temperance smacks of Toryism; but on the other hand his attack on Lord Penrhyn and employers in general seems to smack of Socialism. But perhaps we take him too seriously. The book is probably meant rather as a jest than as a serious piece of criticism. The main point of the jest seems to be to take the English party system with great gravity and logical precision, excluding it from all those kindly indulgences which we generally extend to things human. This stern process is mainly extended to the Liberal party, which is rigidly pinned down to consistency with its early doctrines and stringently excluded from any change or variation of faith. Alas! Mr. Cecil Chesterton is yet young. He will learn as he grows older that names, and especially the names of parties, offer convenient tickets which soon lose their original meaning. Most party badges survive as little more than indolent tribal categories. The names of the two great American parties are still "Democrat" and "Republican"; but that does not prevent every Republican from being a democrat and every Democrat a republican. We do not bind the English Conservative to fight under the flag of Slavery or even Protection: why then should we hold the English Liberal to the teaching of the Manchester School? When Mr. Chesterton has grown old enough to see the beauty of compromise, he will put aside his inquisitorial robe. Instead of driving the wandering political flocks back to their folds, he will try to persuade them that they can safely follow him as the true shepherd. Still, this is an amusing piece of youthful cleverness, and deserves to be read as such.

LITERAL OR LITERARY?

Les Sonnets du Portugais d'Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Traduits en vers français. Avec préface, texte anglais en regard, et notes. Par LÉON MOREL. (Paris: Hachette.)

Les Sonnets Portugais d'Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Traduits en sonnets français, avec notice, texte anglais, commentaire et notes. Par FERNAND HENRY. (Paris: E. Guilmoto.)

THE pacific penetration of English literature into France is proceeding rapidly, although the present invasion cannot compare in magnitude and influence with that of the eighteenth century so well described by M. J. Texte, when Locke and, later, Richardson took France and even Europe by storm. Still the influx of our nineteenth-century authors goes steadily on. Of the earlier writers, Byron and Shelley have been more or less entirely translated. A good deal of Tennyson has also been turned into French. Recently there has been a run on Mrs. Browning. At the present time there exist no less than three verse-translations of the Sonnets from the Portuguese, one by M. Charles des Guerrois, and the other two by M. Léon Morel and M. Fernand Henry, both of whom have already won their spurs in this particular field of literature. M. Morel has translated Tennyson's "In Memoriam," M. Henry has to his account translations of the Sonnets of Shakespeare and of "Omar Khayyâm". In addition, a certain number of notices have appeared on Mrs. Browning by Taine, Emile Montégut and Joseph Texte, mainly in reference to Aurora Leigh. More complete studies have been made by M. Gabriel Sarrazin and Madame Mary Duclaux-Darmesteter.

At first sight Mrs. Browning does not seem to be a poet to allure a French translator. We have only to recall her carelessness of form, her fatal tendency to confound improvisation with inspiration, her manner of throwing the bridle, to use Madame de Sévigné's picturesque phrase, on the neck of her Pegasus, her positive sympathy for the worst of her poetical lapses which strangely enough recalls the foible of a far correcter poet—Ovid. Nor are her grammatical audacities, her rhythmical monstrosities, her verbal obscurities, precisely the qualities to commend her to the average Frenchman with his nice sense of proportion, correctness and polish. Again, no small part of her work consists of vers de circonstance due to a curious itching to set to poetry the most unsuitable themes. Such still-born stuff is not likely to enjoy re-incarnation in any language. Yet when we come to the Sonnets from the Portuguese we find ourselves obliged to take back nearly everything we have advanced. For once in a way the exigencies of the composition imposed on the author the necessity of paying attention to technique. In addition she brought to her subject a rare efflorescence of passion, the bursting into bloom for the first time of a soul that for forty years had been accumulating and storing up the finest essences in literature to blend with its own rich personality. But what distinguishes them from other love-poems is that they are an analysis of a woman's soul by a woman, which is still a rarity in poetry, though the transcriptions in prose are growing more numerous. As a feminine Confessio Amantis, with its pure yet penetrating psychology, it cannot fail to be of great interest to the cultivated Frenchman.

What adds piquancy to the task of the present reviewer is that MM. Morel and Henry are not only rival translators, they are also mutual critics. M. Morel has already stated elsewhere his opinions of M. Henry's earlier efforts at translation. M. Henry, who on this occasion is later in the field, avails himself of the opportunity of criticising M. Morel's poetical principles and practices. It is an admirable riposte, and the courteous manner in which it is couched is equally admirable. Still we cannot help surmising that M. Henry has deliberately invaded M. Morel's territory, not merely to contest his theories, but also to challenge a comparison between the actual performances of each. It is certainly a very interesting duel. M. Morel is the champion of literal translation. Taken as an example of close and faithful rendering and of a dogged determination to cut no difficulty, however thorny, his version must be pronounced a veritable tour de force. Unfortunately too great a fidelity to the letter may lead to unfaithfulness towards the spirit. There are times when the word for word method takes us further from the original than an entire recast of the sentence. The faithful keeps us falsely true. Moreover the literal is not always the literary, more especially in French, which is far less plastic or elastic than English. In no language is a suggestion in the translation of the construction of the foreign sentence less tolerable, or a literal reproduction of bizarre expressions more obscure, especially when those expressions depend for their effect on certain national idiosyncrasies which make them household words in one country and logographs elsewhere, such as, for instance, the majority of biblical allusions current in England. Of course, if the qualities themselves are entirely lacking in French, no system of translation can transplant them. Take, for instance, the naïve, which is as common as possible in everyday German poetry, and constitutes perhaps its principal charm. It seems quite impossible to reproduce it in French. The naïve as understood by our neighbours across the Channel is often adorable, but it has in it either a dash of coquetry on the part of the character or of malice on the part of the author. It is never unconscious. The talent for introspection is not only common to all classes, but the children themselves seem born with this sort of dual consciousness. Naturally it pervades the whole of their literature.

Against the ideal of translation pure and simple M. Henry sets up his theory of explication; paraphrase is a poor equivalent, besides it has got a bad name in England from its misuse in our schools. What M. Henry really means is a complete re-cast, wherever such is necessary, in order to preserve the spirit of the original and ensure that the rendering shall be really and truly literary French.

M. Henry lays stress on the still greater importance of the number of passages in which the translations give different interpretations. We have noticed one or two in which the renderings are entirely distinct. For the most part on such occasions we are inclined to agree with M. Henry, who has fortified his position by a careful study of the Browning correspondence, which often serves as a precious commentary. Thus, while M. Morel renders "Lost Saints" in the well-known Sonnet XLII. as "Mes Saintes délaissées," M. Henry, with his "Ceux que le Ciel m'a pris," is obviously nearer the original, which alludes to the author's lost brother. But in the majority of instances, the difference comes in the case of those sentences into which Mrs. Browning squeezes a quart of metaphor, where there is only room for a pint according to French measures. In English at a pinch one metaphor can "nurse" another; in French each must have its separate place, and when the space is limited, something has to be excluded, and so one translator sacrifices one part of the idea and another another. Take for instance the phrase:

"To let thee . . .
 . . . hear the sighing years.
 Re-sighing on my lips renunciative."

M. Henry very cleverly translates "renunciative" by

"Te forcer d'écouter toujours ce non sévère
 Que les ans malheureux ne cessent d'amener
 Sur ces lèvres."

M. Morel gives up "renunciative" altogether: on the other hand he makes some attempt at bringing out the force of "sighing," which M. Henry merely indicated in a rudimentary fashion by the word "malheureux"

"Entendre les dolentes Plaintes des tristes ans de ma lèvre émaner."

But neither appears to be able to find proper room for "re-sighing" at all.

The contest through the forty-three rounds which the sonnets constitute is well fought out to the end. On the whole we think the palm must be awarded to M. Henry on two grounds. Thanks to his methods of simplifying and rewriting, his version is less intricate and involved and ipso facto more truly French than that of M. Morel who in following up too closely the twists and turns of the original occasionally falls into a laboured and labyrinthine style. We may compare, for instance, M. Henry's opening stanza of Sonnet VI. with the somewhat tortuous version of M. Morel.

"Va-t-en donc ! mais pourtant je sens à l'avenir
 Dans ton ombre toujours je resterai blottie,
 Quoique seule à jamais sur le seuil de ma vie,
 Je ne convierai plus mon âme à m'obéir."

"Quitte-moi. Mais je sens que je vis désormais
 Dans ton ombre. Jamais seule, au seuil de la vie
 De mon être, dès lors, je n'appelle et convie
 Les facultés de mon esprit."

Again the suave and smooth-flowing verse of M. Henry seems more in keeping with the best tradition of French poetry than the rather jerky transcript of M. Morel, in which, as may be noted in the passage quoted above, the pause is far more often in the middle than at the end of the line. On the other hand, from time time to M. Morel achieves through his devotion to literalness a more picturesque effect, and he certainly avoids the banal into which M. Henry through excessive simplification occasionally falls. Thus M. Morel successfully preserves the full force of "vindicating grace" and "renounce to thy face" in:

"A l'amour souverain
 Je dois le riche don, la rédemptrice grâce
 De vivre, aimant toujours, aimant toujours en vain . . .
 De te bénir en te reniant à ta face :"

where M. Henry is content to write

"J'ai le droit d'obtenir
 De cet amour au moins cette grâce suprême
 De vivre, quoiqu'en vain, en t'aimant tout de même,
 Et tout en renonçant à toi, de te bénir."

M. Henry has made his task rather easier by adopting the less strait-laced metre of the French sonnet in which, in the regular form, the first two lines of the sextet rhyme together instead of severally rhyming with the four concluding lines. He speaks "of preserving the regular form," but he also employs the irregular, and on one occasion at least he makes use of the ordinary English ending for the sextet, while in the opening quatrains he adopts alternative rhymes. As for the rhymes themselves, each writer takes out a full licence. We note such rhymes as appelant and prunelles, non and monts, cœur and heurts, which must be perfect eye-sores to the literary descendants of Boileau and his tribe, but are as a matter of fact absolutely harmonious. M. Henry boldly proclaims himself a hardened sinner in this respect. M. Morel, while arguing the point, seems to shelter himself behind the example of Mrs. Browning. Even in literature it is an advantage to find an Eve for a scapegoat.

THE SHORES OF OLD ROMANCE

Aucassin and Nicolette. Translated by ANDREW LANG.
 (Routledge, 3s. 6d. net.)

Who better equipped, as a scholar and as a writer of charmingly musical verse, than Mr. Andrew Lang to translate for English readers the famous poetic love tale of "Aucassin and Nicolette"? Surely Mr. Lang, born and nurtured almost among the Braes of Yarrow, with its ballads, its loves, and its romantic encounters, has drawn in with his earliest breath "all the charm of all the muses," and is an ideal translator and editor of this old French masterpiece. Mr. Lang's versatile genius is one of the mysteries of our generation. Translator of Homer into stately and picturesque prose, and of Theocritus into honey-sweet phrases, here he is at home again in pouring the wine of romance from the golden into the silver cup in the deftest manner. A year or two ago he wrote a learned and exhaustive introduction to a translation of Longinus, and, anon, he figured in his obliging versatile rôle in an introduction to Alexandre Dumas' "Three Musketeers." He is the good genius for giving every one a literary lift, whether on to the fleet Pegasus or a cart-horse. In his youthful prime, he must, in the "gloaming and the mirk," when the "freenge was red on the western hills," have strangely foregathered with the spirit of Merlin, where the Powsail loses itself in the Tweed, in his own borderland; and been gifted by the wizard with his strange and unapproached versatility and adaptability! The publishers have entered with enthusiasm into the making of this daintiest and most delightful of volumes, and produced a work of art, paper, printing, and illustrations being worthy to enshrine this saga of love and chivalry. Every one can now enter into this "kingdom by the sea," and those who are sorrowful will get a glimpse into a past that might well make them less forlorn.

NEW CLOTHES

O ALL ye meadows fair,
And soft sunshiny banks,
Where daisies without number—where
Pale cowslips range their comely ranks
And buttercups with prouder yellow
Think each himself the finest fellow;
Since I put on new clothes to-day,
Call, call me forth to you;
For I would bear myself the way
Your trimmest blossoms do.

Ye nobly peopled woods,
And stately thronged dells,
Moods of grand oak and beech-tree—moods
Of lofty pines whose music swells
To the hale wind's repeated pleasure,
When all their tops keep time and measure—
Are moods that I would learn to share,
Then call me forth, ye trees;
Teach me grave bows and curtseys fair
As those ye give the breeze.

T. STURGE MOORE.

WINNOWER'S SONG TO THE WINDS

(From Joachim du Bellay)

LIGHT flock, to you I sing,
Ye winds with fleeting wing,
Who thro' the world do fly,
And whisperingly make
Sweet murmur, as ye shake
The shadowed greenery.

I bring you flowerets—
Lilies, and violets,
And here are roses new;
Sweet roses newly blown
Of hue vermillion,
And pink carnations too.

Come with your sweet blowing
To this my winnowing:
Breathe o'er my lands and home!
The while I toil and sweat
To winnow out my wheat
In the hot noon-tide, come!

A. E. J. R.

TWO OLD SONGS OF MAY

(From the Gaelic)

ONE of the most beautiful of old Gaelic poems is an Ecstasy of Spring composed no one knows how many generations before the lyric voices of Elizabeth's day. The name of the poet a thousand years ago went away like a blossom on that swift river which fills the pools of oblivion. Perhaps even then it was hardly remembered, for the singer is often but the fleeting shadow who sang of a star, while the star remains. This Ecstasy of Spring is known as the May Day Song, and it is recorded in an old Gaelic MS. of the later part of the ninth or beginning of the tenth century, though how much older it is than this MS. none knows. The MS. is called "Macgnímartha Finn," and recounts the Boyish Exploits of Finn, the great warrior-king of the Gael, the Gaelic Nimrod. This narrative in Middle-Irish has been translated by Dr. Kuno Meyer in "Eriu," vol. i. Pt. 2, who gives there also a portion of the May Song. It is to be found intact in the "Four Songs" translated by this indefatigable Celtic student, who brings the light of poetry into his most severely difficult work . . . and how difficult old Gaelic is to translate few can realise. If any present reader knows modern Gaelic, with its confusing complexity, its puzzling spelling, its singular inversions and habitual pleonasm, let him see what he could make of ancient Gaelic so crudely concise as

"Táinic sam(h) slán sóer, día mbi clóen caill cīar, līngid ag sing snáid
día mbi réid rón rian."

He will almost certainly find it incomprehensible. The other day I read slowly to a Gaelic islesman the following two quatrains (from another old-Irish poem):

"Maidid glass for cach lus, bilech dīss daire glaiss:
tāinic sam(h), rufāith gaim gomit coin cuilinn caiss."

"Canaid lon dron dard día mbi forbb caill cērb, sūanaid ler lonn liac(h)
foling iach brec bēdc."

On a second and slower reading, dwelling on each word, he got nothing more from the first quatrain than what he had already got—"there will be something about a flower (lus) and a dog (coin) and maybe holly (cuilinn)."
In the second, lon was easily recognisable as a blackbird: but he did not even guess at any more except to make a mistake in brec, first thinking it the familiar Gaelic name for a trout (breac) and then thinking it might be the old word for a wolf (also breac, for one of the meanings of the word is "brindled"), where as here it is the adjective "speckled" qualifying "salmon" (iach), a name which naturally he did not know. And what this islesman, a Gael with very little English, and in a sense learned, for he could read Gaelic well and even that with old-fashioned spelling and obsolete words, could not do, I do not think even a specialist in modern Gaelic could do. But the crude jerky quatrains are full of poetic feeling, as word by word unfolded for us out of the past by Dr. Kuno Meyer:

"Green bursts out on every herb,
The top of the green oakwood is bushy,
Summer is come, winter has gone,
Twisted hollies wound the hound."

"The blackbird sings a loud strain,
To him the live wood is a heritage;
The sad excited sea sleeps,
The speckled salmon leaps."

(literally, and Dr. Meyer might as well have so rendered his translation: "Breaks greenness on every herb" . . . "arrived is summer, gone is winter" . . . "Sings the blackbird a strain loudly" . . . "sleeps the sea, sad, heaving"—for liac may mean that rather than "excited," which does not go with sūanaid, "sleeps.")

In this old poetry the observation is always very close, and what we should call unconventional, as "Forbrú brain, táinic sam(h)" . . . "Ravens flourish, summer has come"—which is every whit as true, and in the northlands of the Gael even more true, than the identification of May-tide, with the often refraining cuckoo, the often tardy swallow. But of the cuckoo, also, the old poetry can speak revealingly; for if, as seems likely, the word mbind can be rendered "drowsy" (or "softly tender"), the line "canaid cūi cēol mbind mblāith," "singeth the cuckoo a drowsy sweet music," is full of the heat of the summer days that come in May.

In giving my version, as concisely and in as brief a metre as practicable, of this old-world Song of May, after the redaction of Kuno Meyer, I am aware of how much is missed even though I have tried to retain the most distinctive phrases, as that lovely phrase in the seventh quatrain "where the talk of the rushes is come." I cannot improve upon Dr. Meyer's version, but mine is an effort to translate into rhymed quatrains the old Gaelic song in a metre as succinct as that of the original, to keep to the sense always, and to the actual words where practicable. When I have changed these, it has been to the loss of the old poet; e.g., his dust-coloured cuckoo does not personify summer, and call her a queen. It says: "Welcome, splendid summer." But in the main I have tried to keep to the original.

- " May, clad in cloth of gold,
Cometh this way:
The fluting of blackbirds
Heralds the day.
- " The dust-coloured cuckoo
Cries ' Welcome, O Queen !'
For winter has vanished,
The thickets are green.
- " Soon the trampling of cattle
Where the river runs low !
The long hair of the heather,
The canna like snow !
- " Wild waters are sleeping,
Foam of blossom is here :
Peace, save the panic
In the heart of the deer.
- " The wild-bee is busy,
The ant honey spills,
The wandering kine
Are abroad on the hills.
- " The harp of the forest
Sounds low, sounds sweet :
Soft bloom on the heights ;
On the loch, haze of heat.
- " The waterfall dreams :
Snipe, corncrakes, drum
By the pool where the talk
Of the rushes is come.
- " The swallow is swooping ;
Song swings from each brae :
(?) Rich harvest of mast falls ;
The swamp shimmers gay.
- " Happy the heart of man,
Eager each maid :
Lovely the forest,
The wild plane, the green glade.
- " Truly winter is gone,
Come the time of delight,
The summer-truce joyous,
May, blossom-white.
- " In the heart of the meadows
The lapwings are quiet :
A winding stream
Makes drowsy riot.
- " Race horses, sail, run,
Rejoice and be bold !
See, the shaft of the sun
Makes the water-flag gold.
- " Loud, clear, the blackcap ;
The lark trills his voice—
Hail, May of delicate colours !
'Tis May-Day—Rejoice !"

The other old Gaelic May-poem is not ancient, but is certainly over a hundred and thirty, and may be about two hundred years old. I came upon it the other day through the courtesy of an unknown correspondent in America. This gentleman caught sight of a little leather-bound volume in a second-hand bookshop in New York, and was puzzled at the language in which the poems it contained appeared. Well he might be at first, he not having the Gaelic, for the title runs "Comh-Chruinneachidh Orannaigh Gaidhealach," and how was he to know that the imprint at the bottom of the page, "Duneidunn M.DCC.LXXVI.," is merely Edinburgh? He was good enough to ascertain an address to which he could forward the book to me, and in his letter said that he thought it only right that this forlorn exile should return to its own land. And right glad was I to have it so. This little volume of Gaelic minstrelsy is "Le Raonuill Macdomhnuill, ann 'N Eilean Eigg," i.e., by Ronald Macdonald of the Isle of Eigg, that beautiful precipitous island of the Inner Hebrides which so many years ago now Hugh Miller made famous in his geological "Cruise of the Betsy." Or, rather, it was compiled by him; for the poets of the songs and poems in this volume are for the most part as nameless, as well as tameless and rude and wild, as the makers of the border-ballads. The contents are diversified too: now one comes on a Iorram, or boat-chant, now on a Marbh-rann or threnody, now on a love-song such as the "Oran gaoil le Mac Cailein d'inghein Mhic Dhonuill Ile," or a feudal song so well known as the "Oran le Inghin Alastair ruaigh do Mac Lèoid" ("Song by the Daughter of Alexander the Red—i.e., the famous Mary Macleod—to the Macleod"). The book is a delight if only for its quaint wild-swan like primitive refrains or chorus effects, e.g.:

" *Holìbh o iriag o ilil o,
Holìbh o iriag o ro thi,
Holìbh o iriag o ilil o,
Smeorach le clann
Raonuill mi,*"

which may well have been caught from the smeorach (thrush) itself: or this other luinneag:

" *Hi il u il agus o,
Hi il o ho ri nan,
Hi il u il agus o
Fa lil o hu lil o
Ho ri ghealladh hi il an."*

But to the Maytide poem! It is nameless, as to author; and is entitled simply "Oran an 't Samhraidh." It is, however, too long, and in its metrical skill too involved and continuously alliterate to be rendered into English here. So I do no more than give the drift of it, for in the opening stanzas is to be found the essential part of the whole poem. I may add that in the first stanza here "son o' the wind" is a poetic simile for the bagpipes (or here, perhaps, the feadan, the whistle or flute of the pipes): and that, in the third, May is, Gaelic fashion, personified as a youth.

" At break of day when all the woods are wet,
When every bush is shining white,
When in a silver maze the grass is set,
And the sun's golden light
Floods the green vale,
Lift, lift along the dewy grassy trail
The cheerful music of the son o' the wind,
Till, in the forest, floating voices sail,
And vanishing echoes haunt the old rocks stern and blind.

" Let the fresh windy birch her odours breathe,
Her shimmering leaves ablaze:
Let the wide branchy beech with sunbeams seethe
While clustered cattle gaze,
The sunshine on them too:
Let yonder thrush that flew
Carry the tidings of the golden day
Till not a glen or copse heart-turning to the blue
But thrills with the green rapturous loveliness of May.

" When evening falls, what bell is't rings so clear? . . .
The cuckoo tolling down day's ebbing tide.
And what is that glad call, so near? . . .
The Mavis with his rain
Of song thrown far and wide.
And what these blooms May gathers to his side,
And with his sweet warm breath doth redly stain? . . .
Roses, red roses, culled from hill and plain,
Roses, white roses dipt in dew, for May's awaiting bride."

FIONA MACLEOD.

THE SCHILLER CENTENARY IN GERMANY

THE German newspapers and magazines are just now full of articles on Schiller, the centenary of whose death fell on May 9. The Litterarische Echo sent forth requests to great men in various lands for a statement of the influence on them of Schiller and his works. Three Englishmen—Lord Goschen, George Meredith, and George Moore—responded to the call.

Lord Goschen writes:

"Apart from some of his youthful literary extravagances and aberrations, Schiller stands out as one of the purest writers who ever achieved immortal fame. But the key to Schiller's immense hold on the imagination of the German people is not to be found in his literary supremacy alone. Goethe has done more for literature, Schiller more for national life and humanity. Schiller was, in a sense, a national prophet who felt in advance, aye, and prepared in advance, the greater life, the freer existence, the future possibilities, within the reach of his German Vaterland. His gospel was a gospel of duty and high purpose. To this day he wields a vast influence for good over German youth. They could have no nobler teacher, and to the world at large he still stands out as a glorious figure on a pedestal which a hundred years have left unshaken, with laurels on his brow still green; and long may it be before iconoclastic criticism, or misty unintelligibilities, or the hard and heartless teaching of materialism weaken the hold on generations to come of Schiller, the poet and the man."

George Meredith writes:

"After the Sturm and Drang of Schiller's youth, a mental equilibrium conducing to a noble rectitude set in, and that has made his work of enduring value, Die Räuber being but a temporary stimulant. His highest works will surely maintain their influence as literature, and whatever may be thought of the tragedy of Don Carlos, the wise words of Marquis Posa remain fresh and sustaining. My personal preference in Schiller's dramas is for Wallenstein's Lager. The name of Schiller calls forth that of Goethe, so splendidly fraternal they were, though with qualities in sharp contrast. Their joint labours in the Xenien, their constant friendship, are an example for all who are great and would be eminent above the thought of rivalry. Schiller is to me the forceful pure well-spring, Goethe the Alp of the upper snows and flowering vales; the one poet and hero; the other poet and sage. Happy is Germany in having such a couple to head and inspire her young. Changes there must be, but the Germany that could produce those two assures the world that she has in her breast others to follow. Glasses will be raised in England on the day of the Schiller centenary in close sympathy with the Fatherland."

George Moore declares that he has never read a line of Schiller in his life, but it would be rash for any one to conclude that he had no opinion about him. The name Frederick Schiller inspired in him an instinctive distrust, yet he is sure that Schiller's works are full of all those sterling qualities which make works classical and unreadable. We can only deplore utterances of such very doubtful humour, and trust that the German nation will not take them for an expression of the cultivated opinion of England.

Maeterlinck's reply to the same question is an interesting piece of criticism. He writes:

"Schiller est le type du grand poète normal. Quand on commence la lecture d'une de ses œuvres on a l'impression que l'on sait d'avance ce qu'il va dire. Il n'apporte rien d'imprévu; mais il dit mieux que nul n'eût pu le faire ce que tout le monde aurait dit. Il est le grand poète général et universel, d'équilibre parfait. Dans la littérature mondiale, au milieu de génies plus exceptionnels, plus puissants, plus originaux, plus pénétrants, plus profonds, il marque le niveau des plus hautes marées de la grande santé lyrique."

MUSICAL COPYRIGHT AND SUMMARY JURISDICTION

THE present crisis in the music trade is sufficiently acute to raise the whole question of summary procedure in cases of infringement of copyright. The absence of any effective powers under the Music (Summary Proceedings) Copyright Act 1902; the defeat of the Amending Bill; and the incredible supineness of the Government have given so startling an impetus to the traffic in piratical songs as to paralyse the entire trade. Mr. Akers Douglas has flippantly ventured to doubt the importance of the question at all, and those chevaliers d'industrie who trade upon the shortcomings of the law will, we may rest assured, hasten to secure their ill-gotten gains. Nor will copyright music alone be exploited. Popular works are just as much at the mercy of the pirate. For, unless the copies have been unlawfully imported, none of the Copyright Acts give any right of search. Only the other day Mr. Rudyard Kipling's "Barrack Room Ballads" was openly hawked in the streets with impunity and without, as far as we are aware, any proceedings being instituted against the offenders, who lay perdu while the hawkers plied their trade with brazen-voiced audacity.

The grievance is not limited to these two cases. Plays are openly stolen, travestied, or pirated without any practical remedy. Popular titles are given to preposterous versions, and, conversely, well-known favourites are performed under the thin disguise of another name. The real owners have no remedy against the lessees of theatres, while the offenders hie to fresh woods and pastures new before they can be served with a writ. At the personal instance of the leading managers the draft Copyright Bill which the Government has pigeon-holed, provides drastic summary remedies. But the whole business serves to illustrate the fatuity which has stigmatised our copyright legislation as a byword. None of these Acts provide any summary remedy for the patent infringement of literary, artistic, dramatic, or musical copyright. Neither a policeman nor a magistrate has any terrors for pirates deliberately appropriating a book, a work of art, a play, or a song. It is merely idle to talk of actions for damages against undisclosed defendants or to apply for injunctions to restrain the commission of offences indistinguishable from larceny.

A summary machinery, it is true, exists under the Newspaper Acts which, although clumsy, might, if effectively enforced, serve a useful turn. For the Newspaper Acts apply to "books," and a sheet of music is a "book" under the Copyright Acts. Everybody knows that a printer of any newspaper or book omitting to print his name and address thereon is liable to fine on summary proceedings instituted by the Attorney- or Solicitor-General. And the same remedies can be enforced against any one "publishing or dispersing" or assisting therein. It may be somewhat cold comfort to persons who are being robbed of their own property to tell them to go in search of the Law Officers of the Crown and secure their co-operation, but unless "the law" is to be made more of "an ass" than ever it is incredible that on duly certified information consent would be withheld. A single conviction against a single street hawk would suffice to stop the whole traffic.

But, if so, this does not settle the question of principle. Mr. James Caldwell, emulous of an unenviable notoriety, has ventured into ethical arguments in defence of his irreconcilable attitude and discourses with an affectation of profound knowledge about "monopolies." The late Mr. Herbert Spencer exposed the fallacy of this argument against the principle of copyright property. In his "Views Concerning Copyright" he remarks:

"The monopolist is a man who stands in the way of some one who, in the natural order of things, would be able to carry on some business in his absence just as well as in his presence. The free trader is one who needs no help aid from the monopolist, but simply wishes to do that which he could do did the monopolist not exist. But one who, wishing to reprint an author's book, calls the author a monopolist for preventing him, stands in a widely different position. He proposes not simply to use his powers with the aid of such natural resources as are open to every one. He proposes to use that which would not exist but for the author. It is, therefore, an utter misuse of the word to call the author's claim a monopoly."

The bargain between copyright owners and Parliament has been fortunately placed beyond the possibility of doubt. Copyright was made the creature of statute and came under statutory restrictions in order to secure statutory protection and obviate the necessity for proceedings at common law or in Chancery with their prodigious costliness and intolerable delay. The Copyright Acts took the place of the Licensing Acts, which, while they restrained the liberty of the press, protected the rightful owners of copyright property. In short, copyright has a stronger claim to protection now that it is a State-restricted right. The State imposed an arbitrary limitation upon its enjoyment in place of the rights at law which were illimitable and, therefore, during the whole period of user, the State is under the most solemn obligations to secure to owners quiet enjoyment.

Mr. Akers Douglas obviously regards English composers as people of no importance. Would foreign masters backed by all the influence of their own countries come within the same category? We are, it seems, on the eve of a period of unbridled licence and we shall only have ourselves to blame if we do not secure tangible assurances of immediate reform. The petition of the Musical Defence League in the face of the Government's non possumus must be so supported that it cannot be ignored.

W. MORRIS COLLES.

A LITERARY CAUSERIE

CHARACTER AND STYLE

THE other day I was turning over the pages of that handsome and yet moderately priced edition of Fielding's works, which is issued by Messrs. Gay and Bird, when I began to reflect on the very great contrast between the novels of the twentieth and the novels of the eighteenth centuries. As far as I know, a great many of the offensive words, such as realist, idealist, romanticist, symbolist, now in common use in literary circles, had not been invented in the days of Fielding and his friend David Garrick. But it may be asked why the epithet "offensive" is applied to them, and the answer is perfectly simple. The words to which I have referred are the formulæ of people who, whatever be the extent of their studies, are in the strictest meaning of the word illiterate. They endeavour to map out the world of intellect into districts and counties, where each writer is king of one little patch, and they throw the burden of distinguishing, not upon capacity and temperament, where it ought to be, but upon mere method. The consequence is that all these descriptive adjectives are more or less false. When we say that Emile Zola was a realist we do not mean that he presented the realities of life, because the realities of life embrace the poet as well as the clodhopper, and are of the spirit as well as of the flesh. Tears, and faith, and hope belong to human life just as much as desire, and greed, and envy. So the novelist who looks out on life clearly and with his own eyes will never be exclusively one thing or another. To speak truly it is necessary to see truly, and before any man can see truly he must understand exactly what are the limits of his own vision. But this is only a new translation of the old Latin tag, "ne sutor supra crepidam." It is a very simple-looking truth, and yet what we call sincerity in art depends upon its recognition. What day passes in which we do not see men without a vestige of dramatic talent trying to write plays? They will tell you, too, that they have succeeded because of the crowds that are attracted. They can measure neither themselves nor the value of the verdict of groundlings which they have gained.

In the same manner we may see an absolutely prosaic person pluming himself upon his ability to write poetry, quite unaware of the dull mechanism of his lines. He does not understand his limitations. Now it was the first merit of Fielding that he absolutely knew what he didn't know, and refused to attempt what he was unsuited to produce. That, of course, refers to the middle period of his life. During the ignorance of hot youth he had tried to be a dramatic writer, and had, broadly speaking, failed—the talents that make a playwright being quite other than those which produce a novelist. But then Fielding found out that his genius was epic in nature, and that his mind was constructed so as to produce the most brilliant narrative, yet without the faculty of unfolding a story by action and conversation alone. Moreover he knew his own limitations as an observer of life and of nature. He seems, as far as we can see, to have felt little of the poet's ecstasy in regard to stars, and moon, and falling water, and rustling breeze, and echo; he had just sufficient sympathy to admire the poetry they give rise to in the greatest writers, and to adorn his own tale with a mockery of it that was too clever to be offensive. The "things of the spirit" generally were beyond his ken. We could not imagine him creating a Hamlet, or a Macbeth, and he would have spoiled his novels if he had introduced into them any characters of those types. Had he met them in real life, we can fancy with what kindly mockery his eyes would have gleamed. But he knew the boundaries of his world and was careful not to overstep them. The sincerity which kept him in his proper region also purified his style. There is no better narrative extant than his. Yet over many of the storyteller's usual resources he had scarcely any command. Pathos he scarce ever attempted, and when he did, was ever without the art of Sterne, who at the same moment could command laughter as well as tears. Nor had he that direct appeal to the very heart of things which is the dearest possession of the poet. We cannot imagine Fielding at any time forgetting his pursuits and his pleasures to dream in wistfulness over the meaning of life; its sadness and tragedy, the charm with which it attracts at one moment, the disgust and repugnance it inspires at another. These, to adopt the phrase used in one of the witty initial essays in "Tom Jones," were not in his bill of fare, and the reader therefore has no right to expect them.

What he does find is a great gentleman; and, in spite of the company he kept at one time of his life, the cook he married, the questionable pleasures he indulged in, Fielding remained that to the end. He had equally lived the life of a town rake and of a country squire. But when he came to write novels he was detached from all this. I figure him often in his great armchair curious as to the proceedings of his fellow-men but tolerant of their weaknesses, and greeting even their worst actions with something of the cynicism of the man "who has been there." He claimed in the famous introduction to "Joseph Andrews" to be a prose poet, and the claim must be admitted if we accept his idea of poetry as a good one. His "comic epic poem" contains "fable, action, character, sentiment and diction, and is deficient in metre only." But had he more closely approached the conception of the poet as the Seer or Interpreter, this vision of a passing world, beheld, so to speak, from a distant outlying crag, must have been tinted with the colours of the westering sun that spring from vain regret, from the feeling of transience—"shadows we are and shadows we pursue"—from youth that passes and hopes that die and the other high thoughts of life. They were not for him. He is a great gentleman, but nothing more; his is not "the vision or the faculty divine."

The man and the style, however, which are one and the same, may be traced in the famous piece of criticism to which I have referred. He discovers to us there that his greatest bugbear is affectation, a thing which is fathered either by vanity or hypocrisy. It is a good foundation, and it leads him to follow Nature, to be absolutely natural with unequalled devotion. There is no "tearing a passion to tatters" in his work, and the romantic and realistic are noted only to be made the butt of his ridicule. So in his language. Few novelists have been so sparing of adjectives and epigrams. It is a lesson in composition to place a page of his work beside that of any modern writer, George Eliot, for example. Mechanically to count the adjectives is to bring out the simplicity of the old master. And this quality has made him immortal as a humorist. The danger besetting every writer of caricature or burlesque is that of extravagance or over-statement. It was the ruin of Dickens as a writer and has proved disastrous to his crowd of followers and imitators. How did Fielding avoid it? He was a natural "stylist", the foolish may reply, for the very word "stylist" is foolish. It is a key to the artificial in modern literature, and the ambition of the young writer of to-day to be a stylist is to a large extent due to Stevenson's playing the "sedulous ape." A weak man makes up a style that he thinks will win him admiration. He studies the style of this man and of that, stealing a bit here and a bit there, and mingling them into a passable imitation of a style. The critic is shocked because the huge uncritical British public, which puts up with "fakes" of all kinds, accepts the trash for genuine as readily as it buys objets d'art "made in Germany," and as it likes a much ornamented "mixed-up" house more than one built on fine and simple lines.

Fielding did not play the sedulous ape to anybody

although there is evidence enough in his work of an intelligent study of Cervantes, Le Sage, Scarron and others. Instead he went to the fountain head, for "a comic writer should of all others be the least excused for deviating from nature." This, then, was his study: to see human nature so clearly that the affectations and hypocrisies of life concealed it no more than the stream does a salmon on its bed of gravel, and to describe it with the unforced naturalness of his own mind. In other words he was true to himself and gave us a picture of the world that is alive with his vitality. It was not the mock-heroic he delighted in, but the real heroic which may be imitated only by those of his Titanic stature. Tennyson complained that "all can grow the flower now for all have got s ed," but the flower of Fielding's prose never can be grown by any one else—since it has its origin and abiding place in his own individuality. He was the father of the English novel, not of the sentimental French type; and those who inherited his traditions, Sir Walter Scott, and Thackeray, and to a less extent Dickens and George Eliot, followed his example, inasmuch as each retained and kept true to a self of his or her own while learning all that it was in them to acquire from their great predecessor. But to this day his English is unapproached. Scott hardly comes into competition, though his conversations are as good as anything of their kind out of Shakespeare; Thackeray has the slightest suspicion of being "made up;" George Eliot reminds one of a portly female straining and striving to keep step with her male companions. But easy and gay and ironical Fielding holds his place without apparent effort.

A.

FICTION

Rose of the World. By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE. (Smith Elder. 6s.)

To turn the pages of this, the latest novel by the authors of "The Secret Orchard," "The Pride of Jennico," "Young April," and "The Bath Comedy," is to be struck afresh by the versatility of their genius. It is a far cry from eighteenth-century Bath to modern India; from charming, elementary Kitty Bellairs to complex, inscrutable Rosamond Gerardine; from Denis O'Hara, who flaunted that impressionable Irish heart of his so ostentatiously upon his sleeve, to Harry English, a man whose inner self was known only to her he loved.

But if the book now under discussion presents a striking contrast to its predecessor, it contains within itself more noteworthy contrasts still; it is indeed a study of anti-thesis, of metamorphosis. At the outset, when Raymond Bethune, the deus ex machina of the story, enters Lady Gerardine's drawing-room, leaving the town which hangs "like a great rose jewel scintillating, palpitating in the heat," we have the contrast between "the glare, the colour, the movement, the noise . . . the throng of smells—spice, scent, garlic," and "the dim cool room" which Lady Gerardine's fastidious fancy has transformed into an elusive likeness of an English drawing-room. The glamour of the East takes possession of us in the opening chapters, yet the tale grows most enthralling when the scene is shifted from Northern India to the "Old Ancient House" on the Dorset Downs. It is there in that tranquil, grey-walled manor-house, where all was "frankly, beautifully old . . . perfect in antique shabbiness . . . in that old silent house haunted only by a memory, a presence," that we reach the greatest heights of passion and tragedy. For the memory, the presence, that haunts the place is that of the husband of Rosamond's youth. And absorbing as is the narrative, the main interest of the book is centred in the development of Rosamond herself, the gradual awakening of her woman's nature.

A retrospect set before us by a few deft touches enables us to realise Rosamond Tempest, the seventeen-year-old bride so hastily wooed by Harry English, Captain of Guides; a beautiful penniless child, whose only thought during the days of his brief passionate courtship was "of sailing away from that sordid genteel abode," where she had been misunderstood and unhappy, "back to fair India, the land of her dreams."

"This is the truth: you never loved me, but you are still a child," wrote the husband, from that far-away mountain fort where, in the second year of their marriage, he found himself besieged. "I never kissed you but you turned me your cheek. Now it breaks upon me like a wave that, if God only gave me ten minutes more with you, I could teach you how to love . . . Oh, my darling, you wept when I left you . . . In that hour of grief you left me your lips at last, but they were open lips like a child's; what could they give me—who wanted your woman's soul?"

These lines, penned with such fervent agony of longing by a man whom death stared in the face, were never read by that beautiful undeveloped wife of his until ten years after the hero of Baroghil had fallen beneath the Ghazis' swords.

"The journals he had kept for her during the endless months of siege; the letters he had written to her, never to post; his notes; sundry trifling belongings marked with that poignant personal touch which seems to inflict the hardest pain of all" . . . Rosamond English "in her nausea of misery, her rebellion against the unaccepted, unrealisable sorrow, could not look at them, could not touch the poor memorials. She had thrust them back in the battered box away from her sight."

And there they remained until Fate in the shape of Raymond Bethune, Harry English's friend, sought out Rosamond Gerardine in the Indian palace where she dwelt in tedious state with her new fond, tyrannical lord, and having need of important material for the life of his comrade, which he was about to write, forced her to read them in order to select such passages as were essential to his task. Then follows the catastrophe:

"There are women apart, women who unite with their own innate spirituality a virile capacity of feeling; who can love fiercely and suffer as fiercely. Of such was Rosamond. And she had been called to suffering before her undeveloped girl-nature had had time to lay hold on love. . . . The Nemesis of her nature had come upon her now; and she was to be fulfilled to herself after so many years at this moment of her woman's maturity, with a handful of relics and the dust and the smell of the distant Indian fort upon them."

And indeed no one can read that siege diary without acknowledging that Harry English was a fine fellow. It is scarcely possible to believe that this journal is not an actual document, so vivid is it, so natural, so businesslike, the items jotted down in bald, matter-of-fact fashion as though they did not deal with such soul-stirring facts. Reading it, one feels that thus indeed would this man have written, as simply, as graphically; but patriot and hero as he was, he was also a lover. Not a page of this record of privation and strife but bore a special message to his wife:

. . . "Then, even then, upholding my country's flag, the fury of my thoughts was all with you: 'If the flag falls I shall never see her again.' . . . 'The hunger is nothing, it's the thirst . . . Last night I think I had a touch of fever; you were so mixed up in my mind with my thirst that it seemed to me it was the want of you that made me suffer so much—I found myself, found my dry tongue, calling for you, clamouring out loud in the silence.'"

What wonder that Rosamond Gerardine, dragged unwillingly downstairs to entertain the guests whom her second husband has convened in the home consecrated to that sacred memory, should feel her soul sicken within her. "I am sick . . . oh, to see you all eat and drink . . .!"

This is, perhaps, the finest book that Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Castle have as yet produced—daring, original, moving. The plot is developed with that reticence which is the soul of art; the tension is relieved by delightful touches of humour, charming descriptions of scenery, clever character-drawing. Space forbids us to dwell at length upon the minor personages, but a word must be said for Aspasia, who in her fresh simplicity presents such a contrast to her beautiful, mysterious aunt; Sir Arthur, who, "upon the slightest premises and with limited reasoning faculties, formed unalterable views of life;" M. Chatelard, the genial French savant. No portrait in all the gallery is more delicately touched in than this of the author of "La Psychologie Féminine des Races," who draws such characteristic and deliciously inaccurate conclusions from the hypothesis which he has formulated for himself.

Shining Ferry. By "Q." (Hodder and Stoughton, 6s.)

HAD we read all of this novel but—let us say—the last third of it, we should cheerfully and confidently have pronounced it to be amongst Mr. Quiller-Couch's best work. He exploits once more his favourite Duchy; and he writes with all his accustomed zest and mastery of his favoured theme. The chief characters are excellently drawn, the quaintnesses of local minor character touched in with a loving and skilful hand. Local colour is suggested rather than laboriously emphasised, as only so experienced an artist could suggest it. The handling of the book, in fact, as we have indicated, is in the writer's best style; the interest, up to a certain point, is sustained unflinching and naturally. Yet we laid it down, at last, with a sense of blank disappointment. For in the last third or so of the book the interest, to our mind, suddenly filters away. The fault is one of structure. Mr. Quiller-Couch has begun the book on a scale which, for its due working-out, would need almost a second volume perhaps half as long again. The scale is sustained for about two-thirds of the novel; and then, under the necessity for a speedy finish, the design is contracted, and the book seems to collapse rather than end. Nor is this all. We experience a kindred disappointment in the very character of the novel. Mr. Quiller-Couch appears to purpose in the outset a serious study of character in the grip of situation: the inception and unfolding of the situation are carefully and fully developed, and our expectation as to his purpose is maintained, until we reach that turning-point in the closing third of the story. Then, having got his situation, the author throws it away. Tired (one might think) of his work, he drops all appearance of serious intention, and the book ends conventionally on a thin love-interest as a slight, if pleasant example of the novel of commerce. One is puzzled, with a sense of unkept promise. The interest of the novel dribbles out along several lines, none of which assumes a principal position and concentrates attention. All this is a pity; for till the disaster of the conclusion the book has really held attention, and seemed secure of excellence. And it is all done, seemingly, because Mr. Quiller-Couch had bethought himself of the necessity for a somewhat delayed love-business, and found that he could not satisfactorily finish his novel on the scale on which he had been writing it. That may not be so; but such is the effect on the reader. And such is the reason why we are disappointed with what is in large measure a well-written book, with plenty of character and written in excellent English.

The Grey Brethren: and Other Fragments in Prose and Verse. By MICHAEL FAIRLESS. (Duckworth, 2s. 6d.)

THESE posthumous "fragments" of the lady who wrote under the name of Michael Fairless, very diverse in literary form, are (as the editor says) united by a common and very winning personality. Throughout one feels the breath of a very gentle womanliness, "steadfast and demure" in the Miltonic sense of the latter, now degenerate, word, and the unclamorous endeavour after the higher life. They are only fragments in the sense of being heterogeneous in literary character, brief and obviously incidental in their manner of production. But all are quite complete in their slight kind. Though slender and unambitious, they are written in a refined style which is the natural effluence of a refined personality; and if not quite strong enough for all that is implied in the exacting term "distinguished," the style has yet a touch of distinction, such as comes from an habitual mental asceticism, electing only the things of good repute. With an earnest natural religiousness, and a high ethical sense, "Michael Fairless" combines a certain grace and sweetness of fancy, in the fairy stories sometimes happily playful. Her imaginative faculty (in the stricter sense of that variously used phrase) is not strong, but rather gentle and feminine. In all she writes there is a pervading atmosphere of domesticity; the sense of the home is never far from her, as it is, indeed, the most native of womanly interests. "The Grey Brethren," which gives its title to the volume, is a tenderly and reticently touched reminiscence of two maiden ladies, with a certain dove-like shimmer of high quietude over it all. "A German Christmas Eve" is a descriptive sketch of characteristic domestic charm. "A Christmas Idyll" is an imaginative fantasy full of fine ethical feeling and thoughtful religion. It is the most ambitious of these papers; but while it is never merely cheap, it is subject to the remarks we have already made on the writer's imaginative limits. "Luvly Miss" is a sketch in quite another kind, the simple record of a poor child, dying from an accident, and her devout worship of an altogether ridiculous doll. But it is done with a true and unstudied pathos, the story being allowed to tell itself. The poems, as a whole, are the least successful work in the volume. Yet the "Lark's Song" has a soul of simple joy with some not too remote kinship to Blake; and "Spring" also has its freshness. There is genuine feeling in these poems, but an insufficient magic. Better, in some respects best of all, we think, are the "Four Stories Told to Children." In the fairy story Michael Fairless's unforced fancy blends naturally with her moral earnestness, yet there is no suspicion of the preachiness which children loathe. "Tinkle-Tinkle" has a quiet and serious beauty; "Discontented Daffodils" is very good of its kind. And "The Dreadful Griffin," for once, shows the writer in a vein of genuine laughter and extravagance at play. No child but would accompany the recital with delighted mirth. It is a story altogether different from the horse-play and tasteless clowning with which would-be followers of Lewis Carroll have made children too familiar; a story full of the simple fun which they love. Not the least of Michael Fairless's qualities as a child's writer is this gift of simplicity. She does not write down to the child, but feels with it. And that is nowadays rare in a sophisticated age.

The House of Barnkirk. By AMY McLAREN. (Duckworth, 6s.)

HERE we have a delightful picture of a charming family, consisting of a mother and three children who have settled in a beautiful old house in the Lowlands; and are on terms of intimacy with the surrounding gentry, Sir Wyndham, to whom the House of Barnkirk belongs, Lady Jean Mowbray, and a Captain Anson, whose birth is wrapped in mystery. A mystery of some kind would seem inevitable—to stimulate the interest of a large number of readers, no doubt—but it is certain that the book would be a much better one without that element, which is somewhat far-fetched and unconvincing, in so far as it would be a far truer picture of life. For, in our opinion, Miss McLaren writes so well that it is unnecessary for her to have recourse to well-worn devices of uninhabited rooms and secret marriages to gain a hearing for her work. She has the gift of making her characters charming and lifelike; there is a sureness of touch in her delineation of them which is not often met with; and though she does not probe deeply into them, they all possess a distinctive personality. This is not an easy thing to achieve; it cannot be done without an insight that comes from a power of observation and much sympathy. She would do well to cultivate and develop these gifts, and, aiming at a higher mark, she would be able to step out of the well-filled ranks of the mere storyteller. As it is she has written a pleasant enough tale, with material in it that seems rather wasted when it serves to usher in sensation which is quite commonplace, and not particularly well executed compared with the excellence of the treatment of the characters of Lady Jean Mowbray, Mrs. Beaton and her two daughters, Geraldine and Louisa. We shall look forward with interest to the appearance of Miss McLaren's next novel.

THE BOOKSHELF

ANY collection of extracts from the drama of the Elizabethan period must inevitably court comparison with that made by Charles Lamb. Mr. W. H. Williams, in his Specimens of the Elizabethan Drama (Clarendon Press, 7s. 6d.), handicaps himself at the outset by making his collection supplementary to Lamb's. One doubts whether such a work is necessary. Lamb's "Specimens" are by no means faultless in the eyes of later students, but the fact that they acted as a finger-post, and the first finger-post of their kind, is more than sufficient justification for their existence. But what was new territory at the beginning of the nineteenth century is not by any means new territory at the beginning of the twentieth. Very few of the dramatists noticed by Mr. Williams (and they range from Lyly to Shirley) are not available in more or less complete editions to any one who cares to study them; whereas Lamb had to hunt for more than a third part of his specimens in copies found only in the British Museum or in private collections. If, therefore, there is room for a new set of specimens, its editor ought to approach his task entirely uninfluenced by Lamb. Lamb's aim was purely æsthetic, but none the less he frequently selected the passage in a play which must appear the most striking to any editor compiling with an educational object in view, and obviously a book which does not contain such passages must be incomplete. To cite the case of Marlowe's Dr. Faustus, Lamb includes the soliloquy uttered by Faustus during the last hour of his life, before he pays the penalty of his compact with Mephistopheles, and this accordingly finds no place in Mr. Williams's book. But Mr. Williams does not in our judgment always do the best with the material that his plan leaves him. Lamb does not print, for example, Faustus's apostrophe to Helen and Mr. Williams omits to take the opportunity, which one would have expected him to jump at, of including it. There can be no doubt that the most valuable book of this kind would be one which selected, as Mr. Williams has done, the typical dramatists and gave, as Mr. Williams has not done, the most typical extracts, without regard to Lamb, or, perhaps, gave Lamb's specimens, with additions where they seemed to be necessary. Mr. Williams has, however, elected to supplement Lamb, and it remains for us to see whether he has got the best possible results within his self-imposed limits. We are inclined to think not. He gives a brief biographical account of each dramatist and appends a critical estimate of his style. This is well; but the Specimens which follow do not always illustrate the qualities which he has attributed to their authors. He says, for instance, that there is nothing "amateurish" about William Rowley's work; and either we are not at one with him in his understanding of the word amateurish or else he has overlooked the fact that the action of the passage which he gives from A New Wonder could hardly have failed to occur to the most ordinary sentimentally inclined amateur in existence. The passage as it stands is apparently stamped with amateurism, and one must read much more of the play to realise the masterliness of its characterisation. We venture to suggest that the work would have gained considerably in value as a handbook for students had it taken a form entirely different from that of Lamb's "Specimens." There is ample room for an extended biographical survey of the dramatists of the Elizabethan period, with an appendix of really illustrative extracts from their writings.

The old wild humours and surprises of collectorship diminish daily. Each corner of what was once a vast, unregulated, rich domain belonging to the lover of the applied arts of the eighteenth century is now parcelled-out, scientifically analysed and reduced to absolute and unromantic order. One tiny island of this fair estate had remained somewhat neglected until recently. Those who collected old English glass had at least some excitement left them, for little had been written on the subject with the exception of Mr. Hartshorne's fine work which was not often consulted by the modest amateur. Since knowledge is but sorrow's spy we hardly know whether or no to congratulate the collector upon the publication of Mr. Percy Bate's admirable work English Table Glass (7s. 6d. net) in Messrs. Newnes' "Library of the Applied Arts"; but we can, at least, felicitate the author on having made a book at once pleasing and packed with information, personal and yet of broadest application. Mr. Bate has drawn freely from his own collection for the illustrations—photographs of actual pieces—and also from the stores of his fellow collectors and from examples at the British Museum. Although the result gives many excellent specimens and shows, with agreeable clearness, the genesis of English table glass during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, it is possible that the author could have added to the interest of the book had he gone a little further a-field. At South Kensington we can recall some drinking glasses that might well come within his purview, and in the collection of one of the most enthusiastic and accomplished amateurs of glass, Mr. Charles Edward Jerningham, there are some Jacobean examples which might well have helped to elucidate his story and decorate his page. But as a whole the selection is wise. Now that collections are finding their way into the light of day it is apparent that old country houses and disused closets contained a vast deal more of these interesting relics of past domestic life than their brittle quality would lead us to expect. To those who would interest themselves in the glass of our great grand-parents there can be no more agreeable and easily accessible guide than Mr. Bate. If his knowledge and experience will rob the quest of some of its chance delights, his information will prevent many disappointments and his exposition of the subject add a new pleasure to the pursuit of the hobby. As in all the books in this series which we have seen, the type is excellent, the printing of the illustrations above reproach, and the indexing fit and Giotto, by Basil de Sélincourt (Duckworth, 7s. 6d. net). The fact that so many of Giotto di Bondone's early works are lost, or rather have simply faded away, makes it extremely difficult to piece together a consecutive account of his art development. It may, however, be fairly claimed that his new biographer has made the best of the meagre materials at his disposal and has also succeeded in realising to some extent the personality of the gifted master, who shares with his teacher Cimabue the glory of having inaugurated, if not actually the first, undoubtedly the second and more important stage of the great revival of painting in Italy, when artists finally freed themselves from the old hampering Byzantine traditions and dared to follow the leading of their own individual inspiration. The significance of Giotto's affinities with both the schools into which painting in Italy branched off during his life-time is very clearly brought out by Mr. de Sélincourt, who recognises in his pictures—a great number of which are here reproduced—the richness of imagination that distinguished the Florentines with the feeling for grace of form so characteristic of the Siennese. "Essentially an idealist" he observes, Giotto was governed by a wholly different conception of art and human life as well as of the relations between them, "from that of the masters of Sienna." "Whereas," he holds, "the general tendency of Siennese art was to aim at expressing passion in its essence, and to disregard all parts of life in which passion was not the principal feature, it was characteristic of the Florentine attitude to view it as part of a whole, and to aim at raising the whole to the level of the highest element in it." To this new spirit, alien to that which inspired his contemporary and friend Dante, Giotto yielded himself up entirely, and it was in a great measure due to his subjection to it that he became the founder of the ideal Christian art, the interpreter in pictorial form, as the poet was in literature, of spiritual allegory, a leader in thought as well as in art. Perhaps the most typical works of Giotto, in which his peculiar excellences as well as his technical defects are very clearly brought out, are the series of frescoes at Assisi of the life of St. Francis and the so-called Allegories embodying the principles of his teaching. Both are minutely examined by Mr. de Sélincourt, who is careful to make each one of the compositions fully intelligible to his readers and incidentally throws a good deal of light on the attitude of mind in which the painter approached his subjects. The chapter on the frescoes at Padua is also full of interest, and of real value for the student, for it has been too much the custom to assume that the last word in the matter has been said by Ruskin, whereas, as is pointed out by Mr. de Sélincourt, the great writer founded his account not on the paintings themselves, but on woodcuts after them, and was really, when he wrote, insufficiently acquainted with Giotto's work. The useful little monograph closes with what is, perhaps, the ablest section of the book, a very acute analysis of Giotto's influence over others, examining to what extent he combined the creative genius with the faculties of a true teacher, how his very excellence paralysed in his lifetime those unable to breathe in his exalted atmosphere, yet how even after his electric personality was removed, his principles were carried on by men as great, perhaps even greater than himself, amongst whom the painter Orcagna and the sculptor Andrea Pisano were the chief.

BOOK SALES

AT Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge's Auction Rooms on May 4, 5 and 6 was sold the Library of the late Frederick Clifford, K.C.

The books were of a general character, but included some well-known bibliographical works and a number of books on fine art and especially costumes. The books of interest sold included the following:

The Poster: an Illustrated Monthly Chronicle, 5 vols., 1898-1901. £1 8s.

Richardson's Iconology, 354 Original Drawings (from Lord Crawford's Library), 1779. £5 15s.

A'Beckett (G. A.), Comic History of England. Ill. by Leech. First edition. 1847-1848. £2 4s.

Ackerman's Repository of Arts. Vols. 1 to 14. £5 5s. (Spencer). Baker's Our Old Actors. Extra illustrated. 1873. £5 12s. 6d. (Young).

Bellamy (G. A.), Apology for the Life of George Anne Bellamy. 1785. £2 2s.

Boccaccio (G.), Il Decamerone. Finely illustrated. 1757. £11 (Howlett).

Clio and Euterpe; or British Harmony. A Collection of Songs. 3 vols. 1762. £3 (Hill).

Combe's Dance of Death. Coloured plates by Rowlandson. First edition. 1815-1816. £7 6s. (Moore).

Combe's Dance of Life. Coloured plates by Rowlandson. First edition. 1817. £3 16s. (Edwards).

Cunningham (Peter), Story of Nell Gwyn. Extra illustrated. 1852. £2 15s. (Sheppard). (This used to be a cheap book until used for extra illustrating).

Dennistoun's Memoirs of the Dukes of Urbino. 3 vols. 1851. £2 5s. (Hill).

Dibdin's books brought small prices, the highest obtained being for Ædes Althorpania: an account of the books, &c., at Althorp. £2 2s.

D'Urfe (T.), Pills to purge Melancholy. 6 vols. 1719-1720. £6 17s. 6d. (Thorp).

Frøissart's Chronicles. 1868. £5 (Hill).

- Bouilloux's La Venerie. £11 15s. (Leighton).
 Ackerman's History of St. Peter's, Westminster. 1812. £4 (Edwards).
 Birch's Heads of Illustrious Persons of Great Britain. With portraits by Houbraken and Vertue. 1743. £10 10s. (Lewin).
 Boydell's Graphic Illustrations to Shakespeare's Works. £8 15s. (Edwards).
 Burlington Fine Arts Club: Exhibition of Bookbinding. 1891. £7 15s. (Edwards).
 Burlington Fine Arts Club: Catalogue of European Enamels. £4 18s.
 Clouet's Portraits of the Courts of Francis I., Henry II., and Francis II. 300 portraits. 1875. £3 (Roche).
 Constable's English Landscape Scenery. 1855. £3 2s. (Maggs).
 Hamilton's Memoirs of Count Grammont. 1811. £2 17s. (Spencer).
 Horatius. Opera. Pine edition. 1733. £5 (Moore).
 Same work. 1737. £6 (Maggs).
 La Borde (M. de), Choix de Chansons Mises en Musique. 4 vols. Paris, 1773. £50 (Maggs).
 Montaigne, Essais. 1659. £3 4s. (Symes).
 Kay's Portraits. Edinburgh, 1838. £3 6s. (Hopkins).
 Lodge's Portraits. 12 vols. Large paper. 1835. £7 (Rimell).
 Molière, Œuvres. 6 vols. Paris, 1734. £17 5s. (Rolandi).
 Ovid, Les Métamorphoses d'Ovide. Paris, 1767-1771. £27 10s. (Rolandi).
 Planché (J. R.), Cyclopædia of Costume. 1876. £5 2s. 6d. (Hornstein).
Costume of Yorkshire. 1814. £7 5s. (Sabin).
 Frankau's Eighteenth Century Colour Prints. £8 5s. (Hornstein).
 Holbein, Imitations of drawings of Illustrious Persons in the Reign of Henry VIII. 1792. £8 10s. (Lewin).
 Humphreys (H. N.), Illuminated Books of the Middle Ages. 1849. £8 10s.
 Thackeray's Works. 22 vols. 1869. £9 5s. (Sotheran).
 Racinet, Le Costume Historique. 6 vols. £9 5s. (Hill).
 Perini, Scelta di XXIV. Vedute delle principali Contrade, Piazze, Chiese, Palazzi della Città di Firenze. £20 10s. (Batsford).
Physiognomical Portraits of Distinguished Characters. 1824. £9 15s. (Maggs).
 Pyne's History of the Royal Residences. 3 vols. 1819. £20 5s. (Hornstein).
 Reynolds. Engravings from the Works of Sir John Reynolds. £11 5s. (Maggs).
 —The total amount realised was £1344 12s. 6d.

THE DRAMA

"ROMEO AND JULIET" AT THE ROYALTY THEATRE

WITH four performances of Romeo and Juliet—the first that it has given of the "lamentable tragedie"—the Elizabethan Stage Society has terminated its career. Though not on the whole as satisfactory as some of the Society's efforts, the representation, judged by the simple standard which is nowadays accepted, was intelligent and adequate enough. To interpret the play, to invest it with the sense of an occurrence of greater and of more universal significance than that with which it deals—the only treatment which would secure for it the full and due effect—no more attempt was made than in the average Shakespearean production; and on this account the sorrows of the "star-cross'd" lovers affected only those to whom the personalities of Mr. Esmé Percy and Miss Dorothy Minto, and the delivery of the text dictated by those personalities, appealed. But, if the major possibilities in representation seemed once again to have passed unnoted, a considerable proportion of the minor ones was, on the other hand, successfully realised. The Romeo and the Juliet looked in years the Romeo and the Juliet of Shakespeare; the Prince of Mr. Eric Maxon was a man obviously more noble than his fellows, and the Nurse of Miss Dolores Drummond combined affection with temper and with want of principle in the easy and humorous manner of the type.

Two quotations from Lessing given on the programme suggest that at least one of the Society's aims has been, by representation "in the Elizabethan manner," to prove that Shakespeare's plays not only do not need pictorial setting, but are even more intelligible without it. If this was indeed an aim of the Society, it has not been realised, and no performances either in the Elizabethan or in any other manner were necessary to show it would not be. The whole question of mounting, often as it arises, is never discussed in connection with any plays but Shakespeare's. The fact, at first sight curious, is at second sight instructive. Shakespeare, the greatest dramatist whom England has produced, is also one of her greatest poets. On that account he occupies a place as much apart from as it is above that of all other writers for her stage, and his plays appeal, as poems, to those by whom the theatre is not really understood. Now it is with the poet, rather than with the dramatist, that the dissentients are concerned. Finding that the verse is less intelligible in the theatre than in the study—that its meaning can be grasped less easily and its beauty less readily appreciated—they conclude that the mounting is responsible, and decide in consequence that the plays should be presented unadorned. It is not the mounting, however, that is responsible, but the nature of the theatre; and this, whether scenery is used or not, remains the same. A statement may always be understood more fully by the eye than by the ear, and in the theatre it is not so much the meaning as the effect that tells. In it the quality of Shakespeare's verse, as of all dialogue, is not destroyed, but becomes effective in another way. The meaning and the beauty are preserved, but they are felt—and were intended to be felt—rather than understood or realised.

But, if the plays are no less intelligible adorned than unadorned, they should be infinitely more effective. A play is an attempt at a reality, and, by as much as it fails to seem this in performance, by so much will its proper effect and interest be diminished. No dramatist ever wrote with a more constant appreciation of this fact than Shakespeare. His knowledge of it was probably instinctive and perhaps unconscious, but it is nevertheless apparent in his work. To give the plays, when written, the complete reality which can only come with mounting was beyond the resources, and possibly beyond the conception, of his time; but, as much as could be given them in the writing, they undoubtedly possess. If Shakespeare was denied the advantages of mounting, he had not to respect its limitations. He was in that regard unfettered, and yet the scheme which he invariably chose was that which, by the number and variety of its scenes, recalls most vividly and represents most truly the world and life itself. And with his subject, whatever it might be, he never dealt directly, but always through the medium of a reality in which it was embodied. The subject of Romeo and Juliet, for instance, is young love, but the development of the idea is made entirely to depend on the course of the story which contains it. It is as if Shakespeare, himself concerned with love in the abstract, had wished his audience to be concerned with the individual concrete loves of his heroine and hero, in order that, through their interest in them, they might be made to feel, to realise, the beauty which he saw in the abstraction. In such a case, the susceptibility of the audience is proportionate to their interest in the lovers, and the interest in the lovers depends upon the sense of their reality. This, again, depends partly on the reality of the story—a reality which itself depends partly on that of its environment. But unless it be mounted, a play has no environment at all; and only by careful mounting can that atmosphere and sense of locality without which no environment convinces be produced. In Mr. Forbes Robertson's revival of Hamlet additional reality was given to the performance by the sense of locality alone—a sense conveyed by the inclusion in every outdoor scene of some aspect of the castle keep. In its shadow Hamlet saw the ghost; in the orchard near at hand Laertes found his sister, and in a churchyard a mile or so away he saw her buried; while in a pavilion distant by the length of a green meadow Fortinbras found Hamlet at the end. To mount successfully in all respects, however, plays which, like Shakespeare's, were written to be played without adornment, it is necessary to understand the complicated philosophy which underlies that section of the subject.

FINE ART

HISTORICAL PORTRAITS AT OXFORD

FOLLOWING the most interesting collection of last year, which included portraits of historical personages who died before 1625, the present loan collection at Oxford consists of portraits of those who died between 1625 and 1714. Every care has been taken to rescue from the obscurity of the College Halls many pictures which are now properly seen for the first time, while the Bodleian Library, the Ashmolean Museum, and other University collections have also been drawn on. In a few instances the exhibition is indebted to private owners.

These 228 pictures are undoubtedly interesting more from the historical than from the artistic point of view, but they give an insight into an early and somewhat unknown school of English painting. The great influence on this period was the arrival of Van Dyck in England in 1632, and we might perhaps have expected to find more traces of his handiwork at Oxford. There are seven copies of Van Dycks here, and others are attributed to his school; but only to one portrait have the committee appended his unqualified name: a full-length portrait of Charles I. in the robes of the Order of the Garter, similar to one in the Royal collection at Windsor Castle. There are traces of the master's hand in some parts of the picture, notably the head, but it has far more the appearance of another school piece than of a genuine work of the artist himself. This absence of Van Dyck's work in Oxford is not so extraordinary when we remember that his stay in England lasted little more than six years, but it is rather more surprising that Sir Peter Lely is so badly represented. We have but one portrait here which can be classified as his undoubtedly unassisted work. His Anne St. John, Countess of Rochester, lent by Lord Dillon, is a splendid portrait, and an excellent example of its painter's art, while of the other pictures attributed to him, only one—the portrait of Mary of Modena—has very evident traces of his handiwork, and this is crude in colour and harsh in expression.

One of the most interesting groups of portraits is that in which the various members of the Tradescant family figure. On the second screen is a small bust of John Tradescant the elder, emerging from a cloudy background. As a painting it has no great merit, but it serves to recall the career of the famous botanist who was the first to study Russian plants, and who utilised an expedition against the corsairs of Algiers to introduce the apricot into England. For Oxford, interest in him rests on the fact that he was the first gardener at the Botanic Gardens. His interest in Natural History was inherited by his son, of whom we have an excellent portrait attributed to William Dobson, the pupil of Van Dyck, and his successor in the position of court painter, a capacity in which he resided at Oxford while the Court was established there. The younger Tradescant stands in his garden, leaning on a spade, and clad in a fur coat, which falls back to show a white shirt open at the bosom. If this be indeed the work of Dobson, it is a very favourable specimen of his art, for the pose is strong and graceful and the head is very well painted. Numbers 140 and 141 of the catalogue show us Sir John Tradescant's second wife with her step-children. In the second of the two we have Hester (the wife) and Frances and John (the children). The latter are not very well drawn, the girl being especially unconvincing, but the boy leaning on his stick to the left of the picture and looking away from the group is a more attractive figure. The mother, looking in the same direction as the boy, with her hand stretched in front of the girl and resting on her stepson's shoulder, is by far the best part of the picture, for there is an easy grace in her attitude, and a look of sympathetic sadness in her not uncomely face. Her dress is beautifully painted, with a rich brown ground and golden trimmings. As a whole the picture breathes a subdued atmosphere, and herein it contrasts with No. 140, in which only the mother and son appear. Here we have two of the most pleasing portraits of the whole collection. On the left stands the boy looking out of the picture, in a pensive mood, caring nothing for the jewel which is being handed to him by his stepmother. Great care has been lavished on the painting of his little coat, which is treated with much delicacy of touch in a beautiful dull green. On the right stands Hester Pooks in the same easy attitude as in the other picture. The lace of the dress is painted with care, and her hands are remarkably well drawn and lifelike. There is more character in the face, more determination, and less submissiveness. It is useless to pretend that either of these two pictures is a masterpiece, but they stand in pleasing contrast to the majority of the exhibition, and the same may be said of a full-length portrait of William Child, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and a composer of sacred music. This portrait has no attribution to any particular artist in the catalogue, but it is amongst the most striking in the exhibition. There is a quiet dignity in the man as he stands by a table covered with a simple red cloth. The long white robe which hangs in loose folds from his shoulders bears the signs of skilful manipulation; the folds are beautifully shaded, whilst the faint pattern on the cloth relieves the long stretch of white. The head, well and squarely set on his shoulders, commands attention with a face full of character, speaking of kindness and good humour. If the arms are somewhat out of drawing, the hands are excellent, one holding a scroll of music, the other pointing to the table. The artist, unlike so many of the painters in this collection, does not seem to have regarded the hands of his sitter as useless though natural accessories of the human body; for here they are an essential part of the picture. The whole portrait gives an idea of reserved strength.

There is a strong note of tragedy running through at least the earlier part of the collection, the tragedy which surrounded the unhappy Charles I. Foremost among the pictures of this class is a portrait of the monarch himself, which at the back bears the inscription: "King Charles the first as he satt at his Tryall in Westminster Hall," very similar, both in conception and detail, to a picture by Edward Bower in the possession of the Duke of Rutland. Near by are six other portraits of the "martyr king," one of which has been already mentioned, and all around we find the leading actors of the drama of the Civil War—Noye, Clarendon, and Falkland. Here, too, are five portraits of William Laud, and two of the dashing Rupert. In strong contrast stands Cromwell, ready armed for the parliamentary struggle, in a fine portrait by Robert Walker lent by Lord Spencer. Others on the parliamentary side are the Earl of Manchester, and a picture from Wadham College which may represent Robert Blake, the adversary of Tromp and the victor of Santa Cruz. Amongst these representatives of the age of the Civil War we miss Strafford; if we are not mistaken, the Bodleian possesses a portrait of him, which might have been added to the collection.

Amongst royal persons we have Queen Henrietta Maria and her two sons, Charles II. and James II., with their respective consorts, Catherine of Braganza and Mary of Modena. There is a poor portrait of William III., but a better one of his wife, Mary, by Sir Godfrey Kneller. Finally there is a portrait of Queen Anne by Michael Dahl, a Swedish artist who was one of Kneller's imitators. More interesting than any of these are the famous men whom we meet on every side: divines such as Launcelot Andrewes and Jeremy Taylor; among poets, the royalist Cowley and the puritan Milton, the latter's portrait, a pleasing copy of a lost original, lent by Mr. Lewis Harcourt, while further on we find Dryden, that prince of turncoats. In a dark corner hangs an inferior portrait of Hobbes, and there are two portraits of Locke, one of them by Sir Godfrey Kneller, but by no means a good example of that artist. Amongst many others are Dr. Fell, Dr. Busby, and William Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood.

A large number of portraits serve to illustrate the internal history of Oxford, most of them by unknown artists, but useful as marking epochs in the life of the University; and finally we have one or two quaint old characters, such as John Taylor, the "Water Poet," and uncle of the painter of that name, and Mother George, a widow, of Little Clarendon Street, who "earned her living by displaying her eyesight in threading a needle." She was known to Locke, who visited her, and Antony à Wood tells us that "when she came to be a hundred she doubled every year." Finally we must not forget the Christ Church Scullion, which is notable as a portrait, the work of John Riley, and bearing the marks of Dutch influence. It is an old college tradition that this man, who in his left hand holds a pewter dish, was a scullion in the kitchen towards the end of the reign of James II., and was employed to sing satirical ballads pointed at the King and his party.

Though the exhibition may not contain any great works of art, it is full of human interest, and no one who has the opportunity should fail to pay it a visit. On every screen there is to be found an illustration of some point in the history of the period, and the men and women who look out of the pictures seem to tell us something of the secret history of their lives, and to explain to us some things which the mere recorded facts would never make clear.

WHISTLER AND WATTS

THE most interesting articles in the April numbers of the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews are "The Works of James MacNeill Whistler" in the Edinburgh and "Watts and Whistler" by R. E. Fry in the Quarterly. Both are first-rate pieces of writing, and will be doubly interesting to readers after the Exhibition which has just been closed at the New Gallery. The article in the Edinburgh Review is anonymous, though its trenchant figure seems to reveal a familiar hand. In the Quarterly Review, which has very sensibly abandoned the law of anonymity, the article is signed by that distinguished critic and painter Mr. Roger Fry. He finds a stimulating artistic contrast in the recent exhibitions of Watts and Whistler. Both are great and serious artists who followed out a certain faith as to the relation between art and life without care for gain or heed of opinion. In their bold isolation, both stood out from the crowd as perhaps almost too daring types of the individualism of British art. But both stood, in abrupt contrast, at the opposite poles both in theory and practice.

Now that these great artists are dead and their work finished, we can see it in clearer perspective. Whistler seems to emerge from the cloud of witty cynicism and defiant badinage in which he wrapt himself. He remains a lonely figure aloof from English life, perhaps in his essence French rather than English or American. But he becomes intelligible. He emerges as something more than the skilful etcher which we all admit him to be. He is the champion of a theory—the theory of the divorce between literature and art. Coming at a time in English art when painting was little more than the Cinderella of literature, he defiantly proclaimed her independence. He even went further. Beginning with the war against the subordination of the picture to the story, he ended in a struggle for the expulsion of all intellectual ideas from the art of painting. The æsthetic side of life was to stand proudly by itself. In art, as he himself said in his famous proposition No. 1, "It is criminal to go beyond the means used in its exercise." He tried, in short, to sanctify the artist in a sort of splendid isolation.

Useful as a paradox and amusing as an epigram, the thing became rather a bore when it posed as a serious theory. The penalty of all divorce is sterility. We can now see that Whistler's own development is the most fatal comment on his own faith. His art reached its gradual development in the perfection of his early etchings, the colour-values of works like the "Piano-Picture," and finally in portraits like My Mother and Carlyle. But here his art seemed suddenly checked and narrowed by his own terror of linking it up with the other high activities of man. From being a law to itself, his art became lawless. His very theory cut him off from the finest subjects. It encouraged eccentricity and obscurity. It led to defiance. It turned him from an artist into a sectarian, and threw his force from painting into fighting.

Watts stood for a quite opposite view. With him art had no pride except in service. Its service was the service of man, and its function was to lend its mighty mastery of form and colour—its trained prophet's vision—to serve as a clue and a guide to life. To Watts, as to Ruskin, it was no matter of indifference whether the artist was occupied in painting a poet or a ballet girl, paradise or Cremona. The result was that Watts, as he advanced in years, grew at once broader and more severe in his choice of subjects. He gradually widened his art to embrace all the highest themes of literature and religion. Alone among modern English artists, he had the courage to attempt the sublime. Looking back on his life and his art, we link him naturally with Milton and Michael Angelo both in power and austerity. Like Milton, he outgrew perhaps too much the light and playful touch of youth, and took his art perhaps too far away from the common haunts of men. He dwelt too much with the Olympians. Like Michael Angelo, he developed a passion for allegory, though without Michael Angelo's simplicity. He brought with him a new subtlety not at all Miltonic or Michael Angelic, but reminding us perhaps rather of his contemporary in poetry, Robert Browning.

Differing in everything else, Whistler and Watts were at any rate alike in their devotion to art. Like Wolfe and Montcalm, who perished in deadly conflict, but lie buried at Quebec under one common tombstone, they seem to have been brought together by death. Both did a great work. Whistler performed no mean service to British art when he emphasised the claims of the craft itself—the craft of colour and form—as distinct from its subject-matter. Watts added a new glory when he showed that paint and pencil could still, even in the nineteenth century, be made the instruments for visualising the sublime.

ART SALES

THE CAPEL-CURE COLLECTION

THE most important sale of the month, and possibly of the year, took place last week at Messrs. Christie's of the collections formed by Mr. Edward Cheney, of Badger Hall, Salop, which descended, on his death in 1884, to his nephew Colonel Alfred Capel-Cure, and were till recently the property of Mr. Francis Capel-Cure. On Tuesday and Wednesday, May 4 and 5, were sold the Italian bronzes, faïences, objects of art and furniture, the two days' sale realising over £15,000. The highest price on Tuesday was for a walnut-wood throne, dated 1559, which was removed in the early eighteenth century from the Hall of the Ambassadors in the Ducal Palace at Venice. This reached 1000 gs. (Partridge); and next to it was an Italian cire-perdue bronze of Pluto and Cerberus, early sixteenth century, possibly the work of Benvenuto Cellini, which Sir George Donaldson bought at 860 gs. On Wednesday, the highest price was reached by two bronze rectangular panels, moulded in alto rilievo with the Resurrection and Christ descending into Hades, in the manner of Andrea Riccio, 16½ in. by 15½ in., Italian, early sixteenth century, which ran to £800 (Durlacher). Two pieces of general interest were a marble seated figure of Sir Walter Scott by Chantrey, 3½ in. high, 310 gs. (Gooden and Fox), and a life-size bust of Sir Walter Scott, artist unknown, 58 gs. (Agnew).

The English and Chinese porcelain included the following: A pair of turquoise-blue vases, formed as double fish, mounted in ormolu, 17½ in. high, 280 gs. (Gribble); a pair of cylindrical vases, 10½ in. high, Kang-He, 130 gs. (Gribble); a pair of Dresden mayflower vases, panels in polychrome after Watteau, mounted in chased ormolu; 9 in. high, 125 gs. (A. Wertheimer); a pair of oblong Sèvres biscuit plaques, with subjects in relief in white on pale blue, 11½ in. wide, 105 gs. (D. Rothschild); and a pair of English late eighteenth-century candelabra, each shaped as an oviform vase of blue-john, mounted with metal gilt, 15½ in. high, 100 gs. (Bruce). Among the faïence were a circular medallion of Della Robbia, moulded in almost full relief with three heads of children, 28 in. diameter, Italian, sixteenth century, £300 (Seligmann); a statuette of the Virgin and Child by Lucca della Robbia, 32 in. high, £95 (Durlacher); and two circular bas-reliefs by Lucca della Robbia, with figures of Prudence and Faith, £195 (Goldschmidt). The bronzes included a group representing a boy astride a dolphin, Florentine, early sixteenth century, 5½ in. high, 460 gs. (Durlacher); a variation of the Crouching Venus of G. di Bologna, late sixteenth century, 9½ in. high, £300 (Durlacher); an oval relief with a profile bust of a man, late fifteenth century, 20½ in. by 12½ in., £250 (Goldschmidt); a set of four candelabra, Italian, late sixteenth century, 6 ft. 10 in. high, 200 gs. (Bentinck); a pair of statuettes of mermen riding dolphins, Florentine, late sixteenth century, £195 (Brandes); a group of two figures, emblematic of Virtue chaining Vice, after John of Bologna, Italian, sixteenth century, 11 in. high, 170gs. (Partridge); a statuette of a warrior, with raised left arm holding a shield, a sword in his right, Italian, early sixteenth century, 13 in. high, 160 gs. (Durlacher); and a knocker of acanthus leaves with figures of Painting and Architecture and a coat of arms, Florentine, sixteenth century, 13 in. high, 160 gs. (C. F. Murray). There was also a head, probably of Hermes, an antique, which was sold for 220 gs. (Grant).

Among the marbles were two trusses or supports of Pentelic marble, of cabriole form, carved with bearded male heads and decorated with acanthus foliage, 53½ in. high, £230 (Charles); a life-size head of Hermes, attributed to Praxiteles, 120 gs. (Ready); a relief by Thorwaldsen, "The Three Graces," 120 gs. (Sinclair); two columns of Fior-di-Persica marble, surmounted by ormolu capitals of Ionic form, 90 in. high, 110 gs. (Salamans).

The terra-cotta included a Saint Sebastian, a model from the marble statue on the altar of San Francesco della Vigna, Venice, attributed to Alessandro Vittoria, 22½ in. high, 400 gs. (D. Rothschild).

On Saturday last the pictures from this and other collections were sold, the Capel-Cure collections producing nearly £7000. The most important picture was a portrait catalogued as Princess Amelia, daughter of George III., by Romney, originally given by Frederick, Duke of York, to his aide-de-camp, General Cheney. This was bought by Messrs. Colnaghi at 2800 gs. Messrs. Colnaghi also bought a portrait by Marco Basaiti of a young man, exhibited at the Old Masters Exhibition in 1886, for 840 gs. The Capel-Cure pictures also included a Van Dyck, portrait of Mrs. Killigrew, 24½ in. by 20 in., 165 gs. (Lowe), three Canalettos, a Guardi, a Tiepolo, three Tintoretos, and a portrait of Sir Walter Scott by Colvin Smith, R.S.A. 250 gs. (Reid, of Glasgow).

The chief feature of the sale, however, was the Romney portraits from various collections, which produced altogether over 13,000 gs. The highest price was fetched by the group of Horsley children, George and Charlotte, which was exhibited at the Grafton Galleries in 1900. This fell to Messrs. Agnew at 4400 gs. Next in price came the Mrs. Methuen, 29 in. by 24 in., 1784, 3400 gs. (Colnaghi). Others were Lady Emilia Kerr, 1779, 30 in. by 24½ in., 2600 gs. (Colnaghi); the Hon. Mrs. Beresford, one of the "Three Graces" in Reynolds's picture in the National Gallery, 30 in. by 25 in., 1900 gs. (Sully); and a portrait of a gentleman, probably George Hawkins, surgeon to George III.'s household, 30 in. by 25 in., 520 gs. (T. Cox).

Among other pictures in the sale were a portrait by Gainsborough of Indiana Talbot, 35½ in. by 27½ in., 2000 gs. (Garland); Hoppner's portrait of Lady Elizabeth Townshend, 30 in. by 25 in., 400 gs.; Raeburn's portrait of Mrs. Bower of Kincaldrum, 30 in. by 25 in., 160 gs. (Blair); Greuze, head of a girl, 220 gs. (Gooden and Fox); Lucas Cranach, portrait of a man, 16½ in. by 13½ in., 500 gs. (Agnew); J. Ward, portrait of Miss Georgiana Musgrave, 1797, 34 in. by 27 in., 1600 gs. (Wylde); Opie, portrait of Sheridan, 30 in. by 25 in., 300 gs. (C. Davis); Rembrandt, portrait of an old man, 29 in. by 23½ in., 290 gs.; Raeburn, portrait of John Rennie, F.R.S., 30 in. by 25 in., 330 gs. (G. B. Rennie); and Ruysdael, a river scene with mountains, 20½ in. by 26 in., 280 gs. (Waller).

SCIENCE

A POINT OF VIEW

THOSE studies which every one recognises as scientific—astronomy, chemistry, biology—have never wanted the services of keen and whole-hearted men. Your youthful Darwin collects insects because they interest him; your Dalton takes to test-tubes as a duck to water—and so forth. In this present age a man will devote his entire life to the study of the Coleoptera, or to the minor planets, or to the spectroscopic examination of flames. The facts of one or other department of the external world fascinate these students, who work for small rewards of money or of fame, and to whom a new chemical synthesis or a new variety of beetle is as interesting as the discovery of lost Schubert manuscripts to a Sullivan or a Grove. Their patience is as inexhaustible as it is unconscious; their fidelity to facts unpurchaseable. Without them none of the inductive sciences could be. Their right to live and work cannot be called in question.

But in these days men of science make claims less humble. They demand recognition and recompense; they seek to impart their knowledge to the many; their appetite for new laboratories is insatiable. And the question arises, to what end? The practical uses of medicine and chemistry and engineering are obvious enough; but what of astronomy and the classification of beetles? How do these affect human life?

To this it may be replied that the pursuit of Truth is its own sanction, as independent of the utilitarian consideration as is the culture of Art; each is an end in itself, and requires no exterior justification.

But to me it seems that this view of the worth of Truth—of truths all and sundry—could be fully justified only in some ideal state of affairs such as our descendants may well maintain but is far from realisation to-day. To put it colloquially, there are other things that want doing first. We who have foes like war and alcohol and lust to fight, what business have we with beetles?

For myself—if the unavoidable egoism of this apologia may be pardoned—I have neither patience nor experimental assiduity; and, if neither led to anything beyond itself I should much prefer the study of Victor Trumper's batting or the score of the Emperor Concerto than the study of the rarest of beetles or the newest of minor planets. One can obtain a measure of intellectual gratification from the immediate study of scientific facts, but this is nought beside the pleasures of music and conversation and a thousand other things.

My interests in sciences are, therefore, mainly ulterior. In the beginning one is introduced to scientific studies en route to a certain professional goal: and the student, who is really no more than a schoolboy, asks what on earth is the use of botany and mechanics and the like, in preparation for a practical walk of life with which these have scarcely any direct concern. But in later years it is borne in upon him that the facts and conclusions of science are of infinitely more than their soi-disant importance. He discovers that even beetles and minor planets have remote but indissoluble connections with all the colossal and insistent problems which face every thinking man. The justification for their study is that, without it, the things that want doing first, the problems that clamour for immediate solution, must remain undone and unsolved. Let us take an instance.

The relation of art to morality is a constant subject of academic dispute, the majority maintaining what Sir Leslie Stephen called the "cant of 'art for art's sake.'" Now this is a vastly important practical matter; and those of us who regard art as one of the main occupations of man in coming time, when his control of Nature shall be relatively complete, think this question certain to become of the very first importance.

The usual method of attacking this question is purely empirical. The disputants quote instances from the two non-material arts, poetry and music, to show that art is necessarily related to morality, or that it is not. (With the separate question whether the artist should have moral questions in his mind's eye as he works, I am not here concerned.) But last week as I listened to the Valkyrie and Siegfried at Covent Garden, and remembered Count Tolstoy's somewhat amusing account of his visit to a representation of one of them, it struck me that here was a case illustrative of the contention of this essay. I had always been content to follow the a posteriori method in discussing the art-morality question, and to quote the music-dramas of Wagner in support of the contention that creative art and morality are related; for the Ring is as certainly a "morality" as is Everyman; and few will dispute to-day that it is also consummate art. But now I think I see that there is no occasion to quote instances in discussion of this question, for science justifies itself to me in enabling us, as I think, to answer it a priori.

For science teaches, as matter of knowledge, that which has ever been the faith of the poet and the philosopher—that All Things are One. I fear I may have insisted on this truth to weariness: not that one's palate for truth should be satiable. But see how this interesting conclusion of the intellect bears upon the question at issue. If all things are inter-related and inter-dependent; if all facts whatsoever are eventually correlative; if Truth is an organic whole—then it follows, as a matter of pure deduction, independent of experiment or observation, that art and morality must be related. If Art be true, it is a part of Truth, and is therefore related, vitally and indissolubly, to all other parts of Truth, such as morality: Truth being One.

These considerations open up questions of great interest: notably the question as to the sense or senses in which any work of art can be called true or false. To this question, though it is perhaps not recognisable as one of "science pure and undefiled," I may be permitted to revert at some future time. For it is plain that if Art be essentially concerned with the expression of emotions: and if the content of an individual emotion—being possibly a unique and personal thing—can scarcely be regarded as obviously part of the body of universal truth—we must not apply such terms as true or false to poetry and music, unless we are prepared to justify them. Nevertheless, I for one believe that these terms are applicable to art: and that the service and raison d'être of science in this connection are precisely its demonstration that true art is inseparable from moral issues.

Further I will be so bold as to declare that my point of view is common even to those who have most frequently declared that all forms of truth are to be sought for their own sake, and that the search is its own justification. For this is an assertion in ethics—an assertion of a duty—but it would be meaningless to assert that there is an ethical element in knowledge, say of beetles, as such. Obvious utility apart, the value of knowledge—that is to say, of science—lies in its bearing upon the problem of existence, nor is any item of knowledge to be named that is without such a bearing; nor can I believe that science is defiled by any sincere attempt to recognise its significance. Measurements of beetles may demonstrate the fact of natural selection, than which, if we knew it, none bears more immediately upon individual and corporate duty: astronomy may teach humility and ennoble that attitude of upright—not grovelling—wonder which is an essential element in religion. Were it not so, I should be little concerned to know that the earth moves, and would give all the pages of Copernicus for one such line as "He has outsoared the shadow of our night."

C. W. SALEEBY.

CORRESPONDENCE

"HOMER AND SCIENCE"

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—I will appeal to your kind courtesy to allow me space to reply, not to Mr. Andrew Lang's general criticism on my "Handbook of Homeric Study" (with which I have no fault to find) but to an implication he has made regarding my attitude towards the Provost of Oriel, whom I regard, along with Mr. Lang, as "in England the greatest living Homeric scholar."

After quoting my remarks on the unconvincing attempt to establish an opposition between "literary" and "scientific" methods of dealing with the Homeric Problem, in the interests of "extravagant conservatism," your reviewer not merely appeals to the honoured name of Dr. Monro, but declares that I quote him—which I do in quite another context as I shall show—as "one of the severest advocates of unity." Certainly the natural conclusion to draw from this is that I have classed Dr. Monro among the "extravagant conservatives" of Homeric criticism, namely those who still endeavour to maintain the theory of absolutely single authorship of the two poems.

I did nothing of the sort. On the contrary, I have appealed again and again to Dr. Monro as an authority opposed to extreme theories of every kind, and, as a staunch bulwark of the scientific school. For instance (on page 92) I have explicitly based one of my strongest arguments for the presence of earlier and later strata of composition in the poems upon the linguistic discrepancies which Monro has taken the trouble to tabulate in his well-known "Homeric Grammar."

But when (on page 135) I include this great Homeric scholar among "the most severe advocates of Unity," I am dealing with a totally different question from the former, namely, that of the Unity of the "Odyssey," taken by itself. The very heading of the page: "Is the Odyssey composite"? proves this; and had my whole sentence been quoted, the point would have been at once evident. It runs: "The most severe advocates of Unity, from the Alexandrian critics to Mr. Lang are forced to admit," &c. Now Mr. Lang is surely aware that certain Alexandrian critics were the first to suggest separate authorship for the two poems, though certainly none of them doubted the unity of authorship of the "Odyssey." It is true I have, with many other, seen reason to doubt it; but I have nowhere in my treatment of this question, suggested that the older view is "extravagant conservatism."

One little point further in which Mr. Lang quite unintentionally misrepresents me. He says "the Odyssey" to him is "Homer-and-water." I certainly did not write this, but that "If I may be allowed to differ from many worthy critics, I should say the 'Odyssey' is less Homeric than the 'Iliad.' To me the greater part of it when compared with the Iliad is mere Homer-and-water." This may be the same thing according to Mr. Lang's theories—it is by no means the same according to mine.

May 5.

HENRY BROWN.

SCIENCE

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Apparently a "thinker" is one who has "formulated the ontological problem for himself." Like Miss Dartle, I am extremely glad to know that. Gervinus, it is true, calls Hamlet "a mine of the profoundest wisdom," and Schlegel describes King Lear as an "almost superhuman flight of genius"; but pshaw! what is all this, compared with the "formulating of the ontological problem," which Wordsworth, it seems, has successfully accomplished? After this, it would be cruel to quote Macaulay's words about Wordsworth's "cran metaphysics."

It is a pity that we are not given a definition of the word "creed." If it is used in the strict sense, the "creeds," so far from being "innumerable," may be counted on the fingers of both hands. If it is used by a Master of science in the popular and unscientific sense of "a belief, or body of beliefs, religious or philosophical, in a more or less fluid and unsystematised state," then there are other "creeds" beside the "Oriental." He might have learnt this to his cost in former days; for the Druids would have forced him to take a "burning" interest in the fact, and the Aztecs would have brought it home to him with a "cutting" irony which would have "gone to his very heart." The day on which your admirable journal is published reminds me of another "creed," which has been immortalised in half the days of our week, and which was imposed upon our unhappy forefathers with "the hammer of Thor." I will not encroach further on your space.

May 6.

J. A. B.

[The definition of a "thinker" is not mine. Schlegel's description of King Lear might be equally well applied to Beethoven's Violin Concerto, in which no one will discern profound thought. Perhaps "Tintern Abbey" will be found to survive the gibes of the author of "Horatius." Ultimately, I dare say, there is only one creed, but its forms are surely innumerable. If the ridiculous phrase "a master of science" is used ironically—and it certainly cannot be otherwise—I will permit myself to say that I resent J. A. B.'s anonymous discourtesy.—C. W. SALEEBY.]

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—I am afraid it is somewhat of an impertinence, but I would ask a little space in which to record my appreciation of Dr. Saleeby's articles.

The scientific basis of them has always been perfectly sound so far as I could ever discover, however one might dissent from some of your esteemed contributor's conclusions.

Possibly "J. A. B." would rather have dry sticks such as the formulæ of physics, from which, however, may a kindly editor defend us!

Science "pure and undefiled" seems to mean simply a chaos of empiricisms; for, to formulate a system—however local and partial—is to introduce that "scientific imagination" which Dr. Saleeby so felicitously employs for the presentation of far wider and grander issues.

May 8.

J. B. WALLIS.

"MUCKERS"

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—In your issue of April 8 there is a review of Professor Münsterberg's latest book, in which you mention certain phrases and words—used in it—as distinctly American and translate them into English. They are all slang and translated correctly, with the exception of the word "muckers," which is certainly out of place in such a work as that of Professor Münsterberg. I think, however, that you are wrong in your interpretation of its meaning, which you give as the reverse of millionaires. Certainly in the meaning which the word has around New York it could be applied quite as well to the millionaires as to any one else, as it is descriptive of character and nature, and has nothing to do with a man's possessions. The proper meaning of the word "mucker" is—an individual of low and coarse nature; a man who would play dirty tricks and who is generally undesirable.

I trust that you will forgive my calling your attention to what I think is the correct, and what is generally the accepted, meaning of the word in this locality.

New York, April 26,

JAMES PROSLOW ADAMS.

PRIZE POETS

To the Editor of THE ACADEMY

SIR,—Referring to the article in your last number on Oxford Prize Poetry, may I be allowed to say that the absence of my name from the lists, is due not, as might very well have been the case, to failure in the competition, but to the fact that I never competed at all. I should expect to find on inquiry that my namesake of the "Earthly Paradise" was in a similar position from a like cause.

May 6.

LEWIS MORRIS.

BOOKS RECEIVED

ART.

- Filippino Lippi. Newnes' Art Library, 3s. 6d. net.
Graves, Algernon. The Royal Academy of Art: A complete Dictionary of Contributors and their work from its foundation in 1769 to 1904. Vol. I., Abbey—Carrington. Henry Graves & Co. and George Bell. £2 2s. net.
Zacher, Albert. Rome as an Art City. Siegle, The Langham Series, 1s. 6d.
Brown, J. Wood. Italian Architecture, being a brief account of its principles and progress. Siegle, The Langham Series, 1s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

- O'Connor, T. P. Lord Beaconsfield, A Biography. Eighth edition. Unwin, 2s. 6d. net.
Carnegie, Andrew. James Watt. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, Famous Scots Series, 1s. 6d. net.
White, Andrew Dickson. Autobiography of Andrew D. White. Two vols. Macmillan, 3os. net.
Carpenter, J. Estlin. James Martineau, Theologian and Teacher, a study of Life and Thought. Green, 7s. 6d. net.
Wack, Henry Wellington. The Romance of Victor Hugo and Juliette Drouet. Putnam, 6s. net.

DRAMA.

- Synge, J. M. The Shadow of the Glen and Riders to the Sea. Mathews, Vigo Cabinet Series, 1s. net.
Skey, Rev. Frederic C. Politics in Petticoats, and other Duologues. Clifton: Baker. London: Simpkin, Marshall. 1s. net.
Dillon, Arthur. The Greek Kalends. Mathews, 3s. 6d. net.

EDUCATION.

- Lees, Beatrice A. A Biographical History Reader, Selected Lives from the History in Biography Series, for use in Primary Schools. Black's School History, 2s. 6d.

FICTION.

- Aitken, Robert. The Redding Straike, an old-fashioned Story. Edinburgh: Morton. London: Simpkin Marshall. 6s.
Locke, William, J. The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne. Lane, 6s.
Miln, Louise Jordan. A Woman and her Talent. Blackwood, 6s.
Vesey, Arthur Henry. A Cheque for Three Thousand. Arrowsmith, 3s. 6d.
Rodocanachi, E. Tolla the Courtesan, A sketch of private life in Rome in the year of the Jubilee, 1700. Translated from the French by Frederick Lawton. Heinemann, 6s.
Falconer, Lanoë. Mademoiselle Ixe, The Hotel d'Angleterre, and other stories. Popular edition. Unwin, 1s. net.
"Betty." Intercepted Letters, A Mild Satire on Hongkong Society. Hongkong: Kelly & Walsh, 1s.
Thomas, Annie (Mrs. Peader Cudlip). The Clevers of Clever. New edition. Treherne, 1s.
Robins, Elisabeth (C. E. Rainmond). A Dark Lantern, A Story with a Prologue. Heinemann, 6s.
Hamilton, Cosmo. Indiscretions. Treherne, 1s.
Cullum, Ridgwell. The Brooding Wild, A Mountain Tragedy. Chapman & Hall, 6s.
Dudeney, Mrs. Henry. The Wise Woods. Heinemann, 6s.
Ferguson, Dugald. The King's Friend, A Tale of the Scottish Wars of Independence. Paisley: Gardner, 6s.
Magray, Sir William, Bart. A Prince of Lovers, A Romance. Ward, Lock, 6s.
Hill, Headon. Millions of Mischief, The Story of a Great Secret. Ward, Lock, 6s.
Hobbes, John Oliver. Robert Orange. Popular edition. Unwin, 6d.
Hayes, Frederick W. A Prima Donna's Romance. Hutchinson, 6s.
Castle, Agnes and Egerton. Rose of the World. Smith, Elder, 6s. (See page 519.)
Fleming, Clifton. The Fate of Ralph Erard. Digby, Long, 6s.
Smith, Ada Ellen. First in the Field. Digby, Long, 6s.
Munro, Neil. John Splendid, The Tale of a Poor Gentleman, and the Little Wars of Love. Seventh edition. Blackwood, 3s. 6d.
Merriman, Henry Seton. In Kedar's Tents. Newnes' Sixpenny Novels. Illustrated.

HISTORY.

- Burton, John Hill. The History of Scotland, from Agricola's invasion to the Extinction of the last Jacobite Insurrection. New edition, in eight vols. Vol. I. Blackwood, 2s. 6d. net.
Lang, Andrew. John Knox and the Reformation. Longmans, 10s. 6d. net.
Henriques, H. S. Q. The Return of the Jews to England, being a Chapter in the History of the English Law. Macmillan, 8s. 6d. net.
Perris, G. H. Russia in Revolution. Chapman & Hall, 10s. 6d. net.
MacFibbis, Duaid. On the Pictorian and the Norsemen. The original Irish Text edited, with Translation and Notes, by Alexander Bugge. Christiania: Gundersen, kr. 1.00.
Caithness Cellachain Caisil. The Victorious Career of Cellachan of Cashel, or the Wars between the Irishmen and the Norsemen in the middle of the Tenth Century. The original Irish Text, edited with Translation and Notes by Alexander Bugge. Christiania: Gundersen, kr. 3.60.
Bugge, Alexander. Bjærag til det Sidste fnsnit af Nordboernes Historie i Island. Copenhagen: Thies.

LAW.

- Solberg, Thorvald. Copyright in Congress 1789-1904. A Bibliography and Chronological Record of all proceedings in Congress in relation to Copyright from April 15, 1789, to April 28, 1904. First Congress, first session, to fifty-eighth Congress, second session. Library of Congress. Washington: Government Printing Offices.

LITERATURE.

- Thomson, William. The Basis of English Rhythm. Glasgow: Holmes, 1s. net.
Masterman, C. F. G. In Peril of Change, Essays written in time of Tranquillity. Unwin, 6s.
Robertson, John G. Schiller after a Century. Blackwood, 2s. 6d. net.
Gastrow, Paul. Tolstoj und sein Evangelium. Geissen: Töpelmann, 1 m.
Thiselton, Alfred Edward. Notulae Criticae (22-43). Folkard, 1s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- Gaskell, Lady C. Milnes. Spring in a Shropshire Abbey. Smith, Elder 9s. net.
Broomhall, William. The Country Gentlemen's Estate Book 1905. The Country Gentlemen's Association Limited, 10s. 6d.
Spalding. Printing Papers. A handbook for the use of Publishers and Printers.
Crosland, T. W. H. The Wild Irishman. Laurie, 5s.

MUSIC.

- Naylor, E. W. An Elizabethan Virginal Book, being a Critical Essay on the Contents of a Manuscript in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge. Dent, 6s. net.
Fuller Maitland, J. A. Joseph Joachim. Lane, Living Masters of Music 2s. 6d. net.

NAVAL AND MILITARY.

- Brindle, Ernest. With Russian, Japanese and Chinese. The Experience of an Englishman during the Russo-Japanese War. Murray, 6s. net.
Dix, Lieut. C. C., R.N. The World's Navies in the Boxer Rebellion (China 1900). Digby, Long, 7s. 6d. net.

NATURAL HISTORY.

- Beavan, Arthur H. Animals I have Known. Unwin, 5s.

PHILOSOPHY.

- Clark, Newton. Huxley and Phillips Brooks. Allenson, Heart and Life Library, 6d. net.
Read, Carveth. The Metaphysics of Nature. Black, 7s. 6d. net.

POLITICS.

- Compatriots' Club Lectures. First series, Edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club. Macmillan, 8s. 6d. net.
Dunraven, The Earl of. The Crisis in Ireland. An Account of the Present Condition of Ireland and Suggestions towards Reform. Chapman & Hall, 1s. net.

POETRY.

- Graham, Harry ("Col. D. Streamer"). Verse and Worse. Arnold, 3s. 6d. net.
Maquarie, Arthur. The Dance of Olives. Illustrated with reproductions from a bronze relief and nine sepia drawings by his wife, Mary Lintner Maquarie. Dent, 4s. net.
Scott, Cyril. The Shadows of Silence and the Songs of Yesterday. Lyceum Press.
Tobin, Agnes. The Flying Lesson: Ten Sonnets: Two Canzoni: A Ballata: A Double Sestina from Petrarch. Heinemann, 7s. 6d. net.
Prince, Charles Edmond. Love's Renunciation, Twenty-six Sonnets. "The Green Sheaf," Knightsbridge. 1s. net.
Sackville, Margaret. A Hymn to Dionysus, and other Poems. Mathews, 3s. 6d. net.
Browne, Maurice. Zetes and other Poems. Eliot Stock.

REPRINTS.

- Gambado, Geoffrey. An Academy for Grown Horsemen, containing the complete Instructions for Walking, Trotting, Cantering, Galloping, Stumbling and Tumbling. Methuen, 3s. 6d. net.
Purchas, Samuel. Hakluytus Posthumus or Purchas his Pilgrimes, containing a History of the World in Sea Voyages and Land Travells by Englishmen and others. Vols. III. and IV. MacLehose, 12s. 6d. net per volume.
Extracts from the Writings of Clement of Alexandria. The Theosophical Publishing Society, 1s. net.

SCIENCE.

- Taylor, R. L. The Radio-Active Elements, and a short Introduction to the Study of Organic Chemistry, being an appendix to "The Student's Chemistry." Heywood, 6d. net.

SOCIOLOGY.

- Poirson, S. Mon Féminisme. Paris: Bernard, 3fr. 50c.

SPORT.

- Glasford, Captain A. I. R. Rifle and Romance in the Indian Jungle. A Record of Thirteen Years. With numerous Illustrations by the Author and from Illustrations. Lane, 16s. net.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

- Mathew, Frank. Ireland. Painted by Francis S. Walker. Black, 20s. net.
Tarnutzer, Dr. Chr. Grisons Oberland, with a Historical Sketch by Professor J. C. Muoth. Translated by Dr. and Mrs. Spöndly-Blakiston. Zurich: Art. Institut Orell Füssli.
Henderson, John. The West Indies. Painted by A. S. Forrest. Black, 20s. net.
Goodrich-Freer, A. In a Syrian Saddle. Methuen, 7s. 6d. net.
Robinson Lees, Rev. G. Village Life in Palestine. A Description of the Religion, Home Life, Manners, Customs, Characteristics and Superstitions of the Peasants of the Holy Land, with Reference to the Bible. New edition, revised and enlarged. Longmans, 3s. 6d. net.

Creates mental as well as bodily vigour ; gives the feeling of "briskness" without which work or recreation becomes irksome. Manufactured by the Oldest House in the trade. Established 1728.

Fry's

PURE CONCENTRATED

Cocoa

"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."—

Sir CHAS. CAMERON, C.B., M.D., Ex-President of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

FRY'S MALTED COCOA

A combination of Fry's Pure Cocoa and Allen and Hanbury's Extract of Malt.

Specialy Introduced at the Request of the Medical Faculty.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS & NEW REMAINING

OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

The MAY LIST NOW READY, contains Popular Works on Sport, Travel, Biography, and Fiction.

Sent POST FREE on application to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

30-34 New Oxford Street, London.

PUBLISHERS' MEDIUMS.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE. 10, 12, 14, and 16 Pages Daily.

THE EVENING PAPER OF THE EDUCATED MAN AND HIS FAMILY. Famous for its brilliant Reviews of current Literature, and without doubt the best Evening Paper in the Kingdom for Publishers' Announcements.

Special Columns for New Books. Next to Literary Matter every Day.

OFFICES: NEWTON STREET, HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.

THE SPHERE.

6d. Weekly.

A Literary Letter by C. K. S. appears each Week. Also List of Books Received. SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENT RATES FOR PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Office: Great New Street, E.C.

The Best, Brightest, and most Interesting Paper.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE. 10 or 12 Pages Daily.

POPULAR FEATURES ARE:—
The Reviews of Books and Literary Notes, Full Resume of the Principal Musical, Art, and Dramatic Events. Science and Art Specially dealt with. Fulllest Reports of all Current Events and Special Telegrams from Correspondents Everywhere.

THE DUNDEE COURIER

Has double the circulation of any Morning Paper North of the Forth. Literary Notes on Monday. Reviews on Wednesdays.

London Office, 109 Fleet Street, E.C.

CONNOISSEURS OF COFFEE

RED

DRINK THE

WHITE

DELICIOUS FOR BREAKFAST
AFTER DINNER.

& BLUE

In making use less quantity, it being so much stronger than ordinary COFFEE.

MAY 31 1905

THE ACADEMY

WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE & ART

1724

MAY 20, 1905

PRICE THREEPENCE

The Small Advertisements on this page are inserted at 6d. per line, in the readable type shown (minimum 5 lines).
The Displayed Advertisements are charged at 5s. per inch.

IMPORTANT AND INTERESTING

BOOK SALE

on the 29th, 30th, and 31st of May

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON &
HODGE

18 WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Will Dispose of the

VALUABLE LIBRARY of

HIS HONOUR JUDGE

PHILBRICK, K.C.

CATALOGUES NOW READY

SALE BY AUCTION.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

MESSRS. HODGSON AND CO. WILL SELL BY AUCTION at their Rooms, 115
Chancery Lane, W.C., on Wednesday, May 24
the two following days, at one o'clock, A COL-LECTION OF RARE AND VALUABLE
BOOKS, comprising a copy of the beautiful Fifty linea Edition of Foster's Miniature Painters, in the plates hand-coloured; Champlin and Perry's Cyclopædia of Painters, 4 vols, morocco ra; Bryan's Dictionary of Painters, the new edition by Williams, 5 vols, and other Fine Art Illustrated Books; Louthborough's Scenery of Ireland and Wales, and other Books with Coloured plates; Scarce and Curious Books in Old English literature; a few Early Printed and Black Letter books; Glareanus Dodecachordon, Basilea, 1547, and other Works on Music; Hakluyt's Voyages, new Edition, 12 vols; Books on Natural History; Library Editions of the Writings of Grote, Hobson, Hallam, Matthew Arnold and others; works of Dickens and Thackeray in handsome morocco and calf bindings; Burton's Arabian Nights with Letchford's Illustrations, 13 vols;
Lamb's Essays of Elia, 1823 and other First Editions of Esteemed Authors; Alken's Seven Ages of Man, coloured; Books of Prints and Engravings; Encyclopædia Britannica, Tenth Edition, 35 vols, &c. &c.
To be viewed and catalogues had.

LIBRARIES AND COLLECTIONS OF
RARE BOOKS.—Messrs. HODGSON AND
CO. have exceptional facilities for the DISPOSAL OF LIBRARIES and Small Collections of Rare books, also MSS., Autographs, and Engravings, which are promptly effected, by private treaty if desired.
AUCTION ROOMS, 115, Chancery Lane, London,

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,

Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

This day (Saturday), May 20, at three o'clock,
JAMES GEORGE FRAZER, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D.,
Litt.D., first of two Lectures on "The Evolution of the Kingship in Early Society." Half a guinea the Course.

Tuesday, May 23, at five o'clock, the Rev.
HENRY G. WOODS, D.D., the Master of the Temple, first of three Lectures on "Velazquez."
Half a guinea.

Thursday, May 25, at five o'clock, Professor
J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., first of three Lectures on "Electro-magnetic Waves." Half a guinea.

Subscription to all Courses in the Season, Two guineas.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LIVERPOOL.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

The COUNCIL of the UNIVERSITY will,
during the PRESENT TERM, appoint a LADY as LECTURER in EDUCATION in the UNI-VERSITY in succession to Miss Graveson. The Department of Education of the University includes Students training both for Secondary and Primary Teaching. The Stipend will be not less than £300 per annum.—Further particulars will be available on application to the REGISTRAR on or after MAY 12. Testimonials will be required not later than JUNE 1.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY, KINGSTON, CANADA.

Assistant Professorship in French and German
Vacant. Salary £240 sterling.

For information as to qualifications and duties apply to Professor Watson, care of Messrs. James MacLehose & Sons, 61 St. Vincent Street, Glasgow, to whom 30 copies of Testimonials (printed or type-written) are to be sent, if possible not later than June 15.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

Teachers' Training Department.

ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD.

The Council invite applications for the post of Assistant Mistress of Method and Assistant
Lecturer in Education in the Teachers' Training Departments of the above College. Applications must reach the Acting Registrar, from whom full particulars may be obtained not later than Tuesday, June 13, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of PROFESSOR of EDUCATION in the NORMAL DEPARTMENT (MEN) and in the DEPARTMENT for the TRAINING of MEN TEACHERS for SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials, should be sent, on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.

May 6, 1905. J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in LATIN.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.
J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTRY.

DR. WILLIAMS'S TRUSTEES offer for open competition, Undergraduate Scholarships, tenable in the University of Glasgow only; and Divinity Scholarships for Graduates, tenable in any approved School of Theology or University.
The Scholarships are open to students of all Denominations preparing for the Nonconformist
Ministry. For particulars apply to the SECRETARY,
DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY, Gordon Square, London,
W.C., before June 1.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An Examination will be held on June 28, 29, and 30 to fill up not less than eight Residential Scholarships three Non-Residential Scholarships, and some Exhibitions.—For particulars, apply to the Headmaster, 19 Deans Yard, Westminster.

THE CARNEGIE DUNFERMLINE TRUST.

COLLEGE OF HYGIENE AND PHYSI- CAL TRAINING.

A COLLEGE for the Training of Teachers of HYGIENE and PHYSICAL TRAINING will be OPENED on the 26th SEPTEMBER next, under the auspices of the Carnegie Dunfermline Trust.

The course of study will extend over two years, and will include Hygiene, Anatomy, Physiology, Educational and Remedial Gymnastics on the Swedish system, Games, Swimming, Dancing, &c.

A Residence for Women Students will be opened at the same time under the superintendence of Miss E. ADAIR ROBERTS.

A specially qualified Medical Man will devote his whole time to the work of the College.

TERMS, for Residence and Tuition, £80 per annum.

For particulars, apply to the Principal: Miss OGSTON, Physical Training College, Dunfermline, Scotland.

LING'S SWEDISH SYSTEM.

THE BEDFORD PHYSICAL TRAINING
COLLEGE, 37 Lansdowne Road, Bedford.
Principal, Miss STANSFELD. Students are trained in this College to become Teachers of Gymnastics in Colleges and Schools. The course of training extends over 2 years, and includes Educational and Medical Gymnastics on the Swedish System,
Massage, Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene,
Dancing, Fencing, Hockey, Lacrosse, Cricket,
Tennis, &c.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice
Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No.
27 King Street, St. James's.

THE SOUL OF MAN UNDER SOCIALISM.

By OSCAR WILDE.

On Van Gelder Paper. With Portrait.

75 cents net, post paid.

A Complete Catalogue of the Mosher Books post paid on request.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,
Portland, Maine, U.S.A.

B. H. BLACKWELL,
50 AND 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CATALOGUE of CRITICAL EDITIONS of LATIN CLASSICAL AUTHORS and Standard Works dealing with Greek and Roman History, Literature, and Art.

IN THE PRESS.

CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS SECOND-HAND BOOKS, chiefly ENGLISH, including SELECTIONS from the LIBRARIES of the late REV. ALBERT WATSON, M.A., formerly Principal of B.N.C., the late Professor FREEMAN, the late R. S. WILSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of B.N.C., and from other Libraries recently purchased by the Advertiser.

READY SHORTLY.

CATALOGUE of the THIRD (and LAST) PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Professor F. YORK POWELL, including Greek and Latin Classical Writers and Mediaeval Authors, Ecclesiastical History, Antiquarian Works, Law, Philosophy, and Miscellaneous Items.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR.
No. 140.

Containing a special article, entitled:
"THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,"

by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the new edition of Bryan's "Dictionary of Painters and Engravers," &c.—Specimen copies gratis.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.

CURRENT Literature and Surplus Books of every kind bought at fair prices for cash by HOLMES BROS., 4 Manette Street, Charing Cross Road (many years with Mrs. C. Hindley, of Booksellers' Row).

THOMAS THORP,
Secondhand Bookseller,
100 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C., AND
4 BROAD STREET, READING.

MONTHLY CATALOGUES from both Addresses. Libraries Purchased. Sale Commissions executed.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30 Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

FIRST Editions of Modern Authors, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27 New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Books Wanted

HUBBARD (W.) Present State of New England, 1667.
Humber's Water Supply of Towns, 1876.
Humorist (The) 4 vols., 1819-20, or any vol.
Humphrey Clinker, 3 vols., 1771, or either vol.
Humphrey's British Butterflies and Moths, 4 vols., 1849-51.
Humphreys (Noel) Illuminated Books of Middle Ages, large folio, 1849.
Hungarian and Highland Broadsword Exercise, 1798, oblong folio.
Hunnis (H.) Seven Sobs of a Sorrowful Soule, 8vo, 1597.
Hunt (Leigh) Autobiography, 3 vols., 1850.
Any of his books published before 1862.
Hunter's Historical Journals, 1793.
New South Wales.
Hunting Reminiscences, 1843.
Hussey's British Mycology, 1847-55.
Hutchins's History of Dorset, 4 vols., folio, 1861-70.
Hutchinson's Colony of Massachusetts, 2 vols., 1760-68.
Hutchinson's History of Cumberland, 2 vols., 1794.
Huth Library, Edited by Grosart, a set complete, or portion, 8vo, 1881, &c.
Hyll (T.) Profitable Art of Gardening, 1574.
Ibis (The) a Magazine, 1859 to 1890, or any.
Independence, an ode, 4to (Glasgow) 1773.
Indispensable Accomplishments, 4 coloured plates, in wrapper, oblong folio, 1824.
Ingoldsby Legends, 3 vols., 1840-42-47, or either vol.
Inquiry into Present State of Polite Learning, 1759.
Instructions how to play at Billiards, Bowls, &c., 1687.
Walter T. Spencer, 27, New Oxford Street, W.C.

BOOKS, MSS., Letters of Oscar Wilde, Illustrations by Beardsley.—J. JACOB, 149 Edgware Road, London, W.

DARROW'S CHRISTIAN CLASS-BOOK.

Advertisements for out of print "Books Wanted" and "For Sale" are inserted at 3d. for each title (eight words, including address); minimum, 1s.

Books for Sale

HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES OF Windsor Castle and the Royal College; Illustrated with Cuts. Eton; Printed by Joseph Pote, 1749. Cum Privilegio Regio. What offers?—LLOYD & TOWNSEND, Dillwyn Street, Swansea.

THE PROSE WORK OF SIR W. SCOTT, 28 Vols., 12mo, cloth; as new; 1834: 45s. Sidney's Arcadia, tenth edition; Portrait, calf, rebound, 1655, 25s.—W. E. GOULDEN, 5 St. Paul's, Canterbury.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS, translated by H. Van Laun, beautiful Etchings by Lalauze; 6 vols., royal 8vo, cloth; published by Paterson, Edinburgh, at £5 8s., offered at 30s.—WALKER, 37 Briggate, Leeds.

HEBE.—Coloured Engraving by Eginton after Hamilton. Framed, £14. Inspection after 7 P.M.—T., 24 Oakley Road, South Norwood.

IN GOOD CONDITION.—Spencer's Biology, 2 vols., 12s. 6d. Spencer's Social Statics, 4s. 6d. Venn's Empirical Logic, 3s. 6d. Pearson, K., Grammar of Science, 2s. 6d. Ward's Naturalism and Agnosticism, 2 vols., 7s. 6d. Will be sold to students only.—Geo. A. HILLMAN, Myddleton House, Ware.

HAWKER ON SHOOTING, 9th Edition (1844), bound blue cloth; publisher, Longman & Co.—Offers, Mrs. Youngman, Brecknock Road, Camden Road, N.W.

"THE ACADEMY" is POSTED FREE (52 issues at 3d.) to every ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER in the United Kingdom prepaying 13s. FOREIGN SUBSCRIBERS by a PREPAYMENT of 17s. 6d. will secure it being sent for Post Free to any address throughout the World for a uniform 1d. postage, though the postage payable varies from 1d. minimum to 2½d. per copy. Orders may be sent through any Bookseller or News vendor, or direct to the Publisher, 5-7 Southampton Street, Strand, W.C.

LITERARY AGENCY.—INDEXING, Translations (French, German, Latin, Italian, MSS., carefully Revised and Placed. Terms moderate. Typewriting 8d. per 1000 words. References.—Miss A. HORSFIELD, 48 Church Street, Barnet, Yorks.

AUTHORS' MSS., Sermons, Plays, Enchiridion, &c., carefully typed at home (Remanage, 9d. per 1000 words. Orders promptly executed.—M. M. L., 7 Vernon Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1000 words. Space and references.—Address, Miss MESSIA, Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS., 10d. per 1000, all descriptions; neat, prompt, & rate; duplicating a speciality. Shorthand & monials.—Mrs. MICHEL, 23 Quarrendon St., Fulham, S.W.

TYPEWRITING.—All kinds.—Translates duplicates; careful work. Novels, &c. Short articles by return.—Miss HANDLIT, Beahamsted, Herts.

TYPEWRITING.—Reviews, Novels, Poetry, Scholastic Work, Letters, &c. or from dictation (Shorthand if desired). Foreign and scientific MSS. a speciality. Ten years experience. Duplicating. Cheap prices.—GUTHRIE, 34 Strand, W.C. (Charing Cross).

TO AUTHORS.—Lady (experienced) now takes TYPEWRITING.—Authors' MSS. from 10d. per 1000 words; qualified proof reader testimonials; accuracy; promptitude, Miss J. 48 Digby Mansions, Hammersmith.

Before trying any other Fountain Pen, try the Best - -

IF YOU DON'T LIKE IT, EXCHANGE IT,
OR HAVE YOUR MONEY BACK - - -

THE "SWAN"

HAS NO EQUAL.

SATISFACTION
GUARANTEED.

Prices from 10/6
to £20
Post free.

JOSEPH PENNELL, Esq., writes
"I have often felt that a Fountain Pen would be a perfect tool for the pen draughtsman, if it only could be made. You have made it. I have tried your 'Swan' Pens now for a month or more, and no ordinary pen of any sort that I have ever tried approaches it for artists' use."

Write for Catalogue.

SOLD BY STATIONERS AND JEWELLERS.

MABIE, TODD, AND BARD,
79 & 80 HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON, W.C.
93 CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

128 Regent Street, W.; 3 Exchange Street, Manchester

Messrs. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

FREE OPINIONS

By MARIE CORELLI

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This book will, like others that have proceeded from the same pen, prove a great popular success."
Westminster Gazette.

THE JAPANESE SPIRIT. By OKAKURA-YOSHISABURO. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Its author has mastered not only our language, but our modes of thought so thoroughly that in his pages, as George Meredith observes, 'We get nearer to the secret of this singular race than we have had the chance of before.' Professor Okakura possesses the same self-restraint, the same dispassionately critical faculty, which Dr. Asakawa's analysis of the causes and issues of 'The Russo-Japanese Conflict' so far above the ordinary of controversial literature."—Times.

IN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT OF DUNDEE, 1648-1689.

By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"On the whole it does not seem too much to say that this book promises to be the definitive biography of a man whose character has been traduced by 'prejudice founded upon wilful neglect of evidence.'"—Morning Post.

E KING IN EXILE (CHARLES II.). By EVA SCOTT, Author of "Rupert Prince Palatine." Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"Her fearlessness, and her accuracy of detail, are in themselves of infinite value; her narrative is founded, not conjecture, but upon the passages which she quotes; her characterisation appears to us thoroughly just."
Athenæum.

THERINE DE' MEDICI AND THE FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH

SICHEL, Author of "Women and Men of the French Renaissance," "The Household of the Lafayettes," &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 illustrations, 15s. net.

"Miss Edith Sichel has done a fine and distinguished piece of work. She has written a brilliant and a scholarly book; a book it is both tempting and difficult to overpraise. For Miss Sichel is gifted with much of the rare prophetic vision of the born historian."—Times.

E FIRST ROMANOV (1613-1725). A History of Muscovite Civilisation and the Rise of Modern Russia under Peter the Great and his Forerunners. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of "The Pupils of Peter the Great," "Peter III., Emperor of Russia," &c. With Eight Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

E GARDEN OF EDEN: Kempton Park once upon a Time. By EDITH A. BARNETT, Author of "A Champion in the Seventies," "The Fetish of the Family," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

E SAYINGS OF MUHAMMAD. Arranged by A. L. SUHRAWARDY. 16mo, 2s. 6d. Uniform with the "Ingersoll Lectures."

E FAR EASTERN TROPICS: Studies in the Administration of Tropical Dependencies. By ALLEYNE IRELAND. With a Coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Shortly.]

E CITIZEN: a Study of the Individual and the Government. By NATHANIEL SOUTHGATE SHALER, Professor of Geology in Harvard University and Dean of Lawrence Scientific School. Crown 8vo, pp. viii + 346. 6s. net. [Shortly.]

RECENT FICTION.

ERNST UHL. By GUSTAV FRENSSSEN. Crown 8vo, 6s. The most popular German novel of modern times.

"A book of this character, so sincere in its aims, so true-hearted and simple, so impregnated with the breath of salt sea and of the pine-woods, should find as many readers and admirers here as in the land of its birth. The excellence of the translation, too, will do much to make the book acceptable."—Academy.

ATTENDEN. By JOHN FOX, Author of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Fresh, wholesome, and charming . . . the characters excellently drawn . . . will add to an already brilliant reputation."—Speaker.

SEARCH OF THE UNKNOWN. By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, Author of "The Maids of Paradise," "Cardigan," &c. 6s.

"Delightful and highly to be recommended."—Westminster Gazette.

ROUGH REFORMER. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Kloof Bride," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A story of absorbing interest, touching life at many points, and told with equal vigour and feeling."—Academy.

For complete Catalogue and Announcement List and Prospectuses of all New Books.

A. CONSTABLE & CO., Ltd., 16 James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS opened at any date for THREE, SIX and TWELVE months, Town Subscriptions 21s. Yearly. Books of past Seasons, 6s. 6d. Yearly.

Terms for Country, Suburbs, and Parcel Post, sent on application to MUDIE & CO., 30-34 New Oxford Street, London.

PERMANENT REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE WORKS OF

G. F. Watts, E. Burne-Jones, D. G. Rossetti,
 Windsor Castle Holbein Drawings,

Also Pictures from the Uffizi and Louvre Galleries, may be obtained from

GREEN HOLLIER & PEMBROKE SQUARE LONDON W

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

A New Novel by

AGNES & EGERTON CASTLE.

Academy.—"Perhaps the finest book that Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Castle have as yet produced—daring, original, moving."

ROSE OF THE WORLD

By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE,

Authors of "Young April," "The Secret Orchard," "The Star Dreamer," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily Telegraph.—"In every respect 'Rose of the World' will uphold the fame its authors have already acquired."

Sketch.—" 'Rose of the World' is quite a happy exception to the average novel. It may be classed among the books that claim a large audience and leave a pleasant and enduring impression behind."

IN PEACE AND WAR

Autobiographical Sketches. By Sir JOHN FURLEY, Kt., C.B.

Author of "Struggles and Experiences of a Neutral Volunteer," &c. With a Portrait, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Daily Chronicle.—"Sir John Furley's book, besides being the record of a fine life's work, is noteworthy for its sidelights on many countries."

SPRING IN A SHROPSHIRE ABBEY

By Lady CATHERINE MILNE GASKELL.

Author of "The New Cinderella," and "Old Shropshire Life." With 16 Full-page Illustrations, small demy 8vo, 9s. net.

Country Life.—"The authoress has a keen interest in gardening, natural history, and many other country pursuits; and not only so, but she can describe them naturally and beautifully."

THE UPTON LETTERS

By T. B. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [On May 22.]

"In the 'Upton Letters' a schoolmaster gives his experiences of life to a friend in Madeira. Dated from 'The Upton'—which is neither Uppingham nor Repton—the correspondence tells of men and books, no less than of boys and lessons. The letters were returned to their writer when the friend died."

ITALIAN LETTERS OF A DIPLOMAT'S WIFE

By MARY KING WADDINGTON.

With 24 Portraits, Views, &c., 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND ENGLISH IMPRESSION NOW READY.

WORLD.—"One of the most interesting books of the season. . . . Chatty, vivacious, observant, good-humoured, pleasantly descriptive, and teeming with references to famous and notable people, and to places and events of interest, these letters are models of their kind."

A VAGRANT ENGLISHWOMAN

By CATHERINE I. DODD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GUARDIAN.—"This is a very delightful book. The writer possesses that rarest of all gifts, true humour."

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogues sent post free on application.

In 5 vols., 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

Bryan's Dictionary of Painters and Engravers. A NEW EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED, under the supervision of G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D., assisted by a staff of Specialists. With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates. Illustrated Prospectus on application.

* This Edition contains upwards of 1400 new biographies, and nearly 6000 corrections have been made in articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 lives have been partly rewritten.

"No one interested in the Fine Arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable Dictionary."
Pall Mall Gazette.

THIRD EDITION.—With 40 Plates and numerous other Illustrations, post 8vo, 6s. net.

How to Collect Old Furniture.

By FREDERICK LITCHFIELD, Author of "Illustrated History of Furniture," &c.

"Histories of furniture exist in abundance, but we know of no book which will be of such use to the ordinary collector. Mr. Litchfield has had a long experience of the ways of dealers, and he gives his readers the full benefit of it."
Daily Chronicle.

SECOND EDITION. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

How to Identify Portrait Miniatures.

By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. With Chapters on the Painting of Miniatures by ALYN WILLIAMS, R.B.A. With 40 Plates, illustrating upwards of 70 Miniatures.

FOURTH EDITION. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

How to Look at Pictures.

By ROBERT CLERMONT WITT, M.A. With 35 Illustrations.
"This book, which we have read with great pleasure, shows that the author has both wide sympathy and knowledge, and it cannot but be largely helpful to those who wish to increase their interest in pictures. A better gift for people who are dimly 'fond of pictures,' but who regret that they 'know nothing about them,' could not be found."
Spectator.

SIXTH THOUSAND. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

How to Identify Old China.

A Handbook for Collectors of English Pottery and Porcelain. By Mrs. WILLOUGHBY HODGSON. With 40 Plates and numerous Reproductions of Marks.

"The description of each kind of ware is lucid; the examples chosen for illustration are admirably typical. We have tested the value of the book in the only practical manner, and have found it exceedingly useful."
Morning Post.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF ROSE'S "LIFE OF NAPOLEON."

Life of Napoleon I. By J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. Largely Compiled from new materials taken from the British Official Records. In two vols., post 8vo. With Maps and Plans. Fourth Edition. 10s. net.

ORIGINAL EDITION. With numerous Illustrations. Two vols., large post 8vo, 18s. net.

Post 8vo, with Maps, 7s. 6d. net.

Napoleonic Studies.

By J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D.
"Whatever may be the side of Napoleon's career in which the reader may be interested, we make bold to say that he will find something new to him within the four hundred pages of this modest little volume. Dr. Rose is to be congratulated on his mastery of a difficult and complicated subject."
Athenaeum.

Post 8vo, 5s. net.

Napoleon and England, 1803-1813:

a Study from Unprinted Documents. By P. COQUELLE. Translated from the French by GORDON D. KNOX, Balliol College, Oxford. With a Preface by Dr. J. HOLLAND ROSE, Author of "The Life of Napoleon I." &c.

"In discussing one of the most controverted questions of modern history, M. Coquelle has collected a number of interesting documents, which form a most valuable addition to the sources available to a student of the Napoleonic period."
St. James's Gazette.

CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S "PEPYS." In 8 vols., post 8vo, 5s. net each.

The Diary of Samuel Pepys,

M.A., F.R.S., Clerk of the Works and Secretary to the Admiralty. Transcribed from the Short-hand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A., late Fellow and President of the College. With Lord BRAY-BROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

ORIGINAL EDITION. In 10 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and other Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net each.

GEORGE BELL & SONS,

T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish on June 13

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS'

Great New Novel

THE FLUTE OF PAN

The booksellers have already largely oversubscribed the first impression.

Robert Adam Artist and Architect his Works and his System. By PERCY FITZGERALD, Author of "The Westminster Cathedral: a Criticism," &c. Illustrated from Photographs. 10s. 6d. net.

This is the outcome of many years study, and Mr. Fitzgerald writes with enthusiastic admiration for Adam's character and genius.

The Progress of Hellenism in Alexander's Empire

By JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY, D.D., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Hon. D.C.L. Oxon., sometime Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. 5s. net.

In Peril of Change

Essays Written in Time of Tranquillity. By C. F. C. MASTERMAN, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, Author of "From the Abyss," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The Evolution of the World and of Man

By GEORGE E. BOXALL, Author of "The Anglo-Saxon: a Study in Evolution." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Model Factories and Villages

IDEAL CONDITIONS OF LABOUR AND HOUSING. By BUDGETT MEAKIN, Lecturer on Industrial Betterment. Author of "The Land of the Moors," &c. With about 200 Illustrations. Large Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

What I have Seen while Fishing, & how I have Caught my Fish

By PHILIP GREEN. With 73 Illustrations. Second Edition. 7s. 6d. net.

L'Avocat Patelin

Adapted by the Abbé Brueys from the fifteenth-century Farce. Produced at the Théâtre Français in 1706. Translated by S. F. G. Whitaker. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

"Accurate without being too literal."—MORNING POST.
"Well put into English and tastefully produced."

—EVENING STANDARD.
"Reads smoothly and preserves the fun of the piece."

—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.
"A task performed with admirable taste and judgment."
—BIRMINGHAM POST.

Messrs. J. M. DENT & CO.'S

ANNOUNCEMENTS

JUST PUBLISHED.

Garden Colour.

By Mrs. C. W. EARLE, E.V.B., ROSE KENLEY, the Hon. VICARY GIBBS

£1 1s. net. With 51 Coloured Sketches. Notes by MARGARET WATERFIELD

The Daily Telegraph says: "Miss Waterfield's sketches prove eloquent lessons to those who love their garden: wish to crowd as much beauty as may be into the garden that they may have at command. . . . Full of verbal wit and enthusiasm, this work is one which will come with a treat into the hands of any person with a taste for flowers."

The Athenaeum says: "The book is something more than a sumptuous feast of colour; it is a gardener's classic, which several hands contribute. . . . That Miss Waterfield has good taste is everywhere made evident in the volume."

The Times says: "A delightful book, focusing attention on one side—perhaps the chief side—of horticulture."

The Academy says: "A notable addition to garden literature."

WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS.

An Elizabethan Virginal Book

By EDWARD W. NAYLOR, M.A., Mus. Organist and Lecturer of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and Author of "Shakespeare's Music," &c. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

A critical essay on the fine collection of Clavier music in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, and known as the "Fitzwilliam Virginal Book." Copious extracts from the book, coloured frontispiece representing Queen Elizabeth's lute, and a facsimile page from the Virginal Book.

Master Musicians. New Volume. Schubert.

By E. DUNCAN. Foolscap 8vo. 3s. 6d. net. Illustrated.

Chronicles of the City of Perugia, 1492-1503

Written by FRANCESCO MATARAZZO. Translated by EDWARD STRACHEL MORGAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

This is a translation of Matarazzo's Fascinating History Chronicle, giving a vivid contemporary account of the story of Perugia and the Baglioni (1492-1503). The chronicler is a story-teller of the first rank.

HOMES of the FIRST FRANCISCANS in Umbria, the Borders of Tuscany, and the Northern Marches.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d. net.

The Observer says: "A really important addition to Franciscan literature, and has a series of capital photographic illustrations."

The Spectator says: "The book is full of pictures of beauty."

Dent's Complete Tolstoy.

Translated by PROFESSOR WEINER

The Morning Post says: "An excellent edition, well bound and clearly printed."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "The admirable edition of Count Tolstoy's works. Messrs. Dent are publishing it almost nearly half completed."

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net per volume; each vol. sold separately except where two or more volumes go to make up one complete work. Also Large Paper Edition.

VOLS. 9, 10, AND 11.

ANNA KARÉNIN

In 3 vols. Illustrated.

Please write for a Prospectus containing full particulars.

War and Peace is published in 4 vols.

CONTENTS

	Page		Page
The Literary Week	533	Fine Art:
Literature:		The Chantrey Fund—The J. S.
Three Great Novels	535	Forbes Collection at the
An Inarticulate Savant	536	Grafton Gallery	544
An American Ambassador	538	Art Sales	545
The Corrected English New		The Drama:
Testament	538	"Business is Business" at His
Spain	540	Majesty's Theatre	545
Eton	540	Science:
Renaissance Gentlemen	540	The Pressure of Light	546
The First Meeting of Words-		Music:
worth and Coleridge	540	Wagner and Colour	547
A Literary Causerie:		Correspondence	549
Richard Lovelace	542	Book Sales	549
Fiction	543	Books Received	550
The Bookshelf	551

Registered as a Newspaper in the United Kingdom, and at the New York Post Office as Second-class Mail Matter. Foreign Subscribers, 17s. 6d. a year

THE LITERARY WEEK

